9. Pepin II. surnamed the Short, Son of Charles Martel, having managed the Affairs of France from the death of his Father for the space of ten years, usurped the Kingdom, and was solemnly crowned King at Souffry by Boniface Archbishop of Mentz, on May-day, A. 751. The Duke of Brabant returning by this means to the Crown of France, continued a Province of that Kingdom, till the division of the French Empire among the Sons and Nephews of Lewis the Godly; when it was made a Member of the Kingdom of Lorraine. Not long before the fatal period of that Kingdom, having been many years before divided by the River Moselle betwixt the Emperours of Germany and the Kings of France, (each taking to themselves the Title of Kings of Lorraine) it was by Lotharius the 3 of France, in whose share it lay, conferred on Charles his youngest Brother, together with the Title of the Dukes of Brabant. But indeed this Donation proved of little worth, the greatest part thereof, together with the rest of that part of the Kingdom of Lorraine which of right belonged unto the French, being conquered by the Emperor Otho the 2. and by him added to the Empire. And yet this also fell out in fine to the profit of Charles, who being Cousin-german to this Otho the 2. by the Lady Gerburg, (Sister of Otho the 1. and Wife of Lewis surnamed Transmarine, Kol France, the Father of Charles) was by him invested into the great Dukedom of Lorraine, that Dukedom in the full latitude and extent thereof containing the modern Dukedom of Lorraine, Gulick, and Brabant, with the Lands of Luxemb, with parts of the Lands of Triers and Loain. Brabant at that time had the name of Basie (or Low) Lorraine, and as in memory thereof, there is a Court for criminal & civil Causes held at Gernep (one of the Franks or Market-Towns of Brabant) called La Cour de Lorraine to this day; an Estate first created, as before is said, by the Emperor Otho II. who giving it to the said Charles of France, referred out of it, as a Dowry for his said Aunt Gerburg, the Towns and Territories of Lovain, Brussels, Nivelles and Heir of Otho the Son of Charles: above mentioned being put besides her hopes of that fair Inheritance by her Brother Otho, (who gave it to Geoffrey of Ardenne) succeeded her Grandmother, the first Gerburg, in the Towns and Territories of Lovain, Nivelles, and Brussels; which the conveyed in Marriage to Lambert, one of the Sons of Reynor of Hainault, with the title of Earl of Lovain. Henry his Son having made himself Master of Antwerp also, was by that means possessed of the whole Marquisate, but still retained the title of Earl of Lovain. Godfrey the 6. Earl, having enlarged the bounds of his Dominions by the Conquest of the rest of the Country, Godfrey & Baldwin, Dukes of Lorraine, being then absent in the Wars of the Holy Land, was by the Emperor Henry the fifth (whose Sister he married) created the first Duke of Brabant. John, the first Duke of that name, added heretofore the Duchie of Limbourg, and John the third, the Seigniorie of Malin: or Mechlin. How it became united to the House of Burgundy is to be seen in the ensuing Catalogue of

The Earls of Lovain and Dukes of BRABANT of the Race of Charlemagne.

1. Lambert, one of the Sons of Regnier Earl of Hainault, made the first Earl of Lovain, in right of Gerborg.
2. Henry the Son of Lambert, who took Antwerp, making it the head City of the Marquisate of the holy Empire.
3. Lambert II. Son of Henry.
4. Henry II. Son of Lambert the second.
5. Henry III. Son of Henry the second.
6. Henry IV. Son of Henry the third.
7. Godfrey, surnamed Barbatus, Brother of Henry the fourth, in right of his descent from Charles Duke of Lorraine challenged the Country, and recovered it from the House of Ardenne; and finally by the Emperor Henry the fifth was created the first Duke of Brabant, an. 1108. Father of Adolphe, the second Wife of our Henry the first, and of Josceline de Lovain, the Progenitor of the late Earl of Northumbreland.
8. Godfrey or Geoffrey II. Son of Godfrey.
9. Godfrey or Geoffrey III. Son of Godfrey the 2.
10. Henry V. Son of Godfrey the third.
11. Henry VI. surnamed the Good, Son of Henry the fifth.
12. Henry VII. surnamed the Magnanimous, by whose Marriage with Sophia, Daughter of Lewis the sixth, Landgrave of Thuringia, the Landgravedom of Hildesheim came into this House; invested in it the person of Henry his Son by the said Sophia.
13. John, Son of Henry the seventh, took in the Dukedom of Limbourg, and destroyed the potent Family of the Bertholds: his younger Brother Henry, by another Vener, succeeding in Hessia.
14. John II. Son of John the first, bought of the Bishop of Leige the moiety or one half of Mechlin.
15. John III. Son of John the second, added the whole Estate of Mechlin to the Dukedom of Brabant.
16. Joan, the eldest Daughter of John the third, married to Winceslaus the first Duke of Luxemburg, but died without Issue.
17. Anthony of Burgundy Son of Philip the Hardy and the Lady Margaret his Wife, daughter of Devis de Malain Earl of Flanders; and of Margaret the Sister and Heir of Joan, after the death of the said Winceslaus and Joan his Wife, succeeded in the Dukedom of Brabant, his elder

- elder Brother John giving way into it, at the request of their great Aunt Jean, the Proprietress of it.
- 1415 18. John IV. Son of Anthony, by his first Wife Jean, Daughter of Wateran, Earl of Saint Paul.
- 1426 19. Philip, the second Son of Anthony and Brother of John the 4.
- 1430 20. Philip II. called the Good, Duke of Burgundy, Son and Heir of John Duke of Burgundy, elder Brother of Anthony, on the death of his two Cousins german, John and Philip succeeded in the Dukedom of Brabant, as the direct Heir of the Lady Margaret, Wife to Lewis de Malain, and Daughter of John the third, the last Duke of Brabant, of the House of Lovain. Of whose Successors more in another place.

The Arms hercof are Sable, a Lion Or.

12. HOLLAND. 13. ZELAND.
14. WEST-FRIZELAND.

HAVING thus spoken of those Provinces, which still continue in subjection to the K. of Spain, (except some few Towns in Flanders, and Brabant, before mentioned,) let us next look on those which have withdrawn their Obedience from him; beginning first with Holland and its Appendices, as of more power and consideration than all the rest. Which though distinct Provinces, and adjoin their several capacities at the present time, yet having been always under the Command of the same Princes they must be joined together in the Story of them, but shall be severally handled as to the Chorography.

HOLLAND hath on the East the Zuider-See, Drecht and some part of Gelderland, on the West and North the German Ocean, on the South the Islands of Zeland and some part of Brabant. So called, as some think, but with little reason, quasi Hols land, that is to say a woody Country; as others quasi Hellow-Land, from the Bogs and Marshes and unfound footing on the same; and some will have it called quasi Hays land, from the great quantity of Hay. But the learned Juntius, not relishing any of the three, conceives that both his Country and the Isles of Zeland, being planted by some Colonies of Danes and Normans (at the time of the Irruption of those Northern Nations) were called thus with reference to Sealand and Oeland, two Islands of the Baltick Sea, out of which they came. The Reader hath good choice, and may please himself.

The Country for the most part lieth very low, inasmuch that they are fain to fence it with Banks and Ramparts to keep out the Sea, and to restrain the Rivers within their bounds; so that in many places one may see the Sea far above the Land, and yet repulsed with those Banks: and it is wishal to fenny and full of Marshes, that they are forced to trench it with innumerable Dikes and Channels, to make it firm Land, and fit for dwelling; yet not so firm to bear either Trees or much Grain. But such is the Industry of the people and Trade they drive, that having little or no Corn of their own growth, they do provide themselves elsewhere; not only sufficient for their own spending; that wherewith to supply their neighbours: having no Timber of their own, they Water-courses that in building Ships and fencing their Water-courses that in any Country in the World: having no Wine, they drink more than the people of the Country where it grows naturally, and finally, having neither Flax nor Wool, they make more Cloth of both sorts than all the Countries in the world, except France and England.

The present Inhabitants are generally given to Seafaring lives, so that it is thought, that in Holland, Zeland, and West Frizeland, there are 2500 Ships of war and burthen. The Women are for the most part laborious in making Stuffs. Nay you will hardly see a Child of four years of age that is not kept to work and made to earn its own living: to the great commendation of their Government. The greatest of their natural Commodities is Butter and Cheese; of which, besides that infinite plenty which they spend in their own Houses, and amongst their Caravans and Ships, they sell as much unto other Countries as comes to 100000 Crowns per annum. By which means, and by the greatness of their Fish-trade, spoken of before, they are grown so wealthy on the Land, and so powerful at Sea, that as Flanders heretofore was taken for all the Netherlands, so now Holland is taken generally for all the Provinces confederated in a League against the Spaniards.

The whole Compaſs of it is no more than 180 miles, so part thereof being distant from the Sea above three hours journey: and yet, within that narrow Circuit, there are contained no fewer than 23 walled Towns and 400 Villages; some situate in North, and others in South-Holland, as it stands divided. In South-Holland (being that part heretofore that lieth next to Zeland, and the middle Chancel of the Rhene, passing from Utrecht unto Leyden) the principal Towns are, 1. Dort, in Latine Dordrechtum formerly the Staple for Rhenish Wines; a large, rich, and well-peopled Town; anciently joined to the firm Land, but in the year 1421 rent from it by the violence of the Sea, and made an Island; of great command upon the Traffick of the Mees and the Wael, upon whose Confluence it stands, but of most note in these latter times for an Assembly of Divines out of divers Countries following Calvins Doctrine, for condemnation of the Lutheran or Arminian Tenets, concerning Universal Grace and Predestination, Anno 1618. 2. Gorcum, situate on the Wael, where it meeteth with the Linge: a Town of great Trade and Riches, by reason of a daily Market of Cheese and Butter brought hither in very great quantity, beautiful and anciently with a strong Castle and a fair Church, from the Steeples whereof one may behold 22 walled Towns, besides an infinite number of Villages. The Country is round about it called by that people Van Arckel, or the Land of Heracles, from an opinion, that Heracles the German did there appoint his Camp, or rather from some Temple dedicated to him, in the place whereof the Lords of this Trade, who from hence took the name of Arckels, (Arckels they are called in our Latine Writers) founded a Church unto the honour of the Virgin Mary, in the time of Thiers the 2 Earl of Holland, by whom they were first settled in this Country. And here they flourished as Lords of Gorcum, Leerdam, and the parts adjoining till the year 1416; when falling to John L. of Egmond, by Mary his Wife, Daughter of John of Arckel, and the last Lord hereof, and Mother of Arnold of Egmond D. of Geldres, it was by him sold to William the 6, Earl of Holland, and so again united to that Estate. 3. Rotterdam, seated on a Dike or Chancel called the Roter; not far from which at a place named Rempen the Leek, one of the three main branches of the Rhene; falleth into the Mees: a strong fair and well-traded Port: the birth-place of the learned Erafmus. 4. Schoonhoven, situate on the Leek, a fair Town, having a commodious Haven. 5. Gouda, one of the five principal Towns of Holland, rich and well fortified, seated on the River called Tijff, which rising about Tijffstein, spoken of anon, falleth into the Leek at a place called Tijffland, and therefore different from the branch of the Rhene so called, which growth name to Over-Tijff. On the same River called Tijff, 6. Oudwater; and 7. Tijffstein, the last belonging properly to the Prince of Orange; the first of great Trade for making Cables and Cords for shipping, 8. Leyden, or Langdamm Batavonum University, founded Anno 1564. The Town consisteth of 41 Islands, to which they pass partly by Boats, partly by Bridges, whereof there are 144; and of them 104 builded with Stone. Here is in this Town a Castle, said to have been built by Henry the Saxon at his return out of England. And not far off stood the famous Nunnery of Rainsburg, of the same nature with those of Mont and Nivelles before described; so liberally endowed, that 2000 persons did there daily receive relief. 9. Vianen, on the Leek, a Seignoury distinct from Holland, pertaining anciently to the Lords of Braderode: and so was also 10. Huelsen, a good old Town, once beautified with a fair Castle, and a goodly Territory, but belonging to the Earls of Cleve, of which House it had Lords of its own, acknowledging no subjection to the Earls of Holland, from the year 850, or thereabouts, to the year 1290, at which time Theodorick the 9. of Cleve at a merry meeting transferred the Sovereignty thereof to Florence Earl of Holland, of that name the fifth. Finally, having continued in the possession of 20 Lords of that Family, on the expiration of that Line in the person of John the 9 dying without Issue, Anno 1354. it was made a member of this Earldom (after some sharp disputes with the Dukes of Brabant, claiming it by a Renunciation of the last Lord John) by William of Bavaria Earl of Holland, and Hainault, Anno 1361, or thereabouts. 11. Leerdam, upon the River Linge, which together with Tijffstein before mentioned, fell unto Philip Prince of Orange in right of his descent from the Earls of Bueren, 12. Delfs Town of great Trade for Cloathing, but more by reason of the Cloth of England brought thither in great quantities by the English Merchants, than for any great store of their making; by reason of the concourse which that Trade brings with it, rich, large and well built, beautified with Spacious Streets and goodly Churches; the birth place of that monstrous Heretic David George, who called himself King, and Christ immortal, as is before said.

In that part thereof which is called North Holland, lying betwixt the middle Chancel of the Rhene and the Zuider-See, the Towns or Cities of most importance are, 1. Alkmaar, encompassed with deep Fens and Marshes; a rich Town, in regard of the great plenty of Butter and Cheese which is made about it, more than in any place of Holland, and famous for the defeat which the Duke of Alva received before it. For he in the beginning of the Low-Country Troubles, having with the loss of 20000 of his own men forced Harlem, laid his Siege round about this Town. Had he left any way for the Soldiers to have fled thence, the Town had been abandoned: but having environed them round, he put them to such a resolution, or desperation, (chuse you whicher) that manfully they resisted three of his Assaults, and in the end made him depart with great loss, as well of his Soldiers, as his reputation. 2. Amsterdam, a very fair Haven-Town, where divers times at one tide 1000 Ships of all sorts have been sent to go out and in. So truly said a modern Poet.

Quid Tagus atque Hermus ubique, et Paeolus, in unum
Vere hunc congestum dixisset effe locum.

What Tagus, Heronus, and Paeolus bear,
One would conjecture to be heaped up here.

The people thereby are so rich, that if a Fleet of 300 Sail should come into the Port fraught with all kind of Commodities, in five or six days they would be ready to buy all the Lading. Situate it is on the Gulf called the Tie, and the Dike or Chancel called Anssel, whence it hath the name of Amsterdam, in Latine Amstelredammum; built upon Piles like Venice, and resembling it in many points, that it may justly be called the Northern Venice. It was first fortified with Towers and Ramparts by Gijssels of Amstel, about 300 years ago. But being burnt, through the envy of its neighbours, it began to be walled, Anno 1482. Grown to this wealth since the diverting of the Trade from Amwerp hither, and for that cause inhabited by men of all Nations and of all Religions, and those not only tolerated and conived at in private, but openly and freely exercised without any dislike. A greater Confusion (in my mind) than that of Babel: this being of Religions, that of Languages only. 3. Harlem on the Lake called Harlemmeer, the greatest Town of all Holland, and the second for dignity; well built, and very pleasantly situated amongst many goodly Meadows, near a delightful Forest, and round about environed with wealthy Villages; famous for the invention of Printing, invented here; but perfected at Memz in Higher Germany; the first Book which was ever printed being Tully's Offices. 4. Naerden, on the Zuider-See, fortified with a strong Castle, held of the Earls of Holland by the Dukes of Brunswick, to whom it anciently belonged. 5. Enchusen, on the very point of the Gulf of Zuider-See, opposite to Friesland, from which not distant two leagues. A Town of great consequence to the Prince of Orange in the first revolt of these Countries from the King of Spain. For siding with him in that war, and standing conveniently to obstruct the passages by Sea unto Amsterdam, it compelled that City in short time, by stopping all supply's of Victuals and other necessities, to yield it self unto the Prince. 6. Horn, on the same Gulf, a rich Town, with a very good Haven, and of so great strength by reason of the multitude of Dikes and Channels which are round about it, that it seems impregnable. 7. Edam, upon the same Gulf (of Zuider-See) remarkable for the great number of Ships which are built yearly in it; and an incredible number of the best Holland and Cheese made in the Country round about it. 8. Medemblick, on the Ocean, seated in the best Country of Holland for the feeding of Cattel; unvalued, but enjoying all the Privileges which a walled Town hath, and fortified with a right strong Castle.

The chief of the Holland Villages is the Hague, or Graven Hague, in Latine Haga Comitris, because formerly the Court and residence of the Earls of Holland, who had here a very large and beautiful Palace, founded by Earl William, King of the Romans, and therein a choice and excellent Library gathered together by John Haive, a Canon Regular of this place, and by him given to Charles the fifth. In former times the Residence of the Council for the Province of Holland; as it is now of the Commissioners or Delegates of the Confederate provinces called by the name of the States General. It is now much increased in Buildings of what it was, and yet to great in the time of Lewis Guicciardine, that it then contained 2000 households. The Inhabitants will not wall it, as desiring to have it rather accounted the chief Village in Edam, than the second City. The other Villages of note, 2. Egmond, 3. Braderode, 4. Wassenaar, which anciently gave names to three noble Families; of which none so illustrious and renowned as that of Egmond, descended lineally from Rashold, Son of Adalgis the King of the Frisons, the first Lord of Egmond, who died Anno 791. Advanced by Marriages to the Dukedom of Gelderland, the Seignouries of Tijffstein and Bueren. And finally they were made Earls of Egmond by Maximilian the Emperor, Anno 1592. But both his House and that of Wassenaar being now extinct, there is none left but that of Braderode for ought I can learn. Near to the last stood the famous Fortrefs called Arx Britannica, built by Caligula in memory of his great Battail upon this Shore. For making few of a Voyage into Britain, to subdue that Island, he boarded his Gallies, embattail his Soldiers, called the

Trumpets

Trumpets to found, gave them the Signal, and then Commanded them to gather Cockles: Which Tower or Fortifications was at the fall of the Roman Empire overwhelmed by the Sea; the Ruines whereof at a dead low water are still to be seen.

Besides these places on the firm Land or Continent, there are some Islands which pertain to the State of Holland, called by the general name of Voorn, because situate directly against Holland: Voorn, signifying as much as before, or in old English bevoorn; but known by their distinct and more proper names of Somerfildie, 2. Gauwede, 3. Pierfchille, 4. called of their principal Towns, and 4. Voorn specially so named, the chief of them all, being of a fat and fruitful Soil, and plentiful of most sorts of Grain. The principal Towns whereof are, 1. Briel, (which we call the Brill) a strong Town, and the first that revolted against the Spaniards, Anno 1572. Cautionary to the English with the Town of Flushing chosen by them in regard of the great command it hath upon the passage to Gerryuadenburg and the rest of Brabant, as also to Delf, Dort, and Rotterdam, the greatest Towns of Trade in the South of Holland. 2. Geweliet a small Town but having a Jurisdiction over many Villages. There are also on the North side of Holland the Isles of Wierogen and Texel; of which little memorable, but that the last is furnished with a safe and capacious Bay for receipt of Shipping.

One special accident concerning Holland I cannot omit in silence, namely, how Margaret Countess of Hennenberg, and Sister to William King of the Romans, being of the age of 42 years, was delivered at one birth of 365 children, the one half Males, the other Females, the odd one an Hermaphrodite; all christened at the Church of Loofduynen, not far from the Hague, by the names of John and Elizabeth, in two Basins fill to be seen in the said Church, by Guido the Suffragan of Utrecht; all which immediately after died; and with them the Mother.

The Arms of Holland of it self, as a State distinct, are Or, a Lion Gules.

ZELAND consisteth of seven Islands, the remainder of 18, the rest whereof the Sea hath swallowed, and in them 100 inhabited Towns. It is severed from Flanders by the left branch or Arm of the Scheld, which they call Hane and on the East from Brabant with the right branch of the said River, which still keeps his name; on the North from Holland with the Gulf called the Plack, and on the West with the main Ocean from the Kingdom of England. So called as some say, quasi Sea and Land; but as Junius rather thinks, from Seland, an Island of Denmark, as before was noted.

The Country is generally more fruitful than the neighbouring Brabant, producing great quantity of excellent Corn, plenty of Coriander, and abundance of Madder used in Dying; the Soil also is very rich in Pasture, but low and marly: which makes the Air to be very unhealthy: and the whole defitute both of Fresh water and Wood; the want of which last is supplied with Coal out of England and Scotland, or by Turf digged among themselves but very sparingly, for fear of weakening the Sea-banks.

The whole containeth 8 Towns, and 100 Villages. The Islands which remain are commonly divided into the Western, and Eastern, according as they lie with reference to the River Scheld. The Western Islands are four in number: That is to say,

1. WALCHEREN, (Valschria in Latin) lying to the North of Scheld in Flanders, the richest and most populous of all this Province, in compass 10 Dutch, or 40 Italian miles. The principal Towns of which are 1. Mid- deburg, seated on a Creek of the Sea, well walled and fortified, the Streets spacious, the Houses and Churches well built, inhabited by wealthy Merchants, and industrious Tradersmen, and of late time, (since the removing of the English Trade from Antwerp) a most flourishing Empery: So called because built in the midst of the Island; or because built (as faith Ortelius) by Prince Zelandus, of whom this Province was thus named, in honour of his Grandfather Matellus, and by him called Matelli Burgum. 2. Flushing, of great note for its good Port and invincible strength. One of the first Towns which the Low-Country men took from the Spaniards by the diligence of Voors a Seaman and Monsieur de Berland, then the Bay-liff thereof, and not long after put into the hands of the English as a Town of Caution; the first Governour of it being the renowned Sir Philip Sidney. A poor Town then it was, God wot, now the Key of the Netherlands, without whose licence no Ship can pass either to or from the City of Antwerp; inasmuch that if the Duke of Ava in the beginning of his Government had bestowed that pains in the fortifying this and others of the Maritime Towns, as he did in the strengthening Antwerp and some Midland Cities, he had in all probability hindered the remediless Revolt of these flourishing Countries. Not far off standeth the Fort called the Rammekins, once Cautionary to the English also, together with the Briel, the chief Town in the Isle of Voorn, (an Isle of Holland) all three being taken from the Spaniards, Anno 1585, and finally surrendered by King James as the States United, Anno 1616. Robert Lord Lilie (afterwards created Earl of Leicester) the Brother of Sir Philip Sidney, then Governour of Flushing. 3. Ramme, or Armynden, an unwalled Town, but beautified with one of the goodliest and most frequented Havens in all the World; out of which one may sometimes see 500 Sail of Ships of great burthen set forwards on their Voyages to several parts. 4. Vere or Camfere, seated in the North part of the Island, which once gave Title to a Marquess, and from which the Noble Family of the Veres (now and of long time Earls of Oxford) took denomination. So as it is no marvel that to many of that Family have vented their Estates and lives in the Wars of this Country, being their Grandmother in a manner, or their Primitive Parent, from whence they were transplanted into England.

2. SOUTH-BEVERLAND, situate betwixt Walcheren and Brabant, the greatest of the Isles of Zeland; heretofore 20 Dutch miles in compass, but now much diminished by the rage and fury of the Sea, by which the Town and Seigneurie of Bouffle, with all the Countries round about it, was swallowed up Anno 1532. That which remains hath in it many goodly Woods and pleasant Thickets, full of Fowl and wild Beasts for Hawking and Hunting. Chief Towns here are, 1. Rome frivale, seated on the East toward Bergen op Zoom, severed at the same time from the rest of the Island, and made an Island of it self, defended with continual charge from following the sad fate of the Town of Bouffle, 2. Geer, or Tegten, on the Northern Coast, a strong Town, well privileged, and the only walled Town in all the Island.

3. NORTH-BEVERLAND, lying betwixt South-Beverland and the Isle of Schoven, in former times esteemed the Paradise of Zeland, and having it in proper Town called Chori Choren, but to destroyed by the Sea-breach, spoken of before, that there is nothing now remaining but a few poor Villages.

4. WOLFERSDIKE, lying betwixt the two Beverlands, the smallest of the Western Islands, as having in it no more than two Villages but replenished with good store of Pasture.

And

And these are all which fall in the division of the Western Islands, so called because they lay Westward of the River Scheld; as those which they call the Eastern Islands, on the East thereof. Of which last there are three in number.

1. SCHOWEN, lying on the South-West of Holland; so near unto North-Beverland in former times, that the Inhabitants could talk together from one shore to the other; but now the Sea hath set them at a greater distance. It containeth in compass six Dutch miles. Chief Towns wherein are, 1. Zierikzee, the ancientest Town of all Zeland, once beautified with a fair and commodious Haven, now choaked up with Beach, yet still reputed for the second Town of all the Province: the whole Trade thereof consisting in Salt and Madder; of which it yields good plenty. Most famous for the birth of Levinus Lemnius, that renowned Philosopher and Physician. 2. Brouwers-Haven, inhabited only by Fishermen, not else remarkable.

2. DOVELAND, so named from the multitude of Doves or Pigeons, situate between Schoven and Tolen, in compass about 4 Dutch miles. It hath no good Town in it, but only Country Villages and Gentlemen's Farms. Surrounded by the Sea, Anno 1530, but by the industry and diligence of Adolph of Burgundy, and the Lord of Beversen in Flanders recovered again, and at the excessive charge of the people hitherto preserved.

3. TOLEN, so called from the chief Town of the Island, where the Earls Toll was wont to be paid, whence it had the name, is situate over against the North-west of Brabant, from thence disjoined by a narrow Creek or Arm of the Sea: the second Town of note being called S. Martin Dike; walled, but not otherwise considerable.

Agreeable to the quality of this Country of Zeland are the Arms thereof, being Or, a Lion Gules rising out of a Sea wave Argent and Azure.

WEST-FRIESLAND, hath on the East Greening-Land and a part of Westphalen in High Germany, on the South Over-Yssel and the Zuider-See, on the North and West the main Ocean. The Country is generally moorish and full of Fens, unsuit for Corn, but yielding great store of Pasturage: which Moorishness of the ground makes the Air very foggy and unhealthy; nor have they any Fewel wherewith to rectifie it, (except in that part of it which they call Seven-Wolden) but Turf and Cow-dung, which adds but little to the sweetness of an unfound Air. Nor are they better stored with Rivers, here being none proper to this Country, but that of Leenward, the want of which is supplied by great Canals in most places, which do not only drain the Marishes, but supply them with water: Which notwithstanding, their Pastures do afford them a good breed of Horses fit for service; plenty of Bees both great and sweet, the best in Europe, next those of England; and those in such a large increase, that their Kine commonly bring two Calves, and their Ewes three Lambs at a time.

The Country is divided into three parts. In the first part, called WESTERGOE, lying towards Holland, the principal Towns are, 1. Harlingen an Haven Town upon the Ocean, defended with a very strong Castle. 2. Hindeloep, on the same Coast also. 3. Stavoren, an Hanse Town, opposite to Encheim in Holland, the Town decayed, but fortified with a strong Castle, which secures the Haven. 4. Franeke, a new University, or a Schola Illustis, as they call it. 5. Sneek, in a low and inconvenient situation; but both for largeness and beauty the best in this part of the Province, and the second in esteem of all the Country. In OSTERGOE, of the East part, lying towards Greening-Land, the Towns of most note are, 6. Leenwarden, situate on the hinder Leenward the prime Town of West-Friesland, and honoured with the Supreme Court and Chancery hereof, from which there lieth no Appeal: a rich Town, well built, and strongly fortified. 7. Doornum, bordering upon Greening, the birth place of Gemma Frisius, in SEVEN-WOLDEN, or the Country of Seven Forests, so called from 10 many small Forests joyning near together, is no Town of note, being long time a Wood-land Country, and not well inhabited till of late. The number of the walled Towns are 11 in all; of the Villages or Burroughs, 345.

To this Province belongeth the Isle of Schellink, the shores, whereof are plentifully stor'd with dog-fish, took by the Inhabitants in this manner. The men of the Island attire themselves with Beasts Skins, and then fall to dancing; with which sport the fish being much delighted, make out of the waters towards them; Nets being pitched presently betwixt them and the water. Which done, the men put off their disguises, and the frightened Fish, halting toward the Sea, are caught in the Toils.

Touching the Frisons, heretofore possessed of this Country, we shall speak more at large when we come to East-Friesland, possessed also by them, and still continuing in the quality of a Free Estate, governed by its own Laws and Princes: here only taking notice that the Arms of this Friesland are Azure, seven of Billets Argent, two Lions Or.

The ancient Inhabitants of these three Provinces were the Batavi and Caninifates, inhabiting the Island of the Rhene, situate betwixt the middle branch thereof and the VVael, which now containeth South-Holland, Utrecht, and some part of Gelder; the Frisii, dwelling in VVest-Friesland and the North of Holland; and the Mattiaci, inhabiting in the Isles of Zeland. By Charles the Bald these Countries, being almost unpeopled by the Norman Pirates, were given to Thierrie, Son of Sigebert, a Prince of Aquitain, with the Title of Earl; his Successors acknowledging the Sovereignty of the Crown of France, till the time of Arnulp the 4. Earl, who turned Homager to the Empire. In John the 2. they became united to the House of Hainault, and in VVilliam the 3. to that of Bavaria; added to the Estates of the Dukes of Burgundy in the person of Duke Philip the good; as appeareth by his Succession of

The Earls of HOLLAND, ZELAND, and Lords of WEST-FRIESLAND.

- 1351 22. William V. Second Son of Lewis and Margaret (his elder Brother Stephen succeeding in Bavaria) in right of Maud his wife, daughter and Coheir of Henry Duke of Lancaster, succeeded in the Earldom of Leicester.
- 1377 23. Albert, the younger brother of William the fifth, fortunate in his wars against the Frifons, Earl of Hainault, Holland, &c.
- 1404 24. William VI. Earl of Overland, and by that name admitted Knight of the Garter by king Richard the 2. eldest Son of Albert.
- 1417 25. Jaqueline, only daughter of Earl William the sixth, first married to John the 4. Duke of Brabant, the Son of Anthony of Bourgoigne, from whom divorced under colour of Consanguinity, she was married after to Humphrey Duke of Gloucester, and then to Frank of Borffelle, a private Gentleman: being unworthily handled by Duke John of Burgundy, she surrendered her Estates to Duke Phillip the Good.
26. Phillip the Good, Duke of Burgundy, Son of John Duke of Burgundy, and of the Lady Margaret Sister of Earl William the sixth, and daughter of Albert, Earls of Hainault, Holland, &c. succeeded on the Renunciation of the Lady Jaqueline, his Cousin-german transporting these Estates to the House of Burgundy. His Successors we shall meet with shortly in another place.

15. UTRECHT. 16. OVER-TSSELL.

THE Bishoprick of Utrecht, I mean the temporal Jurisdiction and Estate thereof, contained once all that Tract of ground which now makes up the Provinces of Utrecht, Over-Tsffel, and Greening. But Greening was long since dismembr'd. Utrecht and Over-Tsffel remaining parts thereof till the year 1528, then added to the rest of the Belgick Provinces by Charles the 5.

UTRECHT hath on the East Gelderland, on the West, North and South, environed with Holland. The Country is very fruitful, much drier than Holland, and so fitter for all sorts of Grain. It containeth 70 Villages, and 5 walled Towns: that is to say, 1. Wyck at Duerfede, situate on the middle Channel of the Rhene, where it diverteth into the Leck, well built, and fortified anciently with a good Castle, supposed to be the Bataworum spoken of by Tacitus, the Mansion at that time of the second Legion. 2. Rhenen, upon the same branch or Channel, whence it hath the name: about which is digged abundance of Turf for fuel. 3. Amersfort, on the River Em, (called in Latine Amisus) a fair Town, and well peopled. 4. Monfort, upon the Tsffel, pleasantly seated, and of great strength, as being anciently a Frontier-Town against the Hollanders. 5. Utrecht, situate on the middle Channel of the Rhene: first called Antonina, from one of the Antonines of Rome: but Dagobert King of France gave it the name of Trajectum (or Utrajectum), we now call it Utrecht because there was at that time the common Ferry over the River. The Town is large, beautiful, and very sumptuously built, having in it many good Churches of which 5 were anciently Collegiate; besides two famous Monasteries of noble Women, such as those spoken of elsewhere: the private houses well contrived, most of them having goodly Cellars, vaulted with wonderful art and skill, to which the people may resort in all times of danger. Sometime the Seat-Royal of Radbald, King of the Frifons, then of the Bishops; honoured of old with a Jurisdiction reformed for the parts adjoining, and now the principal of this Province. A City so miraculously seated amongst walled Towns, that a man may go from hence in one day to any one of 10 walled Towns or Cities, thence equally distant; or to any one of 26 Towns to Dinner; and come home to bed.

OVER-TSSELL, in Latine Transsalana, so named from its situation beyond the Tsffel, is bounded on the East with Westphalen, on the West with the Zuider-See, on the North with West-Friesland, on the South with Gelderland. The Country is very plain and without Hills, but wet and moorish affording excellent good Pasturage, and not defective in Corn. It is divided into three parts, that is to say, Twent, confining upon Westphalen, Tsffel, and on the River Tsffel; and Drem, beyond the River Vecht: in all which are contained 11 Towns, and 100 Villages. The principal of which are, 1. Drem, upon the River Tsffel, strong and well fortified, withal beautiful and well peopled; an Hanck-Town, and the chief of all this Province; first taken of those States by the Earl of Leicester, then Governor of those Countries for Queen Elizabeth, Anno 1586, treacherously re-yielded to the Spaniards by Sir William Stanley, but in the year 1590 again recovered by the States. 2. Swoll, standing on a little River which runs into the Vidre, anciently fortified with a double Ditch, and very strong Ramparts, an Hanck-Town; as is also 3. Campen, situate on the left Shore and fall of the Tsffel into the Zuider-See, a fair and large Town, and of very great strength by reason of those inaequable

Marshes

Marshes among which it is situate. These three are in that part thereof which is called Tsffel-Land, and by some Salada, by whom (cronecouilly) it is supposed to be the Country of the ancient Sallii. In that part hereof which is called Twent we have the Towns of 1. Olden-eel, 5. Engbede, 6. Delden, 7. Almeloo; of which little memorable. And in that of Drem, the Town and Cattle of Valtenburg, standing upon the Zuider-See, well served with all sorts of Victuals, and for that cause made the ordinary Residence of the Governour, and supreme Council for the whole Province.

The ancient Inhabitants of these two Provinces were some parts of the Batavi and Frifii minores, for that of Utrecht; the Bructeri and (as some say) the Sallii in Over-Tsffel. Both Provinces belonging anciently to the Episcopal See of Utrecht, founded by Dagobert King of France, who endowed it with great Lands and Territories; the first Bishop being Willibald, an Engliff-man; who converted these parts to Christianity. His Successors were to so great power, that they were able to bring 40000 men into the Field, and with great courage did maintain their Estate and Patrimony against the encroaching Fairs of Holland: but at the last having continued for the space of 900 years, Henry of Bavaria Bishop hereof, being extremely distressed with War by the Duke of Gelder, and driven out of the City of Utrecht by his own Subjects, (perhaps upon some humour of Reformation) alienated all the Temporalities of his Bishoprick to Charles the 5th, An. 1527, and the next year the Imperialists by one of the Factions were let into Utrecht; at what time both the Estates of the Country, and Pope Clement the 7. confirmed the Alienation made by the Bishop. After which solemn Acts of theirs the Emperor caused himself to be invested in this Estate by the States of the Empire, (for Utrecht was of old an Imperial Fief), and, for the better Government and Administration of it, divided it into two Provinces as it still continueth. But what this Bishop lost in Power his Successors not long after gained in Title; the Bishop of Utrecht being made an Archbishop or Metropolitan, Anno 1561. But by reason of the change of Religion which was then working, and the falling off of these Countries, which soon after followed, he had but little joy in his new Preferment.

17. GELDERLAND. 18. ZUTPHEN, and 19. GROENING.

THE Dukedom of Gelderland, at such time as it was first taken in by Charles the fifth, contained under it the Duchie of Gelders, properly and specially so called, the Earldom of Zutphen, and the Town and Seignoury of Greening; held by distinct Titles, and governed ever since their union with the Belgick Provinces as distinct Estates.

GELDERLAND is bounded on the East with Cleveland and the Earldom of Zutphen, on the West with Holland and Utrecht, on the North with Over-Tsffel and the Zuider-See; and on the South with Brabant and the Land of Guick. The Country is flat, having few hills in it, but many pleasant and commodious Woods, especially that called Echternwald, of Corn and Cattel very fruitful.

The whole Country is generally divided into two parts, 1. The Veluwe, contained within the Zuider-See, the middle Channel of the Rhene, and the Tsffel, the baremer of the two, and the worse inhabited; the people herof preferring Health before Wealth, as in other places; but affording a more pure Air, and a pleasanter dwelling than the other; the Woods and Forests well replenished with most kind of Game. The Barneve (so called of the Batavi, who possessed these parts) intercepted betwixt the said middle Channel of the Rhene and the Waal, exceeding ly fruitful in Corn, and of so excellent a Pasturage for the feeding of Cattel, that in the year 1570 there was a Gelderland Bull fold in Anwerp which weighed 3200 pounds.

In both divisions (not reckoning in the County of Zutphen) are contained 300 Villages, and 16 walled Towns: besides some fortified of late since the Wars began. The chief whereof are, 1. Nimwegen, (in Latine Novesium) an Imperial City, ordained by Charles the Great to be one of the three Sieges of the Empire for these outer parts: the other two being Thronowe in Luxemburg, and Aix or Agen in the land of Guick. And, as a Town Imperial, it had anciently the Privilege of Coining money: for which the people did no other service to the Emperours than once a year to send a man to Aix or Aquigrane with a Glove full of Pepper. But the Town being sold to the Gelders by William Earl of Holland and King of the Romans for 21000 Marks of Silver, Anno 1248, the power of Coining fell to those Princes; and yet the Town was brought to do better Service than formerly it had done at Agen. The Town is high mounted on the top of an Hill, the Waal, which is there large and deep running at the foot of it; rich, great, and populous, having besides the modern Fortifications an ancient Castle, with so goodly a Prospect, that from thence one may behold the best part of the Country; built, as some say, by Julius Caesar to command those parts. Under the Jurisdiction of it are, 2. Tiel, and 3. Bomel, two walled Towns, both situated on the Waal, both strong, and having many rich Villages under their command; and 4. Ghent, on the Vaal also, an unwalled Town, but having all the Privileges which the walled Towns have. Not far off, at the first meeting of the Vaal and the Maas, stands the strong Fort of S. Andrews, raised by the Archduke Albert to command the passage of those Rivers; and in the year 1600 taken in by Maurice Count of Nassau (after Prince of Orange) and ever since garrisoned by the States to secure that passage. 5. Ruermund, seated on the mouth of the Ruer, where it falleth into the Maas; a beautiful and well-peopled City, strong by Art and Nature, and seated in a fruitful Country, heretofore of the Dioceses of Liege, (as Nimwegen anciently of Calen) but made a See Episcopal by King Philip the Second, Anno 1559. This is the second capital City of Gelderland, and hath under the Jurisdiction of it 6. Veulo, a strong Town on the Maas, in which the Duke of Cleue yielded himself to Charles the fifth, An. 1543. 7. Gelders, heretofore of such reputation, that it gave name to all the Country; and well it doth deserve to do so still, being the only Town in all this Dukedom which neither first nor last hath been won by the Hollanders, but still preserved themselves in their Obedience to their natural Princes 8. Straal, or Straelen, a well fortified place; but which, according to the chances of War, hath often changed its Masters: 9. Arnhem, the Arenacum of Tacitus, and in those times the Mansion of the tenth Legion, situate on the Rhene, not above a mile from the great Channel, which Drusus, to keep his Souldiers from idleness, caused them to dig, to let the waters of the Rhene into those of the Tsffel; called therefore by the Ancients Fossa Drusiana, by the Modern Tsffel Durt. The Town is large and well built; the ordinary Residence heretofore of the Dukes of Gelderland, who had here their Chancery, and other supreme Courts of Justice. This is the third Capital City of Gelderland, anciently of the Dioceses of Utrecht and hath under the Jurisdiction of it, besides divers Villages, 10. Flissingen on the Rhene, the same which Tacitus calls Pala. 11. Harderwick on the Zuider-See, burnt to the ground Anno 1503; but since re-edified, and now more strong and beautiful than ever formerly. 12. Haem, upon the Tyffel, a good Town of War, but not else observable.

Within the Limits of this Dukedom stands the Town and County of Culenburg, erected into a County by King Philip the 2. by reason of the fair Territory which belonged unto it; formerly held in Fee of the Dukes of Gelderland, but otherwise not reckoned as a Member of it. 2. The Town and Earldom of Bueren, situate on the River Linge, having a strong Castle anciently, and a goodly Territory, holden immediately of the Empire, as a Fief Imperial. It was first made an Earldom in the person of Frederick, Lord of Emmond, Brother's Son to Arnold of Emmond, the sixth Duke, in 1492, which Earl of Bueren by Maximilian, the first, in 1492, which Frederick was grandfather of the valiant Maximilian of Emmond Earl of Bueren, who died Anno 1539. after whose death it fell at last to Philip of Nassau, eldest Son of William Prince of Orange, and of Ann the Daughter and Heir of the said Maximilian upon the death of the said Ann, Anno 1551.

ZUTPHEN, accounted formerly for the fourth capital City of Gelderland, now a distinct Province of it self, is bounded on the East with Westphalen, on the West with that part of Gelderland which is called Velmme, on the North with Over-Tyffel, on the South with Cleveland. It containeth 8 walled Towns; besides many Villages; that is to say, 1. Dortmum, standing on the old Tyffel, rising out of Westphalen. 2. Doeburg, where the old Tyffel falleth into the new Tyffel, or the French called Felle Druffum, communicating thereunto its name. 3. Bruerborch, a County of it self, which anciently had its particular Government. 4. Lochem, upon the River Berckel. 5. Tijerberg, a Town and County. 6. Gron, taken by the Prince of Orange, for the States Confederate Anno 1627. 7. Brordervoer, a Town of War, and subject to the change of Masters, as such places are. 8. Zunphen, or Zuidphen, so called of the Southern situation of it amongst the Fens, on the right shore of the Tyffel, where it receiveth into it the River kerckel, which runs through the Town. A Town indifferently well built, as well for private as publick edifices; a distinct State in Civil matters, but in Spiritual subject to (in former times) to the Bishop of Mouster. A thing observable and not to be parallel'd elsewhere; that the four chief Towns and Quarters of one Province only should appertain (as here in Gelderland) to four several Dioceses. Of which there may some reason be assigned for Zunphen, in regard it is a State more ancient than that of Gelderland it self, and not depending anciently on the fortunes of it; united to it by the Marriage of Orbo of Nassau, the first Earl of Gelderland, with Sophia, Daughter and Heir of Wickman the last Earl of Zunphen. So as this Earldom ended, when that first began. After this it continued Subject to the Earls and Dukes of Gelders, till the revolt of Holland and the other Provinces from the King of Spain; at what time it was bequeathed for the State by the Earl of Leicester: at the Siege whereof fell that gallant Gentleman Sir Philip Sidney, of whom our British Epigrammatist thus verifieth.

Dignategi scribis, facis & dignissima scribi;

Scripta probant dolum te una, fassa probum.

Thou writ'st things worthy reading, and didst do things worthy writing too:

Thy Acts thy Valour show,

And by thy Works we do thy Learning know.

And though upon the loss of that gallant man; Nephew and Heir unto that Earl the Siege was raised at the present; yet was it re-inforced again. Anno 1590, and the Town then taken, continuing ever since in the Confederacy of the States United.

GROENING-LAND hath on the East East-Friesland, on the West West-Friesland, on the North the main Ocean, on the South Over-Tyffel; so wedged inas it were betwixt both Frislands, that some hold it to be but a part of the West. It containeth under the Country called the Ommelanden, (corruptly for the Emmelanden, as conjecture, because lying along the River Em) and therein 145 Burroughs and Villages. The chief thereof are, 1. Dam, near the Em, bordering on East-Friesland. 2. Keykijk. 3. Old-Haven standing on the Sea. 4. As for the Town of Groening it self, it is rich, great, and very well built, situate amongst divers small Streams which run through it, and having also divers Channels for conveyance of waters, which adds much to the safety and strength thereof. A Town of great Jurisdiction both within and without, judging absolutely without Appeal in causes both Civil and Criminal; in Spirituals, subject heretofore to the Bishop of Mouster, till made one of the new Bishopricks by King Philip the second, Anno 1559. And though the Prince in Civil Causes had his Officer or Lieutenant there; yet in Criminal the Town was Sovereign, and granted Pardons as Sovereign of the whole Estate, paying to the Prince for all Duties yearly but 6000 Crowns. Both Town and Country anciently belonging to the Bishops of Utrecht, for whose negligence in defending them they submitted their Estate to the Duke of Gelderland. But the Dukes of Saxony laying some claim to it, disturbed this agreement for a time; during which Edward the Earl of East-Friesland possessed himself of it; but not able to make good his unjust possession sold his Estate therein to the Duke of Gelders, Anno 1544, to whom of right it did belong. Afterwards in the year 1546, they put themselves under the command of Charles the fifth, but with the reservation of all their Privileges and ancient Liberties, for preservation of the which, in danger to be over-born by the power of the Spaniards, they confederated with the rest of the United States, Anno 1594, and so still continue.

The ancient Inhabitants of these Countries were the Menapii and Siemambi, very valiant people, possessing Gelderland and the mayores Frisii, which were planted in Groening and the rest of Friesland. Of these the Siemambi were accounted the most valiant People, uniting with other Nations in the name of Frisia, and by that name possessing with the rest of those Nations the mighty Empire of the West. In the division whereof by the policy of Charles the Great, these Countries were first part of the Kingdom of Austrasia or East-France, afterwards of the German Empire; governed at the first by Gauarins or Protectors created by the people in the reign of Charle Bald, the two first being Wickard, and Leopold (or Leopold) two Brethren, who fixing their chief Seat in the Castle of Gelders, occasioned the whole Country to be called Gelderland. But they and their Successors, by what name or Title soever called, were in effect but provincial Officers, accountable to the Emperors for their Administration; the first free Prince hereof being Orbo of Nassau, who having to his first Wife the Lady Anna, Daughter of Wickard the last Guardian, was by the Emperor Henry the third made first Earl of Gelderland, adding thereto the State of Zunphen by a second Marriage, as is said before. In Reinold the ninth Estate was made a Dukedom by the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria, Anno 1339. Sold by Duke Arnold (justly inserted in his ungracious Son Adolph) to Charles Duke of Burgundy for 92000 Florens of ready money, and an annual Pension, Anno 1473. But notwithstanding this Agreement, Adolph (upon the death of Charles) possessed himself of it, and left it unto Charles his Son, who finally transferred it unto Charles the fifth, Anno 1547.

Earls and Dukes of GELDER-LAND.

- 1371 13. William, Son of William Duke of Guilich and Mary of Gelders, admitted Knight of the Garter by King Richard the 2.
- 1473 14. Arnold IV. the Brother of William.
15. Arnold of Emmond, Son of John Lord of Emmond and Mary his Wife, Daughter of Joan, the Sister of Rainold and William, the two last Dukes, succeeded in the Estate of Gelders; the Dukedom of Guilich being seized on by Adolph, Son of William the first Duke of Berg, as the next Heir-male to the two last Dukes. Being afterwards taken, imprisoned, and most barbarously handled by his own Son Adolph, and delivered by Charles the Warlike, Duke of Burgundy, he sold to him his Estates of Gelders and Zunphen, to be enjoyed by him after his decease, Anno 1472.
- 1473 16. Adolph, the wicked Son of Arnold, dispossessed of his Estate by the said Agreement, which D. Charles enjoyed for his life, after the death of the said Charles was restored to liberty by the Gambuis, Anno 1467, and made the General of their Forces against Lewis the 11.
- 1477 17. Charles, Son of Arnold, after long Wars with the Princes of the Houses of Burgundy and Austria, pretending the Sale and Legacy of Duke Arnold to Charles the Warlike, surrendered his Estates unto Charles the 5. to be enjoyed by him after his decease, if he left no Issue. According to which Contract the Emperor Charles succeeded him in Gelders and Zunphen, Anno 1538, being the year of his decease; after which time they were accomplished in the number of the Belgick Provinces.

The Arms hereof were Quarterly, 1. Az. a Lion Or, crowned Gules, for the Dukedom of Gelderland; 2. Az. a Lion Gules, for the Earldom of Zunphen.

Thus have we seen a Country which at the first erected ing of these States was nothing in a manner but Hogs and Marshes, and at the best but a continual VVilderness of VVoods and Forests, by the great providence of the Princes, and extreme industry of the people, made the most populous, best planted, and the wealthiest Estate (for the bigness of it) in the whole habitable world. And we have seen those several Estates and Principalities, by Marriages and other Contracts, reduced into the hands of the House of Burgundy; under the Princes of which great and illustrious Family, inferior to no Kings of Christendom for Power and Riches (especially under Duke Philip the Good) the Subjects hereof did abound in wealth and plenty, that Philip de Comines, who then lived, affirmed, that this Country seemed like the Land of Promise. Some thought there was a purpose in this Duke Philip of erecting these States into a Kingdom, from which he was diverted by the difference and variety of Laws and Privileges which those people severally lived under, not to be brought without great difficulty and dilatare to one form of Government: yet might he have done it, if he would, as himself openly affirmed to the Embassadors of King Lewis 11. But Charles his Son, being more bent on the Design, negotiated to that end with the Emperor Frederick, whom he met at Triers, Anno 1473; and doubtless had obtained his purpose, upon the Marriage of his Daughter with Maximilian Frederick's Son, (which was then proposed) had not his rash Engagement against the Swissers, and his untimely death therein, broke the course of these Projects: which Projects had they took effect, as in all probability they had, but for that Engagement, he had extended his Dominions all along the Rhene, and on both sides of it, from the Alps to the German Ocean, and been the most considerable Prince at that time in Christendom; all Alsace in High Germany being lost or mortgaged to him by the Duke of Austria, the Dukedom of Lorraine at his mercy; besides the hopes he had of the Earldom of Provence, intended to him by King Reney, which would have opened him a way into the Mediterranean. He being dead, the Government continued as before it was; each Province having its distinct Laws, and living according to their ancient Privileges, till the attempt of Philip the second, King of Spain, most resolutely (but unfortunately) bent to bring them under the command of that Crown, to cancel all their Privileges, and new-mould the Estate according to his own will and pleasure; occasioning thereby the Revolt of a great part of the Country, and the setting up of a new Estate opposite unto him, and destructive of his Interest in it. But before we come unto this Change, we will first look upon the Prince's Power, Revenue, and other things considerable touching this Estate, whilst it stood entire under the Princes of the House of Burgundy and Lords of BELGIUM.

- 1369 1. Philip the Hardy, Duke and Earl of Burgundy, Earl of Flanders and Artois, the first great raiser of this House.
- 1404 2. John the Proud, Duke of Burgundy, &c.
- 1419 3. Philip the Good added to his Estates the Dukedom of Brabant and Limburg, the Alsop, fate and Meelun by the death of his Cousin Philip, the Earldoms of Mainten, Holland, Zeland, and the Lordship of West-Friesland, by the Resignation and death of the Countess Tripelun, whose next Heir he was; the Dukedom of Luxembourg, and the Earldom of Namur, which he bought for money.
- 1467 4. Charles the VVarlike, who bought the Estates

Arms. Lycorgus gave a Law to the Lacedæmonians, that they should never fight often with one enemy: the breaking whereof made the Thebans a small Commonwealth, to be their equals in power: whereupon it was tartly said by Anticidas to Agellam King of Sparta, that by his freedom warring on them and fighting with them he had made the Thebans good Soldiers against their wills. The Turks won the vast Empire they now possess by making many and speedy Wars. But now that Policy being worn out of fashion, we see that (to omit Persia) the little and distracted Kingdom of Hungary hath for 200 years resisted their Forces. So was it betwixt the Dukes of Austria and the Switzers, and so it is between the Spaniards and Low-country-men; who formerly being accounted a people of peace, altogether unfit for the Wars, by their continual combating with the Spaniards, are become ingenious, full of Action, and great managers of causes appertaining to Fights, either by Sea or Land. We may here-by also perceive what advantage a small State gaineth by fortifying places and passages: there being nothing which sooner breaketh a great Army, and undoeth a great Prince than to beleague a well-fortified Town; for that here-in he consumeth his time, and commonly loseth his men, credit and money; as the Romans before Nimantia, the great Turk in Malta, and Charles of Burgundy before Nancy. For where War is drawn out of Field into the Walls, the Mactock and Spade being more necessary than the Sword and Spear, there the Valour of the Assailant is little available, because it wanteth its proper object.

Thus as before we brought these several Estates and Provinces into one hand, so now we have broke them into two; the one part continuing in Obedience to the Crown of Spain, the other governing themselves as a State apart. Under the King remain the Dukedoms of Luxemburg, Limbourg and Brabant; some few Towns excepted; the Marquisate of the Empire, the Earldoms of Hainault, Namur, Artois, and Flanders, (except only Schuyt) and the Lordship or Seignoury of Mechlin, with many places of importance in the Duchy of Geldres, to many places of importance in the Duchy of Flan- counteravail the Towns that are held from them in Flan- ders and Brabant. This is by far the greater part of the Country, and more fruitful in regard of the Commodities there naturally growing, but as much inferior to the other in power and riches, by reason of their strength in Shipping, by which they have the command at Sea, and thereby draw the whole Trade of Christendom, driven before at Amwerp, to Amsterdam, and other Towns of their Confederacy.

For the general Government of these Provinces there is a Regent sent from the Court of Spain, whose Authority is generally as great as that of the King; save that all matters of moment pass under the Kings name, and that all Officers of any great trust and concernment are appointed by him, and that all Laws, Decrees, Sentences and Negotiations are dispatched in his name also. For the assistance of the Regent there is a Privy Council, a Council of State, and a Council of Finances, by whom all things are ordered which concern the Publick, the Regent's Authority co-operating and concurring with them, without which, though they may consult, they can execute nothing. And for the Governance and well ordering of their several Provinces there is in every one of them a Lieutenant or Provincial Government, subordinate to the Regent, and accountable to him; and in each Province a particular Council held in the King's name, consisting of more or less Counsellors, (as the bigness of the Province is) for the most part Doctors or Licentiates of the Civil Laws, with a President at the Head thereof, which in some places they call the Parliament.

after the manner of the French, and in some the Chancery. To these Courts all the Subjects do resort for Justice, in Causes both Criminal and Civil: to these are brought Appeals from inferior Judicatures, such as the Courts of great Towns and particular Franchises: and from these lieth an appeal to the great Council at Mechlin, supreme and superintendent unto all the rest.

When any thing is to be done which concerns the profit of the Prince, or otherwise is of publick moment, the Regent sendeth out Letters in the King's name, to command the Estates, that is to say, the Clergy, the Nobility, and the Principal Towns of every Province, (except those of Luxemburg, Geldres, West-Friesland and Over-Yssel, who by special Privilege cannot be called out of their own Countries) to come before him. The place of their Assembly is for the most part at Brussels, the Court and Residence of the Regent; because the Brabanters are also Privileged not to be summoned out of the Precincts of their own Province. Where being come, the States Assemble not altogether, but those of one Province at a time, so one after another: to whom the President, or some one of the Council of State propoeth in the Prince's name that which he demandeth. To which if any Town oppose, then all which the rest have done is of no effect, nothing being granted by the Deputies or States of any Province, but with this condition, that all the rest of the Estates do agree unto it. Without this punctual consent of all parties interested, the Prince can impose nothing, by their Laws upon the Subject, nor alter any thing at all in the publick Government.

And as the People are thus Privileged in regard of the Prince, so are the Princes and Prelates privileged in regard of the Pope, it being agreed upon between them.

1. That the Prince is to give Clergy-Benefices, and the Pope to conform them.
2. That neither Prelate nor Lay-person may be cited to Rome, but the Pope to send his Delegates or Commissioners into the Country.
3. The Pope not to give a Benefice, nor grant a Pardon, nor send a Bull into the Country, without the leave of the Prince.
4. That no Clergy-man can buy Lands or other immovables, without the Prince's consent. And
5. That the Prince hath power to visit the Clergy, to see if they be well governed or not; and if they be not, to reform the Abuses.

Great Privileges, if considered rightly; greater than which few Protestant Princes do pretend to in their own Dominions.

As for the Revenue raised by the Spaniard out of his part of this Estate, it is not easy to be guessed at; and of that which is, there comes but little to his Coffers. The expences of his Court there is as great as ever under any of the former Regents; and his charge of entertaining Soldiers for his Towns and Garrisons greater than before. Nor doth it now stand with reason of State to lay any arbitrary Taxes upon the People, least he exasperate them to a second Rebellion, or flatter them to some new Confederacy against his Quiet.

Under the Government of the Confederate Estates are the Dukedom of Gelderland, excepting some few Towns in the hands of the Spaniard, the entire Earldoms of Holland, Zeland and Zuypen, the Seignouries of West-Friesland, Over-Yssel, Groning, the Town of Schuyt, Utrecht, Over-Yssel, Groning, and many pieces of importance in the Dutchy of Brabant. This is the lesser part by far, and far inferior to the other in regard of the Soil, but the more populous of the two, and by the indultry and great Trading of the people the more rich and powerful. They are governed after their own old Laws, by the particular Estates of every Province, not yet united into one entire Body of a Commonwealth; saving that for the better preservation of their Confederacy, the Commissioners of the several Provinces do consult together, whom they have honoured with the name of the States General.

The Estates of the particular Provinces elected out of the principal Towns and Places of most importance, do order the Affairs thereof according to their ancient Privileges, Rights, and Customs, as well by themselves as by their Collegues and Officers whom they do appoint; and that as well for matters of State as in point of Justice. For Administration of the which, the Governors, President and Counsellors of the Provincial Courts, have the cognizance of all Cases, both civil and criminal, and in all Causes of Appeal from inferior Courts; in each of which they proceed without Appeal, making their Acts and Commissions in the name of the said Governors, Presidents, and Council; but pronouncing Sentence and executing Judgment in right of the Sovereignty of the said Province. And these provincial States are chosen Generally out of the Plebeians or common People; and the Burgers (at the best) of the greater Townships; the Nobility and Gentry being to worn out, that in all Holland and Zeland there are not left above three Families of Gentlemen, and those compelled to live after the Plebeian fashion for fear of Envy, and to avoid the Infoleny of the fauzy Clowns, who, out of rudeness and the desire of Equality, hate nothing more among them than the name of a Gentleman.

Out of these Provincial States, which hold not for any certain and determinate time, but only during the pleasure of the Community for which they serve, are chosen one or more for each several Province, according to the condition and capacity of those which are chosen, to reside at the Hague, there to consult of the Affairs which concern the publick: but so, that be they more or less out of every Province they make amongst them but one Suffrage, when any thing is put unto the Vote. And these they call the States General, first because a collected Body out of all the Provinces; and, secondly, because they are not properly to deal in any matters of particular concernment, which are determinable absolutely by the States Provincial, but only in such things as concern the general good of the whole Estate, as treating with Ambassadors, making War and Peace, &c. For their Assistance in the which, there is a Council of State, made up of the Governors and some eminent men of every Province, (in which the Ambassadors of England as long as we held Fishing, and the other Cautionary Towns, had his voice or suffrage) by whose advice they dispose of all things which concern the publick: but so that if any difficulty do appear in the business, they conclude nothing till they have the approbation and consent of the particular Cities and Provinces for which they are chosen; to whom they are accountable for their Administration, and by whom revocable whensoever they please.

The Revenue of this Estate doubtless is exceeding great, the Army which they keep in continual entertainment consisting of no less than 30000 men; which they can draw into the field, leaving the Forts and Towns very well provided; yet so well paid that we never read of any Mutiny amongst them for want thereof. The whole Charge with the entertainment of Captains and superiour Officers, is said to amount to 500000 l. per annum; raised on the people by Excise laid upon all Commodities, and many Taxes of like nature, so insupportable in themselves, and amongst men which would be thought to live in a Free State, that should the Spaniard or any Prince in Christendom lay but half so much on their Subjects, it would occasion a Revolt. So that whereas one of the first causes of their falling off from the King of Spain was to free themselves from Taxes and Impositions illegally (as they said) enforced upon them; they have drawn on themselves more arbitrary and illegal Payments than any Nation in the World. So little have they got by the change of Government. Touching their Power at Sea, we have spoke of already. All I shall now add to it is by way of Instance, which is, That in the year 1587 the King of Denmark, on pretence of some displeasure, arrested 608 Ships of theirs of all sorts at one time in the Sound; and that the next year after they set out, upon very short warning, an hundred good men of War, to join with England against the invincible Armada, which then threatened both. To conclude, there is nothing wanting to these Countries wherewith the God of all blessings doth enrich a Nation, but a gracious Prince, unity of Religion, and a quiet Government: which if it pleased the Almighty to confer upon them, they would surpass all neighbouring States in Treasure, Potency, Content, and all worldly Happiness.

GERMANY.

GERMANY is bounded on the East with Prussia, Poland, and Hungary; on the West with France, Switzerland and Belgium, on the North with the Baltick Ocean, and some part of Denmark, on the South with the Alpi, which part it from Italy. By which accompt the modern Germany much differeth from that described by Tacitus and others of the Roman Writers: that comprehending the three Kingdoms of Denmark, Norway,, and Sweden, with so much of the Kingdom of Poland as lieth on this side of the River Vistula; but bounded on the East with the Rhene, and on the South with the Danow: the modern Germany containing on the farther banks of those Rivers five whole Roman Provinces, that is to say, Noricum Riperis, and Mœdioterraneum, Rætia secunda, Belgica and Germania prima, with some parts of Rætia prima and Germania secunda: but terminated with the Danew and the Baltick Sea.

It was first called thus by the Romans, (as some conceive) who seeing the People both in Customs, Speech and course of life to like those of Gallia, called them Germans to the Gauls; the word Germans in the Latino signifying a Brother of the whole blood, as our Lawyers phrase it) that is to say, a Brother both by Father and Mother; those which have the same Mother, but divers Fathers, being called Fratres uterini. And of this mind is Strabo, who speaking of the great resemblance which was betwixt these Nations in Manner, Speech, Customs and way of life, concludes it thus, that the Romans did with very good reason call them Germans, cum fratres, eos, Gallorum hoc nomine vellent ostendere intending to signify by that name, that they were the brethren of the Gauls. But this is to be understood of those people only which dwelt next to Gaul, and not of all the Nations which inhabited in this vast Continent according to the ancient extent thereof; it being very well observed by Tacitus, that Germany was at first Nationis, non Gentis, nomen, the name of some of the Nations only, not of all the Country; the name in process of time spreading over all that large Tract of ground and thence scattered Nations which were either conquered by them or incorporate with them. Others will have the name to be merely Dutch, deriving it from Ger, which signifies All, and the word Man, signifying in that Language as in ours; whence also they derive the name of Almans by which they would imply that the Almans or Germans are a very warlike Nation, a people that have in them nihil nisi virile, nothing not worthy of a man. Bacharus, (somewhat near to this, telling us that Ger in the ancient Gallies, did signify as much as Guerr in the modern French, would have them at their first coming over the Rhene to be called Germans by the Gauls, that is to say, men of War; (or Gens de Armes in the present French) by reason of the great and many Victories obtained by them.

The like diversity I find for the name of Almans. For though some gave them the name of Almans from the same originals from whence they fetch the name of Germans, as was said before, yet others as probably conjecture that they had that name because they consisted of many several Nations coming out of the North and North-east hither, that they seemed to be a Hottch-pot of all sorts of men, kneaded into one name and Nation; which is the conceit of Almainus Quadrupes. But for my part, I do conceive (supposing the name of Almain to be Dutch originally) that the whole Country was not called Almain till such time as the Princes of the Dukedoms of Almain (since called Suevia, or Schwaben) did possess the Empire, which continuing in that potent Family near 100 years, might very well occasion them to be called the Emperours of Almain, or the Almain Race, and so impart that name to the Empire also. And for the Almans naturally and properly so called (of whom we shall speak more when we come to Suevia, I fee no Etymology more agreeable to true Antiquity, than to derive the name from Mannus the Son of Tiufco, one of their Gods, and a principal Founder of this Nation, (Tiufconem Deum & flum Mannus; originem gentis emendore), as it is said by Tacitus; the people being called Alemanni (with a double n) in all ancient Writers, as men that did derive themselves from this Mannus, the Son of Tiufco. In like sorts as (I think) the Marcomanni, inhabiting the Countries of Moravia, were so called, as being the Manni of the Marches or outborders of Germany, and not the Markmanns, as if they were men of mark, the only men of fame and honour of all those Nations; which might as well be preffed from the Dutch originals that of All-man, in the meaning by them pretended. And unto this opinion I am Iwayed the rather, because I find the Dutch Nation generally so much inclined to derive their Original from Tiufco, (from whom the Tenenti, inhabiting about Brandenburg, may well fetch their Pedegree;) the name of Dutchland or Dutchmen coming near in sound to Tiufc-land and Tiufc-men. In which I shall subscribe to Verfeegan's opinion, though for the most part I look upon him but as the second part of Gorgius Becanus.

But being the Etymologies of the names of most ancient Nations are very uncertain, and for the most part founded on Conjectures only; let us leave the name a while, and survey the Country: the length whereof (according to the truest and exactest measurement) from East to West, that is to say from the Vistula or Weslto the Rhene, is estimated at 840 Italian miles; the breadth from North to South, that is to say, from the Ocean to the Town of Brixen in Tyrol, 740 of the same miles. So that the Figure of it being near a Square, it may take up 3160, miles in compass, or thereabouts. Situate in the Northern temperate Zone, betwixt the middle Parallels of the sixth and tenth Climates, the longest day in the most Southern parts, being 15 hours and an half, and in the most Northern 17 hours and a quarter.

In this compals and extent of Ground are suppoed to live 10 millions of people. The men of the poorer sort are laborious, painful, and of a sincere and honest carriage; the Nobles for the most part either Scholars or Soldiers, and true lovers of Honour; though Tacitus hath otherwise relolved it, affirming that the Gauls fight for Liberty, the Belgians for Honour, and the Germans for Gain. Which yet is true enough of the common Souldiers, who, if they fail of Pay, fail in Courage presently. Of both sorts they are generally tall and big, of great Bones, much Fleth, and large Sinews, but commonly of such a phlegmatick constitution, that they have not spirit enough to manage such a mass of Fleth as they bear about them. Which want of natural heat to concoct that humour makes them for the mostpart to be men of abright or light brown Hair, and fair Complexions. They are little addicted to Venus, and very much to Bacchus; whence the Proverb, Pyrræ Germanorum est bibere, and the old Verbes, Germani possunt cunctis tolerare labores.

O munitum pellem tantum bene ferat lictum.
The Dutch themselves to labour will incur.
O would they Thirst could half so well endure.
This love upon their Liqueur, together with their natural Temper, maketh them fat and corpulent. Whereupon Pope Julius the second, styling the Spaniards Birds of the Air, because of their Ambition, the Venetians and Genoese Fishes of the Sea, because so much accustomed to Navigation; called the German by the name of the Beast of the Field. And when Augustus was resolved to take unto himself the supreme Government of Rome, he was advised by Agrippa to chuse a Guard of German to attend upon him. The reason was, (as Dion giveth it) Because in those great Bodies there was little Malice hidden, and less Subtlety; and that they were a People that took more pleasure to be commanded than to command. In matters of War this people have been formerly in a measure favourable; yet not so much by the valour or conduct of their Captains; (for they have had but few such) as by their own hardiness. They withstood the Romans 20 years, afflicting and troubling them more in that space than either the Carthaginians, Spaniards, Gauls, or Partians; and even at the last (saith Tacitus) Triumphatis magis fuit quam victis. In our times the Rutters and Lansknights of Germany, (for so they call their Horse and Foot) have been much employed: but more by reason of their numbers, easily rais'd out of so large a Country, than any opinion of their Valour; being flow of motion, dull of apprehension, fearful of putting any thing to the chance of War. By reason of which fearfulness, as they are very cruel upon all advantages, not sparing either age or sex when they get the Victory; so are they apt to run upon any Alarm, not to be rallied, if once routed, upon any persecutions. Infomuch as Charles Count of Manfield, General of an Army of 50000 fighting men, but most of this Nation, was forced to suffer a small Army of 10000 Turks to pass by his Trenches, being then strongly encamped before Strigium, (now Graz) a Town of Hungary, and to Victual the Town before his face; not daring to lift upon them or disturb their purpose, for fear lest, being lustily charged, his Germans would give back and endanger all. And yet besides these weaknesses, they have some great faults. One of which is a custom, if their wages be not duly paid, (though it be in the very midst of a Battle) to cry Guelts, Guelts, throwing down their weapons, and suffer themselves to be cut in pieces by the Enemy. And so they served Frederick the Eleckour Palatine at the Battle of Prague. On the other is an extreme humour of Spoil and Plunder: so which they are so bent wherever they come, that such as entertain them have just cause to say, that they receive more damage by them than they do by their Enemies. Two undeceivable notes of mercenary Valour.

The women are of a good Complexion, but by reason of their intemperance in eating and drinking, much given to Compulency; women of a good carriage, (as the saying is) good Bearers, and as fruitful Breeders; fervently obsequious to their Husbands, whom many of good rank serve at the Table with Trenchers and other necessaries,

The Diet of Germany, France and Italy, is by a Traveller thus censured: The Germans have much meat; but Italianly dress it; the French little, but neatly cooked; the Austrians neither the one nor the other. And to say truly, the Germans have meat enough; the People being generally good eaters, and drinking by nature or ill custom excessive both in eating and drinking, seldom rising from the Table till they have devoured all which was set before them. Inomuch that in some places it is provided by Law, that in their feasts they shall not sit above five hours at the Table. During which time, if by Intemperance either in eating or drinking a man disgorge his foul stomach in his fellow's Lap, or pifs under the Table, it is no disgrace to him, nor at any time taken notice of to his reproach. Which humour of gormandizing and excessive drinking is not only cherished among the vulgar, but even amongst their greatest Princes; who, besides what they do in this kind themselves, have their drinking Champions, as well to answer all Challenges, as to challenge all comers, contending with each other, as a point of State, whose Cellular shall afford the greatest and most capable Vessels.

The Title of the Father defends to all the Children; every Son of a Duke being a Duke, and every Daughter a Dutchess: a thing which the Italians hold for ridiculous that they put it in the fore-front of this facetious Satyre, The Dukes and Earls of Germany, the Dons of Spain, the Nonseurs of France, the Bishops of Italy, the Nobility of Hungary, the Lords of Scotland, the Knights of Naples, and the Younger Brethren of England, make a poor Company. For by this common assuming of the Father's Honour, and the parting his Lands among all the Brethren, the Nobility is beyond reason multiplied; and no less impoverished; their being not long since seventeen Princes of Anhalt, and twenty seven Counts of Mansfeld; to most of which their Arms have been the best part of their Riches, et nihil nisi arma & manus; and in his omnia, as Tacitus once said of the ancient Britains. And yet there is not one of this poor Nobility that will vouchsafe to marry with the Daughter of the wealthiest Merchant, or suffer any of their Estates married to any under the degree of a Noblemen; nor any juster cause of a Differing their Children than ignoble Marriages; they never permitting the Issue of such a Bed to succeed in any of their Fees, Estates or Titles; by means whereof, though they debar themselves of such accessions of wealth as Matches of that kind might bring them; yet, to the great honour of their generosity in this particular, they preserve the pure Stream of their Blood from running into muddy Channels, and keep the Spirits of brave men though they want the Fortunes.

The Languages here spoken are, the French in Lorraine, and in some Towns of the Bishop of Triers; the Italian in the highest part of Tyrol, which lie next to the Commonwealth of Venice; the Sclavonian spoken in Bohemia, Moravia, and some parts of Lusatia; and the high Dutch, the general Language of the Country. A Language very ancient doublets; (though I am not so much a Gothic as to think it spoke in Paradise, or before the Flood) and such as, by reason of the little or no impression which the Roman Armies made upon this Country, hath less the commixture with the Latine than any which is used in these Western parts, (the Wells excepted) and is very harsh by reason of its many Consonants.

This Country was esteemed by Tacitus to be rude and barren, containing nothing but unpeopled Forests, unprofitable Heaths; and unhealthy Pools. Germaniam inferam terris, asperam colis, trifidem cultu asperitque, as he farther added. And such no doubt it was in those times wherein Tacitus lived; the people not being civilized, nor the Country cultivated, nor any means found out to rectify the sharpness of that Northern Air. But he who doth observe it now, cannot but confess that there is no Country in the World either better planted, or replenished with more goodly and gallant Cities; being also in most parts both pleasant, healthy and profitable; abounding with Mines of Silver and inferior Metals, plentiful in Corn and Vines, with which they supply the defect of other Nations, as also with Fleish, Fith, Linnen, Quicksilver, Alum, Saffron, Armour and other Iron-works. The Arable Lands are so spacious in the Eastern parts, that the Husbandman going forward with his Plough in the morning, turneth not back again till noon; so making but two Furrows for his whole daies work. For this Versheim is my Author; and if it be not credible; let him bear the blame.

Souldiers of most eminency in the elder times were 1. Arminius the Prince of the Cherusci, who overthrew Quintilius Varus and the Roman Legions. 2. Wittikind, the last King of the Saxons. For the middle Ages, 3. Otho the first, 4. Frederick Barbarossa, 5. Redolph of Habsburg, Emperours and Kings of Germany; 6. Henry, surnamed the Lion, Duke of Saxony. And in the last Century of years, 7. Frederick the second, Elector Palatine, who made good Vienma against the Turks; 8. Albert Earl of Mansfeld, 10. John George of Jagerndorf, 11. Albert Wallenstein Duke of Friedland, and divers others of late daies.

Scholars of note the elder times afforded none, nor the middle many; Learning being here so rare in the middle of the eighth Century, that Vigilius Bishop of Salzburg was condemned of Heresie, for holding that there were Antipodes. In the next Age there flourished Rabanus Maurus, Haimo of Halberstadt, Walafridus Strabus, men learned for the times they lived in. And in the following times, Oekonom, a stout defender of the Rights of the Empire against the Encroachments of the Pope, Orho Frisingensis the Historian, Albertus Magnus the Philosopher; of which last it is said, that he made the Statua, of a Man, which with the help of Artificial Engines could speak articulately, and was the work of 50 years. Then in the days of our Grandfathers we have 1. Martin Luber, that great instrument of the Reformation. 2. Philip Melancthon, his Coadjutor in that work, but of more excellent parts, and far better temper; thence called the Phoenix of that age. 3. Jacquin Camerarius, a great friend of Philip. 4. Martin Chemnitz, a solid and laborious Writer. 5. Flacius Illyricus, the chief Author of the Magdeburgian Centuries, and Father of the Rigid Luberians. 6. Sebastian Munster, and industrious Cosmographer, and a learned Linguist. 7. Silburgius, and 8. Buxtorfius, as great Linguists as he. Not to descend to further instances in those who have so filled the Matts of France in these latter times.

But the greatest excellency of this people lieth in the Mechanical part of Learning, as being eminent for many Mathematical Experiments, strange Water-works, Medicinal Extractions, Chymistry, the Art of Printing, and inventions of like noble nature, to the no less benefit than admiration of the World. Amongst which I cannot chuse but instance in that work of Regiomontanus, an excellent Mathematician, and a cunning Artizan, spoken of by Keckermann; who at the coming of the Emperor Maximilian to the City of Nuremberg, made a wooden eagle, which flew a quarter of a mile out of the Town to meet him; and being come to the place where he was, returned back of its own accord, and so accompanied him to his Lodging. A thing if true (as the Relator was a man of too much gravity to abuse the World with an untruth) exceedingly beyond that Miracle of a flying Dove, for which Archytas is so famed amongst the ancients. Exceeded only by himself in a like invention, which was that of an Iron Fly, (the greater Miracle of Art, because less quantity) which at a Feast, to which he had invited some of his special Friends, flew from his hand about the Room and returned again, as is affirmed by Peter Ramus; expressed thus by Divine Du Bartas.

Once as this Artiste, more with mirth than meat,
Feasted some Friends, whom he esteemed great,
From his learn'd hand an Iron Fly flew out,
And, having flown a perfect Round-about,
With wearied wings return'd unto her Master,
And as judicious on his arm he plac'd her.
O divine Wit, that in the narrow Womb
Of a small Fly could find sufficient Room
For all those Springs, Wheels, Counterpoise and Chains,
Which stood instead of Life, and spur, and reins!

And amongst these I reckon Bernhardus Swart, a Franciscan Friar, the Inventor (though by accident) of that fatal Instrument, the Gun. Studios in Chymistry, he mingled dried Earth, Sulphur, and some other with a stone; which he had put into a Mortar covered with a stone; and striking Fire to light a Candle, as the night came on, a spark by chance fell into the Mortar, and catching hold of the Sulphur and others Minerals, with great violence blew up the stone where it was covered. Amazed at which, he made trial severally of these Ingredients, to find out which of them it was that produced that effect: which having discover'd, he caus'd an Iron Pipe to be made, crammed it with Sulphur, Saltpetre and Stones; and putting fire to it, saw with what violent noise and fury it discharged it self. This Invention he is said to have first communicated to the Venetians, Anno 1350, of therabouts, who having been often vanquished by the Genoveses, and driven almost to a necessity of yielding to them, by the help of their Guns (Bombards they were then called) gave unto their enemies a notable discomfiture. And this was the first Battle that ever took place like Pieces had a part in; which not long after put to lence all the Engines and Devices wherewith the Ancients were wont to make their Batteries. The next that made use of this instrument were the Inhabitants of the Baltick Sea: and not long after them the English at the Siege of Calice, Anno 1347; about which time they began also to be used in France: The French, it seemeth, learned the use of them from the English, and the first benefit received by them, was the death of that famous Leader, Thomas Montacute, Earl of Salisbury, who at the Siege of Orleans was slain with a great shot, An. 1425. Twenty years after this, An. 1446, they were first used in Spain, at the Siege of Sesevillea, a Town of the Kingdom of Granada, by the Castilians; and after by degrees made common to the rest of that Continent. And being grown common in this Continent, as well unto the Jews and *Moor*s as unto the Christians, it was not long before they taught it to the Turks. For the Jews being forced to abandon Spain, Anno 1492, betook themselves to Greece and other parts of the Turky Dominions, to whom they shewed the Art of making Ordnance, Gunpowder, Harquebusses, sufficiently since used by that people to the hurt of Christendom. But somewhat before this the Turks had been in part beholden for them to the Wars they had with the Venetians; beholden, I say, for notwithstanding the harm received by them at first, yet afterwards growing expert in managing of them, they gave unto Ulfan Calasene and Hismael two of the most mighty Emperours of Perfia, two memorable Overthrows by the help of their great Ordnance only. The Portugals were in this Art the Tutors to the Persians: for as Solyman the Turkish Emperour objected against them, they not only aided Tamas the Sophi with certain Harquebusses, but also sent him workmen to shew him the use and making of Artillery. These great Pieces at the first invention were rude unskillfully, and charged with Stone-bullets only, but by degrees they came to that perfection, both for the wall and the hand, which they now have. Whether now Archery or Gunning be to be preferred, I stand not here to determine; only this I am sure of, that Victories have been of late purchased with less expence of blood and life than ever formerly. But of this Theam more perhaps hereafter, when we shall come to take the Partisan Archery into consideration.

The Religion of this Country it is not easie to name, considering many are here allowed; Jews being intermixt with Christians, and these divided into Papists and Protestants; the latter also divided into Lutherans, Calvinists, &c. The Christian Faith was first planted here, by Dorotheus Bishop of Tyre be of any credit, by St. Thomas surnamed Didymus, one of the Twelve. But being there is little trust into his Relations, the best were to say that the Germans had not all the same Apostles; that the Gospel was first preached amongst the Rhatians and Vandals; by S. Lucius of Cyrene, amongst those of Noricum by S. Marick, by S. Crescent at Metz, S. Clement at Metz, Lorraine, all of them Apostolical men, and of the number of the 70. after that by S. Maternus at Colen, and by S. Eucherius at Triers. That the Faith was planted very early in these Countries Irenaeus, the renowned Bishop of Lions, An. 170, is sufficient evidence, who takes notice of it; and that it prospered very well and took very good root, appeareth by the Bishops of Metz, Triers, Vorms, Spire, Basil, and Straesburg, subscribing to the Council of Colen in the Reign of Constantine the Son of Constantine the Great, An. 347. But the light hereof being extinguished for a time by those barbarous Nations who fell upon these out-parts of the Roman Empire, began to shine again on the Conversion of the French in all parts of this Country; the Conquests and example of this pious Nation giving great encouragement thereunto. In which as those of other Countries do not want their honour, so the greatest part thereof belongs to the English Saxons; Willibrod the first Bishop of Utrecht, Willwald of Aichstet, Swibori of Verdon, Willwald of Breme, and especially Boniface the Archbishop of Ament, being most gloriously fortunate in that sacred service. The Moravians, Bohemians, and other farther off, came not in till afterwards. Not fully converted to the Faith, they began to suck in the Corruptions of the Church of Rome; discerned and opposed by J. Hulse and Hierom of Rome; Bohemian Divines, who by reason of the Marriage of King Richard the second of England with the Daughter of Wenceslaus Emperour and King of Bohemia, had opportunity to be acquainted with the Preachings of Wicliffe, the Point of whose Doctrine they approved and propagated. But these two being burnt at Constance by the decree of that Council, their followers in Bohemia would not so give over, but after many sufferings and much bloodshed, obtained at last a Toleration of the Emperour Sigismund their King, more able to make good his word in his own the fire at Constance, to whom he had granted his safe Conduct for their coming and going. In this condition they remained under the name of those of the Sub uranique or Calistini, because of their administering the Sacrament in both kinds, till the rising of Luther, who justly offended at the impious and unwarrantable Assertions of Frier Tegel, and others of the Pope's Pardon-mongers; first opposed their doings, and after questioned their Authority by which they added, falling from one point to another, till he had shaken the Foundations of the Roman Fabrick. Of the success of his undertaking we shall speak but little, as in a thing well known to all men of knowledge. Suffice it in this place to say that his Doctrine was not only received in Germany, but generally embraced in the great Kingdoms of Denmark and Sweeland, with the Provinces and Islands appertaining to them, in great part of Poland, Hungary, and Transylvania, as far almost as to the banks of the Euxine Seas; but for the progress of it here (which we are more especially at this time to enquire into) it was so well approved of, that the Dukes of Saxony, Brunswick, Lunenbourg, Wirtemberg, Mecklenberg, and Pomerania, the Marquels of Brandenburg, the Landgraves of Hesse, and most of the free Imperial Cities did adhere unto it, who from their Protection made at Spire (the Imperial Chamber) to that effect, An. 1529, had the name of Protestants. The next year following they delivered in the Confession of their Faith at Ausburg, a City of Suevia, thence called Confessio Augusana; authorized, or tolerated at least, after a long War, with variable success on both sides, by the Emperour Charles the fifth, at the Pacification made at Pessaw, An. 1552, and afterwards more fully at Ausburg, (where their Confession had first been tendered, Anno 1555).

But not to pass over this matter in these generals only, we may know once for all, that in the year 1530, the Protestant Princes having tendered their Confession at Ausburg, (as before is said) and finding it not so well received as they did expect, entered into a Confederation at the Town of Smaleald (belonging to the Duke of Saxony) for defence thereof, and for the Defence of one another in pursuance of it. Into this Confederacy first entered John Frederick the Duke of Saxony and his Son, Ernest, and Francis Dukes of Lunenbourg, Philip the Landgrave of Hesse, George Marquels of Brandenburg, the Cities of Straesburg, Neurenberg, Heilbrun, Ruteling, Ulm, Lindaw, Constance, Memming, and Campeadene. Afterwards, Anno 1535, there entered into it Barnimus and Philip Princes of Pomerania, Ulrich Duke of Wirtemberg, &c.

bert Duke of Zweibrücken, (or Bismarck, as some Writers call him; William Earl of Nassau, George, and Joachim Earls of Anhalt, the Cities of Frankfurt, Hamborough, Aulburg, Hanover, and not long after the Palgrave and King of Denmark, But this Confederacy was like to have dashed the business. For Charles the fifth looking upon it as a matter of a dangerous consequence to the power and safety of the Empire, and withal infligated thereunto by the Popes of Rome, whose interest was no less concerned in it, considering that he could not otherwise unite this Gordian knot, resolved to cut it with the sword. At first the War succeeded luckily with the Protestant Princes, who armed themselves upon the noise of his Preparations: But there being an equality of Command between the Duke John-Frederick and Philip the Landgrave, the one sometimes not approving, otherwhiles thwarting the other projects, the end proved not answerable. Besides the politic Emperor knowing full well that the Forces of confederate States are often broken by Deceives than Battle, avoided all occasions of fighting, and thereby wearied out this great Army; which, without performing any notable exploit, disbanded it self, every man hawking home to defend his own. But none had more reason so to do than the Duke Elektor: For in his absence his Cousin Maurice (forgetting the Education he had under him, and how formerly the Duke had conquered for him, and eated him in those parts of Misnia (maugre all opposition of Duke George his Uncle) formerly had belonged to Duke George his Uncle) combined himself with the Emperor, and invaded the Elektor's Country; who notwithstanding recovered not only all his own, but a great part also of those Lands and Territories in which he had before eated his ungrateful Kinsman. But while he was in this Career, the Emperor suddenly falls upon him not far from Mühlberg, (where the Duke was then hearing a Sermon) and by the suddenness of his coming routed his timorous unprovided Army; the Duke himself with some few resolute Gentlemen making head against him, till the most of them were slain, and the Duke taken Prisoner. The next morning he was condemned to loose his head, but pardoned at the last upon some conditions: amongst which it was none of the least, that he should surrender his Estates, and resign the Electoral dignity to be disposed of by the Victor, as also that he should without ransom release Marquess Albert of Brandenburg, (a busy and unquiet man) who was then his Prisoner. This done, the Emperor fraudulently intrappeth the Landgrave, as we shall shew more at large hereafter in other places, and carrying on the Wars from one free City to another, compelled them to receive the Mass, and to submit to such Composition as he pleased to grant them; in so much as it was thought that the Emperor gained in this journey a Million and 600000 Crowns, and 500 pieces of great Ordnance. But these Successes were too great and too unjustly grounded to continue long. For Maurice, the new Duke Elektor, who had married the Landgrave's Daughter, and engaged himself unto his Children both by Word and Bond (and that too at the Emperor's instance) for the safe returning, conceived himself unworshipfully dealt with to be made the instrument of his Father's thralldom, and therefore that he was obliged both in love and honour to leave no way untried which might gain his liberty. And withal, finding cause to fear that the course of the Emperor's great successes might end at last in the subversion of the common Liberty, he secretly by an under-hand practice called in the French, and raising Forces under colour of the Emperor's service, gained Marquess Albert before mentioned (who had then a running Army in the field) to associate with him, and fell so suddenly on the Emperor lying then at Inpruck, that he compell'd him to run away in post-hatch to torght-arch, and the Prelates to break off the Council of Trent, where at that time they were assembled. Upon which turning of the balance a Peace soon ensued, which brought forth the Edicts of Passaw and Aulburg, spoken of before, the best and surest Pledges of the Peace of Germany.

In the mean time, while the Lutherans thus played their game, there started up another party, begun at first by Zuinglius amongst the Swissers, of whose both Doctrine and Success we have spoken there. These, not communicating Councils, went two several ways, especially in the Points of Consubstantiation and the Real Presence; not reconciled in their times, nor like to be agreed upon amongst their followers. For Calvin, rising into the esteem and place of Zuinglius, added some Tenets of his own to the former Doctrines touching Predestination, Free-will, Universal Grace, Final Perseverance (Points fitter for the Schools than a popular Auditory) by which the differences were widened, and the breach made irreparable: the Cause being followed on both sides with great impatience, as if they did not strive so much for great Victory. And of the two, those of the Lutheran party seemed more violent, (though the other was altogether as irreconcilable) who could not chuse but flatter themselves to see themselves undermined and blown up by mach it, to see themselves not tolerated in the Empire, but a new form of Doctrine to the Confession of Aulburg, under colour of Conformity to the Confession of Aulburg, For Zuinglianism being entertained amongst the French, a busy and active people, fixed it self faster in few years than it was propagated by the Swissers (men of the same temper with the Dutch) in all times before. Infamously as it did not only prevail in France, but by their reputation of Calvin, and the diligence of his Followers, was wholly entertained in the Kingdom of Poland, Netherlands, in many parts of the Kingdom of Prussia, and even in Germany it self, in which it got footing in all the Territories of the Counts Palatines in the Rhine, in some of the Landgraves of Hesse, in the Imperial City of Straesburg, many of the Hanse-Towns, and amongst other Princes and free Cities of inferior note. The rest of Germany, containing the Patrimonial Estates of the House of Austria, the Dukedoms of Bavaria and Lorraine, and of the Territories of the three Spiritual Electors, and of all the other Bishopsricks in the hands of the Clergy, some of the Marquesses of Baden, part of the subjects of Cren, and three of the Imperial Cities, (and those small ones too) that is to say, Gemund, Überlingen, and Disenegg-Speyl, (unless some more be added by the great late Successes of the House of Austria) remain in their Obedience to the See of Rome; all which together will hardly make up one fifth part of this spacious Country, the other four being in the power and possession of the Protestant party: yet so that there be many Protestants in Bohemia, Austria, &c. in other the Estates of the Popish Princes, as there be Papists in the Free Cities of Frankfurt, Nuremberg, Ulm, Aken, and some other places, besides the late increase of them in both the Palatinates. Of such a speedy growth was the Reformation, that within the space of 40 years it was not only received in all those Countries which do now profess it, but had also got some footing both in Spain and Italy.

And here perhaps it will not be improper to look upon the means which were chiefly used for the Promoting of this Work; by which it came to spread so far in so little time, and next upon the Steps and Hindrances where were given unto it, by which it was restrained from spreading farther. 1. For the means used in the Advancement of his Work, (next under the Almighty power of the most wise God) they were these especially. 1. The translating of the Scripture into Vulgar Languages, which easily discovered the Corruptions of the Church of Rome both in Doctrines and Forms of Worship. 2. The diligent Preaching of their Ministry, both in Towns and Villages, for the expounding of the Scriptures, and fitting them to the Capacities of the meanest Auditors; which gained exceedingly both on the judgment and affections of the common people; the course of preaching having been formerly neglected by the Parish Curates, and turned off wholly in a manner to the Begging-Friars. 3. The publishing of Books of Practical Piety and Devotions, which mightily inflamed the hearts of all sorts of men; accustomed before to no other Duties than to tell over their Grado's and Pater-Nosters, and to keep a just account of their Ave-Maries, and that most commonly in a tongue which they understood not. 4. The Education of youth, especially in Catechisms containing the whole body of Christian Religion; which once well planted in their minds, could not so easily be pulled up and removed thence by any contrary persuasion. 5. Their continual offers of disputation with the adverse party in a publick audience; which being denied (as generally at the first it was) gave great assurance of the truth and soundness of the one side, as of the falshood and weakness of the other. 6. Their compiling of Martyrologies and Histories of the Church, which could not but produce an admirable Zeal and Constancy both in the Readers and the Hearers animated thereunto by those brave Examples which therein was presented to them. One point of Prudence hath been wanting, which is the calling of a General Council of all the Protestant and Reformed Churches, for the compoling of the Differences which have grown between them. And this I look on as the first and greatest stop to the Reformation from proceeding farther; many men (not improbably) thinking there must be some want of truth in the Foundation of that building, which had such wide and open breaches in the Superstructures. The Tyranny and Terror of the Inquisition, by which it is kept out of Spain, and kept down in Italy, and all other parts of the Pope's Obedience, together with those other Policies both to discountenance and suppress it, (which we have spoken of in our description of the Papacy) may come next to this. Then add to these the cares and diligence of the Jesuits and Seminary Priests, in applying themselves to all those means which they found so effectual on the other side, thereby not only countermine their endeavours, but fighting them upon even ground with the self-same weapons. And last of all, the Plots and Practices of the Papal Ministers in working on the humours of the opposite parties, thereby engaging them not only into Tongue-combats and ventuations of the Pen, but even to try it out by blows in an open War, once I am sure. By these means they have not only stopped the Progress of the Reformation but would gain give themselves some hopes to destroy it utterly, and thereby to restore the Pope to that power and splendour which formerly he had attained unto in these parts of Europe. But of these and such like self-flatteries I shall say with Seneca, or rather in his words applied to my own intention.

— He manius Trojam erigunt?
Parcos habet spes Troja, si tales habet.

That is to say,

Shall these small jars restore the ruin'd Pope;
Small hopes he hath, if this be all his hope.

As for the Government of their Churches, those that continue in obedience to the See of Rome are under the old form of Archbishops and Bishops, coeval in all Germany (as in most places else) with the Faith it self. The Calvinists (by which name the Zuinglians now also passeth, if not eaten out) submit themselves for Doctrine, Discipline and forms of Worship, to Calvin's Model; whereof we have spoke more at large when we were in Geneva. And for the Lutherans, they have divided the Episcopal Function from the Revenues; giving their laity to some of their younger Princes, with the Title of Administrators of such a Bishoprick; the Function or Jurisdiction to some of the more eminent Clergy, with the title of a Superintendent, assigning to them a priority both of place and power before other Ministers, which they enjoy for term of life, together with some liberal maintenance in proportion to it. In other things, as Order, Habit, and Title of dignity, they differ not at all from the other Ministers. And over them, in the place of Archbishops, they have their general Superintendents; all of them of each sort accountable to the supreme Ecclesiastical Consistory, (as formerly to the Provincial or National Synod) made up of Counsellors of State and the Heads of the Clergy. So that the form seems to be much the same as in elder times, but is indeed more different than it seems to be; a great part of the alteration being in the names, and that no other in a manner than by changing the old Greek word Episcopus into the new Latine word Superintendens, both signifying an Overseer, though in different Languages. And so Ex Græcis bonis Latinis facere non bonas, in the Poet's word. Which brings into my mind the Story of a People of Africa, who having received much hurt by Tigers, made a Decree that no man from thenceforth should call them Tigres, but give them a more harmless or else hated name, and then all was well. And as they do conform thus far to the elder times in form of Government, so do they also come up to them in their forms of Worship; retaining still a settled and prescribed Liturgie for all their Churches, most of the Holy-days observed in the former Ages, the Cross in Baptism, kneeling at the Communion, and many other innocent and significant Ceremonies, commended to the Church by most pure Antiquity. In point of maintenance they are as defective as the Calvinists are; few of their Ministers having Tithes, most of them Pensions or Stipends, and those small ones also, seldom exceeding two or 300 Guildens, besides Wood for fuel, Corn, and some other necessities.

Now because mention hath been made of the Hanse-Towns and Imperial Cities, we are to understand that the Cities of this Country are of three sorts. 1. Such as are holden in possession by some of the Princes in way of inheritance, part of their Patrimony and Estates; as Heidelberg, Vienna, München, Wittenberg, &c. 2. Such as are held originally of the Empire it self: which are called Free Cities, for their great Prerogatives of their Coynning money and governing themselves by their local Ordinances; Imperial, in regard they know no Lord or protector but the Emperor only, to whom they pay two third parts of such Contributions as are assessed in the Assemblies or general Diets, and 1000 Florens yearly for themselves and their Territories. They are in number about 60, many of which are of a fair and large Estate; such as are Nuremberg, Aulburg, Ingolstadt, Spire, Worms, &c. Of which thus Guicciardine: Those, faith he, are called Free Cities, which acknowledging by a certain determinate Tribute the Authority of the Empire, do notwithstanding in all other things govern themselves after their own Laws; not seeking to amplify their Territories, but defend their Liberties. 3. The third sort is of those which are called Hanse-Towns, or Hanseatic; that is, (say some) An zee haven, Towns upon the Sea; such as those were who first entered into this Confederacy: but at this time the name extends to many inland Cities, and of no great Trading, joynd with them in a League for their

- 891 5. Arnulph, the natural Son of Carloman, the Brother of Charles, King of Germany and Emperor.
- 903 6. Lewis or Ludevicus IV. (Lewis the Brother of Charles and Carloman being reckoned for one) King of Germany, and Emperor, the lawfully begotten Son of Arnulph.
- 913 7. Conrade, the Son of Conrade, the Brother of Lewis the 4. the last Prince of the masculine issue of Charles the Great. After whose death the Franconians and Saxons, seeing Charles the Simple, King of France, overlaid by the Normans, or embroiled by the Princes of the House of Anjou: took that advantage to transfer the Empire to themselves: and they made choice of Henry Duke of Saxony to be their Emperor. A worthy Prince, by whom some Nations of the Slaves, the Hungarians and part of Lorraine were subdued or added to the Empire.
- 929 8. Henricus, surnamed Auceps, or the Fowler, Duke of Saxony, elected by the German Princes, but designed by Conrade, as being eldest Son of Orto Duke of Saxony by Liutgardis Daughter to the Emperor Arnulph, and consequently a branch of the Caroline Stock.
- 938 9. Orto, surnamed the Great, the Son of Henry, Emperor and King of Italy. 36 years.
- 974 10. Orto II. Son of Orto the first, Emperor and King of Italy. 10.
- 984 11. Orto III. Son of Orto II. Duke of Saxony, and the last of that House which had the title of Emperor and King of Italy. After whose death, all right of Succession being disclaimed, the Emperours became elective; but for the most part the Election was ingrossed or monopolized (since the Failure of the House of Saxony) by the Dukes of Franconia, Suevia, Bavaria, and Austria, notwithstanding the liberty or freedom of Election pretended to by the Electors. The business was first projected in the Court of Rome, to make the Emperours less powerful, and distrust the Germans, whom they feared, into Sides and Factions: confirmed by a Decree of Pope Gregory the fifth, being a Native of that Country.
- 1002 12. Henry II. surnamed the Saint, Duke of Bavaria, the first Emperor elected according to the Constitution of Gregory the fifth, but so elected, that he challenged it in a manner by the right of Blood, as being the Grand-child of Henry surnamed Rixofus, the first Duke of Bavaria of the Saxon race) the second Son of Henry the first, and consequently the next Heir male of that House after Orto the 3. compelling some of the Electors, who opposed his Title, by the force of Arms to yield unto it. So that the first Emperor who came in by a clear Election, but not without pretension of a Title also, was

- 1040 14. Henry III. surnamed Niger, the Son of Conrade.
- 1056 15. Henry IV. Son of Henry the third, in whose days the Popes began to usurp Authority over the Emperours; insomuch as Leo the ninth, having received the Popedom at the Emperours hands, repented himself of it, put off his Papal Vestments, went to Rome as a private person, and was there new chosen by the Clergy. This was done by the persuasion of a Monk called Hildebrand, who being afterwards made Pope by the name of Gregory the 7. excommunicated this Henry, the first Prince that was ever excommunicated by a Pope of Rome. From which time till the year 1254. there were continual Wars and Thunders betwixt them and the nine following Emperours, some of them being excommunicated, some forced to put their Necks under the Feet of the Pope, others to quit the care of the Commonwealth, and betake themselves unto the Wars of the Holy Land, leaving the Pope to do what he list in Germany.
- 1106 16. Henry V. Son of Henry the 4. armed by the Pope against his Father; whom he had no sooner succeeded in the Empire, but the Pope excommunicated him, for being too stiff in the business of Investitures, and raised up the Saxons against him; by whom being vanquished, and otherwise afflicted by the Pope's practices, he was forced to submit unto his commands, and was the last Emperor of the House of Franconia.
- 1125 17. Leobardus Duke of Bavaria, seizing on the Empire without any Election, was reconciled unto the German Princes by the means of St. Bernard. He settled the Affairs of Italy in two Journeys thither. 13.
- 1139 18. Conrade III. Son of Frederick, the first hereditary Duke of Sueve or Schwaben, and Sister's Son unto Henry the fifth, vanquished Henry surnamed the Proud, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria; and going to the Holy Wars with Lewis King of France, discomfited the Turks near the Banks of Meander. 15.
- 1153 19. Frederick, surnamed Barbarossa, Duke of Sueve crowned at Rome by Adrian the 4. and not long after excommunicated by Pope Alexander the 3. to whom he was fain at last to submit himself, the Pope insolently trampling on his Neck. He went after to the Holy Land, where he died, having discomfited the Turks in three great Battels. 37.
- 1190 20. Henry VI. Son of Frederick, and King of Sicily, in right of Constance his Wife, crowned by Pope Clestinus, who employed him in the Wars of the Holy Land; in his Journey towards which he died at Messina. 8.
- 1198 21. Philip, Duke of Sueve, Brother of Henry the 6. excommunicated by the Pope, (who loved not this Family) by whose means Orto, the Son of Henry the Lion, Duke of Saxony, was set up against him. The occasion of great Wars among the Germans, reconciled by Marriage of Orto with a Daughter of Philip. 9.
- 1207 22. Orto IV. Son of Henry surnamed the Lion, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria, crowned at Rome by Pope Innocent the 3. by whom not long - long after he was excommunicated, for taking into his hands some Towns of Italy which belonged to the Empire: vanquished in Brabant by the Faction raised up against him, he relinquished the Empire to his Competitor.

- 1212 23. Frederick II. King of Sicily and Naples, Son of Henry the 6. having settled Germany, disposed himself for the Wars of the Holy Land, where he recovered the possession of the Realm of Terrusalem. He was excommunicated by the Pope at his return into Italy, and not long after poisoned.
- 1250 24. Conrade IV. Son of Frederick, the last Emperor of the House of Schwaben. After whose death the Empire being distracted by the Pope's practices into many Factions, each Faction chose an Emperor or King of the Romans: so that at one time there were elected Henry Earl of Thuringia, William Earl of Holland, Alphonso King of Castile, the renowned Author of the Alfonso Tables, and
- 1254 25. Richard Earl of Cornwal, Brother of Henry the third of England, the best monied man of all his time, supposed therewith to buy the Suffrages of the Archbishop of Colen and Elector Palatine, by whom he was elected and crowned King of the Romans, An. 1254. and after he had dealt in the affairs of the Empire 6 years, he returned into England, where he died. After whose death, or an Interregnum of 12 years from his Exit rather, the Title was at last accepted by
- 1263 26. Rodolph Earl of Habsburg, a petty Prince, (others of greater Estates and Fortunes not daring to take up the honour) the Raifer of the present Austrian Family.
- 1292 27. Adolph, Earl of Nassau, who served in person under King Edward the 1. of England against the French; for which being distressed by the Germans, he was encountered and slain near the City of Spire.
- 1298 28. Albert Duke of Austria, Son of Rodolphus the Emperor, to whom Pope Boniface the 8. gave the Realm of France, of which he had deprived King Philip the Fair. But Albert would not meddle out of Germany, and did nothing in it.
- 1308 29. Henry, Earl of Luxemburg, who made a Journey into Italy to recover the Rights of the Empire, (where an Emperor had not been seen in 60 years:) supposed to be poisoned in the Chalice by a Friar at Benevento a Town of the Pope's. 6.
- 1314 30. Lewis, Duke of Bavaria, crowned at Aix in the wonted manner, opposed by Frederick, Duke of Austria, chose by another Faction, and crowned at Bammas, a Town of the Archbishop of Colen: but he being defeated, Lewis remained sole Emperor, and was excommunicated by Pope John 22. 33.
- 1346 31. Charles V. Son of John King of Bohemia, and Grand-son of Henry the 7. crowned with the Iron Crown at Millain 1354; the framer of the Golden Bull. 32.
- 1371 32. Wenceslaus, King of Bohemia, and Earl of Luxemburg, deformed and vicious; deposed by the German Princes 22.
- 1400 33. Rupertus, Elector Palatine; passed into Italy
- for the recovery of the Dukedom of Millain, sold by Wenceslaus; but was well beat by John Galeazzo, and so returned. 10.
- 1410 34. Jedocus Barbatus, Marquis of Moravia; Uncle to Wenceslaus.
- 1411 35. Sigismund Brother of Wenceslaus, King of Hungary and Bohemia, and Earl of Luxemburg, crowned at Rome on Whitsunday 1432. He travelled exceedingly for establishing the Peace of Christendom, distracted at that time with three Popes at once; and was a great promoter of the Council at Constance.
- 1439 36. Albert II. Duke of Austria, Son-in-law of Sigismund, whom he succeeded in all his Estates and Titles, excepting Luxemburg. 1.
- 1440 37. Frederick III. Duke of Austria, the Son of Ernest of Austria, and next Heir of Albert the 2. He procured the calling of the Council of Basil for the Peace of Christendom, travelling for that cause to Rome, where he was declared Emperor, Anno 1442. 54.
- 1494 38. Maximilian, Son of Frederick, Duke of Austria, who first united the Estates of Burgundy to the House of Austria. A Prince that undertook many great Actions, but went through with none. 25.
- 1519 39. Charles V. King of Spain, Son of Philip King of Spain, and Archduke of Austria, Son of Maximilian by the Lady Mary of Burgundy. A puissant Prince, who had Prisoners at the same time the French King and the Pope of Rome. He ruined the League made by the Protestants at Smalcald, took Prisoners the Electour of Saxony, and the Landgrave of Hessia, drove the great Turk from Vienna, won the Kingdom of Tunis, and in the end resigned all his Estates, and died in a Monastery. 39.
- 1558 40. Ferdinand, Archduke of Austria, the Brother of Charles, King of Hungary and Bohemia, elected King of the Romans by the procurement of Charles, Anno 1531. Upon whose Resignation he was chosen Emperor, Anno 1558. 7.
- 1565 41. Maximilian, the Son of Ferdinand, elected King of the Romans in the life of his Father, Anno 1562, succeeding the Empire after his decease.
- 1577 42. Rodolphus, the eldest Son of Maximilian, had great Wars against the Turks, with whom in the year 1600 he concluded a Peace; but being undermined by his Brother Matthias, was forced to surrender to him the Kingdoms of Hungary and Bohemia, and to content himself with Austria and the Empire only. These eight last Emperours were all of the Order of the Garter.
- 1612 43. Matthias, Brother of Rodolphus, King of Hungary, Bohemia, and Archduke of Austria; in whose time were sown the seeds of that terrible War which had almost destroyed the Empire. Having no children of his own, he procured Ferdinand of Gretz to be declared Successor into his Estates. 7.
- 1619 44. Ferdinand of Gretz, Archduke of Austria, Son of Charles of Gretz, the younger Son of Ferdinand, the first; succeeded Matthias in all his Estates and Titles. A Prince more zealously affected to the See of Rome than any of his Predecessors, and a great enemy in his Wars against William Duke of Cleve and Gulick for the Dukedom of Geldres. 3. Münster Eyfel, (in Latine Monsfrun Eyfelis) so called to distinguish it from Münster of Westphalen, pleasantly seated in a Valley between Mountains, not far from the Spring or Fountain of the River Exp. 4. Caffer, so called of a stately and magnificent Castle built for defence of this part of the Country. 5. Berken, on the River Exp. 6. Aleroden, beautified with a strong Castle, which gives name to an honourable and ancient Family. 7. Kirck, 8. Berlin, &c.

There is also within the limits of this Dukedom the famous Town of Aix, as the French, or Agen, as the Germans call it; famous of old time for the hot Baths both within and without the Town, whence it had the name of Aix, or Aquæ, (in Latine Aquægratum) situate on the edge of Limbourg, in a fruitful Soil, but the Building nothing answerable to the fame of the place; inhabited for the most part by Smiths and Braisers, who drive the greatest Trade herein, working continually on Iron and other metals, with which they are supplied abundantly out of Liege and Limbourg. The Town is impetrial, but under the Protection of the Dukes of Cleve; at the expiration of which Family, under colour of some quarrels about Religion, it was seized on and garrisoned by Marquess Spinola for the King of Spain. It was of great fame formerly for the death and sepulture of Charles the Great, by him made one of the three seats of the Western Empire, and designed by him to be the place in which the King of the Romans should receive his Crown for the Kingdom of Germany at the hands of the Archbishops of Colen. The Town is supposed to be formerly the wintering Camp of the Romans, called in Tacitus Vetera, which was taken by Cicilius in the beginning of his Rebellion against Vespasian; during which Wars it is often mentioned by the Writers of those times. They were built and strengthened by Augustus, the better to keep under the Germans; quippe illis hybernis obsideri premique Germanias Augustus crediderat, as Tacitus. At this day, this Town and Triers are reputed famous for holy Reliques; here being said to be amongst others the bearing-cloth whereon our Saviour was wrapt when he was in his Swaddling clouts, which the Emperor solemnly worshippeth at his Inauguration. Concerning the ambition which the Papists have to be thought possessors of these Reliques: see, I beseech you, how pitifully they have mangled the Head of S. John Baptist. They of Amiens brag that they have his Face, and so do they of S. John d' Angeliæ. The rest of his Head is at Malta; yet d' Angeliæ part of his Skull at Namur, and his Brain at Nouyon Roffvins: another part of it is at Maurienne, another piece at Paris; his Jaw at Wesfel, his Ear at S. Flowers, his Forehead and Hair at S. Salvatore's in Venice; another part of his Head is at Noyon, and another at Loua: Yet is his whole Head entire and unmaimed in S. Sylvester's Church at Rome. And so no doubt is this bearing-cloth at more places than one.

But to return again to Gulick. It was once part of the possessions of the Dukes of Lorraine; whether laid to it at the first erection of that Dukedom, as some Writers say, or added to it by the Princes of the House of Ardennes, when they succeeded in the same, I dare not possibly determine; although the lying of this Country within the ancient Verge or Perambulation of the great Forest of Ardennes makes the last in my opinion not to be improvable. It was first made an Earldom of itself in the person of Ensfance, Brother of Godfrey of Bouillon, Duke of Lorraine, who seized upon it as his part of the Estate on the death of Godfrey, his elder brother Baldwin being absent in the Holy Land. In the person of William the fourth of that name it was made a Marquifate, advanced unto that honour by the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria, Anno 1329, created not long after Duke of Gulick by Charles the fourth, Anno 1356. His Estate was much augmented about that time, or but shortly after, by his Marriage with Mary, Sister and Heir of Rainold and Edward Dukes of Geldres, adding thereby that Dukedom unto this of Gulick. His two Sons, William and Rainold, both Dukes successively, dying without Issue, the Estate fell to Adolphus Duke of Berg or Monts, as the next Heir-male, Anno 1425; and finally, together with that of Cleve, and with it conjoined till the expiration of that noble Family; whereof more anon.

As for the Estates of Berg and Mark they had one original, begun by two Brothers, the Sons of Theodorick Lord of Tegernbarn, of the House of Cleve: out of which House as they defended, so into that they finally were again resolved, as their first materials. Of these two Brothers, Adolphus being the elder, was by the Emperor Henry surnamed the Fowler, made Earl of Altena Anno 930, or thereabouts; and Eberard the younger, by the said Emperor made Earl of Berg. But Eberard entering a Monastery of his own Foundation, left his Estate and Earldom of Berg to the Elder Brother. United thus into one Estate, they became again divided betwixt the Sons of Adolph, the 3. of that name, and fourth Earl of Altena and Berg; Engelbert the younger Son enjoying the Estate of Berg, and Eberard the elder succeeding his Father in that of Altena. How they became united to the House of Cleve, we shall see hereafter, having first looked over the Chorography or description of them.

3. The Dukedom of BERG is bounded on the East with Westphalen and the Country of Mark, on the West with the Rhene from Wesfel up as high as Colen, by which 'tis parted from the Dukedom of Cleve, on the North with the River Lippe, which separates it from the rest of Cleve, and on the South with the Land of Colen. So called from the Hilliness of the Country, Berg in Dutch signifying an Hill; (as Burg doth a Town or Burrough;) from whence the Earls and Dukes hereof are called Monts in Latine, and les Comtes and Ducs de Mont in French. The Country for the most part, in the Vales especially, yields a great store of the best Wheat, and consequently of the purest Bread; and in the Hill-Countries rich Mines of Coal, wherewith they do supply their neighbours.

Chief places in it are, 1. Düsseldorf, so called of the River Duffel, upon which it is situate, the River not far off falling into the Rhene. 2. Adenburgh, built by Eberard the first Earl of Berg, the Seat of him and his Successors, till removed to Düsseldorf. 3. Keiserwerd, situate on the Rhene, belonging anciently to the Empire, but bought for a great sum of money of Charles the 4. by John Earl of Cleve. 4. Mühlheim, on the Rhene also, just against Colen on the other side of the water; fortified in the year 1614, and made the Receiptacle of the Protestants of that Bishoprick, prohibited the free exercise of Religion in their own dwellings; but razed not long after by Marquess Spinola, on complaint made by those of Colen to the Emperor Matthias. 5. Sieft, or Stetium, on the Raer, among the Coal-mines. 6. Angermund, on the mouth of the River Aggra, as the name imports. 7. Esfew, or Esfendia, on the borders of the County of Mark, once an Imperial, but under the Protection of the Exils of Berg, of most note for a Monastery here built by Alfride the 4. Bishop of Hildesheim, for 52 Nuns and 20 Canons, liberally endowed, and having great command on the Dorps adjoining.

How

How Berg at first was made an Earldom, how joyned unto Altena, and disjoyned again, hath been shewed before. No sooner made a State distinct; but it was added to the Patrimony of the Earls of Gulick, by the Marriage of Earl William with the Daughter and Heir of Berg. Parted again betwixt William and Adolphus, Sons of Gervard the 2. An. 1247, the first succeeding in the Earldom of Gulick, and the last in Berg. During this Partage it was made a Dukedom in the person of William the first of that name by Wenceslaus, the Emperor, Anno 1389, whose Son Adolphus, as next Heir, succeeded in the Dukedom of Gulick, An. 1423. How both were added unto Cleve hath been said already.

conveyed the whole Estate in Marriage to John the 3. Duke of Cleve and Earl of Mark, continuing in that Family till the expiration of it in the person of John William, the last Prince hereof, Anno 1610.

4. The Earldom of MARCH, or MARK, hath on the East and North Westphalia, on the West the Dukedom of Cleve, on the South that of Berg or Monts. So called, as being seated in the Marches of Westphalen, out of which it was taken. The Country for the most part, like the rest of Westphalen is more fit for Pasturage than Corn, woody, and yielding store of Pannage to those herds of Swine with which it plentifully abounds.

Chief places in it are, 1. VVerden, upon the River Ruer, on the edge of Westphalia, the people whereof get great wealth by grazing of Cattel. 2. Soest, (in Latine Sifstium) for wealth and greatness not inferior to any in Westphalen, (except Münster only) consisting of ten Parishes, and lording it over many rich and pleasant Villages. Anciently it belonged to the Bishops of Colen; but in the year 1454, did voluntarily yield it self to the Duke of Cleve (being then Earl of March also) and was by Duke John the 4. courageously defended against those Pretensions. 3. Arnsberg, a fine and pleasant sit, used for a retiring-place by the Electors of Colen, unto whom it belongs. 4. Dortmund (in Latine Tremonia) a County anciently of it self, and held immediately of the Empire, possessed by the Tremonians, a Tribe of the Saxons, from whence first called Tremonia, and at last Tremonia. 5. Blancstein, built commodiously by Adolphus the fifth of that name, and first Earl of March, was also 6. Ham, or Hammene. 7. Umma, of which nothing memorable. 8. Altena, the first Title of the Earls of this House, before they assumed that of the Earls of March, assumed first by Adolphus the 4. on the Conquest of some Lands in the Marches of Westphalen, continuing in that Family till united with Cleve.

As for the Earldom or Dukedom of CLEVE, out of which it was taken, and to which the rest of those Estates did in time accrue; it was one of the most ancient Estates or Principalities in these parts of the world, continuing in a direct line for the space of 900 years, held by them of the Kings of France, and afterwards of the Kings of Lorraine, till the incorporating of that Kingdom with the German Empire. Begun first by Elm Grallius, Companion to Charles Martel in his Wars against the Frisons, Saxons and Bavarians, whose Son Theodorick added hereto by Marriage the County of Tegernbarn, containing the Towns and Signiorities of Altena in Westphalen, as also of Bornel, Hemfoun, Bueron, Culemburg, in the Belgick Provinces. By Baldwin the sixth Earl in Westphalen, was added the Territory of Twentzen, (in Latine Regio Tuentana), given him by Ludovicus Pius; by Theodorick the fifth, the Town and Signiory of Disnack, settled upon him on his Marriage with Maltida the Heir thereof; by Theodorick the 9. the County of Hullegrade, near Niey in the Land of Colen, together with the Towns of Duyning and Culemburg, bought of Rodolphus Habspurgensis; by John his Son, the Town and Territory of Keiserwerd, bought of Charles the 4. by Adolph the 29 Earl, the Earldom of March, formerly taken out of it, was again united. By Adolph his Successor, (made the first Duke hereof by the Emperor Sigismund, Anno 1417.) were added the Lordships of Gompe, Duffele, and Rixewald bought of the said Emperor; together with the County of Ravenstein, the Towns of Leobing, Limers, and Hatteren, for the ransom of William Duke of Berg, and other noble persons taken Prisoners by him, An. 1397; by John, the first Duke of that name, the

the Town and Territory of Soeff; and finally by John the 3. the Dukedoms of Berg and Gulick, as Heir thereof by his Mother Mary, sole Daughter and Heir of William the fifth and sixth, the last Duke thereof. To which great height this ancient and noble Family had not long attained, and thereby made themselves and their Soins and Daughters fit Matches for the greatest Princes, but it pleased God to bring it to its fatal end, and by that means to dissipate this brave Estate in the hands of Strangers, as shall be shewed in the conclusion of this Catalogue of

The Earls and Dukes of CLEVE.

- A. Ch.
717 1. Elias Grallius, Companion in the Wars of Charles Martel.
732 2. Theodorick Earl of Cleve, and Lord of Teisferbant.
755 3. Rainald Son of Theodorick Earl of Cleve, and Teisferbant.
767 4. Conon, of great fame in Arms under Charles the Great.
778 5. John Son of Conon, married the Daughter of Michael Cypriolates Emp. of Constantinople.
790 6. Robert, the eldest Son of John.
798 7. Baldwin, the Brother of Earl Robert. After whose death, Anno 830. the Earldom of Teisferbant was taken out of it, and made the portion of Robert a younger Son; from whom descended the two Houses of March and Berg.
830 8. Ludowick, Son of Baldwin.
834 9. Eberhard Brother of Ludowick; who gave Teisferbant to his Brother Robert.
843 10. Lubhard Earl of Cleve.
878 11. Baldwin II.
928 12. Arnold.
968 13. Wigman Son of Arnold.
1004 14. Conrade, made an Earl of the Empire in the life of his Father.
1045 15. Theodorick II.
1088 16. Theodorick III. Companion of Godfrey of Bouillon in the Holy-Land.
1114 17. Arnold II. Brother of Theodorick the third.
1161 18. Theodorick IV.
1190 19. Arnold III.
1205 20. Arnold IV.
1218 21. Theodorick V.
1229 22. Theodorick VI.
1247 23. Theodorick VII.
1255 24. Theodorick VIII.
1271 25. Theodorick IX.
1290 26. Orbo, Son of Theodorick.
1309 27. Theodorick X. Brother of Orbo.
1325 28. John Brother of Theodorick, and Canon of Coleu; the last of the Elias Grallius.

29. Adolphus the VII. of March, Son of Adolph the 6. of March and Mary of Cleve, first Archbishop of Colen, (as fix this House of March had been almost) successively before him succeeded on the death of his Uncle John to the Earldom of Cleve, inaugurated thereunto by Charles the Fourth.

- 1389 30. Adolph II. of Cleve, and VIII of March, created the first Duke of Cleve by the Emperor Sigismund at the Council of Constance, Anno 1417.
1443 31. John III. Son of Adolph, Duke of Cleve; Earl of March, and Lord of Ravensheim.
1481 32. John II. of the rank of Dukes, and the IV. of the Earls.
1521 33. John III. Duke of Cleve, and Earl of March, &c. by descent from his Father; and Duke of Gulick, and Berg in right of his Wife, Daughter and Heir of William the last Duke thereof.
1539 34. William Son of John the 3. and Mary his Wife; Daughter and sole Heir of William the last Duke of Gulick and Berg, Father of the Lady Anne of Cleve, one of the Wives of Henry the 8. of England. He contended very strongly against Charles the fifth for the Dukedom of Geldres; but, being too weak for so great an Adversary, made his Submission to him at Ulen, and so saved his Estates.
1584 35. John-William, Son of the former William, during the life of Charles Frederick, his elder Brother, was Bishop of Amster; on whose death Anno 1575. he resigned that dignity, and in the end succeeded his Father in his whole Estates, which he managed with great piety and prudence till the year 1610. and then died issueless; the last of that ancient and noble Family of the Dukes of Cleve. After whose death much quarrel and contention grew about the Succession betwixt the several Competitors and Pretenders to it: of which the principal were, 1. Leopold, Archduke of Austria, pretending an Inheritance from the Emperor Redolphus in the Dukedom of Tuliers, to whom for want of Heirs-males the estate was said to be descended. 2. John-George, Duke of Saxony, descended from Sibyll, Daughter of Duke John the third; at whose Marriage with John-Frederick, the Elector of Saxony, Anno 1535, it was said to have been solemnly agreed upon, that on the falling of the Heirs-males of Cleve, the life of that Marriage should succeed therein. 3. George-William, Duke of Prussia, Son of John Sigismund the Elector of Brandenburg, by the Lady Anne his Wife, eldest Daughter of Albert of Brandenburg, Duke of Prussia, and of Maria Eleonora, the eldest Sister and next Heir of the Duke deceased. 4. Wolf-gangus-Guilielmus, Palatine of Newburg, Son of Margaret, the younger Sister of that Mary, who claimed the Estate as nearest Kinsman by one degree to the said last Duke. And though the right seemed most apparently on the side of George-William, the Estate in tail, pretended by the Duke of Saxony, being formerly cut off by Imperial authority, and that pretended to be by the Duke of Newburg not of force in Germany.

Daughter and Heir of Arenberg; descended that branch of the House of March, which till of late were Sovereigns of Salem and Dukes of Banilan.

13. Adolph VI. Husband of Mary (or Margaret) Daughter and Heir of Theodorick the 9. Earl of Cleve.

yet being that Leopold was in Arms, and had already forced a possession of Tuliers and of most parts of that Country, the two Princes of Brandenburg and Newburg soon agreed the controversy, and by the help of the Protestant Princes their Confederates recovered the greatest part of it from the hands of Leopold. But the Palatine of Newburg, not content with his Partage, first married with a Daughter of the Duke of Bavaria, then reconciled himself to the Church of Rome, and called in the Spanish Arms, under the command of Marquis Spinola, to abett his Quarrel: which made George William, Son of the Elector of Brandenburg and the Lady Anne, to call in the Forces of the States, under the command of Maurice Earl of Nassau, after Prince of Orange. The issue of which War was this, that Spinola possessed himself of Wesel, Agent, Mulheim, Dusseldorp, and most other places of importance in Berg and Gulick; and the States got into their power some Towns of Gulick, with Reer and Emerick, in the Dukedom of Cleve, and almost the whole County of March. And though most parts of these Estates have been delivered since to the rightful Owners, yet other places of importance are detained from them. Which notwithstanding that they both pretend to keep for the use of those Princes in whose cause they stood: yet when such strong parties keep the Stakes, it is most easy to determine who will win the Game: such Alterations as have happened in the chance of War, by the reciprocal winning and losing of some Towns on both sides, not much conducing to the benefit of the rightful Owners.

The Arms of these Princes were, 1. Cules over an Escutcheon in Fesse Argent, a Carbuncle pierced, pommelled and floured Or, for the Dukedom of Cleve. 2. Or, a Lion Azure, armed Gules, for the Dukedom of Gulick. The Arms of Berg and March I have no where found.

2. The Estates of the Three ELECTOR-BISHOPS.

Adjoining to the Estates of Cleve are those of the Spiritual Electors of the Empire of Germany, Colen, Mentz, and Trier; not so contiguous and continuous as those of Cleveland, and therefore to be laid out severally by their Metes and Boundaries. And first for COLEN-Land, or the Estate of the Archbishop and Elector of Colen. It is bounded on the East with the Dukedom of Berg, divided from it by the Rhene, on the West with Gulick, on the North with Cleve it self and the County of Muerz, and on the South extending to the Land of Trier. The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Obii, in former times possessed of the Countries of Berg and March; but being warred on by the Germani bordering next upon them, they were by the clemency of Agrippa, then Lieutenant of Gaul, received into protection, and by him placed along the French side of the Rhene, as well for defence of the Borders of the Roman Empire, as for their own security against that Enemy. Won from the Romans by the French in the Reign and under the conduct of Childerick, anno 412. or thereabout; and from the French by the Emperor Orto the first, anno 940. By Orto the 2. made a part of the Dukedom of Lorraine, or at the least given by him unto Charles of France, the first Duke thereof. After whose death, decaying without Issue-male, the Town of Colen and many other pieces upon the Rhene were seized on by Orto the 3. and by him restored to the Empire. Since that time the City of Colen hath remained Imperial, and but the Territory near unto it, and a great part of Wesphalia, subject immediately to the Bishop. The Bishop's See was first founded here by S. Amandus, one of the Disciples of S. Peter, as hath been constantly affirmed by old Tradition: but howsoever it was an Episcopal See, without all question, in the time of Constantine, Maurinus, Bishop hereof, subscribing amongst others to the Council of Arelat, anno 326. And being Colen was in those times the Metropolis of the Province of Germania Secunda, the Bishop had the power of a Metropolitan; according to the rule and observation so often mentioned. Afterwards when the Empire was made Elective, these Bishops, with their brethren of Mentz and Trier, were made three of the seven which were to nominate and elect the succeeding Emperour: after which time it is no wonder that they grew both in Power and Patrimony.

Places of most importance within this Electorate are, 1. Bonn, situate on the banks of the Rhene, in the most pleasant and fruitful place of all the Country; the ordinary Residence of the Archbishop, whose House or Palace here is said to be one of the fairest in all Germany. By Tacitus it is called Bonna, and sometimes Castra Bonensia, the Wintering camp in his time of the Sixth Legion. 2. Nijm, by the same Writer called Novesium, (Nescia by Antoninus) seated on the Erp, not far from its falling to the Rhene; the breach-neck of the glories of Charles Duke of Burgundy, who being resolved to get this Town into his hands, as a convenient pass into Germany, lay so long before it, that he lost the opportunity of joining with King Edward the 4. of England, whom he had purposely invited to the War of France, and yet was slain to go without it. By means whereof he grew so low in reputation, that he was undermined by the French, defeated by the Lorrainers, forsook by the English, baffled by the Switzers, and at last overthrown and slain by that beggarly Nation. 3. Emmich, or Audemach, by Macrobellius called Autemacum, one of the ten Garrisons erected by the Romans on the banks of the Rhene, to secure their Province from the Germani; the other nine being Confluentz, Boppard, Worms, Bing, Zabern, Altrip, Seltz, Straasburg and Wassensburg. 4. Lintz, seated on the same River also. 5. Santius, a Town of good repute. 6. Zulp, now a Village of no esteem but for the Antiquities of it, by Tacitus and Antoninus called Tollicinium, most memorable for the great Victory which Clevis the first Christian King of the French (upon a Vow made in the heat of the Fight to embrace the Gospel) obtained against the whole power of the Almans, never presuming after that to invade his Territories. 7. Rhinberg, commonly called Berck, the most Northern Town of all the Bishoprick, situate on the Rhene (as the name imports) there where the Lands of this Bishop as also of the Dukes of Cleve and the Earls of Muerz meet upon a point. A Town which for these 600 years hath been of little use or profit to the right Owner, possessed sometimes by the Spaniards, sometimes by the Confederate States; for each commodiously seated, as opening a passage up the River, and receiving great Customs on all kind of Merchandise passing to and fro. But having finally been possessed by the Spaniards from the year 1606 till 1633, it was then regained for the State by Henry of Nassau, Prince of Orange, with the loss of no more than 60 men: there being found in the Town 30 batts pieces of Ordnance, 70 barrels of Powder, with Victuals and Ammunition of all sorts thereunto proportionable. 8. Colen, situate on the Rhene, first built by the Obii before mentioned, and by them called Oppidum Obiorum; afterwards, in honour of Agrippina (Daughter of Germanicus, and Wife of Claudius) who was here born, made a Roman Colony, and called Colonia Agrippina, and sometimes by way of eminency Colonia only; thence the name of Colen. A rich, large, populous and magnificent City, containing about five miles in compass, in which are numbered Growing on the banks of the Rhene, have the name of Rheinish; adorned with many goodly Towns; both for strength, populousness, and beauty; and finally, watered with the famous River of the Rhene, and the Neccar.

The Religion of this Country, and that of the Upper Palatinate, which depends upon it, hath much varied since the first Reformation established by Frederick, the second according to the Form and Doctrine of the Confession of Augsburg; the Doctrine and Discipline of Calvin being introduced by Frederick the third; the Lutheran Form restored again by Levis or Ludowick the fifth, after his death exchanged by Frederick the fourth for that of Calvin, as more conducing to the ends of some needy Statists, who could not otherwise raise their Fortunes than by invading the Tithes and Glebe, and other poor remainders of the Church's Patrimony; of which the Clergy being universally deprived throughout this Country, and reduced to miserable short Stipends, by the name of a Competency, became so contemptible and neglected by all sorts of men, that at the last the Church of the Palatinate was in the same condition with the Church of Israel under the Reign of Jeroboam, when Priests were made out of the meanest of the People. And for the Government of the Churches, though moulded to the Geneva Plat-form as near as it might be, yet were those Princes loth to leave too much power in the hands of the Elderships, and therefore did appoint some superior Officers to have an eye on them, whom they called Inspectors & Prospitors, their Power being much the same with that of the particular Superintendent amongst the Lutherans; and over them a standing Consistory consisting of three Ministers and as many Counsellors of State, of the Prince's nominating, who in his name were to take care of all things which concerned the Church. A Temperament for which they were beholden to Erasmus a Doctor of Physick in the University of Heidelberg, who made this Pill to purge Presbytery of some Popish humours which secretly lay hid in the body of it. But this whole Model and Religion of the Country is much changed of late; and the Religion of the Church of Rome restored in most parts thereof since the Conquest of them by the Spaniards and Bavarians, which before we speak of.

Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Molsbach, a pretty neat Town on the banks of the Neccar, and a Prefecture, not far from the borders of VVirttemberg. 2. Ladenberg, near the influx of the same River into the Rhene; the moiety whereof was bought by Rupertus, the Emperor and Palatine of the Earls of Hohenzollern, An. 1571, the other moiety belonging to the Bishop of VVormes. 3. VVieheim, a small Town not far from Ladenberg, belonging once to the Archbishop of Metz, but on some controversy arising about the Title, adjudged unto the said Rupertus and his Heirs for ever. 4. Scriefsen, in the same Traß, well seated but not very large, fold with the Castle of Stralburg to the said Rupertus by Siðrife (or Sigefride) of Stralburg, on the right Heir hereof, Anno 1347. 5. Heidelberg, on the right shore of the Neccar, (going down the water) compassed on three sides with Mountains and lying open only towards the West, which makes the Air hereof to be very unhealthy. The chief Beauty of it lieth in one long Street, extended in length from East to West: on the South-east side whereof is a fair and pleasant Market-place, and not far off a very high Mountain called Koningstall, (that is to say, the King's Seat) upon the middle ascent whereof is the Castle, where the Princes Eleccours use to keep their Courts; and on the blown up with Gunpowder, the ruins of an old Tower blown up with Gunpowder. A Town of no great bigness nor very populous, there being but one Church in it, which was used in the time of my Author for Prayer and Preaching: the rest being either ruined, or employed unto other uses, if not repaired again; since the Spaniards became masters of it, for more frequent Masses. Howsoever, it hath the reputation of being the chief Cite of this Palatinate long since furnished with a great and gallant Library, which for choice and number of Books (especially Manuscripts) was thought not to be followed in all Europe, till matched if not over-matched, by the famous Bodleian Library of Oxford. Most of them to the great prejudice of the Protestant Cause were carried to Rome, and other places of that party, when the Town was taken by the Spaniards, Anno 1620. Finally for the Town it self, it was once part of the possessions of the Bishop of VVormes, from whom it was taken by the Palatines; and it is now famous for being the Seat of the Pfalzgraves, the Sepulchre of Rodolphus Agricola, and for a University founded by the Emperor and Palatine Rupertus, An. 1346. 6. Bacharach, on the Banks of the Rhene, so called quasi Bach ara, for the excellent Wines. 7. Coblenz, on the other side of the water; near unto which is the old and fair Castle called Pfalz, from whence the name Pfalz-grave, or Pfalzgrave seemeth to come to have been derived. 8. Oppenheim, a strong Town; which together with Keiserslautern and Ingelheim were given to the Palatines by VVeisslaus, and after settled on them by Rupertus then Emperor and Palatine for 100000 Florens, Anno 1402. 9. Creutznach, called anciently Staromisch. 10. Frankendale, lately a Monastery only, but being well peopled by such of the Netherlanders who to avoid the fury of the Duke of Alva fled thither, is now a Town of principal strength. 11. Gernersheim; and 12. Mainheim, a well-fortified Town, seated on the Confluence of Rhene and Neccar.

On the Eastern part of the Country standeth 13. Laden; situate on the little River Tauber, the farthest bound of the Palatinate towards the North-east, the adjoining to the rest of Frankland. And on West-side the Towns of 14. Newstalt, 15. Keiserslautern, in Latin called Cæsarea Lutra, once a Town Imperial, from which, and from its situation on the River Lauter, it received this name. 16. Zweibrücken, invested with a large and ample Territory round about, called the Country of Zweibrücken, the Patrimony and Title of a younger House of the Pfalzgraves, whom the Latine Writers call Principes Birmannii, the French the Princes of Dunspont. 17. Birmann, on the North-west point of it, where it meets with the distinct of Trier; the Title of another Branch of the Palatine Family, called the Duke of Simmern, situate in that part of the Country which is called Weisbach, of which Zweibrücken is also part. In all three are contained within the Palatinate 24. walled Towns, and 12 fair Palaces of the Prince, most of which they have added to their Estates within little more than 400 years. Such excellent managers have they been of their own Estates, so potent in ordering the affairs of the Empire both in War and peace, and so ingrafted themselves into the most notable Families of Germany, that I may well say with Irænicus, Non est alia Germaniæ Familia cui plus decet Nobilitas.

Within the Limits of this Country, and intermingled with the Lands of the Princes Palatine, are the Bishops of Spire and Wormes; both anciently of great Revenue, but Feudataries for a great part of their Estates to these Eleccours. Of these more towards the head of the Rhene, and on the Gallick side thereof, stands the City of Spire, by Ptolomy called Neomagus, from the newness of the building when that name was given; by Antoninus, Civitas Nemeturum, from the Nemetes, who possessed this Traß; and sometimes Spira, by which name it doth still continue. A Town Imperial, and anciently a Bishop's See; Tellis the Bishop hereof subscribing to the Acts of the Council of Colen, Anno 347. A neat Town, and very delectably seated; of great reort, by reason of the Imperial Chamber, the Sovereign Court of Judicature of all the Empire, capable of Appeals from the Tribunals of all Princes and free States thereof. A Court which first followed the Emperor in all his Removes, (as anciently the King's Bench in England) but by Maximilian the Emperor first made sedentary, and fixed at Frankfurt; removed after to Wormes, and finally to this City by Charles the fifth. Sufficiently famous in that the name of Præfatus was here taken up, given to the Princes and free Cities following the Reformed Religion, upon their legal Præfation here exhibited. More down the water and on the same shore thereof, stands the City of Wormes, one of those built upon the Rhene for defence of Gaul against the Germani; by Ptolomy called Barbaromagus by Antoninus Civitas Wormesii, whence the modern name; but generally Civitas Vangionum, from the Vangiones, the old Inhabitants of those parts, whose chief City it was. A Town Imperial as the former, and a See Episcopal as that is, and as ancient too; Prætor the Bishop hereof subscribing to the Acts of the Council of Colen before mentioned. A Town to be observed for the first appearance which Luther made before Charles the 5. (the Imperial Chamber then being holden in this City) who, being dissuaded from that journey by some of his Friends, returned this resolute Answer, That he would, though there were as many Devils in the Town as there were Tiles on the Houses. Chief Towns belonging to this Bishop are, 1. Udenheim, a Town belonging to the Bishop of Spire, whose Residence it sometimes is; conveniently seated for the command of the Country, and therefore upon some design which was then in hand fortified strongly by the Bishop. But this new Fortification, being begun in a time of Peace, gave great occasion of distrust to the neighbouring Princes, who interposed with Frederick the fifth, then Prince Elect, of whom it was held in chief, to cause the Bishop to desist from the finishing of it. Which when he had refused to do, pleading a Placet from the Emperor Mathias to compleat the work, the Prince Elect with the rest of the Confederates beat it down by force. For this contempt they were cited to Spire, the Imperial Chamber, in which it was also resolved to proceed suddenly and severely to their condemnation. One of the chief motives which occasioned that unfortunate Prince to entertain the offer of the Crown of Bohemia, and consequently a chief cause of the German Wars, in managing whereof this Town was thought so commodious, that Marquess Spisla caused the works to be raised again, made it the strongest Hold in all those Countries, and caused it to be called by the name of Philippsburg. 2. Rutenberg, originally belonging to the Bishops of Spire, but of late times possessed by the Princes Palatine. Others of lesser note I forbear to mention.

The first Inhabitants of this Country on the French side of the Rhene were the Nemetes and Vangiones spoken of before the other side the Matagie. That on the West side of the River was first conquered by the Romans, and from them by the French, of whose Empire it remained a part, but so that it was subject more immediately to the Earls of Alsace, first under the Sovereignty and Vassalage of the Kings of Atens, and after of the Kings of Lorran. In the dividing of which Kingdom between the Emperors of Germany and the Kings of France, it became subject to the Empire, but still possessed by those of Messelle as it was before. Belonging to the Empire on the expiration of that Family, partly by force of Arms, partly by paying down ready Money, and partly too by selling of their Voices, as they saw occasion, it was gained by the Electors Palatine: and so also that part of it which lies on the Dutch side of the Rhene, which being anciently and properly a part of Frankland, followed the fortunes of that Country, till the failure of the House of Schmalen, and then devolved unto the Empire, as the other did. By little and little it got into the hands of the Princes Palatine, who being originally Officers of the Emperor's Household; (such as the Majors of the Palace to the French Kings at the first institution) had first the honour of Counts Palatine bestowed upon them, and afterwards the place of an Elect in the choice of the Emperor. But where their Estates then lay, where they fixed their dwelling, and what Provinces or people they had subject to them, I nullo irrevi scriptum, I could never find any good Record to build on, faith the learned Amstel; their habitation and possession in and of these parts (acquired for the most part by Arms and Money) not being above 460 years standing at the utmost. Likely it is, they had their Residence for the most part in the Emperor's Palace, living upon their Rents, (as other great Officers of Court in these latter times) the Dignity and Authority of so great a place seeming sufficient to content them: but were called Com Palatines of the Rhene, because their Jurisdiction and Authority lay most especially in those parts of the Empire which were towards that River. Afterwards, on the Marriage of Orbo, the second of that name, Duke of Bavaria, with Gerrade, the Daughter of Henry the Elect Palatine, this Office with the Electoral Dignity fell into that House, possessed at that time of those parts of Francia and the Earldom of Messelle, who not long after, on the dividing of that Estate between Rodolphus and Ludovicus, the Sons of Ludovic the 2. Elect Palatine and Duke of Bavaria, made up this Palatinate. A State which suddenly received a great augmentation, partly by the care and good husbandry of Rupertus, Emperor and Elect Palatine, partly by the weakness and ambition of Wenceslaus, Emperor and King of Bohemia, and partly by the valour of Frederick the Prince Elect. Of these the first bought in the Towns of Wormes, Ladenberg, Scriefsen, and the Castle of Stralburg, with their Lands and Territories. The second gave unto the Palatines, for their Voices in his Election, three strong Towns of the Empire, viz. Keiserslautern, Ingelheim, and Oppenheim. And the last took in Battel, An. 1452, the Earls of Wirttemberg, the Marquess of Baden, the Bishop of Spire, and the Archbishop of Metz, and ranfomed them on what condition he pleased. More particularly the Earl of Wirttemberg (for it was not yet erected into a Dukedom) paid for his ransom 100000 Florens: the Bishop of Metz redeemed himself for 45000 Florens. The Bishop of Spire gave for his liberty the Towns of Rutenberg and Wesfay. And the Marquess of Baden yielded up in lieu of his freedom the Country of Spanheim, of which Creutznach is a part, the Towns of Befsen and Bimbem, the right which he pretended to Eppingen, a Town over against Gernersheim and his Royalties between this Gernersheim and Seltz, a Town of Alsace, in Fishing and Hunting. So having brought these Princes unto their Estates, let us next take a view of those who have successively enjoyed both the State and Title, as far as we can go by the light of Story.

Electors Palatine of the R H E N E.

A. C.

1. Henry, Count Palatine in the time of Orbo the third, by him ordained to be one of the six Electors.
2. Sigefride; the Son of Adelheid, Wife of this Henry the Elect; by a former Husband.
3. Erlint.

3. Ezeline and Conrade, Sons of Sigefride.
 4. Lindolphus, Son to Ezeline.
 5. Conrade, Elector Palatine in the time of Henry the fifth.
 6. Frederick, Son to Frederick, Duke of Schwaben, Nephew to the Emperor Conrade the third.
 7. Henry II. surnamed the Lion, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria.
 1195 8. Henry III. Son of Henry the Lion, and Husband of Clementia, Daughter of Conrade, D. of Schwaben and Palatine.
 9. Henry IV. Son of Henry the third, in the life of his Father, the last Elector Palatine of the nomination and appointment of the Emperor, the Dignity from hence forwards becoming hereditary.
 10. Otho, Duke of Bavaria, of that name the second, Elector Palatine of the Rhene in right of Gertrude his Wife, Sister and next Heir of Henry the fourth, whom he succeeded in the Electoral Dignity, confirmed therein by the Emperor Frederick the second.
 1269 11. Ludovicus, Elector Palatine and Duke of Bavaria, the Son of Otho.
 1294 12. Rodolphus, the eldest Son of Lewis or Ludovicus, succeeded his Father in the Palatinate and Electoral Dignity; Northgois, or the Palatinate of Bavaria, being added to his part, to make even the scale, his younger Brother Ludovicus succeeding in Bavaria.
 1315 13. Adolphus, surnamed the Simple, reigned the Electoral Dignity to his Brother Rodolphus, as the fitter man to undertake it.
 1327 14. Rodolphus II. on the Resignation of Adolphus.
 1337 15. Rupertus, the Brother of Rodolphus the second, Founder of the University of Heidelberg, Anno 1346.
 1386 16. Rupertus II. Son of Adolphus the Simple.
 1398 17. Rupertus III. elected Emperor in the place of Wenceslaus King of Bohemia, Anno 1406, made Knight of the Garter by King Henry the fourth.
 1410 18. Ludovicus II. surnamed Cæcus and Barbatus, the eldest Son of Rupertus the Emperor, married Blanche, Daughter to K. Henry, the fourth of England.
 1439 19. Ludovicus III. Son of Lewis the second.
 1451 20. Frederick, Brother of Ludovicus, during the Minority of Philip his half Brothers Son, succeeded in the Electoral Dignity, and added much to that Estate by his personal Virtue.
 1478 21. Philip, the Son of Lewis the third; pretended to the Dukedom of Bavaria in right of Margaret his Wife; but, after a long and bloody War, was forced to go without it.
 1508 22. Ludovicus IV. Son of Philip.
 1544 23. Frederick II. Brother of Lewis the fourth, who first introduced the Reformed Religion into the Palatinate.
 1556 24. Otho-Henry, Son of Rupertus, the Brother of Frederick and Lewis, the last of the direct Line of this House of Bavaria.
 1559 25. Frederick III. Duke of Simmern, descended from Stephen Palatine of Zweibruck, or Bijon, younger Son of the Emperor Rupert, succeeded on the decease of Otho-Henry without issue.
 1576 26. Ludovicus V. Son of Frederick the third, a munificent Benefactor to the University of Heidelberg.

- 1583 27. Frederick IV. Son of Lewis the fifth, married Ludovicus, or Louisa, Daughter of William, and Sister of Maurice, Princes of Orange.
 1610 28. Frederick V. Son of Frederick the 4th, married the Princess Elizabeth, Daughter of James King of Great Britain. In danger of being proscribed for demolishing the Works of Odenheim, he accepted the Crown of Bohemia. But worked at the Battle of Prague, and warred upon by the Bavarian and the Spaniard, he lost both that and his own native Estates and Dignities; of which he was deprived by Ferdinand the prevailing Emperor: the Lower Palatinate being assigned over to and conquered by the King of Spain; the Upper Palatinate, with the Electoral Dignity, bestowed on the Duke of Bavaria. Restored to the possession of the most part of his Country by the power of the Swedes, he died at Mentz, November 29. 1632. the whole Country falling again not long after under the power and Government of the former Conquerors.
 1631 29. Charles Ludowick; the Heir both of his Father's Estates and Misfortunes too; not yet admitted to his Honours, (contrary to the Fundamental Constitutions of the Empire, by which the Sons of the Electors and other Princes are not involved in the guilt of their Fathers offences) but in fair hopes to be restored thereto in part, by the Pacification made at Munster this present year 1648: which I pray God to prosper, for the peace of afflicted Christendom.

Now to proceed to the Civil State, and the Concernment of these Princes. The Palgrave hath many Privileges above the Electors of either Fort. He taketh place of the Duke of Saxony and Marquess of Brandenburg, because Henry the Palatine was descended of Charles the Great: for which cause he is also, in the Vacancy of the Empire, Governour of the Western parts of Germany. In which Office he had power to alienate or give Offices, to take Fealty and Homage of the Subjects, and which is most, to sit in the Imperial Courts, and give Judgment of the Emperor himself. And look, whatsoever shall in the Vacancy of the Empire be by the Palatine enacted, that the new Emperors are by Oath to confirm and ratify.

The Revenues of these Princes were conceived to be about 100000 l. per annum; nor could they be supplied at less: the Silver Mines about Amberg only in the Upper Palatinate yielding 60000 Crowns a year, and the passage of one Bridge over the Rhene about 20000 Crowns more; besides the Demesne Lands, and the Lands of the Church, incorporated (since the Reformation) into their Estate.

The Arms hereof are Diamonds, a Lion Topaz, Armed and Crowned Ruby.

4. ALSATIA.

ALSATIA (or ELSAZ, as the Dutch call it) is bounded on the East with the Rhene, which parteth it from the Marquissate of Baden, and some parts of Schwaben; on the West with the Mountain Vange or Voisgum, which separateth it from Lorraine; on the North with the Palatinate; on the South (where it groweth very narrow) with a point of Switzerland. A Country for the Pleasantness and fertility of it inferior to none in Germany: called therefore Elfsaz, (as some think) quasi Edelfaz, that is to say, a noble Seat; derived more probably by others from the River Ill, the only River of note in all this Tract, and called so, quasi Ill faz, the Seat or situation on the River Ill.

It is divided generally into the Lower, and Higher, to which the Country called Sungow may come in for a third. The LOWER ALSATIA is that which bordereth on the Palatinate, so called because farther off from the Mountains, and down the water in respect of the course of the Rhene. A Country so abundantly fruitful in Wine and Corn (with which it furnisheth some parts of Germany, and not a few of the neighbour-Countries) that it is generally called Germania Nurix, or the Nurfe of Germany; by Winphelgium, the Epitome, or Abstract of it. Chief Towns therein are, 1. Straesburg, so called from the multitude of Streets, (the Dutch call them Serats) anciently Argentoratum, and then Argentina, from the Roman Exchequer or Receipt, here kept in the time of their Greatness; or from some Mines of Silver which were found about it. A flatly, rich, and populous City, well stored with publick Garners and Cellars of Wine against times of Dearth; situate on the two Rivers Ill and Bruch, where they both fall into the Rhene, by which, and by the helps of Art, it is very strongly fortified: designed from the first foundation for a Town of War, this being another of the Towns which the Romans built to defend the Rhene against the Germans; now an Imperial City, and a See Episcopall, the Bishop whereof is Lord of the Lower Alsatia. The Church Cathedral is one of the fairest in all Germany, much famed for a Clock of most admirable workmanship, and a Scepter of as curious a frame as that, mounted 574 foot in height, the highest of any in Christendom, higher (if the measure of it be not mistaken) by 40 foot than the Steeple of St. Paul in London before the firing of it. Of this suit the Poet in Adriamus,

Vix prælara stirps, rictu continere Rheni,
Maxima cum celsæ metuitur momenta turris.
Straesburg on Rhene's inam'd Banks doth lie,
 Whole Tower even bids defiance to the Skie.

2. Zabern, or Elfsaz Zavern, the Taberna of Antonine and Marcellinus, another of the old Roman Garrisons, destroyed by the Almans, and repaired again by Julian the Apostate, then Emperor; now the chief place of Residence for the Bishops of Straesburg, and well frequented in regard of the Courts of Justice kept by his Officers in this City for the Lower Alsatia. 3. Altrip, so called from Altra ripa, from the high banks of the River on which it is seated; another of the Towns or Forts which the Romans, like politic Conquerours, built on the West side of the Rhene, to prohibit the Incurious of the barbarous Nations. And so was 4. Seltz, seated on the Rhene, betwixt Straesburg and Zabern. And 5. Weissemburg, more towards the Palatinate, now a Town Imperial, but seated on the River Lura, not far from its fall into the Rhene; encompassed with little Hills and delightful Groves, the River gently washing the Walks thereof, and adding much to it both of strength and beauty. 6. Hagenau, betwixt Seltz and Straesburg, but not so near unto the Rhene as either of them; first walled by Frederick Barbassus, Anno 1164, and since that time of great importance for command of the Country; but seated in a sandy and unfruitful Soil; frequented chiefly heretofore by the old Lantgraves of Elfsaz for the commodities of hunting. More from the Rhene, 7. Stachfels, corruptly so called for Steffenfels, from the Monastery of St. Stephen there founded. 8. Hils, or the Bruch, &c.

Places of the most importance in the HIGHER ALSATIA are, 1. Ruffach, on the River Ombach, belonging to the Bishops of Straesburg; of old called Rubeanum, from the red colour of the earth, well built, in-vincible with a double Suburb; in ancient times of great repute by the Roman Nobility much taken with the fruitfulness and pleasures of it, and well inhabited at this day, as is all the Country round about it, by reason of their vigorous proceedings against Thieves; from whence the Germans have a Proverb, that the old Gallows at Ruffach is made of Oak 2. Eufheim, or Euffheim, on the River Ill, anciently the Station of the Tenth Legion, and then called Amnis; now of most note for the Supreme Court of Justice there held for Brigow, Sungow, and this part of Alsatia, by the Archdukes of Austria, the chief Lords thereof. 3. Colmar, an Imperial City, raised out of the Ruines of old Argentaria destroyed by Atilla and the Huns; well built, and situate almost in the very Navel of Alsatia, not above an hour's journey from the foot of the Mountains, but in a fruitful and rich Soil both for Corn and Pasturage, the Country hereabouts being very well watered with the Lauch, Duro, Fech, and Ill. 4. Schleffad, in the modern Latine, Selsstadium, but by the ancients called Elebeus, the Station at that time of the 19 Legion; afterwards of great fame for a Church here built by Hildegardis Dutches of Schwaben, Anno 1044, according to the pattern of the Temple of Jerusalem, which in tract of time became the richest Monastery in all these parts. It is situate in a very fertile and delightful Soil, having the Rhene on the one side, and some furs, of the Mountain Vange, shadowed with Groves of Chestnuts, upon the other; walled in the time of Frederick the second, about the year 1216, and on the East defended with impassible Fens. 5. Gebweiler, and 6. Wawel, both seated near the aforesaid Mountains, and both subject to the Abbot of Murbach. 7. Keiserberg. 8. Torchheim, two Imperial Towns, but not otherwise memorable; as neither are many of the rest, but for name and number: there being reckoned within this small Province of Elfsaz (not including Sungow) 46 Cities and Towns beset with Walls, besides Castles, Forts and Villages, almost innumerable; and amongst them more Free and Imperial Cities than in any one Province of the Empire, except Schwaben only.

The Southern part of Elfsaz, bordering on the Canton of Basil, is commonly called by the name of SUNGOW, in Latine, Sungovia and Sungoi, but in former times the Dukedom of Pfirt, from Pfirt the chief Town of it, and the Duke's Seat. The Country is very plentiful in Corn and Wine, (as the rest of Elfsaz) affording good store of each to the neighbouring Switzers. Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Mulhausen, on the River Ill, heretofore under the command of the Bishops of Straesburg as were also Keiserberg and Colmar; but being taken in by Rodolph of Habsburg, after his advancement to the Empire, it was made Imperial, and is now confederate with the Switzers. 2. Befort, remarkable for a Collegiate Church there founded by the Earls of Pfirt, in which lie buried 13 Earls and as many Countesses. 3. Mals, Munster, so called from a Monastery of Nuns there founded by Malo, a Prince of the old Almans. 4. Thann, a neat Town, beautified with the fair Castle of Engelburg, mounted upon the top of a lofty Hill. 5. Morf, Munster, so named of an ancient Monastery there founded by the Earls of Pfirt, most of them great Builders of Religious Houses. 6. Altkirk, not far from the head of the River Ill 7. Pfirt, it self, seated on the Ill, not far from Altkirk, in a Country heretofore overgrown with Woods and Forests, whence it had the name, called by the French, le Pais de Ferret, (corruptly for le Pais de Forrest) by the Dutch moulded into Pfirt: by which name (of the County of Ferrate) it is called by Philip de Comines and other French Writers; and by that name pawned by Sigismund the Archduke to Charles Duke of Burgundy, made by that means too near a neighbour to the Switzers, as it proved in fine.

Westward hereof, betwixt it and the County of Burgundy, lyeth the Town and Earldom of MONT-BELGARD, (Montis Belgardium in the Latine) united by the Marriage of Henrica, Daughter and Heir of Henry the first Earl hereof, anno 1366, to the House of Wirtemberg. Chief Towns whereof are, 1. Clewang, 2. Paffewang. 3. Grans, all anciently beautified with Castles; and 4. Montbelgard, a Town of great strength, proud of a Castle-Royal on the top of a fair and lofty Mountain, whence it took that name: once the Seat of its proper Earls, as after of the Princes of the House of Wirtemberg; but now both Town and Castle in the power of the French, who after their good luck in the Dukedom of Lorraine, caused a good Garrison of their own to be put in to them, anno 1633; under pretence of keeping them for the children of a Brother of the Duke of Wirtemberg, to whom the Inheritance belonged.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Tract were the Tribolchi, with parts of the Nemetes and Rauraci; first conquered by the Romans, then subdued by the Almans, after by the French, and by them made a part of the Kingdom of Lorraine; in the fall of which Kingdom it was reckoned for a Province of the German Empire. Governed for the Emperors by Provincial Earls, in the Dutch language called Lantgraves: at first officary only, and accountable to the Emperours under whom they served; in the end made hereditary, and successional unto their posterities. The first hereditary Lantgrave is said to be Theoderick in the Reign of Otho the third: after whose death the Empire being made elective, gave the Provincial Governours some opportunities to provide for themselves. In his Male-Issue it continued till the Reign of Frederick the 2. who began his Empire, anno 1212, and died anno 1250; during which interval this Estate was conveyed by Daughters to Albert the 2. Earl of Habsburg, Albert Earl of Hohenburg, and Lewis Earl of Oettingen. Radolph of Habsburg, Son of this Albert, afterwards Emperour of the German, marrying with Anne the Daughter of the Earl of Hohenloe, became possessed also of his part of the Country; which added to his own, made up the whole upper Elfsa, continued since that time in possession of the House of Austria, descended from him. The third part, comprehending all the Lower Alsacia, was not long after sold by the Earl of Oettingen to the Bishop of Straasburg, whose Successors hold to this day, assuming to themselves the Title of the Lantgraves of Elfsa. But as for Singow, or the County of Epf, that belonged anciently to the Princes of the House of Schwaben: in the expiring of which potent and illustrious Family, by the death of Conradine the last Duke, anno 1268, that great Estate being scattered into many hands, it was made a distinct Earldom of it self. And so it continued till the year 1324, when Ottobek the last Earl dying without Issue-Male, left his Estate betwixt two Daughters: whereof the one, named Anne, conveyed her part in Marriage to Adolf Duke of Austria, named the short, Grandchild of Radolphus the Emperour before mentioned; the other, named Ursula, sold her moiety to the said Albert for 8000 Crowns. Since that it hath been always in the possession of the Dukes of Austria, (save only for the time in which it was pawned or mortgaged, together with Alsacia, to the Duke of Burgundy) governed in Civil matters and points of Judicature by the Parliament or Court of Ensheim in the Upper Elfsa.

5. LORRAIN.

THE Dukedom of LORRAIN is bounded on the East with Elfsa, and that part of the lower Palatinate which passeth by the name of Weserich; on the West with the River Meuse, or Maes, with part of the Country of Barrois in France, (belonging to the Duke hereof) and part of Champagne; on the North with Luxemburg and the Land of Trier; and on the South with the County of Burgundy, from which, and from the Province of Elfsa, it is parted by the Vogesus or Vange, wherewith it is encompassed on those sides. Assigned unto Lotharius, second son of Lotharius the Emperour, (who was eldest Son of Lewis the Godly) with the style of a Kingdom; from thence called Lothreich by the Dutch, Loth-reigne by the French; from which the modern name of Lorraine, and the Latine Lotharingia are to fetch their Pedegree.

The Country is in length about four dayes journey, almost three in breadth, much overgrown with Forests, and swelled with Mountains, the spurs and branches of Vogesus, and the once vast Wildernes of Ardenne; yet so sufficiently stored with all manner of necessaries, that it needeth not supply out of other places. Some Lakes it hath which yield great quantity of Fish; one more especially 14 miles in compass, the Fish whereof yields to the Duke's Coffers 20000 l. yearly. It affordeth also divers Metals, as Silver, Copper, Tin, Iron, Lead, in some places Pearls: Chaldeonians also of such bigness, that whole Drinking-cups are made of them, and a matter of which they make the purest Glasses, not to be paralleld in Europe. They have also a goodly breed of Horses, equal to those of Barbary, or the Courser of Naples.

The people, by reason of their neighbourhood to and commerce with France, strive much to imitate the French in garb and fashion; but one may easily see that it is not natural: they have much in them also of the Dutch humour of Drinking, but far more moderately than the Dutch themselves. Generally they are a politic and an hardy Nation; not otherwise able to have held their Estate so long against the French Kings, and the Princes of the House of Burgundy. They lived very happily in former times under their own Dukes, not being at all oppressed with Taxes; which made them very affectionate towards the Prince, and useful unto one another. Their Language is for the most part French, as in Artois, Luxemburg, Trier, and other of the bordering Provinces, members of the French Monarchy in former times, not so refined and elegant as is spoke in France, not so corrupt and coarse as that of Montbelgard and the County of Burgundy.

I know that many, in respect of the French language, spoken here among them, account this Country among the Provinces of France, and usually describe it in their Charts and writings: but I have placed it with more reason (as I conceive) amongst those of Germany; first, in regard that a Duke hereof is a Prince of the Empire; but especially because that, in the division of the Kingdom of Lorraine betwixt the Emperors of Germany and the Kings of France, whatsoever lay on the East-side of the River Meuse (as this Dukedom of Lorraine for the most part doth) was reckoned in the share or portion of the German Emperours.

The Rivers of chief note are, 1. Murta, or the Meurte, which receiving into it many Rivers, and passing with a swift stream by the walls of Nancie, glides along fairly for a good space within sight of the Moselle, into which at last it falls near Conde. 2. Mosel, the Mosel, or or Maes, whose spring and course hath been already described in Belgium. 3. Moselle, famous for the design which Lucius Verus, Governour for the Emperour Nero, had once upon it. For whereas it ariseth in the Mountain Vange, not far from the head of the River Saône, and disburtheneth it self into the Rhene at Confluent; he intended to have cut a deep Channel from the head of this unto the other, so to have made a passage from the Ocean to the Mediterranean, the Saône emptying it self into the Rhine, a chief River of France, as the Moselle doth into the Rhene. 4. Selle, which minglith waters with the Moselle not far from Metz. 5. Sar, 6. Martane, 7. Voley, with others of less note: all of them plentiful of Salmon, Perches, Tenches, and the best sorts of fish, as in their Lakes are great store of Carps, some of them three foot long, and of excellent taste.

Principal Cities in it are, 1. Metz, by Protony called Divodurum, Metis and Civitas Mediomatricum by Antoninus, the chief City of the Mediomatrici, who possessed this Tract: it is seated in a pleasant Plain at the confluence of the Selle and Moselle; the Royal Seat, in former times of the French Kings of Austrasia, hence called Kings of Metz; long before that a Bishop's See, as it still continueth. 2. Toul, the Tullum of Protony, the Civitas Leucorum of Antoninus, so called from the Leuci, the Inhabitants of it and the Tract about it; pleasantly seated on the Moselle, and anciently honoured with a See Episcopal. 3. Verdun, an ancient Episcopal See also, the Civitas Verodunensium of Antoninus, seated on the Meuse or Maes. The Town or Territory adjoining in preceeding times belonged to the great Princes of the House of Ardenne, at and before the time that they attained the Dukedom of Lorraine: but whither they had it in right of their Patrimonial Estate, as lying in the North part of this Country towards Luxemburg, as it well might be, or that it came to them in the right of Marriage with some Daughter of the house of Moselle, or other Heirs thereof, I have no where found. But howsoever it came to them, it gave unto this House the Title of Earls of Verdun, used in their Style, till swallowed with the rest in that of Lorraine. The Bishop whereof, as also those of Metz and Toul, (being the only ones of this Country of Lorraine) acknowledge the Archbishop of Trier for their Metropolitan. All of them were in the number (heretofore) of Imperial Cities, possessed of large and goodly Territories and of great Revenue; but taken by the French King Henry the 2. Anno 1552, during the Wars between Charles the fifth, and the Protestant Princes of Germany, under colour of aiding them against the Emperour. And though Charles tried all ways to recover them to the Empire again, and to that end maintained a long and desperate Siege against the City of Metz: yet was the Town so gallantly defended by the Duke of Guis, that he was faine to raise his Siege, and go off with dishonour. Since that, they have been always under the subjection of France; a Parliament, being erected at Metz for the ease of the people, as in other Provinces of that Kingdom.

Of such Towns as immediately belong to the Duke of Lorraine, the principal are Nancie, not great, but of a pleasant and commodious site, well watered by the River Meurte or Marta, and fortified better than before, in the year 1587, on occasion of a great Army of the German passing into France to aid the Protestants: most commonly the Duke's Seat, and famous for the Discomfiture which Charles Duke of Burgundy here suffered, with the loss of his life. 2. Nicolas, a Town so populous, well seated, and neatly built, that were it walled, it would hardly yield precedence unto Nancie it self; so called from a Church here built to the honour of S. Nicolas, Bishop of Myra in the lesser Asia, whose body they pretend to be buried here; or at least some of Relick of it to be here inhrined, occasioning a great resort of Pilgrims and other people. 3. Pont a Mosion, about 4 leagues from Nancie, so called from a Bridge on the River Mosion upon which it standeth, of special note for a small University lately founded in it, and for giving the Title of a Marquis to the eldest Son of the Dukes of Lorraine, called commonly and contractedly Marquis du Pont, Marchio Mosio-Pontanus by our modern Latinists. 4. Vaucouleur, the Birth-place of Joan the Virgin, to whose Miracles and Valour the French attribute the delivery of their Country from the power of the English. But being at last taken Prisoner, she was by the Duke of Bedford, then Regent of France, condemned and burnt for a Witch. Of which crime, I for my part do conceive her free. Nor can I otherwise conceive of her and her brave exploits, than as of a luty Lais of Lorraine, tutored and trained up by the practice of the Earl of Dumais, commonly called the Barfard of Orleans, and so presented to Charles the seventh, French King, as if sent immediately from Heaven. A project carried on of purpose, (as the most intelligent of the French Writers say) pour faire venir la courage aux Francois, to revive the drooping spirits of the beaten French, not to be raised again but by help of a Miracle. Upon the fight of her Statue on the Bridge of Orleans, a freind of mine did adventure on a Copy of Verses in her commendation, too long to be inserted here, but they ended thus,

She dy'd a Virgin: 'Twas because the earth
Bred not a man whose valour and whose birth
Might merit such a Blessing. But above
The Gods provided her an equal Love,
And gave her to Saint Denis. She with him Protects the Lilies and their Diadem.
You then about whose Armes the doth watch,
Give her the honour due unto her Match:
And when in favour your Standards you advance,
Cry loud, Saint Denis and Saint Joan for France.

Next these we have, 5. Vaudemont, which gave the Title of an Earl to a younger Branch of the House of Ardenne, succeeding at the last in the Dukedom of Lorraine, in person of Duke René 2. and since a Title of the younger Son of the Dukes hereof. 6. Nesle-Chateau, on the edge of the Country towards Barrois. 7. Amance, seven leagues on the South of Metz, sometimes the Chancery of Lorraine. 8. Riche Court, near the Lake called Garde-lée, out of which floweth a River which runs into the Meurte. 9. La Mothe, seated on a River which falls presently into the Moselle. 10. Charmes, seated on the Moselle, the place of Treaty between the Duke of Lorraine and the Cardinal Richeleu; the result whereof was the surrender of the Town of Nancie, and by consequence of all the Dukedom, into the hands of the French, September 1633. 11. Stenay, in the extrem North of all this Country, a well fortified Town, and of great consequence and importance to the Dukes hereof; but whether properly belonging to the Dukedom of Lorraine, or wretched from the Sovereignty of Sedan, upon which it bordereth, (as Tamari near unto it was) I have no where found. Of less note there are, 1. Saint Die, 2. Saint Hippolite, 3. Bouguenon, and 4. Saverden; the first Towns of this Dukedom taken by the Swedes, Anno 1633, in the War against Lorraine. 5. Saint Miel, 6. Oden Chateau, 7. Muecourt; all taken the same year by the French, in the prosecution of that War, before the Treaty at Charmes. 8. Romberville, 9. Espinal, 10. Gerbaville, &c.

3. Larks Argent. But herein I find Bars, an old French Herald, to differ from Paradise, the most Exact Genealogist of the French Nation. For Bars charged the Band not with 3 Alouettes, Larks as Paradise doth, but with 3 Alceons, which are in Blazon small Birds wanting beaks, feet, and legs. Of this last opinion is the most worthy Antiquary Cambden; Clavensius; who withal telleth us, that antiquary Gudfrey Bonilay was at the Siege of Hierusalem, when Gudfrey Bonilay was at the Siege of Hierusalem, shooting at S. David's Tower there, he broached three feeble birds called Alceons upon his Arrow, and thereupon assumed this Arms.

6. SUEVIA, or SCHWABEN.

THE Dukedom of SUEVIA or SCHWABEN, according to the ancient limits and extent thereof, was bounded on the North with Frankenland and the Lower Palatinate, on the South with Switzerland and the Alps of Tyrol, on the East with the River Leck, parting it from Bavaria, and on the West with the Rhene dividing it from Sungow and both Alsatia's. But now the Dukedom of Wirsungow, the Marquitate of Baden, and other lesser Estates being taken out of it, it is contracted and restrained within narrower bounds, having on the East Bavaria, on the West the Dukedom of Wirttemberg, and so much of the Rhene as serveth to divide it from Sungo and the Upper Elzass, on the North Francia or Frankenland, and on the South a little of the Rhene, with some part of the Switzers.

The Country for the most part is mountainous and hilly, overpread with some spurs of the Alps, and the woods of Nigra Sylva or Swartzwald, recompensed notwithstanding with great plenty of Springs and Rivers (and amongst them the Neccar and the renowned Danubius) which do issue from them: which makes the Vales hereof to be very fruitful, sufficiently stored with all necessary provisions. Nor are the Woods and Mountains so unprofitable, but that besides the great plenty of Fowl and the pleasures of Hunting, they do afford some Mines of Iron and other Metals.

The people in regard of their mountainous situation are more fierce and warlike than the rest of the Germans, and so accompanied by Pluarch in former times; industrious in several Trades and Manufactures, especially in the weaving of Linnen-cloth, which is made here in great abundance: and by reason they have so much in them of the South, they are supra modum in Venerem prout, as Ambani tells me, at least more given to Venus than the other of the Germans; are the women also being said to be very forward in this kind, as tractable and easie as the men could wish with them.

The whole is generally divided into the Hegow lying next to the Lake of Constance; the Algow extending to Bavaria; Brigow, upon the West of the River Rheine; and North Schwaben, on the Northern side of Danubius. Principal Cities in the HEGOW are, 1. Lindow, situate alike an Island in the Lake of Constance, encompassed alike with the waters thereof, but joined to it with a Causeway of 290 paces long: one of the Free or Imperial Cities, made so, for money, by the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa, anno 1166. 2. Buchorn, and 3. Scaffhausen, seated on both sides of the Rhene, not far from the efflux thereof out of the Lake Cell, (so called from a Town of that name belonging to the Arch-dukes of Austria, but anciently known by the name of Laus Vennia) and near those dreadful falls or Cataracts of that River no less than 50. Cubits downwards, with great noise and violence. For which cause all Vessels that go down the Rhene are fain to unlade themselves, and by Carts to carry their goods to this Town, where they in-bark them again. Which as it yieldeth great benefit unto the Town by Tolls and Imposts, so doth it always keep it stored with abundance of Barks and other Vessels: whence it hath the name of Scaffhausen, that is to say, the house of Skiffs; or the Town of Ship-barks. The Town is conveniently seated amongst rich Pastures and sweet Groves on both sides of the River; not without some pleasant Hills, and those well planted with Vines, near adjoining to it: Imperial once, but now a Canton of the Switzers, as hath there been thew.

5. Arben, upon the Lake it self, (the Arbor Felix of Strabo) belonging to the Bishop of Constance. 6. Merzburg, the ordinary Seat and Residence of the Bishop of Constance; Lord of the most part of this Trade, on the same Lake also. 7. Constance it self, situate on both sides of the Rhene, where it issueth out of the Lake, called from hence the Lake of Constance, but by the Dutch, Boden-see, from the Cattle of Bodmen; by Pliny and other Antients Lacus Aemonicus, and Brigantinus; made by the Confluence of the Rhene, and some other Rivers falling out of Switzerland. The Town is Imperial, an Episcopate See, and a flourishing Emptorie: famous for the Council here holden, anno 1414. of great renown as well for the multitude and quality of the people which were there assembled, as for the importance of the matters which were therein handled. The people of most note there assembled were, Sigismund the Emperor; 4. Patriarchs, 29 Cardinals, 340 Archbishops and Bishops, 564 Abbots and Doctors, 10000 secular Princes and Noblemen, 4500 common Harlots, 1600 Barbers, and 320 Minstrels and Jefters. The business there handled was, first the pacifying of a Schism in the Church, there being at that time 3 Popes, (or rather Anti-Popes) viz. Gregory the 12. resident at Rome, John the 23. at Bononia, and Beneke the 13. in Spain; all three deposed by the Council, and Martin the 5. made sole Pope by the unanimous consent of the Council, declaring both by matter of fact, and by a publick Confutation here made and ratified, that Council is above the Pope. The other main business was the proceeding against John Hierome of Prague (spoken of before) both which notwithstanding the Emperor's safe conduct, were here condemned of Heresie, degraded and burnt. Now the manner of degrading a Priest is this: I hope to be excused for this Digression. The Party to be degraded is satired in his Priestly Vestments, holding in the one hand a Chalice full of wine & water, and in the other a gilt plate (or Patten, as they call it) with a wafer. Then kneeling down, the Bishop's Deputy, 1. taking from him all those things commands him to say no more Masses for the quick and dead. 2. Scrapping his Fingers ends with a piece of Glais, he commandeth him from that time forwards not to hallow any thing. And 3. stripping him of his priestly Habit, he is clothed in a Lay attire, and so delivered over to the secular Magistrate. But to return again to the City of Constance: being proscribed by Charles the 5. for refusing the Interim, and not able to withstand such Forces as were raised against them, they put themselves under the protection of Ferdinand, then King of the Romans and Brother of Charles. But herein they fell out of the Frying-pan into the Fire, as the saying is: For Ferdinand being possessed of the Town, seized on the common Treasury, and upon all Records and Writings which belonged unto them; set out an Edict, that all the Ministers within eight daies should depart the City; and that no Citizen from thenceforth should wear any Weapon. And instead of a Protector he became their Master.

Chief Cities in the part hereof lying towards Bavaria which is called the ALGOW, are, 1. Buchorn, on the Lake called Feder-see, a Town Imperial. 2. Kewersburg a Free City, seated amongst Mountains, whereof one hangeth eth over it, the River Ach running by it in a bed so narrow that not able to receive the waters which fall down from the Hills, it much enadameth all the Country by frequent Land-floods. 3. Wangen, (the Nemavia of Antoninus) Imperial also. 4. Kempten, the Campiduvium of Strabo, and 5. Munningen, the Dryomagus of Platiny; both Imperial Cities; the last about 3 miles in circuit, populous, rich, and very well traded. 6. Pfullendorf, 7. Zwick, 8. Bibrach all three Imperial; the last supposed to be the Bragedurum of the Antients. 9. Augsburg, on the River Leck, looking into Bavaria, first made a Roman Colony by Augustus Caesar, and by him called Augusta Vindeborum, the principal City in those times of the Vindelici, a potent People of this Trade. A City of great wealth and state, containing about 9 miles in circuit, and very strongly fortified; by Nature on the East and North, where the ground lies low and under water, and on the West and South by Art. The Buildings for three parts of it are of Clay and Timber; but on the West part, seated on an Hill, built of Free-stone, six or seven Stories high; in which are many fair Houses: of the principal Citizens, and many stately Palaces, which belong to the Fuggers, a Family of very great (almost Princely) Revenues, possessed of many goodly dwellings both in the City and the Suburbs, and adjoining Territories; who though they have of late obtained the honour of Barons, in regard of their Wealth, still keep themselves (contrary to the custom of Germany, where Traffick is counted a disgrace to a Noble-man) to the trade of Merchandise. The publick Edifices of it are very decent, especially the Cathedral Church, a majestic Building; the other Churches, being ten in number, and the Religious Houses, correspondent to it. Of old time Graz was here worshipped, from whence (or from the fruitfulness of the soil) the City gives a Sheaf of Corn for the Arms thereof. Since their Conversion into Christianity it was made a Bishop's See. Destroyed by Attila and his Huns, it was after built more beautifully than it had been formerly; at last made Imperial, and the Mitres of as large a Territory as most Cities of Germany. Famous for the Confession of Faith exhibited in this place to Charles the 5. by the Protestant Princes, hence called Confessio Augustana, anno 1530. 2. For the Interim, or mixt form of Doctrine, containing some Points of Protestantism, but most of Popery, here tendered to both parties by the said Emperor; but received by neither; to be subscribed to and observed till the Differences could be settled by a General Council. And 3. for the publick allowance here given by Decree of all the States of the Empire to the Protestant Party, to profess openly their Religion without any impeachment, anno 1555. A Limitation only laid on the Ecclesiasticks, that if they changed their Religion, they should lose their preferments; which were to be bestowed on others more addicted to the See of Rome.

In the third part hereof, called BRISGOW, lying on the East of the River Rhene, and the West of Wirttemberg, and on the South closed in with the Canton of Basil. Places of most importance are, 1. Friburg, upon the Triebe and other Streams descending from the Mountains of Swartzenwald, under which it lieth: founded by Berchbold the third, Earl of Duke of Zeringen, (the Cattle of Zeringen, founded by Berchbold the first, Son of Gelzo, the youngest Son of Gunnar, the second Earl of Habsburg, once the chief Seat of those Princes, being then near adjoining to it) in the reign of Henry the Fifth Emperor, anno 1112, or thereabouts. Famous in those days for Silver mines, now for an University here established, anno 1459, and being in present estimation the chief of the Country; of which more anon. 2. Offenbach, 3. Gengenbach, both upon the Rhinich and both Towns Imperial: the first so named from Offa an English Saxon, the Apostle of these parts of Germany. 4. Hochberg, which gives the Title of a Marquess to the Marquesses of Baden, who are Lords thereof. 5. Zell, once Imperial, but of late times belonging, as doth also 6. Badenmiller, to the Marquesses of Baden; this last accruing to them by the Marriage of Radolph the sixth of that name, Marquess of Hochberg, with a Sister of John Earl of Friburg, the then Lord thereof. 7. Waldfurth, upon the Rhene, in a barren, cold and mountainous Country, but well stored with Woods. 8. Brisee, by Antoine called Mons Brissac, a Garrison in his time against the encroaching Almans, and situate of the River being since turned on the other side, where now it runneth. It is built Cattle-wise on the top of a round Hill, in which there is also a strong Tower or Fort, raised by Berchbold the third for defence of the place; otherwise strong enough by its own natural situation, and might be made impregnable, but for want of water, which is all drawn from one deep Well in the heart of the Town, or brought with great charge and trouble from the Rhene which runs underneath it. The Town is fair, populous, and well built, once of most note in all the Country, from hence called Brisee-zow, or Brisee-zw; but after the building of Friburg by Berchbold the 4. it grew by little and little to be less frequented, the other being seated more conveniently for Trade and business: Here also, not far off from the Cattle of Zeringen, stood that of Kiburg, somewhat the ancestor of the two; of such authority and repute in those elder times, that the Emperors do still retain the Title of Earls of Kiburg in the Style Imperial: descended on the House of Habsburg by the Marriage of Elizabeth, Daughter and Heir of Hartman the last Earl hereof, to Eberhard of Habsburg, Count-german to the Emperor Rodolph, on the expiring of which Line, anno 1356, it fell, together with many fair Estates among the Switzers, to Albert Duke of Austria the fourth.

Finally, in the fourth and last part hereof, called NORTH-SCHWABEN, because on the North-side of the Danow: the places most observable are, 1. Gmund, on the Reems. 2. Dinkel-Spyel, on the Warmitz, two Imperial Towns; which with Ueberling or Werlingen, (all three but mean in building, Territory, or estimation (if spoken of before, are the only three Imperial Cities in all Germany which totally adhere unto the Doctrines of the Church of Rome. 3. Bopfingen, on the Egra, an Imperial City. 4. Norlingen, on the same River, but in a low and moorish ground, yet of great repute, populous, and well traded; most memorable for the Defeat here given the Swedes by Ferdinand the third, now Emperor, at his first entrance on the Government; in which Bannier, one of the principal Commanders of that Nation, was slain on the place, Gudavus Horn, another of as great eminence, taken Prisoner, their whole Forces routed, and thereupon so strange an Alteration of the Affairs of Germany, which they had almost wholly conquered, (though not for themselves;) that the Palatinate, not long before restored to its proper Owner, was again possessed by the Spaniards, Frankenland by the Imperialists, and the remainder of the Swedes forced to withdraw into their Holds on the Baltick Seas, anno 1637. 5. Ravensweil, not far from the head of the Neccar, an Imperial City, and a Confederade of the Switzers. 6. Dornspert, seated on the Confluence of the Danow and the Werd, whence it had the name, most commonly called only Werd; an Imperial Town, the habitation of John de Werd, once a Brewer herein, but afterwards a chief Commander of the Forces of the Duke of Bavaria in the late German Wars. 7. Villingen, on the Bregenz, a small River falling into the Danow; a Town belonging to the Princes of the House of Austria. Not far from which stands 8. Furtenburgian ancient Cattle. The Earls heretofore are Princes of the Empire and Lords of a great part of the Country, defended lineally from Egino, or Eggon, the youngest Son of the Lady Judith, Sister and Heir of Berthold the fifth, the last Duke of Zerigen, and consequently a Branch of the illustrious House of Habsburg; exceedingly increased both in power and Patrimony, by the Marriage of Frederick Earl heretofore (in the time of Charles the fifth, under whom he served in his Wars against the Protestants) with Anna the Daughter and Heir of Christopher the last Earl of Werdenberg, possessed of many fair Estates amongst the Switzers and the adjoining parts of Schwaben. In a Village of this Earl, called Den Eschingen, is the head of Danubius. 9. Ulm, an Imperial City, situate on the meeting of the Blau, the Iler, and the Danow, the principal City of North Schwaben; about six miles in compass, rich, populous, well fortified, and stored with an Army for Ordnance and all manner of Ammunition, not inferior to any in Germany. The Town is but new, taking its first rise from a Monastery, here founded by Charles the Great, which after grew to be a great City; and took the name of Ulm from the Elms about it. At first it belonged unto the Monks; of whom having bought their Freedom in the time of Frederick the third, it became Imperial. The Danow hereabouts begins to be navigable, having so violent a Stream, that the Boats, which go down the water use to be sold at the place where they land, it being both difficult and chargeable to bring them back again. Not far hence on the banks of the Danow lie the Suevian Alps, and amongst them the old Cattle of Hohenberg; the Lord whereof, on the Ruine of the House of Schwaben, became possessed of a great Estate here and in Upper Alsace, fold afterwards to Rodolph of Habsburg, the Founder of the now Austrian Family.

The ancient Inhabitants heretofore were the Brigantes, Sannetes, Rugifites, and Calconetes, who, together with the Vindelici (of whom more hereafter) and other Tribes of the Rhaetis, (of whom somewhat hath been said before in the Alpine Provinces) possessed themselves of that Country which lieth betwixt the River Jun and the head of the Rhene, East and West, Danubius and the Alps of Italy, North and South. Within which compass are the greatest part of the Griffons, the Dukedoms of Schwaben and Bavaria on this side the Danow, and part of the County of Tyrol, and not a few of the Cantons of Switzerland. Subdued by Drusus and Tiberius Nero, Sons in law of Augustus, they were made a Province of the Romans; divided into Rhaetia prima, taking in all the Countries from the Rhene to the Leck, or Lyens; and Rhaetia secunda, lying betwixt the Leck and the River Imn, which by another name was called Vindelicia. By which account all Schwaben on the South side of the Danow was part of the Province of Rhaetia prima, continuing to till vanquished and subdued by the Almans in the time of Valentinian the third, Emperor of the Western parts. As for the Almans who succeeded in possession heretofore, they were originally some Tribes and Families of the Suevi, the most warlike Nation of the Germans, inhabiting upon the Banks of the River Albis; who jealous of Casars great Successes, brought against him 430000 fighting men, of which 80000 were slain, and many drowned. They used to stay at home and go to the War by turnsthey which stayed at home till the Land, to whom the rest returning brought the Spoil of the Enemies. But after this blow we hear little of them till the time of Caracalla the Son of Severus; during whose Reign, descending towards the Banks of the Rhene and the Danow, and mingling with other Nations as they passed along, they assumed first the name of Almans; either from that promiscuous mixture of all sorts of men, or (as I rather think) from Mannus the Son of Tuiscus, one of the great and national Gods of the Germans. And though they were well beaten by him at their first coming down, near the River Alanus, and afterwards more broken by Dioclesian, who slew at least 60000 of them at one time in Gaul; yet never left they to infect the Provinces of the Empire which lay nearest to them, till in the end following the tract of the Hinnis who had gone before them, and beaten down many of the Forts and Garrisons which were in their way, they made themselves Masters of Rhaetia prima, Germania prima, and part of Maxima Sequanorum, containing, besides the Countries spoken of before, Alsatia, and so much of the Lower Palatinate as lies on the French side of the Rhene. But quarrelling with the French, their next neighbours, (of whose growth and greatness they began to be very sensible) they were first vanquished by Clovis the first Christian King of the French in that great and memorable Fight at Zulp near Coleu, and afterwards made wholly subject to the Conqueror, who oppressed them with an heavy and lasting Servitude. About this time they returned again to their old name of Suevians, their Estate being erected into a Dukedom, called many times the Dukedom of Alman; and, when so called, divided into the Upper Alman, comprehending the Country of the Griffons, with some parts of Switzerland and Tyrol, and the Lower or the proper Alman, which contained the rest of the Estates of the ancient Almans, called for the most part by the name of the Dukedom of Suevia or Schwaben, and finally transmuting that name to this Province only, the best part thereof. These Dukes were at first officary only, removable at the will of the Emperor, and accountable to him; not seldom many at one time, especially whilst under the command of the French, some of them being Dukes of the Upper, and others of the lower Alman. So that there is no great certainty of their Succession, nor much care to be taken in searching after it; though otherwife men of great Authority and command in their several Times. The most remarkable amongst them was Rodolph, Earl of Reinfelden and Duke of Schwaben, (descended from the Earls of Habsburg) in the Reign of Henry the fourth, against whom he was chosen Emperor by the practice and procurement of Pope Hildebrand, but overcome and wounded at the Battel of Eysler, he died not long after of his wounds, with great repentance for rebelling against his Sovereign. After his death, some Provinces being dismembered from it, and other lesser Estates first erected out of it, it was made hereditary in the person of Frederick Baron of Hohenstauffen, firnamed the Ancient, by the munificence and bounty of the said Henry the Fourth, whose Daughter Agnes he had married. His Successors follow in this order.

The Dukes of SCHWABEN.

1. Frederick the Ancient, the first hereditary Duke of Schwaben.
2. Frederick with one eye, Son of Frederick the Ancient.
3. Frederick III. firnamed Barbarossa, Son of Frederick with one eye, Duke of Schwaben, and Emperor; he succeeded the Emperor Henry the fifth in the Dukedom of Francia, and left the same unto his Successors.
1190. 4. Frederick IV. second Son of Barbarossa; his elder Brother Henry succeeding in the Empire by the name of Henry the sixth.

5. Conrade

5. Conrade, Brother of Frederick the fourth.
6. Philip, Brother of Conrade, after the death of Henry the 6. elected Emperor.

1207 7. Frederick V. Son of Henry the sixth, elected Emperor by the name of Frederick the second, King of Naples and Sicily also in the right of his Mother.

1250 8. Conrade II. Son of Frederick the fifth, King of both Sicilies, and Emperor of Germany after the death of his Father; poisoned, as was supposed, by his base Brother Manfred, who succeeded in his Kingdom of Sicily.

1254 9. Conradine, the Son of Conrade, pursuing his Right unto the Kingdoms of Naples and Sicily, was overcome and taken prisoner by Charles of Anjou, Successor unto Manfred in those Estates, and by his command beheaded at Naples, anno 1268. After whose death (being the last of that powerful and Imperial Family) this vast Estate was brought unto a second dismembering, and divided amongst the Bishops, Princes and Free Cities heretofore, of which last there are more within the old Precincts of this Dukedom than in all Germany besides. So that beholding it in the first and second Dilapidation, we find many goodly Patrimonies and fair Estates (besides what belongeth to the Cities and Episcopal Sees) to have been raised out of the Ruines of this great Dukedom: that is to say, the Dukedoms of Zerigen and Wurtemberg, with the Marquisate of Baden, dismembered from it when conferred on Frederick of Hohenstauffen; the Earldoms of Fris, Hohenberg and Friburg, (besides a great improvement of the Earldom of Habsburg) advanced out of the second Ruine. How Wurtemberg and Baden shall be shewn hereafter. Here it is only to be noted, that the Family of Zerigen, possessed of almost all Brigow and a great part of Switzerland, owe their Original to Berthold, the Son of Gebriz, a younger Son of Conradine the 2. Earl of Habsburg. Which being extinguished after a Succession of seven Princes only in the person of Berthold the fifth, (who died the same day in which the Emperor Rodolph of Habsburg was born) anno 1218, the Rights heretofore defended on the Earls of Friburg, the principal City of that Country: Conrad, the first that bare the Title of Earl of Friburg, being the eldest Son of Judith, Sister and Heir of Berthold the last Duke of Zerigen. Eggon, the last Earl of which House, being overlaied by his undutiful and rebellious Subjects, fold his Estate therein for 12000 Ducats to Albert and Leopold Dukes of Austria, Sons of Albert the Short, whose Successors enjoy all Brigow to this very day.

The Arms of Schwaben were Argent, 3 Leopards Sable, as is said by Bara: But Paradise will have them to be three Leopards Sable, crowned Gules, in a Field Or.

7. BAVARIA.

BAVARIA is bounded on the East with Austria, on the West with the River Leck or Lyens, which parts it from Schwaben, on the North with Northgoia, or the upper Palatinate, and on the South with the Earldom of Tyrol and Carinthia. It containeth the whole Province of Rhaetia secunda, and so much of Noricum mediterraneum as now maketh up the Bishoprick of Saltzburg, and by a distinct name was called Vindelicia, as being the ancient habitation of the Vindelici; so named from the two Rivers of Vindis and Lyens, (now the Werd and the Leck) upon which they lived. According whereunto it is thus verified by a German Poet.

*Refpiciit & Læt fluvios Vindimique Licuque
Affluentes Undas, & nomina Litoris, inde
Antiquum Genem, populumque, Urbemque vocavit Vindelicam.*

In English thus:
Vindis and Lyens, Floods of noted Fanie,
He next beholds, mingling their Streams and Name;
To which the old Vindelici do down
The name of both their Nation and their Town.

Meaning by their Town, as I conceive, Augusta Vindelicorum, their Metropolis or Capital City. But after such time as the Baii or Boiarians had driven out the Romans, and got possession of this Country, the name of Vindelicia and Rhaetia secunda grew into disuse, that of Boiaria succeeding in the place thereof, mollified or corrupted into Bavaria, the present name of the Country amongst the Latines; but by the Dutch called Bayern, by the French Bavoy.

The whole is divided into three parts: the Higher, lying towards the Alps of Tyrol, the Lower, extending all along the banks of the Danow; and the District of Saltzburg, situate betwixt the Imn and the Dukedom of Austria: all three much over-spread with Woods and Forests, remainders of the Hermycan Forest described before. But more particularly the Higher, lying towards the Alps, is cold and barren, affording no Vines, and but little Corn: the Lower being more fruitful, and better planted, for some parts (especially about Reyepfurg and Landshut) inferior unto none in Germany for Richness and pleasantness of the situation. Of the District of Saltzburg we shall speak by it self, because by some not reckoned as a part heretofore. In all there is great quantity of Fewel for the fire, and of Timber for Building; no less of Swine fatted in the Woods, and sent away by numerous Herds into other Countries.

The Christian Faith was first preached here amongst the Boiarians by Rupertus Bishop of Wormes, driven from his See by Childbert King of the French, anno 549, or thereabouts, and here made the first Bishop of Saltzburg; corrupted at this time with the Leaven of the Church of Rome, to which this Country (setting aside the Imperial Cities) is more entirely devoted than any other in all Germany.

Principal Cities in the HIGHER are 1. Munichen, (in Latine Monachium) the Duke's Seat, seated on the Isar, or Isara, in a very sweet and delightful Soil, among Ponds and Groves, daintily interlaced with pretty Riverlets, and enriched with many excellent Gardens; that of the Duke being hardly to be paralleled in all this Continent: first founded by Henry Duke heretofore in the time of Orto the first, anno 972, now grown a large and populous City: the publick Buildings, as Churches, Towers, Libraries, the Senate-House, or Consulthall, and common Market-place, of such excellent Structure, that they serve not only for Life and Ornament, but for Admiration. Amongst them none is more eminent than the Library in the Ducal Palace, wherein are conceived to be 1. 000 Volumes, the most part of them Manuscripts. A Town made choice of by Maximilian, the now Duke of Bavaria, to be the receptacle of the Spoils got by him in the Wars of Germany: here being found (at such time as the Town was taken by the King of Sweden) 140 Brass Pieces (besides other great Guns) hidden under the ground, one of the which was charged, instead of Powder and Shot, with 30000 Crowns in Gold. 2. Landshut, upon the Leck or Lyens, near the Alps of Tyrol: once of great strength, because a Frontier towards Schwaben, but proving a dangerous neighbor to the Swedish Garrison planted in these parts, during that War against the Duke of Bavaria, was by them taken and dismantled, and is now an open Village only. 3. Martenswald, now a place of no note or beauty, heretofore the hinterland of Prohm, seated near the Apf. 4. Freidberg, well fortified by Duke Ludowick or Lewis the second, for a Bulwark against those of Angsborg. 5. Here stood also the old Castle of Scheyr, built by Arnolph 2. Son of Arnolph the first, Duke of Bavaria, the Seat and honorary Title of his Posterity, (Dynasty Scheyrensis in the Latine) till Orbo of Wittelsbach, by the favour of Frederick Barbarossa and his own good fortune did attain that Dukedom.

In the LOWER Bavaria there first offers it self to consideration the Town of Rain, seated on the Leck, not far from the fall thereof into the Danow; memorable for the Skirmish near to it betwixt the Swedish Forces over that River, in the first passing of the Swedish Forces over that River, in which John Earl of Tilly, so famous for his long and fortunate Conduct of the Imperial Armies, received his death's wound, of which he died at Ingolstadt within few weeks after. 2. Newburg upon the Danow, not far from Rain; the first Town of Bavaria taken in by the Swedes after the first defeat of Tilly. 3. Ingolstadt, said to be built by a Tribe or Nation of the Sueves called Angeli, and thence called Angelstadtium or Angelsstade; first made a City by Ludowick of Bavaria Duke and Emperour, and in the year 1410 made a University, much privileged by Duke Lewis or Ludowick the fifth, and Pope Pius the second. A Town so strongly fortified both by Art and Nature, that it seems impregnable, and indeed proved so to Gustavus the late King of Sweden, who here found the first check to his prosperous Fortunes, being forced to raise his Siege without endangering it, and find work elsewhere. 4. Regensburg, (in Latine, Ratisbona) on the Danow also, where it receives the River Regen, whence it hath its name: built in the place of Tiberina, or Augusta Tiberii, so called a Colony brought hither by Tiberius Cæsar about the time of our Saviours Passion, afterwards called Rhatopolis, or the City of the Rhatians, the chief of Rhetia secunda. At this time it is a fair, rich, and populous City, beautified with an infinite number of Churches and Religious Houses: anciently an Episcopal See, and of late made the ordinary place for the fepical Diet of the Empire. In former times it was the general Diet of the Empire. In former times it was the Seat of the Kings and first Dukes of Bavaria, then made Imperial, at the least in name, it was seized on unexpectedly by the now Duke of Bavaria, when the Swedes first got footing within his Dominions; held by him with a very strong Garrison, after the loss of Munich his chief place of Residence, till at last won from him by the Swedes, anno 1633. 5. Paffaw, by the modern Latins Pavia; but by some thought to be the Baidurum of Prohm, then a Roman Garrison, seated on the Danow, where it meeteth with the Im and the Ilz; by which it is divided into three Towns, Paffaw, Insbad, and Ilfsbad, the whole Complum being a fair, rich, and well traded City: a See Episcopal, and subject immediately to the Bishop as chief Lord thereof, who hath his dwelling in the Castle of Oberhausen, adjoining to that part thereof which is called Ilfsbad. A place remarkable for many Meetings and Consultations of the German Princes, especially for that of the year 1552, in which, all former Quarrels being laid aside, the Protestants were first permitted the free Exercise of their Religion, by the consent and Edit of Charles the fifth, who had most laboured to suppress it. More in the land is 6. Frisling, on the swelling of a fine round Hill near the River Ambr, which runs beneath it, called anciently Fraxinum; conceived to be built by some of the Presidents or Lieutenants for the Roman Emperours; honoured with an Episcopal See about the year 710. One of the Bishops whereof, commonly called Orbo Frisingensis, was the best Historian of his time. 7. Landshut, upon the River of Iser, in the richest and most pleasant Country of all Bavaria; a beautiful and well built City, the work of Lewis Duke thereof, in the year 1208, adorned with a Church of most curious building for the service of God, and a magnificent Palace for the use of the Duke. 8. Freistadt, the only Imperial Town, (except Regensburg) in all this Dukedom. The whole number of Cities and great Towns in that Bavaria's is supposed to be 80; that is to say, 34 Cities, and 46 great Towns of which these are the principal.

The Bishoprick or Diocesis of SALTZBURG, being the third part of Bayeren or Bavaria, (according to our former division of it) extendeth from the Im or Oenus towards the Confines of Austria. The Soil hereof is rocky, dry, and barren, excepting some few Valleys only, as seated in the middle of the Tulian Alps, the habitation heretofore of the Norici mediterranei, of whom more hereafter. The principal Town hereof is Saltzburg, seated upon the River Saltzach, whence it had the name; raised out of the Ruins of Juvavia, placed hereabouts by Antoninus, the Station of a Cohort of Roman Soldiers belonging to the First Legion. An Alpine City, strongly situate among the Mountains; but no less beautiful than many of the lower grounds. The Royal Seat of some of the Bavarian Kings, after of the Archbishops hereof, the most powerful Prelates for Revenue or Jurisdiction any in Germany. The See was first fixed here by Kupernus or Ruberius, the first Apostle of these parts, spoken of before; whose Image or Impres is stamped to this day on the Coins of this Bishoprick. At the time when Luther first endeavoured a Reformation, Cardinal Matthæus Langius was Bishop here, who did ingenuously confess, that the Mals did not want his faults; that the Court of Rome was much corrupted, and the lives of Priests and Friers fit to be reformed: sed quod misissimum Monachus omnia reformet, id non esse tolerabile; but that such a sorry fellow as Luther should attempt the work, was by no means to be endured. 2. Newkirch, on the same River, near the head thereof. 3. Rotenburg, on the East-side of the Im, bordering on Bavaria. 4. Traunstein, upon the Traun, rising out of the Lakes. 5. Wildshut, one of the farthest Northwards, and 6. Bischofsstett, one of the most Southern in all this Tract.

The first Inhabitants of Bavaria (excluding the Diocesis of Saltzburg) were the Vindelici, as aforesaid: a people so resolutely bent to maintain their Freedom against the incroachment of the Romans, that when Drausus, the Son in Law of Augustus, and Father of Germanicus Cæsar, made War upon them, the very Women thereof took the Alarm; & desiderium telis, Infantes in ora militum adversa miserunt, and when their Darts were spent threw the young Infants (saith the Historian) at the heads of the Romans. After them, in the declining of the Empire, succeeded the Boiarians, some of the many Tribes of the Bois, the most diffused and multitudinous Nation of Gaul and Germany. Originally they were of Gaul, inhabiting the Dukedom of Narbon, from whence some of them passed with the Senones and other of the Gauls to the farther side of the Alps (in respect of them) where they took up the Country between the Appennine and the Po. Wearied with many Bickerings, at last with sharp and bitter Wars against the Romans, and by them deprived of half their Country, some of them passed into Germany, and mingled themselves with the Taurisci, then dwelling in those parts which we now call Saxony: or others advancing further, thrust themselves into the Norici (of whom more anon,) and some retired themselves into the flietters and last places of the Hercynian Forest

Forest. Driven from this last by the Marcomanni, they fell into the Countries of the Hernanduri and Norici, (now the Upper Palatinate) who, mingled into one Nation with them, took the name of Boiarians, and were by that name first known in the time of Clevis the 5. King of the French; by whose persuasion, in the 17 year of Augustus Emperour of the East, they passed over the Danow, and possessed themselves of Vindelicia, or the second Rhetia, with some part of Noricum, to which they gave the name of Boiaria, as before was signified. They were governed first by Kings, (as all Nations were) of whom we meet with none but Adigerius, (and he the last of that Race) slain fighting on the side of the Almans against the French, at the great Battle of Zulp near Oden. After which they were made subject to the Conquerors, as their neighbours and Confederates the Almans were, but suffered to live under the command and Government of their own Princes, by the name of Dukes. Of these, from Theodo the Son of Adigerius to Tassilo the last Duke, outed of his Estate and Honours by Charles the Great, for conspiring with the Lombards against him, are reckoned 15 Dukes in all; whose names (for there remaineth little of them but the empty names) we shall subjoin in the ensuing Catalogue of the

Dukes of the BOIARIANS.

- 493 1. Theodo, Son of Adigerius the last King; from whose younger Brother Uilo descended Pepin the Father of Charles the Great.
- 511 2. Theodo II. surnamed the Great.
- 537 3. Theodebert.
4. Theodo III. the first Christian Prince of the Boiarians.
- 565 5. Tassilo, Son of Theodebert.
- 598 6. Garibaldus.
- 612 7. Theodo IV.
- 630 8. Theodo II.
- 650 9. Theodo V.
10. Theodebert II.
11. Theodo VI. Son of Grimoldus, the Brother of Theodebert the second.
- 708 12. Grimold.
13. Hugobert, Brother of Grimold.
- 735 14. Uilo.
- 765 15. Tassilo III. the last Duke of the Boiarians, of whom more anon.

Amongst these, few were of any note but 1. Theodo the first, Son of Adigerius, who abandoning the name of King, became less pleasing to the French, who had newly conquered them, assumed that of Duke, and passing over the Danow, extorted the whole Province of Rhetia secunda, with part of Noricum from the Romans, anno 508, or thereabouts. 2. Theodo the second, named the great, for his great and many Victories against the Romans, whom he outed of all Noricum and Vindelicia, and whatsoever they held on the Dutch side of the Alps. 3. Theodo the third of that name, and the fourth in number of the Dukes, converted with his people to the Christian Faith by the preaching of Rupertus before mentioned, anno 580. 4. Tassilo the third of that name, and the last of their Dukes of the Race of Adigerius, or of the old Boiarian blood; who being deposed by Charles the Great, the whole Country became immediately subject to the French, governed at first by their Lieutenants. Disinherited from the French Empire by Lewis the Godly, it was made a Kingdom, (Pannonia being added and united to it) by whom it was conferred on Lotharius his eldest Son, who was afterwards Emperour of the Romans: after his death possessed by the Kings of Germany, but as a distinct Kingdom both in name and Title, till the decease of Levis the Son of Arnolph, the last of the direct Line of Charles the Great. He being dead, and the Boiarians loth to be made a subject Province to the Kingdom of Germany, one Arnolph of the Ilse of the said Charles, with the general liking of the Boiarians, took upon himself the Title of King; but being opposed therein by Conrad the Brother of Lewis, Emperour and King of Germany, and also by Henry the first who succeeded, he changed the Title of King into that of Duke: the Founder of the present House of

The Dukes of BAVARIA.

1. Arnolph, of the House of Charles the Great, first Duke of Bavaria.
2. Eberhard, Son of Arnolph, deposed by Orbo the first.
3. Berchbold, the Brother of Arnolph, confirmed in the Estate by the said Emperour Orbo. After whose death it was conferred on Henry the Brother of Orbo the 1. who had married Judith, Daughter of Arnolph the first Duke, and Sister to Eberhard.
4. Henry, Brother of Orbo the first, surnamed Rixofus, or the Quarrelsome.
5. Henry II. Son of the former Henry, surnamed Hezelo.
6. Henry III. surnamed the Saint, Son of Henry the 2. the first Emperour who came in by Election, according to the Order made by Pope Gregory the 5. After whose coming to the Empire this Dukedom was transferred for 14 Successions from one great Family to another, according to the power and pleasure of the present Emperour, in manner following.
7. Henry IV. surnamed Hezzel, Brother to Cimigund, the renowned Wife of Henry the Saint; by whom he was preferred to this Dukedom, and by him deposed.
8. Henry Guelfo, Son of Robert Earl of Altors in Schweben, (of the strange Original of which Family we shall speak in Brinwick) made Duke by the Emperour Conrad the 2.
9. Guelfo, Son of Henry Guelfo, or Henry the 5.
10. Ernulf, created Duke hereof by the same Conrad the 2. and by him deposed again for conspiring against him.
11. Henry VI.
12. Cmo, accused of Conspiracy, and displaced by Henry the 3. to make room for
13. Henry VII. Son of the said Emperour Henry the 3. whom he succeeded in the Empire by the name of Henry the 4.
14. Agnes, the Mother of the said Henry the 4. by the gift of her Son.
15. Orbo, by the gift of the Emperors Agnes, deposed not long after by Henry the 4.
16. Welfo III. Son of Coniza, the Daughter of Guelfo the 2. by Azon an Italian Marquis made Duke hereof by the said Emperour Henry the 4.
17. Welfo IV. Son to Leopold 3.
18. Henry VIII. surnamed the Proud, Brother of Guelfo the 4. by the Marriage of Gertrude Daughter of Lotharius the second, Duke of Saxony also. Deprived of both by the Emperour Conrad the 3.
19. Leopold, Son to Leopold the 4. Marquis of Austria, B b b

- Austria*, made Duke by the said Conrad the 3.
20. Henry IX. Brother of Leopold, after Marquess, at last Duke of Austria.
21. Henry X. surnamed the Lion, Son of Henry the Proud, restored by the Arbitrement of Frederick Barbarossa, (the Duke of Austria being otherwise satisfied) by whom he was not long after proscribed, and deprived of both his Dukedoms. After which this Estate became fixed and settled in the person and posterity of
- 1180 22. Otto of Wittelsbach, so called from the place of his birth or dwelling, descended lineally from Arnulph the Lord of Scheyre in the Upper Bavaria, and 2. Son of Arnulph the first Duke hereof; advanced unto his honour by Frederick Barbarossa, sensible of the too great power of the former Dukes: the whole extent of this Estate being reduced by this time to the limits of the modern Bavaria, and the Palatinate of Northeim.
- 1181 23. Ludowick, or Lewis Son of Otto.
- 1231 24. Otto II. Son of Lewis, who, by marrying Gertrude, the sole Daughter of Henry Count Palatine of the Rhene, brought the Electoral Dignity into the House of Bavaria.
- 1290 25. Henry, Duke of Bavaria and Count Palatine of the Rhene, the Son of Otto 2.
- 1294 26. Ludowick, or Lewis II. Brother of Henry Duke of Bavaria, and Elektor Palatine of the Rhene.
- 1312 27. Ludowick, or Lewis III. second Son of Lewis the 2. succeeded in the Dukedom of Bavaria; Redolph, the eldest Son, succeeding in both Palatinates and the Electoral Dignity. He was afterwards elected and crowned Emperor, known commonly by the name of Ludowick Bavaria.
- 1347 28. Stephen, the eldest Son of Ludowick the Emperor; William and Albert, his two Brethren, successively enjoyed the Earldoms of Hainault, Holland, &c. in right of their Mother.
- 1375 29. Stephen II. Son of Stephen the first; his Brothers, Frederick and John, sharing with him parts of the Estate.
- 1413 30. Ludowick II. surnamed Barbatus, deposed and imprisoned by his own Son Ludowick, who yet died before him without issue.
- 1447 31. Henry II. Son of Frederick, the second Brother of Stephen the 2. succeeded on the death of Ludowick Barbatus.
- 1450 32. Ludowick V. surnamed the Rich, the Son of Henry the 2. banished the Jews out of his Estates and seized their goods.
- 1479 33. George, surnamed the Rich also, the Founder of the University of Innsbruck; whose sole Daughter and Heir was married to Rupertus Prince Elektor Palatine, with the Dukedom of Bavaria for her Dowry. But Maximilian the Emperor, not liking so much greatness in the German Princes, confirmed the same on
- 1503 34. Albert III. Son of a former Albert, Nephew of John Munich by his Son Ernestus: which John was youngest Brother to Stephen the 2. who by the power and favour of Maximilian the Emperor succeeded unto George the Rich: the cause of a long and unhappy War betwixt the Electors of the Rhene and Dukes of Bavaria; the worst whereof, besides the loss of this Estate, fell upon the Palatinates, proscribed and outed of their Country upon this quarrel; but, upon their Submission, restored again.
- 1508 35. William, the Son of Albert the 3.
- 1577 36. Albert IV. a great Champion of the Doctrines and Traditions of the Church of Rome; and so extremely affected unto the Jesuits, that he built Colleges for them at Landsberg, Innsbruck and Munich, his three principal Towns.
- 1579 37. William II. Son of Albert the 4. as zealous as his Father in the cause of the Church of Rome; therein exceeded very much by 38. Maximilian, eldest Son of William the 2. who chiefly out of the same zeal sided with Ferdinand the 2. in the Wars of Germany, anno 1620, and took upon him the conduct of the Armies of the said Emperor against Frederick Count and Elektor Palatine, chieftain King of Bohemia: in which having done great service to the Imperial and Romish Interest, he was by the said Ferdinand invested in the Upper Palatinate, called anciently (but not more properly than now) the Palatinate of Bavaria, together with the Electoral Dignity. This last was conferred at first upon him but for term of life in the Diet at Regensburg, 1623. the Electors of Mentz, Savoy and Brandenburg then protesting against it; but afterwards, in the Diet at Prague, anno 1628. conferred upon him and his Heirs for ever, to the great prejudice of the Princes of the Palatine Family, who by reason of their simultaneous Investiture with the first of their House, are not to be deprived of their Estates and Dignities for the offence of their Fathers; the punishment not being to extend beyond the person of the offender. But notwithstanding their Pretensions and Allegations, the Duke is still possessed of the Title and Dignity, and confirmed therein by the Conclusions of the Treaty of Munster, and a new Electorate being to be erected for the Palatine Princes.
- The Arms of this Duke are Lozenges of 21 pieces in Bend, Argent and Azure.

8. The Archdukedom of AUSTRIA.

THE Archdukedom of AUSTRIA, reckoning in the incorporate Provinces and the Members of it, is bounded on the East with Hungary and part of Sclavonia on the West with Bavaria, and some parts of the Switzers and the Grifons, on the North with Bohemia and Moravia, and on the South with Illyria and some part of Friuli in Italy. Within which circuit are contained the several Provinces of Austria properly so called, Siria, Carinthia, Carniola, and Tyrol. The quality of the whole will be best discerned by the Survey of particulars.

The ancient Inhabitants of the whole were the Norici of the Romans, parted into the lesser Tribes of the Severci, Alamii, Ambisanti, Ambilici, and Ambidani; subdued by Drusus, Son-in-law to Augustus Caesar, and made a Province of the Empire. After by Constantine the Great divided into Noricum Mediterraneum, comprehending the Countries of Carinthia, Carniola, Stiria, and some parts of Tyrol, with the Bithoprick or District of Salzburg; of which Salva was the Metropolis or Capital City; and Noricum Ripense, containing only Austria, and those parts of Bavaria which lie Eastward of the River Inn; extended all along on the Banks of the Danow. It was known by no other names while possessed by the Romans; from whom being conquered by the Avars and other Nations, it gained those several names and appellations specified before.

1. AUSTRIA properly so called hath on the East the Kingdom of Hungary, on the West Bavaria, on the North the Bohemian Mountains towards the West, and on the other side the Tyrie, which separates it from Moravia, on the South Stiria, or Siermark. It is called by the

the Dutch Ostreich, and contractedly Ofrich, that is to say, the Eastern Kingdom, (a part assuming to it self the name of the whole) this being the extreme Province of East-France, or the Eastern Kingdom of the French, in the barbarous Latine of those times called by the name of Austrasia, whence the modern Austria.

The Air is generally very healthy, and the Earth as fruitful, yielding a plentiful increase without help of Compost or other Soiling, and of so ease a Tillage to the Husbandman, that on the North side of the Danow it is ploughed and managed by one Horse only. Exceeding plentiful it is of Grain, and abundant in Wine, with which last it supplieth the defects of Bavaria; it hath great store of Saffron, some provision of Salt; and at the foot of the Mountains, not far from Hainburg, some Ginger also. Nor wants it Mines of Silver in a large proportion. It is divided by the River Danow into the Lower, and the Higher: that lying on the North side of the River, towards Bohemia and Moravia; this on the South side, towards Siermark.

Places of most importance in the HIGHER AUSTRIA are, 1. Gmund seated on a Lake called Gmunder-See, bordering on Bavaria, at the Efflux of the River Drain, which ariseth out of it. 2. Linz, seated on the Confluence of the said Drain with the famous Danow; the Arcade of Ptolomy a Town before the late Wars almost wholly Protestant; but then being put into the hands of the Duke of Bavaria, began to warp a little to the other side. 3. Walgensein, on the Ens or Anisus, near the borders of Siermark. 4. Enz, on the fall of that River into the Danow, raised out of the Ruines of Laureacum sometimes the Metropolis of Noricum Ripense, the Station at that time of the 2. Legion; afterwards an Arch-bishop's See, made such in the first planting of Christianity amongst this people by S. Severine. An. 464. On the Reviver whereof (suppressed by the Huns, Bovarians, and others of the barbarous Nations) by the diligence and preaching of S. Rupertus, the Metropolitain dignity was fixt at Salzburg. 5. Weidobrunn, near the head of the River Isar. 6. Ips, seated at the Influx of that River, and from thence denominated; the Gespantium of Ptolomy and other Ancients. 7. Newfalle, on a great Lake so named. 8. Wels, on the main stream of the Danubius. 9. Hainburg, on the Confluence thereof, and the River Markh. Near to which, at the foot of the Mountains now called Hainburgberg, (from the Town adjoining) but antiently named Mons Cognatus, is some store of Ginger: a wonderful great rarity for these colder Countries. 10. Newstat, first called so from the newness of it, being built of late. 11. Vienna, by the Dutch, Wien, the principal of all these parts, by Ptolomy called Julubona, Vindobona, by Antoine; the Station in their times of the tenth Roman Legion; of whose being settled here there are many Monuments both within the City and without. Seated it is on the banks of Danubius, well built, both in regard of private and publick Edifices; each private house having such store of Cellarage for all occasions, that as much of the City seems to be under the ground as is above it. The Streets for the most part are spacious, and all paved with Stone, which makes them very clean and sweet in the midst of Winter. It is fenced with a mighty Wall, deep and precipitous Ditches on all parts of it, and many Bulwarks, Towers and Ramparts in all needful places. The Walls hereof were first raised with some part of the money paid into Leopold Duke of Austria, for the ransom of K. Richard the first of England, taken Prisoner by him as he passed homewards through this Country from the Holy Land: Erected to this day the strongest hold of Christendom against the Turks; and proved experimentally so to be in that most notable and famous Repulse here given them anno 1520. at what time 200000 of them, under the conduct of Solymann the Magnificent, besieged this City; but by the valour of Frederick the second, Elektor Palatine of the Rhene, and other German Princes, were gallantly re-lifted and compelled to retire, with the loss of 80000 Soldiers. Nor doth the strength hereof so diminish the Beauties of it, but that it is one of the goodliest Towns in all the Empire; the Residence for these last Ages of the Emperours: made an University by the Emperor Frederick the second; revived and much advanced by Albert Duke of Austria, anno 1356. adorned with an Episcopal See, many magnificent Temples and stately Monasteries: but above all, with a most sumptuous and Princely Palace, wherein the Arch-dukes and Emperours use to keep their Courts; Built by Ottocar, King of Bohemia during the little time he was Duke of Austria. In the middle Ages, as appears by Otto Frisingensis, it was called Fabiana: but being ruined by the Huns, and again re-edified, was first called Biana, (the first syllable omitted by mistake or negligence) from whence the Dutch Wien, and the Latine Vienna.

We should now take a view of the Towns and Cities in the LOWER AUSTRIA; if there were any in it which were worth the looking after. The Country having never been in the hands of the Romans, hath no Town of any great Antiquity; nor many new ones built or beautified by the Austrian Princes, (since it came into their possession) the only one of note being Cremis, or Cromis, on the left-hand shore of Danubius, going down the waters. 2. Rezz, on the River Tyze, bordering on Moravia; and 3. Friesburg, at the foot of the Mountains on the skirts of Bohemia.

2. STIRIA, or STIERMARK, is bounded on the North with Austria, on the South with Carniola on the East with Hungary, and on the West with Carinthia; extendeth in length 110 miles, but in breadth not above 60, or thereabout. For the most part mountainous and barren, as being overpread with the Spurs and branches of the Alps, and rich only in Minerals. The reason of the name we shall have anon.

Towns of most consequence are, 1. Gratz, seated upon the River Mur, and the chief of the Province, from which the third Branch of the House of Austria (since the time of Ferdinand the first) was called of Gratz, and had the Government of the Country for their part of that Patrimony. A Town once full of Protestants, and those so strong, that they could neither be forced out, nor hindered from the free exercise of their Religion, till the year 1598. in which Margaret the late Queen of Spain, Sister to the Archduke Ferdinand of Gratz, was by the Citizens solemnly entertained; with whom entered so many Sculdiers, that the City was taken, and 14 Ministers of the Reformed Religion presently banished. 2. Rachelpurg, and 3. Pruck both situate also on the Mur. 4. Stechan, an Episcopal See, seated on the Dra or Dravus, a well known River, not far from the fall of the Mur into it. 5. Petaw, the Pavonia of Antoninus, seated somewhat higher upon the Dravus. 6. Lambach, the Ovilavie of Antoninus, on the Creys also. 7. Pottspurg, upon the River Kainach. 8. Celau, the Celvia of Pliny, of great antiquity, as appears by many Roman Inscriptions and other evident signs of Age which are upon it; for this cause thought by some to be that Celvia, or built at least out of the Ruines of it, which Ptolomy placeth in this Tract. It is situate on the River Savus, and hath a large jurisdiction over the adjoining Countries. 9. Cunifus, seated in a Marsh on the edge of this Country: a place of great strength both by art and nature; once one of the strongest Bulwarks against the Turks in all these parts, and a great eye-sore to them for many years; but taken by them at last anno 1600, and never since regained by the Princes of the House of

The whole Country being mountainous and hilly, generally over-spread with the spurs and branches of the neighbouring Alps, and rich only in Minerals, as before was said, was anciently the Inhabitation of the Taurisci, (part of the Norici) from whom it took the name of Stiermark, the German calling that a Stier which the Latins call Taurus, or a little Bullock. By which account Stiermark is nothing but the Borders or Marches of the Taurisci, the utmost Bounds of their possessions; as indeed it was. Laid to Pannonia in the distribution of the Roman Provinces, it was called Valeria, in honour of Valeria the Daughter of Dioclesian. But once dismembered from the Empire, it fell into the name of Stiermark, with reference to the Taurisci spoken of before. First made an Earldom in the person of one Ottacarus, advanced upon that Honour by the Emperor Conrad the 2. Leopold the 4. from this Ottacarus (two other Ottacari intervening) was made Marquess of Stiermark; and his Son, Ottacarus the 4. was made Duke hereof by the Emperor Friedrich Barbarossa. But being without hope of issue, and infected with the incurable distemper of the Leprosy, he sold his Country to Leopold the fifth of Austria; who bought it with some part of that vast sum of money which he extorted for the Ransom of King Richard the first. It hath continued ever since in the possession of this potent Family, but so, that it hath many times been assigned over for the Portion of the younger Brethren: as, namely, to Leopold the ninth of that name, one of the younger Sons of Albert the Short; Ernst the youngest Son of that Leopold; and lastly, to Charles the youngest Son of Ferdinand the first, called Charles of Graz, Father of Ferdinand the Second, Successor to Matthias in Austria it fell and all the rest of the Estates incorporate with it: not like hereafter to be so impolitically dismembered from the chief of the House, as in former times.

3. CARINTHIA, by the Dutch called Karnten, is bounded on the East with Stiermark and the River Lavand, on the West with the District of Salzburg and the River Saltzach, on the North with Austria it self, and on the South with Carniola, and the River Dravum, which having its original in the skirts hereof, passeth through these Austrian Provinces into Hungary, and falls at last into the Danub. The Country, being situate in the north part of the Alps, is generally poor and barren, except only in Minerals; extending all along the Dravum for the length of 100 English miles, and 47 in breadth, betwixt that River and the Mur, by which it is bounded.

Places of principal note in it are, 1. S. Veit, or Santi Viti, the chief Town of the Country, situate at the meeting of the Glan and the Winnies, two small Rivers adorned with a spacious Market-place and a beautiful Conduit. 2. Villach, seated on the Dravum, in a pleasant Valley encompassed about with Rocks, the Houses thereof adorned on the out-side with painted Stories, very delightful to behold. 3. Gurck, a small Town, but an Episcopal See. 4. Clagenfurt, on the Lake called Wera-See, a well-fenced place, called antiently by the name of Claudia. 5. Wolfsberg, upon the Lavand, so near to Stiermark, that it is by some reckoned for a Town thereof. 6. Luvamund, on the same River an Episcopal See, situate at the influx of that River into the Dravum. 7. Freisach, a Town of much antiquity, seated on the Gleza. 8. Spital, &c. The Story and Succession of the Dukes hereof, before the uniting of it to the House of Austria (this Province and Carniola making but one Estate between them) we shall see anon.

4. CARNIOLA, by the Dutch called Krain, is environed with Sclavonia East, Friuli West, Carinthia and part of Stiermark North, and Isria South. It is in length from East to West, (extended along the River Savus) 120 Italian miles, and about 76 in breadth. The Alps here being lower and less cold and rocky than more towards the West, maketh it to be the more rich both in Corn and Wine, and other the productions of nature, than it would be otherwise.

The chief Towns are, 1. Newmarkt, 2. Efing, 3. Marburg, 4. Pogonetz, and 5. Saxofcell, all upon the Savus, which, arising in this Country, runneth through the very middle of it, and after falling into the Danub. 6. Laiabach, seated on a small River of the same name; by Pliny called Pannortus, but by Pliny Nannortus, famous in old Mythology for the transport of the Ship called Argo, wherein Jafon and his Comrades brought the Golden Fleece: who coming out of Pontus, or the Enxine Sea, took their course up the Danub, so into the Savus then into this Town; hence carried their Ship over land into the Adriatick, and from thence sailed into Greece, where they first began the undertaking. 7. Goritz, called antiently Norica, or seated in the place where Norica stood, is situate on the River Lijfzeta, an Italian water, which not far off falleth into the Adriatick. A Town of so much note, that antiently it was an Earldom, and in the division of the Estate of Mainard Earl of Tyrol, (to whom it formerly belonged) was given to Albert his second Son, with the Stile and Title of Earl of Goritz; continuing in his House till the year 1500, when on the death of Leonard the last Earl hereof, it descended upon Maximilian the first, as next heir unto it; whose Successors, not only in the Estates of Austria, but the Empire also, do still retain the Title of Earls of Goritz in their usual Stile.

The first Inhabitants of both these Province of Krain and Karnten, were the Carni of Pliny and other Antients, who made them part of Ventia, the Tenth Legion of Italy; but afterwards, in the distribution of the Roman Provinces, they were cast into Noricum and made a Member of the Diocese of the Victern Ilyricum, but subject or subordinate rather, to the Presbiter Prætor of Italy. From them not only the Alps adjoining had the name of Carnice, but these two Countries had the names by which now they go. They were united a long time in the persons of the Dukes of Karnten, of whom the first mentioned upon good Record was Henry, Son to Berchbold, a Nobleman of Karavaria, in the time of the Emperor Orto the third, by him advanced upon this Honour and Estate; disposed of in succeeding times at the Will of the Emperours, and given from one Family unto another, as their families served them; not fixed in any House till it came to Henry the Son of Engelbert, President or Prætor of Isria: in which Family it continued under this Henry, and his Brother Engelbert, Ulric the first, Henry the second, Herman, and Ulric the second, the last Prince hereof, who by his Marriage with Agnes, Sister and Heir of Orto the second, Duke of Moravia, added that Estate to his former Patrimony. But being old, and without Children, he sold his whole Estate to Ottacarus, King of Bohemia and Duke of Austria; by whom these Countries were surrendered unto Rodolphus of Halsburg, on the conclusion of the Peace which was made between them. And although Rodolphus gave Carinthia to Mainard Earl of Tyrol (in right of whose Daughter, Elizabeth Albert the Son of Rodolph was possessed of Austria;) yet on the death of Henry the Son of Mainard without issue-male, it fell (according to the Contract) unto Albert the Short, younger Son of Albert, and Grandchild of Rodolphus, continuing ever since in that Family, though not always in the chief House of the Dukes of Austria.

The strange and observable Ceremonies with which the Archdukes of Austria are acknowledged Dukes of Carin- Carinthia take here out of Munster. In the Meadows adjoining to the Town of S. Veit a certain Country-man, to whom that Office by inheritance belonged, sitteth on a Marble-stone there being, holding in his right hand a Cow with a black Calf, and in his left hand a Mare as lean as a Rake. Then cometh the new Duke attired in a plain rustic Habit, his Courtiers attending him in their richest Apparel: at whose approach the Country-man above mentioned demandeth, What is he that so unjustly cometh hitherward? And the people answer, that it is the future Duke. He again asketh, whether he be a just Judge, and one that will maintain the liberty of the Country, and sincerity of the Religion. The people answer, He will. Then he asketh, by what right he will displace him of his Marble-Seat. To whom the Steward of the new Duke's House replieth, He shall give thee 60 pence in Silver, the Cattel now standing by thee, the Clothes which he hath at this time on, and thy House shall ever be free from Tax and Tribute. The fellow upon this taking the Duke by the hand, and bidding him to be a good Prince, giveth him a gentle cuff on the ear, setteth him on the Marble-stone, and taking away the Cattel departeth. This done the new Duke goeth to S. Veit's Church and having done his Devotions, putteth of his rustic weeds, and dresseth himself in Clothes befitting a Prince: for such after their Ceremonies he is acknowledged.

The Arms of these Dukes were Argent; 3 Lions Leopards Sable.

4. TYROL is bounded on the East with Friuli and Marca Trivigiana, by the interposing of which or some parts thereof, disjoined from Carniola: on the West with the Grifons and some part of Switzerland, and on the North with Bavaria, and on the South with Lombardy. It is extended over the greatest parts of the Alps Rhætica, and some part of the Julia; yet intermixt with many rich and fruitful Vallies, those especially which lie on the banks of the Inn and the River of Adige. Nor are the Hills so void of store unto the Inhabitants, but that they afford good profit of Metals digged out of them, especially of Brass and Silver; which hath have yielded to the Arch-duke 25000 Crowns yearly.

Towns of most note are, 1. Oenipont, or Innsbruck, so called from a Bridge on the Inn or Oenus, which gave denomination to the second branch of Austria, descended from Ferdinand the second Son of the Emperor Ferdinand; the House of Graz, issuing from Charles the III. Son of that Emperor. Most memorable for the happy Flight of Charlotte the V. upon the news that D. Maurice, whom he had lately made Elector of Saxony, was coming against him with his Forces, which so terrified him that he fled away by Torch-light with some of his followers; the residue of his Court, (most of which were persons of great eminency) trudging in the dark on foot, with the black Guard and the Scullery. The Town hath been many times the Residence of the Dukes of Austria; who have here a very Royal and Magnificent Palace. And to say Truth; the Town doth seem to be so honoured amongst pleasant Meadows, spacious Corn-fields, and shady Mountains sweetly scented, the Houses fairly built of Stone, enriched by the Courts of Judicature here settled for all the Country, and provided of a gallant Armory. 2. Trent, (Tridentum it is called in Latine) situate in the Confines of Germany and Italy; for which cause the Inhabitants speak both Languages: built on the banks of the River Adige or Adis; is honoured with an Episcopal See; but made more famous by the Council which was there begun by Pope Paul the third, An 1546, against the Lutherans; it was for 22 years together before their meeting dashed by one Pope, and animated by another; as advanced by Charles the V. upon worldly Policies, and for as worldly Policies retarded by the Court of Rome: for 18 years after this first Convention of it, at sundry times assembled, suspended, and dissolved: and finally, when fixed here seriously by Pope Innocent the fourth, Anno 1562, managed with so much art and cunning by the Pappal Party, that nothing was determined among the Prelates and Bishops who were present at it, that the Holy Ghost was sent unto them in a Cloud, bag from Rome. The effects of which Council so artificially carried on by the strength of wit, I cannot better describe than in the words of the History of it, which are as followeth. "This Council, desired and procured by godly men, to re-unite the Church which began to be divided, hath so established the Schisma and made the parties so obstinate, that the Discords are irreconcilable, being managed by Princes for Reformation of Ecclesiastical Discipline, hath caused the greatest deformation that ever was since Christianity did begin; and hoped for by the Bishops themselves to regain the Episcopal Authority, for the most part usurped by the Pope, hath made them lose it altogether, bringing them into greater servitude: on the contrary, feared and avoided by the See of Rome, as potent means to moderate the exorbitant power thereof, mounted from small beginnings, by divers degrees, to an unlimited excess; it hath so established and confirmed the same over that part which remained subject unto it, that it was never so great nor soundly rooted. So far the words of the History. The next note is, 3. Falkenstein, remarkable for Mines of Brass; as 4. Hall upon the Inn for Salt-wiches, and 5. Schwaz, for the richer Mines of Silver, 6. Mauls, near the head of the River Adige. 7. Palten, upon the borders of Italy, by the people thereof called Bolgano, and Bolsano. 8. Tyrol, an ancient Castle, the first Seat of the Earls or Governors hereof, and giving name for that reason to the Country adjoining. 9. Meran, neighbouring the old Castle of Tyrol, which gave the Title of Dukes to a branch of the Caroline Race, descended from Rathboldus, a base Son of the Emperor Arnulph, possessed of many large Estates in these Alpine Countries, now appertaining to the Princes of the House of Austria. From one of the which Dukes called Orto of Moran, married to Beatrice, Heir of the County of Burgundy, the Earls of Burgundy (since that time) do derive themselves.

The Earls hereof were at the first no other than Provincial Officers: when made Proprietaries, I am yet to seek. The first of whom we have any certainty was Mainard, Earl of Tyrol and Goritz, who died in the year 1258 leaving his Earldoms to that Mainard who by Rodolphus Halsburgensis was infeoffed with the Dukedom of Karnten. But Henry the second Son of this last Mainard dying without issue-male, his Daughter Margaret by the consent of all her people, settled her Estate therein on the Sons of Albert called the Short; which continues ever since in the House of Austria, though sometimes made the Portion and Inheritance of the younger Princes. By Ferdinand the first it was given in Appenage to his second Son Ferdinand, surnamed of Innsbruck, for that reason, who by marrying with Philippina, a Burger's Daughter of Augsburg, so displaced his Brethren, that, to buy his peace of them, and enjoy his own content with her, it was finally agreed upon amongst them all, that Tyrol should not descend upon his Children of that Vener. In pursuance whereof, after his decease, Tyrol fell to the House of Graz; his eldest Son Charles being made Marquess of Burgundy, and Andrew his youngest Cardinal of Brixia. Who were the old Inhabitants of the Roman Austria we have seen

Orange and of the House Wisbad and Idseim; out of which descended Adolphus Earl of Nassau, chosen Emperor in the year 1292. by the Marriage of Engelbert, the seventh Earl of this House of Dillenburg, with Mary Daughter of Philip, Lord of Breda in Brabant, they came first to be Possessed of Estates in the Netherlands: and by the Marriage of Henry, great Grand-child of this Engelbert, with Claude of Chalon, they got the Principality of Orange in France. A Family as much honoured for the personal Merit of its as any other in Europe, of some of which although we have already given a Catalogue, (in the description and Story of Provence) as Princes of Orange, yet take here the whole Succession of them as

The Counts of NASSAU.

1. Otto, the Son of Henry, and Nephew of Waleran, the first Earl of Nassau of this Line.
- 1150 2. Henry, the Son of Otto, who added Dillenburg, Wisbad, and Idseim, unto his Estate; Grandfather, by Walradus his 2. Son, to Adolphus the Emperor.
3. Otto II. Son of Henry.
4. Henry II. Son of Otto the 2.
5. Otto III. Son of Henry the 2.
6. John, Son of Otto the 3.
- 1362 7. Engelbert, the Son of John by Mary his wife, Daughter and Heir of Philip, Lord of Breda in Brabant, added that Town, with many other fair Estates in the Netherlands, to his former Patrimony.
8. John II. Son of Engelbert, Earl of Nassau, and Lord of Breda, &c.
- 1475 9. John III. Son of John the 2.
- 1516 10. Henry III. Son of John the 3. Knight of the Golden Fleece, married Claude of Chalon, Sister of Philippe Prince of Orange.
- 1536 11. Rene, Son of Henry the 3. and of Claude of Chalon, Successor to his Uncle Philippe in the Principality of Orange, Anno 1530, and to his Father in the Earldom of Nassau, Anno 1536.
- 1544 12. William, the Son of John the 3. by Elizabeth his Wife, Daughter of Henry Landgrave of Hesse, and of Anne Daughter and Heir of Philip Earl of Katzenbogen, reformed the Religion in this Country according to the Lutheran Doctrines.
- 1559 13. William II. Son of William the first succeeded Prince of Orange by the will of Rene his Cousin-german, An. 1544, and Earl of Nassau by the death of his Father, Anno 1559. What else concerns this Prince, we have had before. I only add, that William the first besides this William had three other Sons: that is to say, Count John, the Father of William of Nassau, Governour of West Friesland; Count Ludowick, of great renown in the first Wars of the Netherlands, in the course whereof he lost his life, Anno 1574; and Count Adolphus, slain in the same Wars also, Anno 1568.
- 1584 14. Philip, eldest Son of William the second and of Ann his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Maximilian of Egmond, Earl of Buren, succeeded Earl of Buren on the death of his Mother, Anno 1551, Prince of Orange and Count of Nassau by the death of his Father.
15. Maurice, Son of William the 2. and of Anne his Wife, Daughter of Maurice Duke Ele-ctor of Saxony. Prince of Orange and Count of Nassau: at the age of 10 years made General of all the Forces of the United Netherlands, which place he managed for the space of 37 years both with great courage and success.

- 1625 16. Henry IV. Brother of Maurice (but by another venter, the Daughter of Gasper Coligny, Admiral of France) Count of Nassau, Prince of Orange, and General of the forces of the States United.
- 1648 17. William III. Son of Henry the 4. Successor to his Father in all his Honours and Commands. A Prince of great hopes and expectations.

The Arms of the Earls of Nassau are quarterly, 1. Azure, a Lion Or, Armed Gules; 2. Or, a Lion-Leopard Gules, Armed and Crowned Azure; 3. Gules, a Fess Argent; and 4. Gules two Leopards Or, Armed and Member of the first.

Bordered on Franconia or Frankenland lieth the County of HANAW, so called from the chief Town of it: in which the places of most note are, 1. Hanau it self, in Latine called Hannovia, honoured with a Schola illustis also, and much enriched by the trade of Printing, with which they use to furnish annually the Marts of Frankford, distant from hence about ten Dutch miles. 2. Phaffenhofen, of no note formerly, but like to be remembered in the stories of succeeding times for the great Defeat there given to the Duke of Lorraine, July 31. 1693. who lost his whole Forces, all his Ordnance, Ammunition and Baggage, and which was worst of all, his Country; taken in part from him by the conquering Suedes, who followed him close unto his home; & wholly by the French King upon that advantage. 3. Liechberg, which gives Title to a second Branch of the House of Hanaw, called the Lord of Liechberg. A Family of good esteem, since the time that Otho of Hanaw was ennobled with the Title of Earl thereof which was about the year 1392. Before that time of the Empire; and after that advanced unto great Fortunes, by the addition of the Barony of Mintzeberg in the person of Philip the first Earl; of the County of Rhoenick, in the person of another Philip, the third of that name, great Grandchild of the former Philip; and finally, of the Lordships and Estates of Liechberg, accruing to this House by the Marriage of a third Philip, the youngest Son of Reinard the third Earl hereof, with Anne the Daughter and Heir of Ludowick Lord of Liechberg; the Title and possession of the second branch of the House of Hanaw, called Lords of Liechberg and Hofensteyn, and Earls of Bischofs; this last being an Estate in Lorraine accruing to them by the Marriage of a fourth Philip, (the fifth in name and order of the House of Liechberg) with Margaret sole Daughter and Heir of Ludowick the last Earl thereof.

Between the Countys of Nassau and Hanaw on both sides of the River Low lies the Earldom of SOLMS; the first Earl whereof (of whom there is not any good Cassell) was Henry honoured with this Title, Anno 1220. But being I find them in the Catalogue of the Counts Imperial made before that time, I must conclude them to be ancients than the date aforesaid; though that be sufficient to ennoble a far greater Family. By the Marriage of Conrad the ninth from Henry, first with Elisabeth, one of the Daughters of William of Nassau, Prince of Orange, and after with the Widow of the Earl of Egmond, they came to be of such authority amongst the Netherlands, as to be privileged with a place and suffrage in the Council of the States General: there settled at the present in their greatest honour, especially since the Marriage age of Henry of Nassau, Prince of Orange, with a Daughter of Earl Conrad by his second Wife, the Mother of William of Nassau, now Prince of Orange, and Husband to the Princess Mary, the eldest Daughter of Great Britain. But besides their Estate there, they are possessed in this Tract of 1. Bransfeldt, which gives Title to the first Branch of the House of Solms; 2. Cranberg, the possession of the second Branch of this Family; and 3. Solms on the North-side of the Low, the Root of both.

Of the Imperial Cities in this Confederation. the first is Friburg called for distinction sake Friburg in Waterau, to difference it from another Town of that name in Brissgov, situate in the middle of delicious and most fruitful fields, and memorable for the stout resistance which it made to Adolphus of Nassau, at that time Emperor; who, when he could not get it by Force or Famine, obtained it by Fraud, and put to death no less than 40 of the chief Nobility, whom he found in the Castle. So hated he was for that bloody fact, that he was shortly after deprived of the Empire, and slain in fight by Albert of Austria, his Competitor. The second of the two is Wetzlar, seated on the Low, where it meets with the Dille, which rising near Dillenburg, a Town of the Earl of Nassau's doth here lose its name into the greater. A Town Imperial, confederate with Friburg and the Princes before mentioned, for maintaining their common Liberties, and the Religion publicly professed amongst them, being that of the Reformed Churches of Calvin's Platform.

10. FRANCONIA.

FRANCONIA, or FRANKENLAND, is bounded on the East with the Upper Palatine, and part of Volland, on the West with the Confederates of Waterau and part of the Rhene, on the North side with Hessia and Thuringia, on the South with the Palatineate of the Rhene and some part of Schwaben: So called from the French, Franci, or Francones, in whose possession it was when they were first known unto the Romans; the Residence of their Dukes or Princes in this noble Province appropriating the name unto it. Called also Francia Orientalis, to difference it from the Realm of France which lay more towards the West. At that time of a larger extent than it is at the present, comprehending so much of the Lower Palatine as lieth on the same side of the Rhene; since subdued from it and made a Province of it self in these later Ages.

The Country, on the out-parts overgrown wholly in a manner with Woods and Forests, and environed almost with Mountains; Parts of the old Hercynian Woods, is within pleasant, plain and fruitful, sufficiently plentiful both of Corn and Wines, but abundantly well stored with Rape and Licoras, and yielding good pasture for Cattel. So that we compare it to a fine piece of Cloth, wrought about with a coarse Lint; or an excellent fine piece of Lawn, with a Canvas Selvage.

Chief Rivers of it are, 1. The Maine or Mœnus, which running through the middle of it, is received into the Rhene below Frankfurt. 2. The Sala, whence the adjoining French had the name of Salici, and Comrade, Emperor of the Germans, the surname of Salicus. 3. Radunia. 4. Simsa. 5. Thero. 6. Astus, &c.

The people of it are ingenious, patient of labour, strong of body, and very industrious, not suffering any to be idle that can earn his living, of what sort soever. The offspring of the ancient French, who, having over-mastered Gaul and the parts adjoining, left here the seminary of their strength, and a stock of their ancient Princes; Ala- comir, Brother of Pharamond the first King of the French, governing in these parts as Duke, and leaving the Estate and Title unto his Posterity. The Catalogue of which Princes take in order thus.

The Princes of the FRANKS, and Dukes of FRANCONIA, of the old French Race.

A.Ch.

- 326 1. Gembaldus; the Son of Dagobert, descended from the old Regal stock of the Sicambri, united with other Dutch Nations about 60 or 70 years before, in the name of Franks, having subdued those parts which lay towards the River Mœnus, became the first Prince of the Eastern Franks, or Lord of Francia Orientalis.
- 356 2. Dagobert, the Son of Gembaldus, who added the District of Triers unto his Estates.
- 377 3. Glodowius, or Ludowicus, the Son of Dagobert.
- 398 4. Marcomir, the Son of Glodowius, who extended his Dominion Eastwards towards Bavaria and Bohemia.
- 402 5. Pharamond, or Waramond, the Son of Marcomir, the first of this Line which took upon himself the Title of King of the French: on the assuming whereof (aiming at matters of more importance) he left Franconia, or East-France, with the Title of Duke, to his Brother Marcomir.
- 419 6. Marcomir the Brother of Pharamond.
- 423 7. Prummeffer, by some called Prianus the Son of Marcomir.
- 435 8. Gembaldus II. the Son of Prummeffer.
- 459 9. Sumus, the Son of Gembald the second.
- 478 10. Clodomirus, or Luitmarus, the Son of Sumus.
- 515 11. Hugobaldus, the Son of Clodomir, who became a Christian and added Normes and Mœnus unto his Estates.
- 541 12. Helenus, by some called Hermericus, a Christian also, who passing over the Rhene, subdued that Tract bordering betwixt Triers and Lorraine, which the Dutch call West-reich.
- 571 13. Gatfridus, the Son of Helenus, a Christian also, but not able to persuade his people to the same belief.
- 595 14. Gembaldus III. the Son of Gatfride.
- 615 15. Clodomir II. the Son of Gembald the third.
- 638 16. Heribert, the Nephew of Clodomir the second.
- 668 17. Clodowius, or Clavis II. the Cousin-german of Heribert.
- 680 18. Gobertus the Son of Clavis the second.
- 706 19. Gobertus II. Son of Gobert the first.
- 720 20. Hetanus, the Son of Gobert the second, the last Duke of Franconia of this Line. He dying without issue-male, Anno 740. bequeathed it at his death to Pepin, who afterwards was King of France, Father of Charles the Great according to a former Contract made between those Princes. And Charles no sooner had it in his possession, but he bestowed the greatest part of it on Ruecland, the first Bishop of Wortzburg, Anno 752. made Bishop of that City by Boniface, Arch Bishop of Magde, (the first Apostle of this People) but a year before. The Bishops of Wortzburg by this Grant were possessed hereof as long as any of the House of Charles the Great did possess the Empire. But his po-Herity failing in the person of Conrade, Anno 910. Otho the first (who next but one succeeded Conrade) invested Conrade, Husband to Luithgardis his daughter, with this Country, giving him withal the Title of Duke of Francia. Four Princes of this House possessed it; that is to say, this Conrade, surnamed Salicus; and after him three Henries, Father, Son, and Nephew, successively enjoying the Imperial dignity, by the names of Henry the third, fourth, and fifth. This Henry, the last Prince of the male Line of Conrade, dying without issue, Francia fell to Frederick Barbarossa, Duke of Schwaben, as next Heir to Henry by the Lady Agnes his Sister, married to Frederick the Antient, Duke of Schwaben, the Grandfather of Barbarossa. But that House being also extinct in the person of Conradine, Anno 1268. and no one Heir pretending to the Rights thereof, the Bishop of Wurtzburg challenged it on the former Grant; content to let some great ones have a part of the spoil, that he and his Successors might enjoy the rest. By means whereof it came to be divided betwixt the Bishops of Wurtzburg, Bamberg, Meitz, the Elector Palatine of the Rhene, (for antiently so much of the Palatinate and the Bishoprick of Meitz as lay on the Dutch side of the Rhene were but parts of Swartzenburg, Henneberg, and Hohenlos, and as many of the Free or Imperial Cities as are seated in it. Thus every one did gather sticks when the great Oak fell: the Title of the Duke of Francia remaining notwithstanding to the Bishops of Wurtzburg.

1. WURTZBURG, the Metropolis of Francia, the Seat and Residence of the Bishop, who is Titular Duke thereof, is situate on the Maine or Menus, in a pleasant Plain environed with Meadows, Gardens, and fruitful Mountains; and very well fenced with Walls, Trenches, Bulwarks, and other Arts of modern Fortification; well peopled, and for the most part handsomely and neatly built. Passing over the Bridge of Free-stone on many large and spacious Arches, you come unto a fair and pompous (though ancient) Castle, the ordinary dwelling of the Bishop; and yet so strong, that the many vain attempts of the Boors and Citizens, apt to pick quarrels with their Prince, made it thought impregnable, to which the situation of it on the top of an Hill added some advantage: but it proved otherwise when besieged by the King of Sweden, Anno 1631. who after a short, but stout resistance took it by assault. Other Towns of most note which belong to the Bishops of Wurtzburg are, 2. Forcheim, where it is said that Pontius Pilate was born, 3. Gemund, at the meeting of the Maine and the Salza, or Sala, 4. Bretta upon the Salza or Sala; not far from Gemund; remarkable enough for nothing else, for being the Birth-place of Melancthon that renowned Scholar, the Phoenix of Germany, as some call him, and that not unjustly. 5. Chromach. 6. Staffelsheim. 7. Hockstadt; of which little memorable.

But to return unto the Bishop or chief Lord of all. He is called in the refined Latine of those times Herbipolitanus, but commonly Wurtzburgensis; differing in sound, but not in sense: for Wurtzburg is no other than a Town of Wurtz, situate among plants and Gardens, as before is said; and Herbipolitanus, made up out of several languages, doth signify no more than a City of Herbs. By whom the Episcopal See was here first erected, and how the Bishops hereof came to be entituled unto their Estates hath been shewn already. The manner how the new Bishop is ascertained, and the old interred, may be worth our knowledge. On the decease of the former Bishop, the Lord Elect, attended with a great train of horse, is to make his entrance. As soon as he comes within the Gates, he a-lights of his horse, and putteth off his Robes, and being attired in a poor and deplorable Habit, begitt about with a Rope, bare-headed also and bare-footed, he is conducted by the Earls of Henneberg, Castell, Werthaim, and Rheineck, to S. Saviour's Church, being his Cathedral. The Dean and Canons there meeting him, ask him what he would have: to which he modestly replieth, that, though unworthy, he is come to discharge the Office unto which he is called. Then the Dean thus, admit thee in the name of this Chapter, committing to thy care this Church of Saint Saviour's, and the Dukedom thereunto belonging, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Which done, he putteth on his Episcopal Habit, sayeth Mass, and from thence passeth to the Castle, where he gives entertainment to all the Company. The living Bishop thus invested, proceed we next to the Burial of the dead: whose Body imbowed, is kept in the Chapel of his Castle, his Heart preserved in a vessel of Glass. The next day he is carried to the Monastery of Saint James, holding a Crozier-Staff in his right hand, and a Sword in his left; buried with them the next day after in the Church of S. Saviour. As for the Revenue of the Bishop, they must needs be great; The Bishop hereof in the time of Charles the fifth compounding for his peace with Albert, Marquess of Brandenburg, at the price of 220000 Crowns in ready money, and entering into a Bond to pay all his Debts, which amounted 350000 Crowns more. By which we may partly guess at the richness of his Exchequer, and partly at the greatness of his Intrado.

2. The second great Lord of Francia is the Bishop of BAMBERG, a City seated on the Maine, not far from Wurtzburg, the little River Kednitz falling there into it: supported by Mercator to be the Brainorium of Ptolomy, and to have took this new name from the Hill Baba (so called from Baba Daughter of Otho Duke of Saxony, and Wife of Albert once Earl hereof) upon which it is situate, the right name being Rabenberg remember that Berg in Dutch signifieth a Hill) and contracted Bamberg. A City delightably seated amongst Mountains and pleasant Gardens, and in a soil exceeding fruitful of all necessaries, and yielding Lycoras in great plenty: the Birth place of Joachim Camerarius, one of the great Lights of Germany; and a See Episcopalian, the Bishop of which is exempt from the power of the Metropolitan, subject immediately to the Pope, and Lord of many fair Towns and Territories in this Country; But much diminished since the time of Charles the fifth: the Bishoprick thereof then being given to Marquess Albert, above mentioned, for a Cession from Arms, Anno 1530. no less than 60 of his Lordships, (most of which fall unto the share of the Marquess of Onaldisbach) besides the Tutelage or Guardianship of his Wars and Clients. Of those which are remaining the hands of the Bishops the principal are, 1. Bravingiac, 3. Schleisslar.

3. The third great Lord to be considered is the Marquess of ONALDSBACH, or Onsbach, who is Master of no small part of this Country; but his Estate (as those of the other German Princes) confused and intermixed with his Neighbours. His chief Towns: 1. Onaldisbach, or Onsbach, the usual Residence of these Marquesses, and the Birth place of most of their Children. Halbrum, on the edge of Wirttemberg, walled in about the year 1085. and honoured with some publick Schools there founded by Marquess George-Frederick, Anno 1482. 3. Plenstet, not far from Nuremberg. Such places as they held in Votland, we shall meet with there.

4. These Marquesses are of the puissant Family of Brandenburg, by whom this fair Estate was wrestled from the female Heirs of Wolframus, the last Lord hereof. The first first who did enjoy this Estate and Title was Marquess George-Frederick, the Son of Albert Marquess and Elector of Brandenburg, called the Achilles of Germany, the Father of Albert the first Duke of Prussia, and of George the first Marquess of Jagendorff, and the Grandfather of that Marquess Albert who in the days of Charles the fifth so harassed this Country. But his Male-issue by Cosmin his eldest Son failing in that Albert, Anno 1537 it returned to the Electoral House; and by Sigismund, a late Elector was given to Joseph Ernestus, one of his younger Brethren, who by the Princes of the Union for defence of the Palatine was made chief Commander of their Forces, Anno 1620. A charge in which it was supposed that he carried himself neither so faithfully nor so valiantly as he should have done, being much condemned for suffering Spinola with his Army to pass by unopposed, when he had all advantages that could be wished for to impede his march: the greatest part of the Palatinate being lost immediately upon that Neglect, and by degrees the rest of the United Princes either taken off from their engagement, or ruined for adhering to it with too great a constancy. To him succeeded his Son Christian, now possessed hereof.

As for the other secular Princes which have any considerable Estates in this Country, they are the Earls of Henneberg, Hohenlos, Rheineck, Castell, Werthaim, Harpach, and Swartzenburg, together with the Lords of Limburg and Rheineck; all of them named so from the chief Town of their Estates, and all these Towns enriched with some suitable Territory. Of these the Earls of Henneberg, Rheineck, Castell, and Werthaim, are Homagers to the Bishop of Wurtzburg, and are to do him service at his Intronization; the Earldom of Rheineck being now united to that of Hannau, as was shewn before, and that of Henneberg most famous, in that one of the Earls hereof was Father of that incredible increase of Children (as many as there be days in the year) produced at one Birth by the Lady Margaret his Wife, Sister of William Earl of Holland, and King of the Romans. A Family of as great Antiquity as most in Germany fetching their Pedigree as high as to Charles the Great, without help of the Heralds. But they of greatest power and Parentage amongst them are the Earls of Swartzenburg, deriving themselves from one Wittikindus of the House of Saxony; who fighting for his Country against the French, Anno 779, was taken prisoner, carried into France, and there baptized, at the perswasion of Lewis the Godly, Son of Charles the Great. Wittikindus, his Son and Successor, being baptized at the same time also by the name of Charles, was the first Earl of Swartzenburg, a Castle of his own building on the edge of Thuringia, Anno 796, whose posterity do still hold the same, but much improved in their Estates by Marriages and other accretments. A race of Princes which have yielded many of great influence in the affairs of Germany: amongst them Guntber Earl of Swartzenburg, elected Emperor of the Romans against Charles the fourth, by Rodolph Elector Palatine, Ericus Duke of Saxony, Ludowick Marquess of Brandenburg, and Henry Archbishop of Meitz. By which last he was solemnly inaugurated at Aren (or Aquis-grave) Anno 1349. But he died unworthily poisoned by his Competitor, though he had not of it: yet he was made so weak and unfit for action, that he was forced to surrender his pretensions to his mortal enemy, receiving in compensation for his charges 20000 marks in Silver, and some Towns in Thuringia.

Of the Imperial Cities, which share amongst them the remainders of Frankland, the principal are, 1. Frankford on the Maine, so called from its situation on the River Maine, to difference it from Frankford in the Country of Brandenburg. It is divided by the River into two parts, joined together by a Bridge of Stone: the left part, situate on the right-hand shore of the River, being called Saxon-Weimar; the greater part, properly called Frankford; seated on the other. Both are under one Magistrate, and both together make up a fair, rich, populous, and well traded Town; both of great riches and repute by reason of the famous Marts here held in the midst of Lent and September yearly, and the Election of the Emperor or King of the Romans, as occasion is. The City is of a round form, compassed with a double Wall, brautified with some Walks without the Town on the banks of the River, amongst Vineyards, Meadows, and sweet Groves: called thus as some say, from Francus the Son of Marcus, supposed to be the Founder of it; or a Francorum vado, as the Foard of the Franks, before the building of the Bridge. 2. Schweinfurt, on the Maine also, in a fruitful Soil. 3. Rosenburg, on the River Tauber. 4. Winfheim. Here is also the Town of 5. Coburg, which belongeth to the House of Saxony, and gives Title to some of the younger Princes of it, called from hence Dukes of Saxon-Coburg. And hereto may be added 6. the fair City of Nuremberg, conceived by most to be within the Upper Palatinate; but by the Emperor Maximilian made a member of the Circle of Francia, in regard most of the Estates and Possessions of it lie within this Country. Of which indeed they have so plentiful a share, that when Maurice Elector of Saxony and his Confederates had driven Charles the fifth out of Germany, Marquess Albert, before mentioned, (whose Sword was his best Revenue) picking a quarrel with this City, burnt no less than an hundred Villages belonging to it, seventy Mannors and Farm-houses appertaining to the wealthier Citizens, 3500 Acres of their Wood; and after all this havoc made of their Estate, compelled them to compound with him for 200000 Crowns in Money, and six pieces of Ordnance. But being the City it felt themselves rather to belong to the other Palatinate, we shall there meet with it.

Amongst these Prelates, Princes, and Imperial Cities is the great Dukedom of Francia at this time divided; the Title still remaining in the Bishop of Wurtzburg, and some part of the Country: but both the Country and the Title of Duke of Francia not long since otherwise disposed of. For the Swedes having taken Wurtzburg Anno 1631, as before is said, together with the City of Bamberg, and all the Towns and Territories appertaining to them, conferred them upon Bernard Duke of Saxon-Weimar, with the style and Title of Duke of Francia. He was inaugurated therein in the Cathedral Church of Wurtzburg, July 19, 1633. the Nobility and Gentry of the Country doing Homage to him, and all the Magistrates and Officers of the several Cities taking the Oaths of Allegiance; the new Duke also making Oath, that he would carefully maintain them in their Rights and Privileges. In the solemnities of which day, the first great Gun discharged in the way of Triumph broke in the going off, without any hurt done, but the wounding of one Soldier only. An Omen that all this Solemn Act would prove but a Pageant, and break in pieces at the first giving fire unto it. And so accordingly it did: the Victory at Norlingen, which followed not long after this, putting the Nobles once more into their possessions, and leaving nothing to the new Duke but an hungry Title. And therefore leaving both the old and new titular Dukes, we will here add the Catalogue of those who were Dukes indeed, and had, together with the Title, the full Possession of the Country.

Dukes of FRANCONIA of the Dutch or German Race.

- 974 1. Conradus, surnamed Salicus, created Duke of Franconia by Otto the first, whose Daughter Luigardis he had married: after the death of Henry the second elected Emperor, by the name of Conrad the second, anno 1025.
- 1040 2. Henry, the Son of Conrad, Duke of Franconia and Emperor, by the name of Henry the third.
- 1056 3. Henry II. of Franconia and IV. of the Empire.
- 1106 4. Henry III. of Franconia, and V. of the Empire.
- 1125 5. Frederick II. (surnamed Barbarossa) Duke of Schwaben, Nephew of Frederick the Ancient, Duke of Suevia, and of Agnes his Wife, the Sister and next Heir of Henry, succeeded in the Empire after the death of Conrad the 3. his Uncle, anno 1153.
- 1130 6. Frederick II. the second Son of Barbarossa, Duke of Franconia and Schwaben.
7. Conrad II. Brother of Frederick the second succeeded in both Estates.
8. Philip, the younger Brother of Conrad, succeeded in both Dukedoms after his decease, and on the death of Henry the sixth his eldest Brother was elected Emperor, anno 1198.
- 1207 9. Frederick III. of Franconia, and the V. of Suevia, Son of the Emperor Henry the sixth, whom he succeeded in the Kingdom of Naples and Sicily, anno 1202, and on the death of Otto the fourth, anno 1212, was elected Emperor, of that name the second.
- 1250 10. Conrad III. of Franconia, the II. of Schwaben, and the IV. of the Empire, the Son of Frederick the third, whom he succeeded in all his Titles and Estates.
- 1254 11. Conradine, Son of Conrad the third, Duke of Franconia and Schwaben, dispossessed of his Kingdoms of Naples and Sicily by Manfred the base Brother of his Father, and finally beheaded by Charles of Anjou, who succeeded Manfred in those Kingdoms, anno 1268. After whose death this Royal House being quite extinguished, the Bishop of Wurtzburg did again resume the Title of Duke of Franconia; content to let some of the greater Lords and Prelates, which lived near unto him, to share in the possession of it, as before was noted.

The Arms of the ancient Dukes of Franconia, before they were incorporated with the House Schwaben, were Azure, a Lion Barry of eight pieces Argent and Gules, crowned Or: by which, why it is now born by the Lant-graves of Hassia, we shall tell you there.

11. WIRTEMBERG; and 12. BADEN.

These I have joined together, though distinct Estates, because both of them were taken out of the great Dukedom of Schwaben, erected both about one time, and lie very close, in a round together: bounded upon the East and South with Schwaben properly so called, on the North with the Lower Palatinate, on the West with the Rhene, and that part of Schwaben which is called Brigow, parted asunder by the mountainous ridge of Hills called Swartzenwald; Wirttemberg lying on the East-side thereof, and Baden betwixt it and the Rhene.

And first for WIRTEMBERG. The Air thereof is very healthy, neither too hot in Summer, nor too cold in Winter: the Soil near Swartzenwald lying on the West, and the Alps of Suevia on the South, of it fell barren and unprofitable; but in some places, by the industry of the Plough-man, made to yield good Corn. But in the middle parts thereof, which lie towards the Neccar, little inferior for fruitfulness both of Corn and Wine unto any in Germany, besides some Silver-mines near Wiltberg, and about Puehlach, a small Town, such abundance of Brast, that the Foundations of the Houses seem to be laid upon it. It took this name from the Cattle of Wirttemberg, the first Seat of the Princes of it; as that did from the Innegeri, inhabiting the Dutch side of the Rhene; or from the Viriburgi, as Beatus Rhenanus thinketh, mentioned by Tybellius Gallicus in the life of Aurelianus; to which the word Berg, being added for a termination, made it first Tuergerberg, or Virtiburg, and after Wirttemberg.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Smegard, the Duke's Seat, a fair, rich and populous Town, and the chief of the Dukedom; seated in a pleasant and fruitful Plain, not far from the Neccar, yielding a quantity of Wine almost incredible. 2. Tubingen, on both sides of the Neccar, united into one with a fair Stone-bridge. A Town well built, situate in a very rich Soil, and finally adorned with an University here founded by Eberhard the first Duke of Wirttemberg, anno 1477, in which Lennardus Fuchsius that great Herbalist and Restaurator of Physick, was once a Professor of that Faculty. 3. Cannst, upon the Neccar also, not far from which, on the Top of an Hill, stands the old Castle of Wirttemberg before mentioned. 4. Wiltberg, of great esteem for its Mines of Silver. 5. Archingen, inhabited chiefly by Jews. 6. Schwandorf, upon the Rheims, much resorted to by reason of the hot Baths there; as is also 7. Nemburg, on the Entz. 8. Haidensheim, 9. Greiningen, 10. Marbach; of which little memorable. There are also within the limits of this Dukedom many Towns Imperial. As 1. Wimpfen, and 2. Hailbrun, on the Neccar also. 3. Gopping, upon the River Fils. 4. Weil. 5. Reutlingen, on the Neccar also, made Imperial, by Frederick the 2. anno 1240, otherwise of no great note but for the Paper-mills. 6. Essling.

The first Inhabitants hereof were the Charim of Pubny, and part of the Innegeri spoken of before. It was made subject with the rest of these parts to the Almans, after to the French, and finally a member of the great Dukedom of Schwaben. From which dismembered in the time of Henry 4. after the dangerous War raised against him by Duke Rodolphus, advanced by the practice of Pope Hildebrand to the Throne Imperial, it came to have Princes of its own: the first Earl being Conrad, in the year 1100, by the grace and favour of the said Emperor Henry. Increased by the addition of the Earldom of Mombelgard and many other Accruments, it was made a Dukedom in the person of Eberhard the 6. by Maximilian the 1. anno 1495. The Earls and Dukes follow thus in order.

The Earls and Dukes of WIRTEMBERG.

- 1100 1. Conrad, the first Earl.
2. Ulric, Son of Conrad.
3. John Son of Ulric.
4. Lewis, Son of John.
5. Henry, Son of Lewis.
6. Eberhard, Son of Henry.
7. Ulric II. Son of Eberhard.
8. Eberhard II. Son of Ulric.
1225 9. Ulric III. Son of Eberhard.

1344. 10

- 1344 10. Eberhard III. Son of Ulric.
1394 11. Ulric IV Son of Eberhard.
12. Eberhard IV. Son of Ulric.
1417 13. Eberhard V. Son of Eberhard the 4. by his Marriage with Henrica, or Henrietta, Daughter of Henry Earl of Mombelgard, added that Earldom to his House.
1419 14. Lewis or Lodovick II. Son of Eberhard the 5.
1456 15. Eberhard VI. Son of Lewis, Founder of the University of Tubingen, created by Maximilian the first, the first Duke of Wirttemberg, Anno 1495. He deceased without Issue, Anno 1496.
1496 16. Eberhard VII. Son of Ulric the younger Brother of Lewis the 2. succeeded on the death of Eberhard his Cousin-german.
1504 17. Henry II. the Brother of Eberhard the 7.
1519 11. Ulric V. Son of Henry 2. expelled out of his Dukedom by Charles the 5. for the lack of Reutling an Imperial City, and his Estate conferred on Ferdinand of Austria, the Brother of Charles; but after 15 years Exile, restored to his Dukedom by Philip Landgrave of Hessia, he Reformed Religion, and liberally endowed the University of Tubingen. 31.
1540 19. Christopher, the Son of Ulric the 5. a follower of his Father's steps in Reformation of the Church, and advancement of Learning.
1568 20. Ludovick or Lewis III. Son of Christopher.
21. Frederick, Son of George Earl of Mombelgard, the Brother of Ulric the 5. made Knight of the Garter by Queen Elizabeth, Anno 1597.
22. John-Frederick, Son of Frederick the first.
23. John Eberhard, eldest Son of the former Duke, now living, Anno 1648.

The Revenues of this Duke are supposed to be equal unto those of the Electors Palatine, spoken of before; and were it not for the Silver-mines in Saxony, little inferior to those of that Duke. But for provisions of War, (excepting Powder only) he is meanly furnished. A main defect, considering the ill terms he stands in with the Imperial Cities, betwixt whom and the House of Wirttemberg there have been always open Wars, or secret Jealousies.

His Arms are Or, 3. Attiers of a Stag born Pallic-barrie, Sable.

As for the Marquitate of BADEN lying on the West-side of Swartzenwald; betwixt it and the Rhene, it is for the most part, except towards those Woods, a very pleasant and fruitful Country, and much of the same nature with the rest of Wirttemberg; so called from Baden, a neat Town, where the Marquess keeps his Seat in Winter; and that so named from the hot Baths there, as is also Baden (called for distinction sake, the Upper Baden (amongst the Switzers; in which respect the City of Bath in Switzerland had anciently the name of Caer-Baden also. Of these Baths it is supposed that there are in this City at least 300, profitable for many Diseases and exulcerate Sores, drawing a great resort of people from the neighbouring Countries. This is the chief Town of this Marquitate, from whence the Princes have the Title of Marquesses of Baden. The next to this is, 2. Durlach, or Turlach, which gives Title to a second Branch of this House; called also sometimes Marquesses of Durlach only, but commonly the Marquesses of Baden Durlach. 3. Liebenzell, amongst the Hills of Swartzenwald, famous for hot medicinal Springs. 4. Liechtenau, remarkable for a Monastery, the Burial-place of the first Marquesses. 5. Gersbach, in the very heart of that Mountainous tract. 6. Flortzheim, adjoining to the Wood Hagenfels, a branch of Swartzenwald. 7. Reuten. 8. Badenweiler, and 9. Siefenberg, all seated in the Upper Baden, being that part hereof which lies next to Brigow. 10. Milberg, beautified with a fair Cattle, the usual Retiring-place of these Princes in the heats of Summer.

This Marquitate, being also taken out of the great Dukedom of Schwaben, was founded in the person of Herman of Verona in Italy, who deserving well of the Emperor Henry V. was by him settled in some Lands about these parts, Anno 1120. and after marrying with the Daughter of an Earl of Baden, was by the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa created the first Marquess of Baden, Anno 1155. The Estate was after much encreased by the addition of the Earldom of Hochberg and the Appendices thereof in Schwaben; into which Christopher the 13 Marquess hereof, succeeded on the death of his Cousin Philip, the last Earl of Hochberg; both Princes descending originally from two Brothers; of which the eldest, in right of the Lady Judith his Wife, was Earl of Hochberg; the second by the favour of the said Frederick Barbarossa, was made Marquess of Baden. They were Masters also of many fair Estates in the Lower Palatinate; which the Palatines of the Rhene (as was there said) are since possessed of. Other particulars shall be shewn (if occasion be) in the ensuing Catalogue of

The Marquesses of BADEN.

- 1153 1. Herman, the first Marquess.
2. Herman II.
3. Herman III.
4. Herman IV.
1281 5. Rodolph, Son of Herman the 4.
1295 6. Herman V. Son of Rodolph.
7. Rodolph II. Son of Herman the 5.
1356 8. Frederick, Son of Rodolph the 2.
9. Rodolph III. Son of Frederick.
1372 10. Bernard, Son of Rodolph the 3.
1431 11. James, Son of Bernard.
1453 12. Charles Son of James; the first of these Marquesses which was possessed of the County of Spanheim in the Lower Palatinate, descending on this House by Maud Wife of Rodolph the 2.
1475 13. Christopher, Son of Charles, who after the death of Philip, the last Marquess of Hochberg, succeeded also in that Estate.
1519 14. Bernard Son of Christopher; his Brother Ernest succeeding in that of Hochberg.
15. Christopher II. Son of Bernard; his elder Brother Philibert and Philip Son of Philibert, dying in the life of Bernard.
16. Edward Son of Christopher intending the sale of his Estate to pay his Debts, was forcibly deprived of all by
17. Ernest, Marquess of Hochberg, Nephew of Ernest above mentioned; who by that means not only preserved the Marquitate of Baden, but united that of Hochberg again unto it, and removed his ordinary seat to Durlach.
18. George, Brother of Ernest, Marquess of Baden and Hochberg.
19. Frederick, the Son of George, born in the year 1594. succeeded his Father in both Estates; and (if living) hath a Son called also Frederick, to enjoy them after his decease.

13. NORTH

13. NORTHGOIA, or the UPPER PALATINATE.

THE County of NORTHGOIA, so called from the Northern situation of it in regard of Bavaria, is sometimes also called the Palatinate of Bavaria, because anciently belonging to that Estate; but generally Ober Pfaltz, or the upper Palatinate, to distinguish it from the Lower. It is bounded on the East with Bohemia, on the West with Franconia and part of Schwaben, on the North with Voiland, and on the South with Bavaria. The Country is for the most part somewhat rough and mountainous, rich principally in Mines of Iron, which it yieldeth in most places, and some of Silver about Amberg; extended from Lainburg, to the edge of Bohemia, 80 miles; and from the Hill Fichtelberg in the edge of Voiland, to Weissenburg near the banks of the Danow, 68 miles.

Conspicuous things touching this Province are chiefly two. First, that out of the Mountain Fichtelberg, quarters mentioned arise 4 Rivers running to the four Corners of the world; that is to say, the Egra towards the East, the Albia or Adana towards the West, the Sala or Salza to the North, and the Nab or Nabum to the South; so that it may be probably thought to be the highest Hill in all Germany. 2. That in the South-west corner of it are two little Rivers; the one called Altmul, which falleth into the Danow, and the other Rednitz, which runs into the Albia; and finally into the Rhene; between the Heads whereof, being not much distant, Charles the Great once began to dig a Channel, for making a passage out of the Rhene into the Danow. In which work he employed many thousand men. But partly by excess of Rain, and partly by some strange Affrightments, (all which he did in the day being undone in the night) he was fain to desert. Some parts of the intended Water-course are to be seen near Weissenburg, spoken of before, which standeth in the middle-way between both Rivers.

Chief places of this Country which belong to the Electoral Family are, 1. Amberg, on the River Vils, enriched chiefly by the commodity of Iron, digged out of the neighbouring Hills, here fashioned into all sorts of Utensils and hence conveyed in great abundance to the parts adjoining; but prouder of its Mines of Silver than those veins of Iron, according to the Prince's Coeffers 60000 Crowns yearly. 2. Nanheim, in the midst of a fruitful Valley, near a Wood of Juniper. 3. Newburg, upon the River Swartzbach which gives Title to the second branch of the Palatine House, called the Counts Palatines of Newburg, Competitors with the Marquesses of Brandenburg for the whole Dukedom of Cleveland, and finally possessed of Gulick and the Members of it. 4. Kelheim, at the meeting of the Danow with the River Altmul. 5. Cham, on the edge of Bohemia, near the River Regen; which passing thence falleth into the Danow near the City of Regensburg. 6. Casfel, where the Electors for the most part hold their Residence, when they are in this Country. 7. Auerbach, 8. Salzbach, 9. Weiden, 10. Newmarkt.

There are in this Country some Towns belonging to the Langraves of Luchenberg, one of the four old Langraves of the Empire; the other three being Duringen, Halsla and Alsfia: so called from Luchenberg, an old Castle, situate on a lofty Hill not far from Pfeim, the chief Town and ordinary Seat of these Langraves, seated on the River Nab, 2. Gransfelden, 3. Schembessen, an ordinary palls and baiting place in the way from Prague to Nuremberg.

But the chief City of this Country, and perhaps of Germany, is Nuremberg it self, Norimberga in the modern, but Norica in the ancient Latine. So called from an ancient Castle called Castrum Noricum the Ruines of which are still remaining, encompassed with a deep, but dry Ditch, now of no use nor ornament to the City at all, but revered for its antiquity, as the Mother of Nuremberg. The Castle is said by some to be built in the time of Claudius Caesar. More probably by some of the Narici, who terrified with the Invasion of Attila, in the Decline and wane of the Roman Empire, relinquished Bavaria, where before they dwelt and passed over the Danow, there to provide themselves of a safer dwelling. Conquered by the Besuarians, it became, together with their Conquerors, subject to the French. In the time of Lewis the 3. It became Imperial, and was walled and fortified during the reign of Charles the 4. From that time it increased to fast both in Wealth and Beauty, that it is counted the greatest and wealthiest City in all this Continent, there being reckoned in it 11 Stone-bridges for Passage over the Pegnitz, which runneth through it, 12 Conduits of fresh water, 13 common Baths, 16 publick Wells, and 128 Streets. Of figure it is square, environed with a tripple Wall of 8 miles in circuit, and plentifully stored with all sorts of Ammunition. The Marquesses of Brandenburg in former times were the Burgraves of itsan Office of great power and jurisdiction, but fold for a good summe of money by Frederick the 3. Anno 13.14. Albert his Son, attempting to recover the old Office again, besieged the Town, having no less than 17 Princes on his side, and yet could not force it: that for an Argument of its strength. A profound evidence of the Wealth of it we have seen before, in that great Ranfom made of their Towns and Villages, and the great Ranfom they were put to by another Albert spoken of in Franconia. And it adds much unto the commendation of the people that this great Wealth is gotten by their indefatigable Industry; the Town being situate on a barren and sandy Soil, and destitute of those Helps which commonly navigable Rivers brings unto a City; these great Possessions which belongs unto the State herof being gotten out of the fire, as the saying is, by their continual working of Iron and other Manufactures, occasioning a resort hither of Merchants from all parts of Germany.

Other Towns of chief note within this Palatinate are, 1. Altziff, where the Nurembergs founded an University for the study of all Arts and Sciences, anno 1575. 2. Herfpruck, a great Town and well seated, belonging to the State of Nuremberg also. 3. Eysfel, (Aischfeldum in the Latine) an Episcopal See, situate on the River Altmul. 4. Weissenburg, an Imperial City on the Borders of Schwaben. Here was also in this Province (if not still remaining) the Town Winsberg, memorable for the Piety and gallantry of the Women of it. For the Town being besieged and distressed by the Emperor Comrade the 3. for siding against him with the Guelphs then Dukes of Bavaria, no other conditions could be gotten at the surrender of it, but that the Women might have leave to depart in safety, and carry all their Jewels with them. Which being obtained, they took their Husbands on their backs and so left the Town: and by that noble act moved the affections and compassions of the angry Prince, that he spared the Town, and gave them all a general Pardon. It is said by some, that the odious names of Guelphs and Gibelines (with which the peace of Christendom was so long distracted) took their beginning at this Siege, the first fo called from Guelpho, Brother of Henry the Proud, Duke of Bavaria, in whose cause they fought; the other from Veiling (the French and Italians speak it Gueiling) a Town of Franckenia, in which that Emperor was born. Another original hereof we had in our description of the State of Florence: but I take this to be the more probable of the two; though neither certain.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Narici of Tacitus. Afterwards some of the Norici fearful or grown impatient of the Roman yoke, came over the Danubius to them, and built that famous Castle called Castrum Noricum, where now stands Nuremberg. Overpowered by the Boii and uniting with them in the name of Boiarians, they followed the fortunes of Bavaria, till the year 1339, when Ludovick the Emperor and Duke of Bavaria, on the partition of the Estate betwixt him and Rodolphus his elder Brother, relinquished it for ever to the House of the Palatines. Returned for the present to the Dukes of Bavaria, on whom it was conferred, together with the Electoral dignity, by the Emperor Ferdinand the 2. in recompence of the great service done him by Maximilian the now Duke thereof in the war of Bohemia, and the great charge he had been at in the reduction of that Kingdom to the House of Austria. How long it will continue thus is known only to God, the disposer of all things. Yet neither the Bavarians formerly, nor the Palatines since, have been so fully Masters of it, but that the Langrave of Luchenberg and the City of Nuremberg have put in for a share.

The Arms of which great and puissant City are Azure, an Harpy displayed, crowned, crined and armed, Or.

14. The Kingdom of BOHEMIA.

THE Kingdom of BOHEMIA, containing Bohemiam it self with the incorporate Provinces, is bounded on the East with Poland and Hungary, on the West with the Upper Palatinate, Voiland and Misia, on the North with the Marquissate of Brandenburg and some part of Misia, and on the South with Austria and Bavaria. It comprehends in it, besides Bohemia it self, the Marquissate of Moravia, with the Dukedoms of Silefia and Lusatia.

1. BOHEMIA, encompassed about with woody Mountains, part of the Hercynian, is bounded on the East with Moravia, on the West with the Upper Palatinate and Voiland, the North with Misia, Lusatia and some part of Silefia, on the South with parts of Bavaria and Austria.

It took this name from the Bemi, or Boiemi, the old Inhabitants hereof; by Pomponius Mela called Bemi, with the addition of Gris magna, by Tacitus, Boiemi, who make them the descendants of the Boii, a Gallick Nation, who to avoid the Servitude which they feared from Rome, put themselves into these Hercynian deserts, which from them was named Boiohemum, by which name it occurred in Velleius Paterculus. And though the Marcomanni first, and the Scelaves and Croatiens afterwards, became Masters of it, these last continuing their possession to this very day: yet it retaineth still the name of Bohemia amongst the Latines, as that Bohemerland amongst the Dutch.

It contains in compas about 550 English miles. The Soil is indifferently fruitful, and enriched with Mines of all sorts, except of Gold. Tin they have here in good plenty, the Mines whereof were first found out by a Cornish man, banished out of England, anno 1240. which discovery of Tin in these parts was, as faith my Author, in magnam iustitiam Richardi Comitis Cornubiæ, the meaneth that Richard which was afterwards King of the Romans: and no marvel, for in those times there was no Tin in all Europe but in England: Wood they have here good store; and in some of their Forests a Beast called Lemie, which hath hanging under its neck a Bladder full of scalding water with which, when life is hunted, the Dog to torture the Dogs, that the easily escape them. Of Corn they have sufficient for their own use, and sometimes also an increase above their spending, wherewith they do supply their neighbours of the Upper Palatinate: but they want Wine, the Air being too sharp and piercing to produce a good Vintage. And it yields also store of Saffron, no where to be bettered; with plenty of medicinal Drugs.

The principal Rivers hereof are, 1. the Elbe, or Albis, having here its spring, of whose course we have spoken elsewhere. 2. Egra, 3. the Muldaw or Multavia, and 4. the Wartiz, all three exonerating themselves into the Elbe, which runneth through the mid of the Country.

The Kingdom is not (as others) divided into Counties and Provinces, but into the Territories and possessions of several Lords, who have great authority and command over their Vassals. The figure of the whole is in a manner Circular, the Diameter whereof reacheth every way some 200 miles, containing in that compas 700 Cities, walled Towns and Castles, (as some say) 30000 Villages. It is inhabited by a people given to Drink and Gluttony, and yet valiant and with sense of Honour: this last belonging to the Nobility and Gentry, the former to the common people; but more moderately than most others of the German Nations. All of them, Princes or Plebeians, rich, poor, noble and base, use the Seleonian Language, as their Mother-tongue.

The chief Bohemian Captain that ever I read of was Zizka, who, in eleven Battels fought in the defence of the Hussites, against the Pope and his Confederates, prevailed and went away victorious; in suchom that at his death he willed the Bohemians to flea him, and make a Drum of his Skin; perfwading himself, if they so did, they could never be overcome. A fancy like to that of Scipio Africanus and Porticus K. of Britain, spoken of before. Scholars of most note, John Hus and Hierom of Prague, two eminent Divines, of whom more anon.

The Christian Faith was first here preached by S. Methodius the first Bishop and Apostle of the Moravians; an. 900 or thereabouts. Borziwoius, (whom some call Borfinus) the 8. Duke from Croacia, being the first Christian Prince and next to him Wenceslaus the 2. This last was most cruelly murdered by Bolleslaus his Brother at the instigation of Drabomirus, an obdurate Heathen, Mother to them both: who having caused the Ministers of the Lord to be butchered, and their bodies to lie unburied for two years together, was swallowed Coach and all, in that very place where their Bodies lay. Confirmed by this Prodigy, they continued constant in the Faith to this very day; though not without the intermixture of some notable Vanity. For one Picardus, coming out of the Low-countries, drew a great force of men and women unto him, pretending to bring them to the same fate of Perfection that Adam was in before his Fall; from whence they were called Picardi and Adammites. They had no respect unto Marriage; yet could they not accompany any Woman, until the Man coming to Adam, laid unto him, Faiber Adam, I am inflamed towards this Woman; and Adam made answer, Increase and multiply. They lived in an island which they called Paradisfe, and went stark naked: but they continued not long; for Zizka hearing of them, entered their Fools Paradisfe, and put them all to the sword, Anno 1416. But to make amends for this Folly, they were exceedingly zealous of the Reformation. For much about the same time the Works of Wiceliff were brought into Bohemia by a certain Scholar who had been Student in the University of Oxyria, which hapning into the hands of John Hfisse and Hierome of Prague, (two men whereof this Country doth much boast) wrought in their hearts a desire to reform the Church. A bulwark which they prosecuted so earnestly, that being summoned to the Council of Constance they were there condemned for Heretics and burnt, Anno 1414; yet had their Doctrine such deep root in the hearts of the people, that it could never be destroyed by the Tyrannies of War or Persecution (though both were used) to this very day; multitudes of the Professors of it living in this Kingdom under the names of Calistini and Sub uraque, (as before is said) but much both strenghtened and increased by the Writings of Luther, Meilandon, Calvin, and such other of the Protestant Doctors as travelled in the Work of Reformation. But this increase of strength and number proved their greatest weakness. For growing insolent upon the sense of their strength and power, they formed themselves into a party, got many of the Romish Catholics to adhere unto them, under colour of asserting their Civil Rights, and in the heat of some disputes, caused certain of the Emperor's Council to be thrown out of the Windows of the Council-chamber; and finally about the latter end of the Reign and Empire of Mathias, they broke out into open Arms. In the course whereof the Calvinists being of most power, and having got a King of their own Opinions, did disoblige the Lutherans and more moderate Papists, who had concurred with them at the first, that being invaded on the one side with a Lutheran Army under the command of the Duke of Saxony, and a Popish Army on the other by the Duke of Bavaria, they were in fine utterly supprest and made inconquerable: the conquering and successful Emperor (Ferdinand the 2.) taking this occasion to extirpate this Protestant Religion out of his Dominions.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Budweis, (conceived to be the Marobudum of Ptolemy) a Town towards Austria. 2. Ausp, near the head of the Elb. 3. Tabor, a strong Town built by Zizka, to be a Retreat for the Hussites. 4. Jaromir, and 5. Melnick, both upon the Moravia. 6. Litomysl, an Episcopall See, bordering on Moravia. 7. Pilsen, the last Town of this Kingdom which yielded to the prevailing Imperialists in the late long War about that Crown: and then also was betrayed to Count Tilly for a sum of money, by some of the Souldiers of Count Mansfeld, who was then absent, and Souldiers of Count Mansfeld, the Enemy. 8. Lihobad, had long defended it against the Enemy. 9. Egra, so called of the fame River, on which (near to the borders of the Upper Palatinat) it is strongly situate: a large, fair City, containing three miles in compass. Imperial once, but sold by the Emperor Ludovicus Bavarum to John King of Bohemia, for 40000 marks of Silver in compass 1613, for Sweetness of the place, Elegancy of the buildings, Pleasants of site, and Richness of soils, superiour far to Prague it self. 10. Prague, the Metropolis of the Kingdom, situate in the midst thereof, on the River Moldau; consisting of four several Towns each of which hath its several Customs, Laws, and Magistrates. The principal is called the Old Town, adorned with many goodly Buildings, a spacious Market-place, and a stately Council-hofe. The second, called the New Town, is separated from the Old by a Ditch of great depth and wideness. The third, called the Little Town is divided from the Old by the River Moldau, joyned to it by a beautiful Bridge, consisting of 24 Arches. And in this part thereof is the Hill Rachina, on the sides of which are many fair and stately Houses belonging to the Nobility, over-looked by the strong Castle of Wenceslaus, (situate on the top thereof) a magnificent Palace, wherein the Bohemian Kings and the later Emperours have kept their Residence. The 4th. Town is that of the Jews, who have here five Synagogues, and live according to their own Law. The whole City is rather large than fair, the Streets being in Winter very dirty, of ill smell in the Summer; the Buildings for the most part of Clay and Timber clapt up together without Art, and of little beauty. And though encompassed with Walls and Ditches, it is conceived to be but an open Town, (so poor and weak are the Defences;) inasmuch that whoever is master of the Field, will be master of the City also. And yet besides the honour of being the Royal Seat, it hath also of long time been an Archbishop's See, and was by Charles the fourth, Emperour and King of Bohemia, made an University. Near unto this Town was fought that memorable Battel between the Duke of Bavaria and Count Bucquoy, Lieutenant for the Emperor Ferdinand the second, with 50000 men, on the one side; and Frederick, newly elected King of Bohemia, with the Prince of Anhalt, the Count of Thurn, and 30000 men, on the other side. It was fought on the eighth of November style novo, wherein (such was the unfeared Will of God) the Victory fell into the Imperialists: the young Prince of Anhalt, Thurn, and Saxen with divers others, being taken Prisoners; the Bohemian Ordinance all surprised, Prague forced to yield unto the Victor and King Frederick with the Queen compelled to fly into Silesia. A most lamentable and unfortunate Loss, not to this people only, but to the whole cause of the reformed Religion. Yet it is not unworthy of our observation, that this great Battel was fought upon a Sunday, the 8. of November, about the time of Morning-prayer; in the Gospel appointed for which day (being then the 23. after Trinity-Sunday) is that famous passage, Reddite CÆSARI, quæ sunt CÆSARIS, i. e. Render unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsars; which seemed to judge the Quarrel on the Emperor's side.

But whether of the two Pretendents had the juster Cause, may best be seen by canvassing the Records of that State and Nation, (for the success of War is no standing Rule for measuring the Equity and Justice of the Causes of it:) by which it will be clearly seen, that since the creating of that Kingdom by the Scelaves or Cracians, it hath been evermore disposed at the Will of the Emperour, or by Election of the States and People. But I intend not at present to dispute that Point, but only lay down the Story of the Kings and People, as in other places, since the first coming of the Selavi. A Nation not known by that name till the time of Justinian, at what time they inhabited on the Banks of the Ister, but on the farther side thereof, opposite to Illyricum and Thrace, Imperial Provinces. Grown famous by their good Successes against that Empire, their name was taken up by the rest of the Sarmatians of Europe, who either wanting room, or not liking their colder Countries, passed on more Westward, and by degrees possessed themselves of those parts of Germany which formerly had been inhabited by the Almans, Quadrundans and Boiarians; but were then either quite forsaken, or but ill inhabited, by the drawing down of those people to the Roman Provinces, which they far better liked. They were divided at, or after their coming thus far West, into four main Bodies: that is to say, the Vimbri, possessed of the (now) Margravates of Brandenburg, Misnia, and Lusitania, as also of the Dukedoms of Mecklenburg and Pomerania; the Moravians, inhabiting in Moravia, the Lower Austria, and the Upper Hungary; the Poles, possessed of Poland, and the Dukedom of Silesia; and finally the Bohemians, who were confined within the limits of that Kingdom only.

what form of Government they lived at their first coming hither, is not certainly known. But being settled in these Countries of Poland and Bohemia, it was not long before they were created into several Kingdoms; occasioned by the coming of a new body of Scelaves, Cracians, and others of those scattered Nations, under the conduct of Zechinus, a great Prince amongst them, who about the year 640, together with his Brother Leches was banished Cracina, for a Murder. He being very acceptable to the Scelaves of Bohemia, who looked upon him as a Prince of their own original Extraction, one of the same Language, Laws or Customs that themselves were of, they admitted him to be their Chief or supreme Governour, by whatsoever name he was called at first: in honour and memory of whom, the Bohemians in their own Language do call themselves Zechians. After his death, the State relapsed again into a confused Anarchy, till the year 670; at what time, not respecting the Progeny of Zechinus, the Founder of their Commonwealth and first Estate, they fastned upon Cracus, a man of good esteem amongst them, and Elected him to be their Duke. Cracus in Julius, & magna apud Bohemos opinio, Princeps electus est, as Bertholdus telleth us. Cracus being dead, the Bohemians elected Libussa, his youngest Daughter; and of her Government soon wearied, they made choice of Primiislav for their Prince, and made him Husband to Libussa. A man taken from the Plough (as the Stories tell us) to espouse the Princess: it being ordered and agreed on by her many Suitors, that he (whoever he was) before whom Libussa purposely let loose, did first make a stand, should be the Husband of the Lady, and have the Government of the State. The Horse first makes a stand before Primiislav, being then at Plough (having perhaps some Mare in his Team) and he accordingly is received and admitted their Prince. There, with the other Dukes from the time of Cracus, the first Legislator of the Bohemians, take in order thus,

The Dukes of BOHEMIA.

1. Crucus, the Law-giver or Lycurgus of Bohemia.
2. Libussa, youngest Daughter to Crucus, with Primiislav her Husband, (a second Quintus) Founder of Prague.
3. Neramiislav, Son of Primiislav and Libussa.
4. Anahath, one of the Sons of Neramiislav, contemporary with Charles the Great.
5. Voricus, Son of Anathath.
6. Wenceslaus.
7. Bela.
8. N. fricicus, Son of Bela.
9. Borizovius, The first Christian Prince of the Bohemians, co-temporary with the Emperour Anuph.
10. Shitigudus, Son to Borizovius.
11. Pladislav, Brother to Shitigudus.
12. Wenceslaus II. surnamed the Saint, slain by his Brother Boleslav.
13. Boleslav, a wicked and ungodly Prince.
14. Boleslav II. Son of the former, a great advocate of Christianity amongst his people.
15. Boleslav III. one of the Sons of Boleslav the second.
16. Jaromir, Son to Boleslav the third.
17. Udalricus, Brother of Boleslav the third, and Uncle of Jaromir.
18. Fredislav, Son to Udalricus.
19. Shitigudus II. Son to Fredislav.

20. Vratislav, Brother of Shitigudus, whom, for his manifold defects, the Emperor Henry the 4. created the first King of Bohemia, Anno 1086. Whose Successors take thus out of Bertholdus and Dubravius.

The Kings and Dukes of BOHEMIA.

1. Vratislav, the Brother of Shitigudus, Duke of Bohemia, was by Henry the 4. at Mentz created King.
2. Conrade, Brother to Vratislav, notwithstanding that his Brother had three Sons, was elected Duke of Bohemia.
3. Breislav, Son to Vratislav, the two Sons of Conrade being rejected, is by the Bohemians chosen Duke.
4. Borizovius, the 4. Son of Breislav, is chosen by the Bohemians his eldest brothers then all living.
5. Suoplenus, Cousin-german to Borizovius, by the consent and favour of the people, deposed Borizovius, and caused himself to be elected in his place.
6. Pladislav II. Brother to Borizovius, preferred by the people to the Throne before Orho the brother; and Henry the Son of Suoplenus, the last Prince.
7. Sobeslav brother to Pladislav, promoted to the State before the Son of Pladislav.
8. Pladislav III. Son to Pladislav the 2. (the four Sons of Sobeslav omitted) is chosen and crowned the second King of Bohemia by Frederick the Emperor; but deposed by the States, because he was not by them formerly elected, according to their Privileges and Customs.
9. Oldericus, the third Son of Sobeslav, his elder Brethren yet living, was by the people elected in the room of Pladislav and his Son Frederick, whom the Emperor Frederick had by force established in the Throne.
10. Sobeslav II. second Son of Sobeslav; was by Frederick above-named expelled; and he also by the Bohemians.
11. Conrade, Grandchild to Orho, the Brother of Suoplenus, elected by the Bohemians in place of Frederick; between which two Princes there was continual War.
12. Wenceslaus, Uncle unto Conrade, and Son of Orho before said, was preferred before many nearer the Succession. Him Primiislav expelled, but fearing his return, quitted Prague.
13. Henry, Bishop of Prague, a stranger to the Blood, was by a general consent elected Duke.
14. Pladislav IV. brother to Primiislav, the Son of Wenceslaus being put by, succeeded Henry, and soon after reigned.
15. Primiislav, elected by the Bohemians, and by the Emperor Philip crowned the 3. King of Bohemia at Mentz, was brother to Pladislav the 4.
16. Ottocarus, notwithstanding that Wenceslaus his elder brother had been crowned in his Father's life-time, was acknowledged King. He was slain in Battel by Rodolphus the Emperor near the Morb, a River of Moravia, Anno 1278.
17. Wenceslaus II. Son of Ottocarus.
18. Wenceslaus III. Son to Wenceslaus the II.

- the last of the Bohemian Princes of the masculine race.
- 1304 19. Rodolphus, Son to the Emperor Alberus, is by the Potency of his Father, and the election of the States, seated on the Throne, being otherwise a stranger to the Blood-royal of Bohemia.
- 1305 20. Henry, Duke of Carinthia, the Son of Meinard, Earl of Tyrol, and Husband to Anne, the second Daughter of Wenceslaus the 2. is chosen by the Bohemians: but being weary of his Government, they elect John Earl of Luxemburg. Finally Henry was murdered by one of his Nephews.
- 1311 21. John, Earl of Luxemburg, Son to Henry the seventh Emperor, and Husband to Elizabeth, youngest Daughter to Wenceslaus the 2. is elected, the Lady Anne yet living.
- 1346 22. Charles, Son to John, and Emperor, of that name the fourth, the Author of the Golden Bull.
- 1362 23. Wenceslaus IV. Emperor also, in whose time the Troubles of the Hussites and the Valour of Zizka was famous.
- 1418 24. Sigismund, Brother to Wenceslaus, maketh himself King by force; and at his death commended Alberus, Duke of Austria, the Husband of his Daughter Elizabeth, unto the States of the Kingdom.
- 1437 25. Albertus, Duke of Austria, elected upon the commendation of Sigismund by the Bohemian Lords.
- 1440 26. Ladislavus, Son to Albert, who being the Brother of two Sisters, commended yet one George Pogibrachius unto the States, as fittest to succeed him.
- 1458 27. George Pogibrachius, neither by Affinity or Consanguinity of the Blood, succeeded. And he, though he had three Sons, yet, for the benefit of his Country, advised the Nobles, after his death to elect their King from Poland.
- 1471 28. Ladislavus II. Son to Casmir King of Poland, and to Elizabeth the younger Daughter of Albertus Duke of Austria, the issue of Anne the Elder Sister still living, elected King of Bohemia.
- 1516 29. Ladovicus, Son to Ladislavus, elected and Crowned by the means of his Father, then living King of Hungary also.
- 1526 30. Ferdinand, Archduke of Austria, Brother to Charles the 5. and Husband to Anne, Sister to Ladovicus, by his Letters reverent acknowledged that he was chosen King of Bohemia not of any right, but of meer force will according to the Liberties of that Kingdom.
- 1565 31. Maximilian, eldest Son of Ferdinand, was in his Father's lifetime, and at his fuit, elected King, Anno 1540, into which he actually succeeded on his Father's death.
- 1575 32. Rodolphus, Emperor of Germany, and the eldest Son to Maximilian, elected King.
- 1610 33. Matthias, Brother of Rodolphus, was at the joint fuit of them both nominated and appointed King of Bohemia, by the general consent of the States, during his Brother's lifetime, viz. An. 1610. which nomination they both protest in their Letters reverent should not be to the prejudice of the Liberties and ancient Customs of that Kingdom.
- 1618 34. Ferdinand II. Archduke of Austria and of

- the House of Gretz, was by Matthias adopted for his Son, and declared Successor to the Crown of Bohemia, but never formally and legally elected: for which cause, amongst others, he was by the States rejected, in like case as Ladislavus the 3. had formerly been.
- 1619 35. Frederick, Elector Palatine, the strongest German Prince of the Catholists, and most potent by his great Alliances, was elected King of Bohemia, and Crowned at Prague, together with his Wife, on the fifth day of November. This Prince derived his descent from the Lady Sophia, Sister to Ladislavus the 2. King of Poland and Bohemia; and married Elizabeth, Daughter to James King of Great Britain and Anne of Denmark, which Anne descended from the Lady Anne, Daughter of Albertus of Austria, and elder Sister to Elizabeth, Mother to Ladislavus the 2. above-named, from whom the Claim of Austria is derived.
- 1621 36. Ferdinand III. Son of Ferdinand the II. elected King of Bohemia during the life both of his Father and of Frederick the Prince Elector also; after whose death he succeeded in this Kingdom both in right and fact; King of Hungary also Archduke of Austria, and Emperor of Germany, now living, Anno 1648; more moderate in his Councils than his Father Ferdinand, and more inclinable to Peace, (though honoured with a more signal Victory against the Sweeds, in the Battle of Norlingen, than his Father was in all his life) which the Conclusions made at Munster are sufficient proof of.

Of the Revenues, Arms, and other things which concern this Kingdom, we shall speak hereafter, when we have took a view of the rest of the Provinces which are incorporated into it.

2. MORAVIA is bounded on the East with Hungary, on the West with Bohemia, on the North with Silesia, and on the South with the Lower Austria and the River Teya fenced on the west by the Woods and Mountains of Bohemia; part of the Herzian Forrest; on the North, by some Spurs or Branches of it, called Archberg by Prohm; on the two other sides open like an Half-moon or Semicircle. It is the most fruitful place of Corn in all Germany, and hath no small store of Frankincense; which contrary to the nature of it, groweth not on a Tree, but out of the Earth; and that too (which adds much to the Miracle, if Dubravius do report it rightly) in the shape and figure of those parts which men and women do most endeavour to conceal.

The former Inhabitants of this Province were the Marcomanni and part of the Quadi, against whom when M. Antoninus the Emperor made War, he had unware run himself into such a Streight, that his Army was environed with Mountains one way, and Enemies the other. To this (as Calamities seldom go alone) was added the extraordinary heat and drought then being. The Emperor thus put to his plunges, came the Captain of his Guard, telling him, that he had in his Army a Legion of Christians (Milites he calleth them) which by Prayer to their own God could obtain any thing. The Emperor fendeth for them, desiring them to make supplication for the Army: which they did, and God Almighty that never turneth a deaf ear to the prayer of his Servants, when when they are either for his Glory, the Churches or their own good, scattered and vanquished the Quadi with Thunder-shot and Artillery from Heaven, and refreshed the faint and dying Romans with many a gentle and pleasant Shower. This Miracle purchased to that Legion the surname of severus, i. e. the Thunderer, and induced the Emperor to honour men of that holy profession, and to make an end of the Fourth Persecution, An Ch. 174. Thus Xiphilinus hath it in his Dion: which coming from the Pen of an Heathen, as this Author was, is of more credit in a matter of such concernment unto Christianity, than if it had proceeded from Socrates, Sozomen, or any other Ecclesiastical Writer.

Places of most note herein are, 1. Olmutz, on the River Mach (or Morava) the chief Town of the Country, and a small University; near which, out of the Hill Odenburg bordering on Silesia, springeth the great River of Oder, whose course we have before described. 2. Brix, on the River Swarta, the Seat of the ancient Marquesses. 3. Raditzsch, and 4. Cremser, both upon the Marb or Morava. 5. Znaim, on the Teya. 6. Niclasburg, (Mons Nicolai in the Latine) bordering on the Lower Austria, 7. Iglau. 8. Newburg. 9. Weiskirchen. 10. Beserleitz, which little memorable. 11. Craditz, near to which (and in this place only) the Frankincense is found to grow in the shape and form before mentioned.

The old Inhabitants hereof (as before is said) were the Marcomanni and the Quadi: after them that Tribe or Nation of the Slaves, who, from their habitation on the River Morava, called themselves Moravians, and the Country which they dwelt in by the name of Moravia, (the Dutch call it Merbeten.) They were extended at that time over all the Lower Austria, to the banks of the Danub on the South, and as far as to the River Tibiscus, over-spreading a great part of the Upper Hungary towards the East. Governed at the first by their own Kings, the first whose name occurs being Rafai, in the time of the Emperor Levis the Godly; by him taken Prisoner, and his Realm made tributary to the Empire. After him succeeded Harmadurus, and then Suctonepus; in whose time the Moravians and other Nation of the Slaves received the Gospel by the preaching of Cyril and Methodius, two Græcian Doctors; officiating all Divine Services in the Slavonian or vulgar Language. For which when they made suit to the Pope then being, to whose Authority (as Patriarch of the Western Empire) they were made obnoxious, and that the Pope and Cardinals delay'd the business; a voice was heard, as if it had come from Heaven, saying these words, Omnia Spiritus laudet Dominum, et omnis Lingua confiteatur ei. Upon which Miracle their Suit was granted at the last, and a Letter Decretal sent unto that effect from Pope John the 8. to Simeon (or Sfentopelcher, as some call him) above mentioned. A Privilege by them enjoyed till 200 years, and then reversed by Gregory 7. commonly called Pope Hildebrand, in his Letters to Vratislavus the first King of Bohemia, An. 1086.

But to return unto the Story Suabobegius, Son to Suabopetrus, succeeded next, deposed, or rather beaten out of his Country, by the Emperor Arnolph, for denying the accustomed Tribute. A Prince of great spirit, and of as great command; having at one time under him not Moravia only, according to the largest limits, but Silesia, Bohemia, and Polonia also. Arnolph not able otherwise to effect his purpose, called in the Hungarians (though at that time Pagans) by whose help the Moravian was subdued, and his Kingdom flattered into pieces; seized on by the Hungarians, Poles, and other Nations, and finally reduced to the present Limits. Afterwards it was made a Marquitate, (but by whom we find not;) one of the Marquesses hereof being Jadocus Barbatus, elected Emperor An. 1410. After whose death, Sigismund, his next Heir, Emperor and King of Bohemia, gave it to his Son-in-law Albert Duke of Austria, Anno 1417, who in the end succeeded him in all his Estates; since which time it hath always gone along with the Crown of Bohemia.

The Arms of the old Dukes or Princes of it were Azure, an Eagle charged Or and Guies, member and langued of the same.

3. SILESIA, (or SCHLESIE, as the Dutch call it) is bounded on the East with Poland, on the West with Lusatia, on the North with Brandenburg, and on the South with Moravia. Wholly encompassed with Mountains, except towards the North, which lets in a sharp Air upon them: the mid-land part being full of Woods, but without Minerals.

Chief Cities are, 1. Jagendorff, or Jegerendorff, of late the Patrimony of John Georgius of the Family of Brandenburg, commonly called the Marquess of Jagendorff. The Lands and Estates in his possession were first given by Ladislavus King of Bohemia to George firnamed Pius one of the sons of Frederick of Brandenburg, the first Marquess of Opasch of this House, for the many good services he had done him. But his posterity being extinct, they fell to the said John Georgius, Brother to Sigismund the Elector; proscribed by Ferdinand the second, for adhering to the party of Frederick Prince Elector Palatine: A Prince of great note and activeness in the beginning of the late German and Bohemian Wars. 2. Munfberg, which gives the title of Duke to the posterity of George Pogibrachius, once King of Bohemia, advanced by him unto this Honour and a fair Estate. 3. Glatz, or Glatz, the last Town of Bohemia which held out for Frederick the Elector against that Emperor. 4. Glogau, a strong Town on the River Oder. 5. Neisse, on a River so named, an Episcopal See. 6. Breslaw, in Latine, Cracovia, so called from Vratislavus the Founder of it, once one of the Dukes of this Province, by whose procurement it was made an Episcopal See, An. 970. or thereabouts. It is situate on the River Oder, all the water wherein could not save it from being burnt down to the ground, Anno 1341, but it was presently re-edified with altar-free-stone, and is now one of the prettiest Cities (for the bigness of it) in all Germany, fair, populous, and well contrived with open and even Streets, the chief of the Country. 7. Oppelen, on the Oder also, well fortified both by Art and Nature, barricaded by the River on the West, and on the East with good Out-works, strong Walls, and a fair Castle. 8. Straßen. 9. Reichenbach, both made Towns of War since the beginning of the Bohemian Troubles.

There are also within this Province the two Seigniories of Prignitz and Croffen, so called from the chief Towns thereof, belonging to the Elector of Brandenburg; the two Dukedoms of Opfritz and Zator, appertaining to the Crown of Poland; as also the Dukedom of Lignitz, and Sweinitz, all of them bearing the names of their principal Towns: of which two last, Sweinitz is in the immediate possession of the Kings of Bohemia; and Lignitz hath a Duke of its own, but an Homager and Tributary of that King.

The first Inhabitants hereof were the Marsigni, Barii, Gabini, and some part of the Quadi. In the partition of the Eastern parts of Germany amongst the Slaves, it was laid unto the Dukedom or Kingdom of Poland, continuing a part thereof till the time of Ladislavus the 2. who, being driven out of his Kingdom by his Brethren, was by the mediation of Frederick Barbouroff elected in this Country, to be held under the Sovereignty of the King of Poland. Divided betwixt his 3 Sons, & afterwards subdivided amongst their posterities, according to the ill Custom of Germany, it became broke at last into 14 Dukedoms, of 1. Breslaw, 2. Oppeln, 3. Ratibor, 4. Cassis, 5. Beuthen, 6. Glogaw, 7. Sagan, 8. Olema, 9. Stein, 10. Falkenberg, 11. Sweinitz, 12. Lignitz, 13. Opitz, and 14. Zator. Of all which, only the two last do remain to Poland; the 5 first being made subject to the Kings of Bohemia by Wenceslaus the II, the five next by King John of Luxemburg; Lignitz remaining in the possession of a Proprietary Duke: (as before was said) and Sweinitz, given to Charles the IV. Emperor and King of Bohemia, by the Will and Testament of Bolenslaus the last Duke all: Silesia by this means (except the Dukedoms of Opitz, and Zator) being added to the Crown of Bohemia, of which it is rather an incorporate than subject Province.

4. LUSATIA, by the Dutch called Lusnitz, is bounded on the East with Silesia, on the West with Misnia, on the North with Brandenburg, and on the South with Bohemia. The Country is rough and full of Woods, yet plentiful enough of Corn, and of such Fruits as naturally arise out of the Earth: so populous and thick set with People, that though it be but a little Province, it is able to arm 20000 Foot as good as any in Germany. Most commonly it is divided into the Higher, and the Lower: the first confining on Bohemia, the last on Brandenburg.

Places of most note in the Higher Lusnitz, are 1. Bautzen, (Badislinum the Latins call it) the first Town attempted and taken in by the Duke of Saxony; when he took upon him the execution of the Emperor's Ban against Frederick Elector Palatine, then newly chosen King of Bohemia. The poor Prince in the mean time was in an ill condition, the Saxons being the head of the Lutherans, and the Bavarian chief of the Papists party, arming both against him. So jealous are both sides of the active and restless Calvinian Spirit, as to leave no means untried for the suppressing of it. Seated it is upon the Spre, and for the most part is the Seat of the Governour for the King of Bohemia. 2. Coritz, upon the River Neisse, which gave the Title of Duke to John, Brother of Sigismund, Emperor and King of Bohemia, and Father of Elizabeth, the last Dutches of Luxemburg, before it fell into the hands of the Dukes of Burgundy. A fine neat Town, well frequented, and strongly fortified; founded about the year 1231, and not long after so consumed by a mercileless Fire, An. 1391. at ne unica domus remanserit, as my Author hath it; that there was not one House left of the old foundation. But it was presently re-built in a more beautiful form, and of more strong materials; than before it was, both publick and private Buildings very neat and elegant. 3. Zittau, on the same River, bordering on Bohemia. 4. Lawben, 5. Lubben, 6. Camitz, of which little memorable, but that together with the former they may make up those six Towns which are confederate together in a stricter League for the mutual Defence and preservation, but under the Protection, and with the approbation, of the Kings of Bohemia. Then in the Lower Lusatia there is 7. Spremburg, so named from its situation on the River Spre, which runneth through the whole Country, and in ancient times was called Suevus; supposed by some (and not improbably) either to give name to the Suevians, or to take it from them; that potent Nation inhabiting originally betwixt this and the Elbe. 8. Tribel, upon the Neisse. 9. Cathuse, upon the Spre, or Suevus, which, together with some parts of the Lower Lusatia, belongs unto the Marquesses of Brandenburg.

The first Inhabitants hereof are by some supposed (and but supposed) to be the Benemes of Tacitus; in the partition of these parts of Germany amongst the Slaves, made subject to the Winibis, or Vends, the greatest and most spreading Nation of all these People. When and by whom first made a Marquessate, I am not able to say for certain; but sure I am, it hath been very much given to the choice of Masters. It had first a Marquess of its own; Conrade the Marquess hereof, who died in the year 1156, being by the Emperor Henry the fifth made Marquess of Misnia, added it unto that Estate; and it remained for some time united to it. After, being seized on by the Poles, it was sold to Frederick the 2. Marquess and Elector of Brandenburg; who, keeping Cathuse and some other Towns bordering next upon him in his own possession, surrendered the rest on Composition to George King of Bohemia, claiming it from a Grant made by Henry the 4. to Freislaus the first Bohemian King, An. 1087. A Grant on which no Possession followed, unless it were the Homage and acknowledgment of the Princes of it, holding it afterwards of that Crown as the Lord in chief.

Thus have we brought these four Provinces into the power and possession of the Kings of Bohemia, remaining still distinct in their Laws and Governments, (as several limbs of the great Body of the Slaves made up into one Estate) though joined together in the person of one supreme Governour, who is severally admitted and acknowledged by each Province distinctly for itself, and not by any one of them in the name of the rest. Out of all which so laid together there may be raised the sum of three millions of Crowns yearly for the King's Revenues, towards the defrayment of all Charges.

The Arms of this Kingdom are Mars, a Lion with a forked Tail Luna, crowned Sol. Which Arms was first given by Frederick Barbarossa to Wladislaus the third, made by him King of Bohemia; in regard of the good Service he had done him at the Siege of Milain. And though Wladislaus was depolyed by the States of that Kingdom; because never formally and legally elected by them; yet his Successors keep those Arms to this very day.

15. BRANDENBURG.

THE Marquessate of BRANDENBURG is bounded on the East with the Kingdom of Poland, on the West with the Dukedom of Saxony, on the North with Pomerania and part of Mecklenburg, and on the South with Misnia, Lusatia and Silesia. So called from Brandeburg, the chief Town of it; and because once the Marches of the Empire against the Slaves: divided afterwards into the Old, the New, and the Middle Marches, according as they were extended farther towards Poland by little and little, as the Emperours were able to get ground of those potent people.

The Country containeth in length from East to West 60 Dutch or 240 Italian miles, and is of correspondent breadth: the whole compass making up 540 miles of the last account. Within which Trade are comprehended 55 Cities and walled Towns, 80 Towns of trade, (Markt Steten, or Market-Towns, as they commonly call them) 38 Castles or Manion-houses of Noblemen, 17 Monasteries, and 10 Parks well stored with Beasts of game: the Country otherwife (considering the Extent thereof) being but thinly inhabited, nor well provided of necessaries, excepting Corn, of which these North-East Countries afford very great plenty.

The Religion of this Country is for the most part according to the form and Doctrine of Luther; first introduced and authorized by Marquess Joachim the first. In this estate it continued till the Breach betwixt George William, the Father of the present Elector, and the Palatine of Nemburg. At which time the Palatine, having married married a Daughter of Bavaria, the most potent Prince of the Papish Party, reconciled himself to the Church of Rome, the better to assure himself of the Aid of Spain: and this Elector, having married a Sister of Frederick the fifth, Prince Elector Palatine, the most Potent Prince of the Calvinians, declared himself to be of that Party and Opinion, the better to assure himself to the Aid of Holland, An. 1614. But when on the pervasion of his Wife he set out an Edict for suppressing the Lutheran Forms, and authorizing the Calvinian only throughout his Dominions, (which was year 1615.) the people of this Marquessate rose in Arms against him: the difference being thus composed, that the Lutheran Forms only should be used in all the Churches of the Marquessate of Brandenburg, for the contentation of the people; and that the Marquessate should have the exercise of his new Religion for himself, his Lady, and those of their Opinion, in his private Chapells.

1. ALTE-MARCK, or the OLD-MARCK, so called because the ancient Marches of the Empire against the Slaves, lieth betwixt Luxemburg and the Elb, with which it is bounded on the East. The chief Town thereof are, 1. Tangermund, on the Elb, where it receives the River Tanagra or Angra; honoured sometimes with the Residence of Charles the fourth. 2. Steindal, the chief of these Old Marches. 3. Solwedel divided into the Towns, the old and the new. 4. Gardelenburg, fortified with the strong Castle of Eislimp. 5. Opferburg, 6. Senhelfen, said by some, but fallily, to be called from the Senners, whom they would make the old inhabitants of this Country, (by all good Writers made to be originally a Gallick Nation.) 7. Werbe, of which little memorable.

In the MIDDLE-MARCHES or UPPER-MARCK, lying betwixt the Elb and the River Oder, the Towns of most note are, 1. Butzaw, a Commendatory of the Temples in former times. 2. Spandaw upon the Spre, a well-fortified place. 3. Oderburg, called so from that River, on which it is situate; remarkable for a strong Castle built by Marquess Albert the second, at which all Passengers by water are to pay their Toll. 4. Brandenburg, on the River Havel, a Bishop's See, the Seat of the Lords Marchers in former times, taking name from hence: by some said to be built by Brennus, Captain of the Gauls; more truly by one Brandus a Prince of the Francians, Anno Ch. 140. 5. Francford (for distinction sake) named Ad Odam, on which River it is situate; the Soil about it being so plentifully stored with Corn and Wines that it is not easy to affirm whether Bacchus or Ceres be most enamoured of it. It was made an University by Marquess Joachim, An. 1506. and it is also a flourishing and famous Empory, though not comparable to that of the other Francford, seated on the Maine. 6. Berlin the ordinary Residence of the Marquess, situate on the River Spre, (or Suevus) which rising in Lusatia, falleth into the Albis. 7. Havelburg, on the River Havel, a Bishop's See, who acknowledged the Arch-Bishop of Magdeburg for his Metropolitain.

3. In the NEW-MARCK, extended from the Oder to the Borders of Poland, and called so because last conquered, and added to the account of the German Empire. There is Culmburg, a very strong and defensible Town, seated on the two Rivers Warta and Odera, fortified with great charge by John, Son of Marquess Joachim, and by him intended for his Seat. 2. Stettinburg, and 3. Landspitz, both upon the Warta, 4. Soldin in former times the chief of this Marck. 5. Berlinch, or New Berlin: and 6. Falkenburg, a strong Town, and fortified with as strong a Castle, towards Pomerania.

The first Inhabitants of this Country were the Varnis

and Nathones, part of the great Nations of the Suevians, and after them the Helvidi, Witini, Beirani, and other Tribes of the Winibis, the greatest Nation of the Slaves, who possessed themselves of it. But Brandenburg being won from them by the Emperor Henry the first, An. 620. (at what time the Gospel was first preached amongst them) the Country hereabouts was given by him to Sigefride Earl of Rengelsheim, (eldest Son of Theodorick, the second Earl of Oldenburg), a valiant Gentleman with the Title of Marquess or Lord Marcher, An. 927, upon condition that he should defend those Marches (the Old Marches, as they now call it) against the Slaves. These Marquesses were at the first Officiaries, at the appointment of the Emperor, and to him accountable. Sigard, the fourth from Sigefride, governing here for Otho the third, was the first Elector of these Marquesses, and Odo the second of that name, and third from Sigard, the last that held this Honour at the Emperor's pleasure; that Dignity after his decease being made hereditary in the person of Albert of Anhalt, surnamed Orfus, by the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa. Which Albert having very much enlarged his Border by the Conquest and extermination of the Slaves, caused the unpopulated Country to be planted with the new Dutch Colonies out of Holland, Zeland, Flanders, and those parts of the Netherlands. The House of this Albert being extinct in John the fourth, it was given by the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria to Lewis his Son; by Otho the Brother of that Lewis, sold for 200000 Ducats unto Charles the fourth; by Sigismund, the Son of Charles, to Jodocus Marquess of Moravia: but afterwards being redeemed again, it was by the said Sigismund conferred on Frederick Burgrave of Nuremberg, in recompence of his faithful Service in the Wars of Hungary and Bohemia. In his posterity it remaineth, but much increased in Power and Patrimony by the additions of the Dukedoms of Prussia, Cleve, Gulick and Berg, the Marquissates of Onspack and Jagerndoff, the Earl-dom of Mark in Westphalen, now a part of Cleveland, the Lordships of Prignitz and Croffen in Silesia, the Towns of Hess and Culmbach in Vaithland, with the County of Raphin, and the Town and Territory of Cathuse in the Lower Lusatia. Inomuch that this is now the most powerful Family in all Germany. The Marquesses hereof from Sigefride to Albert, the Son of Orfus, &c. follow in this order.

The Marquesses of BRANDENBURG.

1. Sigefride, Earl of Rengelsheim, made the first Marquess of this Border by the Emperor Henry the first.
2. Gero, by the appointment of Otho the first.
3. Bruno, Earl of Witini, created Marquess hereof by the same Emperor.
4. Hugh the Son of Bruno, by the favour of Otho the third.
5. Sigard, the Brother of Hugh, made by the same Emperor the first Marquess-Elector.
6. Theodorick, the Son of Sigard, outed of his Command by Misivoius one of the Princes, of the Slaves named Oboviti.
7. Odo, Earl of Solwedel, (the Slaves being beaten and expelled) created Marquess and Elector by Conrade the 2.
8. Odo II. Son of Odo the first, proscribed by Henry the 4. for joining with Rodolph Duke of Schwaben in the War against him.
9. Primsflaus, King of the Oboviti, (the Ancestor of the Dukes of Mecklenburg) was advanced unto these Honors by the said Henry the 4. and held them unto his death. After which it was made

- made hereditary by the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa, in the Person of Albert of Anhalt, the Son of Orto.
- 1152 10. Albert of Anhalt, the first hereditary Marquess, Father of Bernard, who was created Elector and Duke of Saxony, in the place of Henry fringed the Lion, by the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa.
11. Orto Son of Albert.
12. Orto II. Son of Orto the 1.
13. Albert II. Brother of Orto the 2.
14. John, Son of Albert the 2.
15. John II. Son of John the 1.
16. Conrad, Brother of John the 2.
17. John III. Son of Conrad.
18. Waldemar, Brother of John the 3.
19. Waldemar II. Nephew of Waldemar the 1. by his Brother Henry.
20. John IV. brother of Waldemar the second, the last Marquess of the House of Anhalt; the Marquissate inheriting to the Empire for want of Heirs.
21. Lewis of Bavaria, created Marquess and Elector of Brandenburg by his Father, the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria, on the said Election.
22. Lewis II. surnamed the Roman, on the Requisition of his brother, succeeded in the Marquissate and Electoral Dignity.
23. Orto, brother to Lewis the first and second, who fold the Marquissate and Electoral Dignity to Charles the fourth.
24. Wenceslaus, Son of Charles the fourth, afterwards King of Bohemia, and Emperor of the Romans.
25. Sigismund, brother of Wenceslaus, Emperor of the Romans, King of Hungary and Bohemia, Earl of Luxemburg; who fold this Marquissate to Jodocus Marquess of Moravia, and having afterwards redeemed it, conferred the same on
- 1416 26. Frederick, Burgrave of Nuremberg, solemnly invested herein at the Council of Constance An. 1414, for which Investiture he paid into the Emperor the sum of 400000 Crowns.
- 1440 27. Frederick II. Son of Frederick the first, to whom the Emperor Frederick the 3. gave the Dukedom of Pomerania.
- 1470 28. Albert, brother of Frederick the 2. called the Achilles of Germany, relinquished to Bugislaus the 10. the possession of Pomerania; but his Successors ever since have retained the Title and kept on foot their Pretensions to it. From Frederick his second Son descended Albert the first Duke of Prussia, Frederick the first Marquess of Onspach, George the first Marquess of Jägerndorf, and Albert called the Albionides of Germany, who ho harassed Francia in the days of Charles the fifth.
- 1486 29. John, Son of Albert.
- 1499 30. Joachim, Son of John, who founded the University of Reformation, Anno 1506, and authorized the Reformation of Religion in his time begun.
- 1535 31. Joachim II. Son of Joachim the first.
- 1571 32. John George, Son of Joachim the second.
33. Joachim-Frederick, Son of John-George.
34. John-Sigismund, Son of Joachim-Frederick, who had to Wife the Lady Anna, Daughter of Albert-Frederick the second Duke of Prussia and of Mary Eleonor his Wife, eldest Daughter of William the first, Duke of Cleve.

- 1620 35. George-William, Son of John Sigismund and the Lady Anna, claiming in her right the Dukedoms of Cleve, Guick and Berg, the Earldoms of Mark and Ravensburg, and the Seigniority of Ravensstein; which he possessed a while, divided with his Cousin Wolfgangus Palatine of Newburg, Son of Magdalen the younger Sister of Mary-Eleonor. But falling out about their Partage, the Palatine of Newburg called in the Spaniards, and the Father of this Marquess, in behalf of his Son, called in the Confederate States of the Netherlands, to assert their Titles. After the death of Bugislaus the last Duke of Pomerania, he was to have succeeded also in that Estate, then possessed by the Swedes. Of the Agreement made between them, and the great Accrument thereby following to the House of Brandenburg, we shall speak more there.
36. Frederick-William, Son of George-William, now Elector of Brandenburg.

The Territories of this Family are the greatest, as before is said, of any in Germany, but a great part thereof is very barren, and his Subjects in those parts as poor as the Country; much of his new accessions yielding little but the Titles only. So that neither in Revenue or Power he is able to keep rank with the Duke of Saxony; his ordinary Revenue hardly amounting at the utmost to 200000 l. per annum, which is but half of the Receipts of the Duke of Saxony.

POMERANIA is bounded on the East with Prussia, from which it is parted by the River Weyssell or Vistula; on the West with Mecklenburg, divided from it by the River Rantz; on the North with the Baltick Sea, extended on the Coast hereof for the space of 200 English miles; and on the South with the Marquissate of Brandenburg. So named from the Pomorz, or Pomerania Nation of the Slavians to whose share it fell, or from the situation of it on the Sea-shore, as the word in the Slavonian doth seem to import.

The Country is for the most part plain, abundantly fruitful in Corn, carried hence to Danzick, and transported thence to all parts of Christendom in their times of Scarcity: yielding also good store of Pasturage, and great Herds of Cattel; with plenty of Butter, Cheese, Honey, and some reasonable quantities of Flax. Populous it is, and those people of a very strong Constitution as living under a sharp and piercing Air. The whole is divided into the Continent, and the Islands: the Continent into 1. the Upper Pomerania, bordering upon Mecklenburg, extended from the Rantz to the River Oder; 2. the Lower, reaching from the Oder to that part hereof which is now called 3. Pomerellia, betwixt it and Prussia subject of long time to the Crown of Poland, and there we shall hear farther of it.

Chief places in the UPPER arc, 1. Bard, at the mouth of the River Rantz, taking name from thence; a well-traded Town, and many times the Seat of the Dukes of this hitherto most Pomerania. 2. Wolgast, upon the Baltick Sea, over against the Isle of Usedom, the chief of this part of Pomerania, from whence the Dukes hereof are called the Dukes of Pomerania Wolgast; the first Town taken in by Gustavus Adolphus, King of Sweden, in his famous War for relief of Germany, Anno 1630. 3. Straelsund, a Town of great Trading and much resort, seated upon the same Sea also, opposite to the Isle of Rügen; a Town of great name in the course of the German Wars. 4. Gripwald, on the same Sea, betwixt Wolgast and Straelsund, made an University, Anno 1456. 5. Anclam, upon the River Pone. 6. Triebstet, situate on a Lake out of which the said River hath its course.

Then in the LOWER Pomerania there is 7. Camin, an Episcopal See, situate on the Baltick Shore, over against the Isle of Wollin. 8. Calberg, a strong Town on the same shore also, at the fall of the Perisus into the Sea. 9. Caplin, the last Sea-Town of this Tract lying towards Prussia. 10. Stargard, on the Isa, more within the Land; is also 11. Griffenberg upon the Rega, and 12. Stein on the Oder; once a poor Fish-Town, now the Metropolis of this part of the Country; rising to this greatness after the embracing of Christianity by the fall of Piscus, formerly the chief Mart-Town of all these parts; the ordinary Seat of the Dukes of the Lower Pomerania, the Dukes of Pomerania-Stein, as for distinction sake they are called to them.

The Islands hereunto pertaining are those of Rügen, Wollin, Usedom, touched upon before, but now more punctually to be handled. That of most note is ROGÉN, over against Straelsund, from which it is divided only by a narrow Strait, in length seven Dutch miles, and as much in breadth; so that the Compa of it, if it were exactly round, would amount to 20 German, or 100 Italian miles; and yet it was once bigger than it is. But in the year 1309, by the force of an outrageous Tempest, a great part of it, lying towards the South-east, as far as to the Isle of Ruden, (then conjunct hereto) was torn away, and sunk to deep into the bottom of the Sea, that now the greatest Ships that be fail over it. The Island is plentiful of Corn, the Granary of Straelsund, as they call it commonly; and reasonably well stored with Cattel; full of Bays, Creeks, and winding Shores, with many and vast Promontories thrusting into the Sea, which gives them great increase of Fishing. Anciently it belonged to the Crown of Denmark, till given by Waldemar the third to Bugislaus and Barnim Dukes of Pomerania: continuing ever since part of that Estate. The chief Town of it is called Bergen, situate in the midst of the Island, but not containing above 400 Families. Others of less note and estimation being, 2. Sogard, 3. Wick. 4. Bingh, &c. small Towns compared with Villages upon the Continent, but the best they have. And yet so populous is the Island, that they are able to arm 7000 good fighting men if there be occasion.

The second of the three, in repute and bigness, is that of WOLLIN, situate over against Camin: so called from Wollin the chief Town, (Jüllenn it is called in Latine) made an Episcopal See by Warislaus, the first Christian Prince of this Nation, which on the Sackage of this City was removed to Camin. A Town which once so flourished in Traffick, that it gave place to none but Constance: the Russians, Danes, Saxons, Vandals, &c. having here their particular Streets. But being miserably sacked by Waldemar King of Denmark, Anno 1170, most of the Trade hereof was removed to Lubeck, since which time it never could come near its former glories.

The last in reputation is that of USEDOM, situated betwixt both, not far from Wolgast; so called from Usedom the chief Town in it, of which little observable. All three were the Habitation of the ancient Rugii, who under Odoacer K. of the Hervuli subverted the Western Empire, conquered Italy, and made themselves Masters of it, till subdued by the Goths. Those which remained in these Islands became after subject to the Slavians, and had once Kings of their own: the first whose name occurs in Story being Cyris, the Son of Ratze, a pusilliant Prince, extending his Dominions into Holfstein, Dinmarsh, and the City of Lubeck, which he built about the year 1100, afterwards beautified and enlarged by Adolph the 2. Earl of Holfstein, by some esteemed the Founder of it. But his Issue male failing in the year 1226, it fell by Compact made between them to the Dukes of Pomerania, to whom these Islands ever since have continued subject.

And as for Pomerania itself, the old Inhabitants thereof were part of the Rugii before mentioned the Reudigni, Langi-Nani, and Longi-Didoni, with part of the Perisli and Burgundians; into whose void rooms the Pomorz and other Tribes of the Winitibi (the most potent Nation of the Slavians) did in fine succeed, extending their Dominions to the Banks of the Vistula, the parts adjoining unto which, to difference them from Pomerania, were called Pomerellia. But that part of it being given by Meislaus, the last Prince thereof, dying without Issue, Anno 1295, to Primslaus Duke of Poland, the name and power of the Princes or Dukes of Pomerania became confined within narrower Bounds than at first they had. The first Prince of it whom we meet with on good record was one Barnimus, of the noble Gryphonian Family, Anno 933, whose Grandson Suanthiborus commanded over all this Tract. Put his Dominions being parted betwixt his Sons, Bugislaus, who had Pomerellia, retained the Language and old Customs of the Slavonians; Warislaus, who possessed the residue, conformed himself to the Laws and Language of the Saxons: the Country being by that means accounted for a part of Germany, and added unto the Empire an account thereof in the time of Frederick Barbarossa, by whom Bugislaus and Casimir, Sons of Warislaus were made Princes of the Empire and Dukes of Pomerania. The Estate being afterwards divided betwixt Bugislaus and Orto, Sons of Barnimus the first, and the House of Orto failing in the person of Orto the third, that part hereof was given by the Emperor Frederick the third to Frederick the 2. Marquess and Elector of Brandenburg, the cause of much Contention amongst these Marquesses and the other House of the Dukes of Pomerania, which was thus agreed at last, That both Princes should continue the Arms and Title, the Possession of it to be yielded to the Duke of Pomerania, on the failing of whose Issue male it should descend upon the Heirs of the House of Brandenburg. The Succession of these Princes follow in this order.

The Dukes of POMERANIA.

1. Warislaus, the first Christian Prince of the Pomeranians, Baptized by Orto Bishop of Bamberg, Anno 1124.
- 1128 2. Bugislaus, Son of Warislaus, created by Frederick Barbarossa the first Duke of Pomerania.
- 1183 3. Bugislaus II. Son of Bugislaus, planted the void parts of Pomerania with Saxon Colonies.
- 1222 4. Barnimus, Son of Bugislaus the second: after whose death Pomerania was divided into two Principalities.

Dukes of WOLGAST.

Dukes of STETIN.

- 1277 5. Bugislaus II. Son of Barnimus.
- 1319 6. Warislaus, Son to Bugislaus.
- 1326 7. Barnimus II.
- 1365 8. Warislaus II.
- 1277 1. Orto, Duke of Pomerania-Stein.
- 1345 2. Casimir, Son of Orto.
- 1363 3. Casimir II. Son of Casimir.

on the West side of the Elbe, in form orbicular, and falling every way from the sides of a Mountain; beautified with a flatly and pleasant Cattle belonging to the Elector of Saxony, who is Lord thereof, built by John Frederick the Elector. Anno 1535. Near to the City is a Lake of a mile in compass, for which the Citizens pay yearly to the Duke 500 Guildens. 2. Worlitz, upon the Elbe, once a Commandery of the Templars. 3. Weissenburg, lying towards Brumswick. 4. Kemberg, on the Elbe. 5. Buttersfeld, between the Elbe and the Mulda. And 6. Wittenberg, on the Elbe, in an open Plain, but strongly fenced with Walls, Ramparts, and deep Ditches. The chief beauty of it lieth in one fair Street, extending the chief length of the City: in the midst thereof is the Cathedral-Church, a large Market-place, and the Common-hall. In former times it was the Seat of the Dukes Electors, till the Electoral Dignity was conferred on the House of Meissen, who, liking better their own Country, kept their Courts at Dresden, but so, that Wittenberg is still acknowledged for the Head City of the Electorate; and was made an University for Divines by Duke Frederick, Anno 1508. It was called Wittenberg, as some conjecture, from Witkinthus, once Lord of Saxony, when the extent thereof was greatest: famous for the Sepulchres of Luther and Melancthon, but chiefly for that here were the Walls of Popery first broken down, and the Reformation of Religion begun by Luther, of the wonderful success whereof we have spoke already.

Of the Affairs of this little Country we can say but little, more than the means by which it came into the hands of the Dukes of Saxony, and consequently to the name which it still retains. Concerning which we are to know, that on the Deprivation of Duke Henry, firnamed the Lion, whose Greatness was grown formidable even to the Emperours themselves, the Dukedom of Saxony was dismembered into many parcels; Brumswick and Lunenburgh being given unto the Children of the Duke deprived, the lower Parts of Westphalen seized on by Philip Archbishop of Cölen, the parts thereof about the Wefer by the Bishop of Paderborn, Herman the Lantgrave of Thuringia laying hold of that part of this Estate which was nearest to him, Lubeck and many other of the principal Cities made Imperial, or governing themselves as Free Estates, the Ancestors of the Princes of Anhalt and the Earls of Mansfeld endowed with large Possessions also out of this great Patrimony; the Emperour not only conving at it, but willingly consenting to that Dissipation, the better to reward and content those Princes who had assisted him in his Wars against the Duke. By which means there was nothing left of the ancient Saxony to be catted upon Bernard of Anhalt, whom Frederick Barbarossa had created Duke Elector in the room of Henry deprived. And though Duke Bernard for his many good Services to the Empire had been before gratified with the City of Wittenberg by Conrad the 3. and had conquered from Duke Henry the whole Country of Lauenburg; yet all being found too little to maintain the Port of a Duke Elector, it pleased the Emperour Frederick to bestow upon him all those Lands and Territories which lay between the Sala and the Elbe, on the North of Misnia, to make Wittenberg the Electoral City, and give unto the County thus united to it the name of Ober-Sax or Upper-Saxony, which it continueth to this day.

2. MISNIA, or Meissen, is bounded on the East with Lusatia, on the West with Duringen, on the North with Saxony specially so called and some part of Brandenburg, on the South with Poitland and some part of Bohemia. The Country was once overpread with Woods, and full of Bogs, rendering the Air unwholesome, and the Soil unprofitable; both rectified by the care and industry of the people; now yielding four Mines of Silver, and great plenty both of Corn and Pasturage; well watered with the Rivers Sala, Plessa, Elster, and Altuda.

Places of note observation in it are, 1. Dresden, seated on the Altis, having continually on her Walls and Bulwarks 150 Pieces of Ordnance; in it a Stable of the Duke's, in which are 128 Horses of service, and a Magazine out of which 30000 Horses and Foot may be armed at a day's warning. The Town it self is situate on both sides of the River, by which it is divided into the Old Town and the New, joynted into one by a Bridge of 800 paces in length. The Country round about it is very rich and pleasant, able to sustain great multitudes. For that cause it was made the ordinary Seat of the Dukes of Saxony, who have here a strong and stately Castle. 2. Naumburg, 3. Mersburg, both seated on the River Sala, two Episcopal Sees. 4. Leipzig, as famous an University for Philosophers as Jene in Lorain is for Physicians. It seemeth the Scholars and Citizens will not suffer their Beer to perish, of which here is so much drunk and exported, that the very Custom of it due unto the Duke amounteth to 20000 pounds yearly; yet is this Town of no more than two Churches; but wealthy, populous, and built for the most part of fair Free-sons, and honoured with the Courts of Justice for all the Country. Though seated on the meeting of Plessa, Parda, and Elster, 3 Rivers which lie almost on all sides of it; yet it is not strong, having been thrice taken by the Imperialists in less than 2 year during the late German Wars. Sufficiently famous (if for nothing else) for the great battle fought near it between the late King of Sweden and the Count of Tilly: the honour whereof falling to the Swedes and Saxons, (with the death of 15000 on both sides, and the loss of all the Baggage, Arms and Ammunition of the Imperialists) freed all these parts of Germany from that civil and spiritual Bondage which was intended by the Emperour to be put upon them. 5. Milberg, on the Elbe, where John-Frederick the Elector was discomfited and taken prisoner by Charles the fifth, and by him deprived not long after of his Estate and Dignity. 6. Meissen, on the West-side of the same River, in a hilly and uneven ground, built by the Emperour Henry the first for defence of the Empire against the Slaves: a Bishop's See, and the first Seat of the Marquesses of this Country, both which, together with the Burggrave of the Town, had their Palaces or Mansion-houses hanging close together on the top of a Hill overlooking both the Town and Country. From this Town the whole Province had the name of Meissen. 7. Freiberg, near the Mountains of Bohemia, rich in Mines of Silver. 8. Roslit, not far from which are rich Mines of Tin, discovered first in these parts by a Cornish-man spoken of before.

The first Inhabitants hereof were the Hermunduri and Suardones, subdued or outed by the Sorabi, a great Tribe of the Slaves firnamed Winithi: first conquered by the Emperour Henry the first, who built the strong Town of Meissen to keep them under, and to impede the neighbouring Slaves from any incroachments on the Empire. Being thus added to the Empire and account of Germany it was a while governed by such Officers as the Emperour was appointed to guard these Marches: the first proprietors Marquess being one Eckhard, Son of the Earl of Ostland, (descended from a younger Son of Wickard, the last King of the Saxons) by the munificence of Ordo the third: not made hereditary till the time of Henry the fifth, who gave it in Fee to Conrad Marquess of Lotharing and Lusatia, whose Nephew Theodorick by his Son Ordo, firnamed the Rich, married Judith, Daughter of Herman Lantgrave of Duringen; by which match Pa-

gen accrued to the House of Meissen, Henry their Son succeeding in both Estates. To this Henry succeeded Albert his Son, and after him successively four Fredericks; the last whereof, on the failure of the House of Anhalt, was by the Emperour Sigismund created Elector and Duke of Saxony, either because defended from the House of Witkinthus, or as most able to pay for the Investiture, or else left able to sustain the Estate and Dignity of a Duke Elector, which had but weakly been supported by the former Family. In his posterity these Honours and Estates do as yet continue; but neither all nor always in the possession of the Dukes-Electors. For in the Partage made between Ernestus and Albert, the Sons of Frederick, (according to the ill custom of Germany) this Country, or the greatest part of it, was assigned to Albert, succeeded in the same by George and Henry his two Sons: which Henry was Father of that Maurice, who, being settled and confirmed herein by the Duke John-Frederick, did after most unworthily take up Arms against him, supplanted him, and finally possessed himself of this whole Electorate; of which more anon.

3. VOITLAND is bound on the East with Bohemia, on the West with Frankenland, on the North with Misnia or Meissen, on the South with the Upper Palatinat. So called, as some say, from the Juives or Vites, (some of that People, who, together with the Saxons and Angles, conquered Britain) of whom it had the name of Viteland, that is to say, the Land or Country of the Vites. But being I find not that the Saxons did spread so far Eastward, I rather think that this name was given it by the Slaves, who finding it deserted, or but thinly peopled, at their coming thither, might call it by the name of Voidland; from which the alteration unto Voitland is both plain and obvious. It is the smallest Province of all Germany, and never of such repute as to have any particular Prince, as most others had; but always reckoned as an accretory to some greater Estate. Nor hath it any Town or Cities of great estimation: the chief of those which are, being 1. Olpinz, 2. Words, 3. Cornab, 4. Schnenberg, near the Mountains called Sudeti by Ptolomy, famed for Silver-Mines. 5. Gatzberg, 6. Culmbach, and 7. Hoff, not much remarkable, but only for the Princes of it of the House of Brandenburg; called formerly Curia Pogniana.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were parts of the Nervantes and Dandani, succeeded to by the French and Slaves, as they severally defended Southwards into warmer Countries. Possessed and planted by the Slaves it obtained this name. But being a small Nation and a small Estate, it never had the honour of a particular Prince; but did most probably belong to the Lords of Meissen, upon which it bordered, and now, in their right, to the Duke of Saxony. But so that the Duke of Saxony is not the sole Lord hereof: the Marquesses of Onspach of the House of Brandenburg possessing the Towns of Hoff and Culmbach, and some other parts of it: the Patrimony at present of Christian, Son of Joachim Ernest, the late Marquess of Onspach, who now enjoyeth them, with the Title of Marquess of Culmbach.

4. THURINGIA is bounded on the East with Misnia and the River Sala, on the West with Hassia, on the North with the Wood Hartz, and the proper Saxony, on the South with the mountainous Forest of Duringen-wald, by it parted from Frankenland: the Forest and the Country both so called from the Thuringians, the ancient Inhabitants hereof, communicating their name to the place they dwelt in.

The Country is environed round about with woody

Mountains, but within those Mountains plain and pleasant, fruitful in Corn, and very plentiful of Woods, which yield great profit to the people; but without some Mines of Gold and Silver, and rich pits of Salt; able to furnish out a Feast, but for wine only, which is the greatest want hereof. The whole length of it is not above 120 miles, and the breadth no more; yet is it so populous and well planted, that there are said to be in it 12 Earldoms, and as many Abbies, 144 Cities, and as many Market-Towns, 150 Castles, and 2000 Villages.

The principal of these are 1. Jene, on the River Sala, bordering upon Misnia, an University chiefly of Physicians, founded in the year 1555, by the Sons of John-Frederick the Elector, taken Prisoner and deprived by Charles the fifth. 2. Erfurt, on the River Gera, out of which are due to many Chancels, that every street almost hath the benefit of it. A rich populous, and well-built City, accounted amongst the best of Germany, and made an University in the time of the Emperour Wenceslaus, Anno 1382. Many times burnt, but still reviving, as the Phoenix out of the Ashes, into greater glory. It was at first immediately subject to the Archbishops and Electors of Mentz, the first Founders of it, as being built by William, Son of the Emperour Ordo the first, and then Archbishop of that City, of whom more anon; but having freed themselves from him, they have since governed themselves as a Free Estate, and are one of the Hanse-Towns, not subject to the Duke of Saxony as their Lord, but their Patron and good Neighbour only. 3. Mulhausen, and 4. Northusen, two Imperial Cities, but else not observable. 5. Smalcald, famous for the League here made Anno 1530. between all the Princes and Cities which maintained the Doctrine of Luther, for defence thereof, and of one another in the pursuance of that work: by which famous Confederacy Luther not only kept his head on his shoulders, but the Religion by him reformed grew to that strength, that no force or policy could ever root it up. 6. Kala, or Hale, on the River Faiza, of great repute for the exceeding quantity of Salt there made, and vended in other places, at which Town Philip the Lantgrave was treacherously taken Prisoner, as you shall hear anon. 7. Weymar, a Town which, together with the Castle of Gotha, were assigned for the Estate and maintenance of that religious, though unfortunate, Prince John-Frederick Duke of Saxony, after his Discomfiture and Imprisonment by Charles the 5. the ordinary seat of the Dukes of Saxon-Weymar, who live here in a flatly and magnificent Castle made of polished stone, most artificially contrived, and beautified with Orchards, Gardens, and other pleasures, but made more pleasant by the watering of the River Ilms, upon which it standeth. 8. Gotha, upon the River Lan, laid by Rathsmern to be built by the Goths, and by them thus named. A place not long since of great importance, and fortified with a very strong Castle, called Grunnstein, that being made the Retiring-place of one Grunbachius and other seditious persons under the Protection of John-Frederick, one of the Sons of the deprived Elector. It was taken after a long Siege by Augustus the Elector of Saxony, (to whom the strength of this place being in the hands of the injured Family was a great Eye-sore) and by the command of the Estates of the Empire at the Diet at Regen-spurg, Anno 1567, demolished, and levelled with the ground.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Chasuaris of Tacitus, and after them the Thuringi, who, with the Hermi, under the Conduct of Odacres, conquered Italy; called by some Thuringii, by others supposed to be the Tiranga of Ptolomy. Not heard of in this County till the Reign of Childeric the fourth King of the French; that taking up the whole Provinces of Holfia and Thuringia under one Bifinius their King. Their Arms were at that time, and long after, Azure, a Lion Barrie Argent and Gules, armed and crowned Or. Being overcome at the great Battle of Zulph near Colein, where they joined with the Alman, they were afterwards totally subdued by Theodoric the French King of Metz, their King Hermanfridus taken, and most perfidiously slain; part of their Country taken from them, and given to the Saxons (who assisted in that War against them) becoming subject for the rest to the Kings of France; but so, that for some time after they had Kings of their own, Baderick and Hermanfrid, two brothers, Kings hereof successively, being Uncles to Radeagund, a Princess of great Piety, the Wife of Cloaire King of France, Anno 559. In following times it was united to the Empire by Henry the first; conferred not long after by Orlo the first (the Son of Henry) on William, one of his younger Sons, then Archbishop of Mentz, which he left to his Successors in that See; governed by their Vidames and Provincial Officers, till the time of Comradus Salicus, when Ludovicus Barbarus, one of these Vidames (or Vicedominis) made himself the Proprietary of it, and left the same unto his Children after his decease. But in the time of Comrade the 2. the issue of this Ludovicus either failing or dispossessed, it was by the Emperor conferred on Lewis of Orleans, Son to a Sister of his Emperors, the Title of Langrave being given to them of this Family for their greater Honour. Under eight Princes of this Line, whereof five successively had the name of Lewis, this Estate continued: next falling to Herman, a brother of the fifth Lewis, who, by contributing to the Ruine of Henry Duke of Saxony, financed the Lion, in favour of Frederick Barbarossa, had for his share (in the dividing of the spoil) those parts of his Estates which lay nearest to him, called then the Palatinat of Saxony, recovered for the most part afterward by the Dukes of Brunswick, the right Heirs of Henry. He being dead, this Country fell to a sixth Lewis, and last of all to Henry the brother of that Lewis, in whom the Male-issue failed, having continued for the space of 252 years. To please all parties interested in the Succession, the Estate, before entire, was divided into two Parts or Provinces: of which this now called Duringen, or Thuringia, was allotted to Henry Marquess of Mifnia, Son of Judith, the Daughter of Herman; and the Western part thereof, with the Title of the Langravedom of Meissen, adjudged to Henry Duke of Brabant, in right of Sophia his Wife, Daughter of Lewis the sixth: in the description of which Countries we shall hear more of them. United this to the House of Meissen in the person of Henry the then Marquess, Anno 1263, it flourished in long Peace and Happiness under the Princes of that House. Finally, it much increased both in Power and Dignity by the addition of Ober-Sav and the Electorship of Saxony, conferred on Frederick the Fourth, Marquess and Langrave of these Countries, Anno 1423; in which Estate it still continueth, the fourth and last of all these Provinces which now make up the Dukedom of Saxony, (as for the reasons above mentioned it hath long been called) though, none of them, nor any part or parcel of them, within the Bounds and Limits of the ancient Saxony, as before was said.

2. SAXONY properly so called, or the proper SAXONY, is bounded on the South with Duringen and the great Wood Hartz, part of the old Heremian Forest, and from thence so named; on the East with part of Mifnia, Ober-Sav, and the Marches of Brandenburg; upon the North with the Dukedom of Mecklenburg; and on the West with those of Brunswick, Lunenbourg; and part of Holfcin. So called from the Saxons, once the Lords hereof, (of whom more anon) and the sole part of all their great and many Conquests which retains their name.

The Air hercof is somewhat sharp, but healthy; the Soil in the South-west parts hilly and uneven, chiefly rich in Minerals, elsewhere sufficiently fruitful. It is divided into 4 Estates; that is to say, 1. the Principality of Anhalt, 2. the Earldom of Manfeld, 3. the Bishoppick of Meysburg, 4. the Dukedom of Lauenburg.

1. The Principate of ANHALT is bounded on the South with Duringen and the Wood called Hartz, on the West and North with the County of Manfeld, on the East with Mifnia; much shaded, if not too much over-grown with Woods, part of the Hartz, or old Heremian Forest, whence it had the name; Holt in the Dutch signifying a Wood or Forest; and the Princes of this House being created to this Dignity by the Style of Vincipes Heremian in Anhalt. Chief Towns of it are, 1. Bernburg, the Dynastic and usual Title of this house before they were created Princes of Anhalt. 2. Ballefeld, part of the ancient Patrimony of the first Princes hercof. 3. Dessau, the birth-place of some, and the burial-place of others, of this Family; beautified with a strong Castle, built by Prince Albert the 2. Anno 1341. 4. Storoff, the usual place of the Prince's Residence. 5. Coten, a well fortified place, in vain besieged by the joint-Forces of the Archbishop of Meysburg, and the Earl of Swartzemund. 6. Candt. Here sometimes also stood the old Castle of Alfand, the first seat of these Princes, but long since destroyed, now only to be visited in Records and Lit files.

We shall be sent no higher than the first belicging of the Roman Capitol by the ancient Gauls, to find out the Pedigree and Descent of the Earls of Lippi; but we must go as high as the Ark for the Princes of Anhalt; some fetching them from Azkenaz, the Son of Gomer, and Nephew of Japhet, from whom, and no other, this Ascanian Family (for by that name it is called) are to fetch their Pedigree. But to content our selves with more sober thoughts, we are to know, that when Theodoric King of Metz, undertook the Conquest of the Thuringians, he was therein aided by the Saxons with 9000 men; under the conduct of one Bernwald, or Bernibobald, a man of great power and rank amongst them. The Saxons were recompensed for that service with such parts of the conquered Country as lay nearest to them, and Bernibobald himself rewarded with the Towns of Alfand, Ballefeld, and the Lands adjoining, Anno 524, to be holden by them under the Sovereignty of the French. From which Town and the Castle of Alfand, afterwards razed to the ground by Pepin King of the French, (for denying the accustomed Tributes) Anno 747, most probable it is, that the name of the Ascanian Family was assumed by them. So that we may behold it as a Family of as great antiquity as the most in Europe, little inferior to any of the greatest Monarchs. His Successors were for the most part busied in Wars against their neighbours of Mifnia; but rather upon hopes of Spoil and plunder, than in way of Conquest; till the time of Albert surnamed Orifius, defended by a long succession of Princes from Bernwald or Bernibobald, before remembered. This Albert having done many legal services unto Comrade the 3. and his Son Frederick Barbarossa, (especially in taking the Cities of Breme and Lirnesburg) was by the last created Marquess and Elector of Brandenburg, Anno 1153; the Father of that Bernard who by the munificence and bounty of the same Emperor, was created Duke-Elector of Saxony in the room of Duke Henry surnamed the Lion, Anno 1180, becoming so the Stem of the two greatest Princes of all the Empire, Henry the 2. Son of this Bernard, was by the same Emperor not long after enriched with much of the Lands and Territories lying nearest to him, which had before belonged to Duke Henry the Lion, and created the first Prince of Anhalt, the first of all this ancient and illustrious Family which had been honoured with that Title, both Lands and Title continuing in his Race to this very day; the two Electorates of Saxony and Brandenburg being in the mean while translated unto other Families. The most considerable of which Princes, though all men of Eminence, were 1. Rodolph, General of the Forces of the Emperor Maximilian the first against the Venetians, whom he twice overcame in Battle. 2. George the Divine, a great Reformer of the Church by his diligent Preaching; whose Sermons and other Tractates (learned for the Times he lived in) are still extant. 3. Christians, born in the year 1688, Commander of the Forces of Frederick, Prince Elector Palatine, in the Wars of Bohemia.

Stem

2. The Earldom of MANSELD is bounded on the East with the River, Sala, parting it from Ober-Sav; on the West with the River Wieper, which divides it from Brunswick; on the North with the Bishoppick of Meysburg; and on the South with Anhalt and part of Duringen. So called from Manfeld, once the chief Town of it, situate on the River Wieper, but now much decayed: the other Towns of note hercin being 2. Isleben, more in the middle of the Country; for that cause more convenient for the seats of Justice, first settled here by Earl Volradus, Anno 1448, and by that means made the Metropolis of this Earldom: By some affirmed to have took this name from the Goddess Ise, who, after the death of her Husbands, (as is said by Tacitus) visited these parts. Famous more certainly for the Birth of Luther, transplanted hence for the study of good Arts to Meysburg, and chosen thence to be Divinity-Reader in Wittenburg, where he hammered out that great Work of the Reformation, as before was said; born here in the year 1483, and here deceasing in the house of the Earl of Manfeld, Anno 1546. 3. Wieper, (or Wipra) so called of the River on which it standeth. 4. Querfurt, the honourary Title of the Ancestors of the Earls of Manfeld. 5. Rotenburg, 6. Alsted, 7. Heldering, bought of the Earls of Holfcin.

Some, who delineate the Pedigree of these Earls of Manfeld, fetch it out as high as from Heger, one of King Arthur's Knights of the Round-Table, born at Manfeld in Nottinghamshire, who, settling himself in Germany, gave that name to his House: a military original, and very suitable to such an active and warlike Family. But those that do not soar so high derive them from the Earls of Querfurt, men of authority in these parts; made more considerable by Lobharium Emperor and Duke of Saxony, but most of all by Frederick Barbarossa, who conferred many goodly Lordships lying hereabout (once part of the Estate of Duke Henry the Lion) on Burchard the fifth Earl thereof, a constant Follower of his, not only in his Wars against Duke Henry before named, but in those also which he managed in the Holy Land, in the course whereof he died at Antioch, Anno 1189. His Nephew Burchard, by a Son of the same name, was the first of this Family that had the Title of Earl of Manfeld, about the year 1250; continued ever since unto his posterity, (but under some Acknowledgment to the Electors of Saxony.) Of these the most eminent were 1. Valeradius, one of the Council of Estate to the Emperor Sigismund, Anno 1411, a great improver of the Patrimony of the Earls hercof. 2. John George, Lord

Deputy or Lieutenant of Saxony under Duke Augustus, 3. Peter-Ernest, Governour of Luxemburg under Charles the 5. and Philip the 2. by them much exercised and employed in their Wars with France and their Belgick Rebels. 4. Albert, a constant Friend of Luther, and a faithful Follower of John Frederick, the deprived Elector; in whose Quarrel being out of his Estate, he retired to Meysburg, which he most gallantly defended against the Emperor. And 5. Ernestus, Nephew of that Albert by his Son John, so famous for the War which he maintained in most parts of Germany against Ferdinand the 2. in behalf of Frederick Prince Elector Palatine and the States of Bohemia, with so great constancy and courage.

3. On the North of Manfeld and Ober-Sav lieth the Bishoppick of MEYDEBURG, having on the West parts of Brunswick and Lunenbourg, and on the North and the East, the Marches of Brandenburg. So called from the Episcopical See founded in Magdeburg the chief City, by some called Meysburg and Maydenburg, whence by a Greek name Parthenopolis, and Virginopolis by a mangled word made of Greek and Latine. A City seated on the Elbe, divided into three parts, but all strongly fortified, begirt with high Walls, deep Ditches, and almost unconquerable Bulwarks; yet very beautiful withal, (before the last Defolation of it) of elegant Buildings, fair Streets, and magnificent Temples. It was built in the form of a Crescent by the Emperor Orlo the first, the Founder of it, who having translated hither the Archbishopric See, for the greater honour of the place built the Cathedral of S. Maurice, where his Wife lies buried, Anno 948, testified by the Inscription to be the Daughter of Edmund King of England. A Town which hath long flourished in a great deal of Glory, and tasted of as much Affliction as any other in Germany. For refusing to receive the Interim, it was out-lawed by the Emperor Charles the fifth, and given to him that could first take it. It was first hereupon attempted by the Duke of Atteckenburg, but he was in a Camifado taken Prisoner, his Army routed, his Nobles made captive, and 260 Horfe brought into the City. Next, it was besieged by Duke Maurice of Saxony, who on honourable terms was by a long Siege received into it, Anno 1550, when it had stood on its own Guard the space of three years. Which long Opposition of one Town taught the German Princes what Constancy could do; it held up the coals of Rebellion in Germany; and indeed proved to be the Fire which burned the Emperor's Trophies. For here Duke Maurice coming acquainted with Baron Hedeck, hatched that Confederacy by which not long after this great Emperor was driven out of Germany. At last it yielded to Duke Maurice, under the protection of whose Successors it hath since enjoyed a long course of Felicity, till the year 1631, in which it was most miserably burnt and sacked by the Earl of Tilly; of whom it is observed, that after that Fate he never prospered, being shortly after totally routed at the Battle of Leipzick, and wounded to the death not long after that near the River Leck. Other places of note in this Bishoppick are, 2. Wormfeld, beautified with a fair Castle, not far from Magdeburg, the ordinary Seat or Retiring-place of the Bishop. 3. Grahn, upon the River Strauna. 4. Mackayn, on the same River. 5. Barleben, beneath Meysburg, on the Elbe. 6. Landby, betwixt the Elbe and the Strauna, not much observable.

The Archbishopric See being translated hither from Querfurt and Vrese (places too obscure for so great a dignity) by Orlo the first, and by him endowed with great Revenues and a goodly Territory round about it, the Archbishop hereof was also by his procurement made the Primate of Germany, acknowledged so by all but the Bishop of Salisburg and the three spiritual Electors. For the Administration of Justice in matters Criminal and Civil, the said Ordo did ordain an Officer, whom they called the Burgewe, conferring that Office first on Gero Marquis of Lusatia. Through many hands it came at last to Bernhard Lord of Querfurt, and the Earls of Manfeld, many of which enjoyed this Honour, settled at last by the Emperor Rodolph of Habsburg on the Dukes of Saxony, who by this means came to have great command and influence on the whole Estate. The Archbishops notwithstanding continued Lords of it, and the whole Territory or District adjoining to it, till the Reformation of Religion; when the Revenues, separated from the Jurisdiction, were given to Lay-Princes, (for the most part of the House of Brandenburg) with the Title of Administrator. Finally, by the Pacification made at Munster, this fair Estate is to be settled for ever on the Electors of that House, to be possessed by them, and their Heirs and Successors by the Title of the Dukes of Magdeburg, the better to content them for the Concession which they made to the Crown of Sweden of a great part of their right and Title to the Dukedom of Pomerania.

4. On the North-west of Magdeburg, and on both sides also of the Elbe, lieth the Dukedom of LAWENBURG, bounded on the North with Mecklenburg, on the West with part of Holstein, and on the South with the River Elbe and part of Lauenburg; so called of Lauenburg, the chief Town thereof, and the seat of the Dukes. The Town was first built-as some conceive, by Henry Duke of Saxony, surnamed the Lion, the better to assure his Conquests on that side of the River, by whom it was called Leopoldus or Leoburgum, and Lauenburg for the same reasons by the Dutch or German: on the Proscription of which Prince, the Country being wasted and the Towns destroyed, Bernhard of Anhalt, designed his Successor in the Dukedom of Saxony, liking the situation of it, caused it to be re-edified in stronger manner than before, a great part of the materials of the Town of Erdenburg being carried cross the Water to enlarge this place. Afterwards being razed by the said Duke Henry in the course of that War it was re-built again by D. Bernard, the new Elector, who is therefore by some Writers made the Founder of it. Other places of note herein are, 2. Erdenburg, a well-fortified piece, opposite to Lauenburg, on the higher-side of the Elbe; not so large now as heretofore, the Town of Lauenburg being made greater by the lessening of this. 3. Ratzeburg, an Episcopal See, founded here by Duke Henry surnamed the Lion, upon his gaining of the Slaves to the Christian Faith, and of late times the Sepulchre of this Ducal Family. 4. Moltze, on the farther side of the Elbe, not far from Lauenburg, the cause of much Contention betwixt the Dukes hereof, and the Town of Hamburg, who pretend a Title thereunto.

This Country, being for the most part under the Command of the Slaves, was from them conquered (together with the whole Country of Mecklenburg) by Duke Henry the Lion, and by his care converted to the Christian Faith; but he being proscribed, and this Seigneurie extorted from him by Duke Bernard of Anhalt, his Successor in the Electoral Dignity, it was by Albert, Son of this Bernard, conferred on John his second Son, from whom the Dukes of Saxony, commonly called Dukes of Saxon Lawenburg, do derive themselves; who being pretermitted by the Emperor Sigismund at the death of Albert the 3. the last of the direct Line of Bernard, or else not caring for a Title which carried with it too great Sail for so small a Vessel as the Estate of the Elector at the present was, have

It is now time we should proceed to the Story of Saxony, the ancient inhabitants of which Tract were the Cherusci or Limbardi of Magdeburg, and part of the Cherusci about Manfeld and Wittenberg. Overcome by the prevailing Saxons, they became part of their name and Country, which in the full extent thereof was once far greater than now it is, containing all the Countries betwixt the Rhene and the River Eyder in the Chernische and from the River Sala to the German and Baltick Oceans. There are said by some to be a People of Asia, and there called the Saca, who, finding that small Territory (now a part of Tartaria) too narrow for them, took their Country, and at last fixed themselves in the Chernische or Sac-fens; where they first took the names of Sac-fens (or Sac-fens) that is to say, the Sons of the Saca. The improbability of this we have there disputed. Omitting therefore that and the like Originations of them, I conceive them (for my part) to be natural German, some Tribe of that most populous and potent People of the Suevi: but for the reason of the name, let every man enjoy the pleasure of his own opinion. Certain I am that in Ptolemy's time they were possessed of those parts beyond the Elb; and thence extended to the Eyder, part of which Tract is now known by the name of Holstein; and were accounted in that time to be no New-comers. Afterwards, as they grew in number, they enlarged their quarters, and passing over the Elb, in the time of the latter Roman Emperours, possessed themselves of the void places which were left by the French, then busied in the Conquest of more fruitful Countries; communicating their name to all the Nations which they overcame, as the French had formerly done before them. So that in time they stretch themselves from the River Sala on the East, to the German Ocean on the West, and took up the now Dukedom of Holstein, Lauenburg, and Brumwick, the Bishopsricks of Bremen, Verden, Hildesheim, Halberstadt, and Magdeburg, the Marches of Brandenburg, the Earl-dom of Manfeld, Wesphalen, both Frislands, Over-Issel, with as much of Gelderland and Holland as lay on that side of the Rhene. By which account the present Electoral Family hath not one foot of the old Saxony in their possession; the Seat and Patrimony of the Electors being removed into other Countries, upon the Alterations and Changes which have happened in that Estate; the name and Title of Saxony being given to the Country about Wittenberg for no other reason but because it was the chief Seat of the Duke-Electors. But to proceed, a stout and valiant Nation questionless they were, the Conquerors of the Isle of Britain; and they were the first People of the German which yielded up their Country unto Charles the Great, by his means gained unto the Gospel anno 785. Their last King was called Wittikindus, from whom descend the Kings of France, since the time of Hugh Capet, the present Kings of Denmark, of the house of Oldenburg, the Dukes of Burgundy and Savoy, the Marquises of Montferrat, besides many other noble and illustrious Families though of lesser note. The right or direct Line of the Male-issue of Wittikind (whom Charles the Great created, of a King, the first Duke of Saxony) determining in the person of Orbo the third, Emperor of Germany, it was by him conferred on Bernard Lord of Lauenburg, (but the precise time I find not:) Henry, I surnamed the Saint, who succeeded this Orbo in the Empire, the next in the collateral Line, being pretermitted, either because at that time settled in the great Dukedom of Bavaria, or because there was no hope of Posterity by him, or for some other private grudge, which I read not of. And it continued in this Line till, on the forfeiture incurred by his posterity, in the person of Duke

Henry the Lion, it was bestowed by Frederick Barbarossa upon Bernard of Anhalt, Anno 1180; whose issue in the right Line failing, it was finally elevated by the Emperor Sigismund on Frederick Langrave of Thuringia and Marquises of Meissnia, Anno 1423. In his Family it hath since continued, but not without a manifest breach in the course of the Succession: which happened when John-Frederick, being deprived of the Electoral, Dignity and Estate, his Cousin Duke Maurice was invested in them by Charles the fifth. For that religious, but unfortunate, Prince (if he may justly have the Title of unfortunate who suffered in so good a Cause, for so good a Conscience) being distressed and taken Prisoner at the Battle of Mulberg before mentioned, was the next day condemned to die, but pardoned at the last, upon the intercession of some powerful Friends, upon condition that he should resign the Electoral Dignity, and all the rest of his Estates, into the power of the Emperor: Which done, the Emperor gave him back again of his own accord the Castle of Gutha and the Town of Weymar, with all the Lands and Territories thereunto adjoining; from which last place his Posterity are now called Dukes of Saxon-Weymar. It was also much insisted on, that he should relinquish his Religion, and reconcile himself to the Church of Rome; that in the end it was omitted. These matters being thus transacted, the Emperor (with the general consent of the Electors) invested Maurice, Cousin-german to the Duke deprived, in the Electoral dignity, and all the Lands, Honours and Estates (the Seigneuries of Gutha and Weymar excepted only) which formerly had belonged to him: which though it were a great wrong, both to the Person and Posterity of the Duke John-Frederick, yet it is observed by some grave Writers to have fallen out not un-happily for the advancement of the Reformation then contended for. In regard of John-Frederick, whose Christian Patience and Magnanimity during the whole time of his Imprisonment added great reputation to the Cause for which he suffered. 2. In respect of Duke Maurice, who was a man of far greater parts to advance the work and every way as zealous in pursuing of it as the other was. And 3. in relation to the Children of the deprived Duke, men not to be relied on in a matter of such weight and moment; inasmuch as it was said of him after his decease, Quid Filius reliquerit sui dissimulatio. It is now time we should proceed to the Investiture of the new Elector. And, because these Transactions of State be not ordinary, I will briefly relate the Ceremonies thereat used as I have collected them out of Steidan. There were at Wittenberg Scaffolds erected, on which fate the Emperor and the Princes Electors in their Robes. On the back-side of the Stage were placed the Trumpeters; right against it standeth Duke Maurice with two bands of Horsemen: The first in a full career run their Horses up to the Pavillion: out of the second issued Henry Duke of Brumswick, Wolfgang Prince of Bipont, and Albert Duke of Bavaria. These when they had in like manner coursed their Horses about, alighted, ascended to the Throne, and humbly requested the Emperor, that for the common good he would advance Duke Maurice to the Electorship. He consulted with the Electors, made answer by the Bishop of Meitz, that he was content, so Duke Maurice would in person come and desire it. Then came forth Duke Maurice with the whole Troop: before him were born ten Ensigns bearing the Arms of as many Regions wherein he desired to be Invested. When he came before the Throne, he knelt down on his knees, and humbly desired the Emperor to bestow on him the Electorship of Saxony, and all the Lands of John-Frederick, late Elector. His Petition was granted.

Then the Bishop of Meitz, read unto him the Oath by which the Electors are bound unto the Empire: which Oath when Duke Maurice had taken, the Emperor delivered unto him a Sword, which was a sign of his perfect Investiture. Duke Maurice, now the Elector of Saxony, arose, gave the Emperor thanks, promised his Fidelity, made Obedience, and took his place amongst the Electors. This Solemnity was on the 24. day of Febr. Anno 1548. Which said, we now proceed unto the Catalogue of

The Dukes of SAXONY.

- 785 1. Vittikind, the last King of the Saxons, vanquished, and created the first Duke by Charles the Great.
- 825 2. Brno the Brother of Vittikind.
- 843 3. Luitpoldus, Son of Brno.
- 855 4. Brno II. Son of Luitpoldus.
- 876 5. Orbo, Brother of Brno the second.
- 916 6. Henry surnamed the Fowler, Son of Orbo, Emperor of the Romans, and King of Germany.
- 938 7. Orbo II. Duke of Saxony, and Emperor, called Orbo I.
- 974 8. Orbo III. Duke of Saxony and Emperor, called Orbo II.
- 984 9. Orbo IV. Duke of Saxony, and Emperor, called Orbo III.
- 1021 10. Bernard, Lord of Lunenburg, created Duke of Saxony, and the first Elector, by Orbo the third, who was the last Duke of the Race of Vittikind.
- 1021 11. Bernard II. Son of Bernard the first.
- 1032 12. Osdolphus, Son of Bernard the 2.
- 1073 13. Magnus, Son of Osdolphus, who taking part with Rudolphus of Schleswig against Henry the fourth, was taken Prisoner, and deprived.
- 1073 14. Lutharius, Earl of Querfurt, created Duke of Saxony by Henry the fourth; he was also Emperor of the Romans.
- 1123 15. Henry surnamed the Proud, Duke of Bavaria, the Husband of Gerrade, Daughter of Lutharius, by whom he was created Duke-Elector.
- 1139 16. Henry II. surnamed the Lion, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria, Son of Henry the Proud by his first Wife Vittikind, the Daughter of Magnus, added to this Estate the Countries of Mecklenburg and Lauenburg, which he had conquered from the Slaves, becoming by that means so great, that neglecting his Duty to the Emperor Frederick, surnamed Barbarossa, and siding with the Pope against him, he was by him publicly proscribed, his neighbour Princes armed against him, and by their joint Forces outed of all his Estates, every one laying hold on that which lay nearest to him, by means whereof this great Estate being parcelled and divided into many parts, the Title of the Duke Elector of Saxony was given by the said Emperor to
- 1180 17. Bernard of Anhalt, Son of Albert Marquises of Brandenburg, and Grandchild of Ellice, another Daughter of Duke Magnus: to whom for his Seat and Habitation, the Emperor gave the City of Vittenberg, the Head since that time of this Electorate.
- 1212 18. Albert, Son of Bernard, from whom the Dukes of Lauenburg do derive their Pedigree.

- 1273 19. Albert II. Son of Albert the first.
 1337 20. Rodolph, Son of Albert the 2.
 1356 21. Rodolph II. Son of Rodolph the first.
 1373 22. VVenceslaus, Son of Rodolph the 2.
 1389 23. Rodolph III. Son of VVenceslaus.
 1419 24. Albert III. Son of Rodolph the third, the last Elector of Saxony of the House of Albert.
 1423 25. Frederick, Langrave of Duringen, and Marquis of Misnia, (on the falling of the House of Anhalt, Anno 1423) created Duke of Saxony by the Emperor Sigismund, the House of Lauenberg pretermitted for want of putting in their Claim: by the advancement of which Prince, the Title of the Duke of Saxony, returned again to the House of VVittin-kind, (the first King and last Duke hereof) after it had been alienated into other Families for the space of 200 years.
 1428 26. Frederick II. Son of Frederick the first.
 1464 27. Ernest, Son of Frederick the second.
 1486 28. Frederick III. Son of Ernest.
 1525 29. John, Brother to Frederick the third.
 1532 30. John Frederick, Son of John the first; a great advancer of the Reformation of Religion, imprisoned and deprived of his Electorship by Charles the fifth.
 1547 31. Maurice, Cousin german to the Duke John Frederick, (as being the Grandson or Nephew of Albert, the younger Brother of Ernestus the Duke Elector) created Duke Elector by Charles the fifth, whom afterwards he drove out of Germany; and was slain in the Battle of Silfridshaus, against Marquis Albert of Brandenburg.
 1553 32. Augustus, Brother of Maurice.
 1586 33. Christian, Son of Augustus.
 34. Christian II. Son of Christian the first.
 35. John George, Brother of Christian the second, who first sided with the Emperor Ferdinand and the second against the Elector Palatine, and after with the King of Sweden against the Emperor.

The Revenues of this Duke are thought to be the greatest of any one Prince of Germany, (the Imperial Family excepted) amounting in the least to 400000 l. p. annuam though in multitude of Vassals and great cities of Territory he come short of some of them. And to make up this (some or perhaps a greater) it is conceived that no profit which ariseth to him out of Silver-mines is no less than 130000 l. yearly; the Impost laid on Beer in Leipsick, only, a City but of two Parish-Churches, which conjecture at the rest) being farmed at 20000 l. p. annuam. Then hath he the Tenth of all sort of Increase, as of Corn, Wine, &c. The Salt-houses at Hall and some other places, very fair Lands belonging unto his Domains; and besides this, a standing and perpetual Tax laid upon the Subject towards the maintenance of the VVar against the Turks; granted at first in times of Danger and hostility, but gathered ever since in the times of Peace (as to that Enemy) under colour of being ready and prepared against him. According to the quantity of his Intrado he keeps his State, well served, and better attended than any other of the Electors; there being at one time in the Court of Christian, the Father of the present Duke three Dukes, three Earls, and five Barons of other Nations, (besides the Nobility of his own) all Pensioners and Servants to him; one of the Princes of Anhalt and one of the Earls of Mansfield, both Homagers unto the Saxons being two of the number.

The Arms of Saxony, are Barre-wife of six pieces Sable and Or, a Bend floured Vermilion. Which bend was added to the Coat by the Emperor Frederick Barbaross, when he confirmed Bernard of Anhalt in this Dukedom, for Bernard desiring of the Emperor to have some difference added to the Ducal Coat, (being before only Barry Sable and Or) to distinguish him and his Successors from those of the former House; the Emperor took a Chapelet of Rue, which he had then upon his head, and threw it cross his Buckler or Escutcheon of Arms, which was presently painted on the same.

19. BRUNSWICK, and 20. LUNENBURG.

THE Dukedom of BRUNSWICK and LUNENBURG, being both originally taken out of this great Dukedom of Saxony extracted both from the same Root, and many times united in the person of the same one Prince, shall be joyned together in the Story, though severed in the Chorography or description of them; bounded on the East with Magdeburg and Mansfeld in the upper Saxony, on the West with Westphalia, on the North with Denmark, on the South with Hassia. The Air in all parts herof is very cold and comfortable, but sound and healthful: the Soil towards the old Marches of Brandenburg but meanly fertile, towards Duringen and Hassia mountainous and woody, in other parts very plentiful of Corn, and well provided also of such other Commodities as usually do grow in those colder Climates.

But to take the Chorography of them severally, BRUNSWICK is bounded on the East with the Earldom of Mansfeld, on the West with Westphalia, on the North with Lunenbourg, on the South with Hassia. So called from Brunswick, the chief City, and the Head of this Dukedom, Places of most importance in it are, 1. Goslar, upon the River Gospe, whence it had the name, of a poor Village made a City by Henry the first, much beautified and enlarged by Henry the third, who found here two Churches and a stately Palace; now one of the Imperial Cities. 2. Helmstedt, in the middle way betwixt Brunswick and Magdeburg; first fortified by Charles Son of Charles the Great, for a Bridge to the neighbouring Slavens and being after given to the Abbots of VVerden, was by them sold to William the Duke of Brunswick 3. Quedlinburg, built also by Henry the first, much increased since by the neighbourhood of a very rich Nuntery, the Abbess whereof had formerly the Privileges of a Prince of the Empire. 4. Hildesheim, an ancient City, honoured with an Episcopal See by Charles the great at the first conversion of the Saxons. 5. Grubenhagen, which gave Title to a younger branch of the House of Brunswick a Principality, and a Member of the Empire. 6. Hannover on the River Lein, well built, very strongly fortified, and not meanly traded. 7. Brunswick, upon the River Onawra, which passeth through it, palked over by many handom Bridges; the Metropolis of the ancient Saxony, and at this time the chief of this Dukedom, though of it self Imperial, and one of the Hanse. The City is of a quadrangular form: walled in the midst of a Plain very fruitful of Corn, in compass about two Dutch, or eight English miles, somewhat larger than Nuremberg, and less than Erffort; containing in that compass not above twelve Churches, whereof two have Steeples covered with Lead, a third with Bricks, all the rest with Tile. It is rich, populous and strongly fortified, on some sides with a double, on others with a treble Wall, within which walls are five Cities, distinguished by Privileges, but united by Laws. The whole first built by Bruno, Son to Ludolph the

Duke

Duke of Saxony, and Uncle to the Emperour Henry the first, about the year 861; from whence it had the name of Brunswick, or Brunonis Vicus, by the more elegant Latinists, Brunopolis. 8. Hamelun, on the East-side of the Wefer or VVaglar, encompassed with a deep Moat, (occasioned by a stream cut out of the River) round about which are divers Fortifications, and planted with Ordnance. Nigh unto this Town is the Mountain called also Hamelun, unto which the Py'd Piper (as they call him) led the Children of Hamelun, where they all sunk, and were never more seen. But of this Story more hereafter, when we come to Transylvania. 9. Wolfshuitten, or Wolfenbuttel, where the Duke doth keep his Court. For though Brunswick giveth him his Title, yet will it not yield him any Obedience, but repeth it self amongst the Hanse-Towns, for which cause there have been great Wars between the Dukes and the Citizens. 10. Halberstadt, a Bishopric, the late Bishop (or Administrator of the Bishoprick) being Christijan Duke of Brunswick, that noble young Soldier, who had vowed his life and fortune to the service of Elizabeth Queen of Bohemia, his Cousin-german; created by King James one of the Knights of the Garter. A Bishoprick of great Revenue and a very large Territory; since the alteration of Religion, given with the Title of Administrator to the Sons of Brunswick; but now, by the Conclusions at Munster, assigned over to the Elector of Brandenburg, with the Title of Prince of Halberstadt, the Family of Brunswick being to be recompensed with an alternate Succession in the Bishoprick of Uphuldrunge, and some other additions. 11. Hesfeld, the Seat sometimes of the old Palatines of Saxony, but not else observable. 12. Amelungsblame, another Town of the said Palatine, by one of which, called Sigfridus, it was beautified with a very fair Abby: the principal Towns (in those days) of this Palatinate, which, bordering on that part of the Thuringians which is now called Hassia, was taken in by Herman, one of the Langraves of that Country, on the Prohibition of Duke Henry surnamed the Lion; but on the failure of his Line, recovered for the most part by the Dukes of Brunswick, the right Heirs of Henry.

The Dukedom of LUNENBURG hath on the East the Diocess of Magdeburg, on the West the Diocess of Bremen, and part of Westphalia, on the North the Elb, and on the South the Dukedom of Brunswick. So called from Lunenburg the chief City, once the Seat of the Dukes.

Places of most observation in it are, 1. Lunenburg it self, situate on the River Elmenaw, an Imperial City, and one of the principal of the Hanse; so called from the Moon here worshipped in the times of Idolatry. Of a round form it is, and seated in a pleasant Plain, but with Mountains near it: on one of which, called Calberg, is a very strong Castle, of right belonging to the Duke, but in the power of the Citizens, who without this Fort could not be masters of their Liberties. The walls about it are of Earth, high and broad, and the Ditches deep: the Buildings generally fair, (for the most part of Brick) the chief whereof is the Common-Council-House; the Streets broad and long, with two spacious Market-places, but of no very pleasing smell: the whole about a mile and an half in length, half a mile in breadth, containing fix Parish-Churches. But the thing most considerable in it is the Fountain of Salt, (the greatest riches of this City) and the House in which the Salt is boiled, containing 55 Rooms and in each Room 3 Leadens Pans in which are boiled daily 8 Tuns of Salt, every Tun being fold for 8 Flennish shillings, bought by the Hamburghers, Lubeckers, and other Merchants; some part of the profits of it belonging to the Duke, some to the City, the rest to the Adventurers who employ their Stocks on it. 2. Cell, the Seat of the Duke of Lunenbourg. 3. Gosern, of no great signific or estimation, but for a strong Cattle of the Dukes. 4. Olendendorp, situate betwixt the Venaw and the River Elsa, memorable for the great Battle fought near unto it, Anno 1033, betwixt the Imperialists and the Swedes, the honour and benefit whereof fell unto the Swedes, who killed upon the place 5000 of the Enemy, besides such as were found dead in the fields and high-ways, all covered over with dead bodies, took 1500 of them prisoners, and got into their hands 15 pieces of Ordnance, good store of Ammunition, and three Mules laden with Silver for the pay of the Army: the reputation of this Victory drawing in Hamelun and other places of importance which stood out before. 5. Verden, an Episcopal See, but made a Lay-see, as most other Bishopricks amongst the Lutherans; the Profits thereof being received commonly by a Son of Denmark with the Title of Administrator, and lastly, by the Treaty of Munster appropriated for ever to the Crown of Sweden, the Kings whereof to be entitled Dukes of Verden. 6. Rodenburg, the chief Seat of the Bishops of Verden.

The ancient Inhabitants of these Dukedoms were the Dagubini of Tecutin, with some parts of the Chauci and Cherifci: these last of most fame for the Blow they gave to Quintilius Varus, Lieutenant in Germany after Drusus for Augustus Cæsar, who, behaving himself with great Insolency towards the Natives, was set upon by these Cherifci and their Confederates, under the Conduct of Arminius, a great Prince amongst them, himself slain, and his whole Army, consisting of three Legions, miserably cut off and despatchedly with: which loss, and the shame thereof, so distressed the Emperor, (not formerly accustomed to the like Misfortunes) that he was many times observed to tear his Beard, knock his Head against the Posts and cry out in the bitterness of his Passion, Reddidi mihi Legionem, Quintilius Varus. Having long time after this maintained their Liberty, for the Romans kept themselves from that time forwards on the French side of the Rhene they were at last subdued by the Saxons, continuing part of that great Dukedom till the time of the 3rd Utho, Emperours of the Romans and Dukes of Saxony; who, looking on the Empire as a State of Inheritance, diminished both the Grandeur and Revenue of their ancient Patrimony, partly by the Donation or Endowment of many Bishopricks, and partly by the creation of many petty Seigniories to be holden under them as chief Lords of all. Amongst which that of Lunenbourg was none of the least, continuing as a State distinct, till such time as Bernard Lord of Lunenbourg was by the Emperor Otho the third made Duke of Saxony, and created the first Duke-Elector, whereby again it was united to the rest of that Dukedom, the greatest part whereof he held in his actual possession, together with a Superiourity or Jurisdiction over all the residue, (the great Bishopricks excepted only) which had been parcelled out, as before is said: and it continued thus united till the Prohibition of Henry, surnamed the Lion, spoken of before, whose Reconciliation being made by means of Henry the second of England, whose Daughter Matild he had formerly married, the Emperor Barbaross allowed to him again the Cities of Brunswick and Lunenbourg, with their several Territories, of which his two Sons Henry and William were first created Earls, then Dukes, the one of Brunswick, and the other of Lunenbourg, by the Emperor Frederick the second. Which Honours and Estates do still remain unto their Posterities. Before I come to the Successions of these Princes, I shall crave leave to speak of the Original of the Guelphian Family, Dukes at the same time of Bavaria and Saxony; of which they are at this time the sole remainder. A Family derived from one Guephur, (whence it had the name) the

Son

Son of Heinrich, Earl of Altorf in Schwaben; whose Wife, called Terminrudis, having accused a poor woman of Adultery, and caused her to be grievously punished for having 12 Children at a Birth, was afterwards delivered of the like number, and all of them Sons. Her Husband being absent at the time of her Delivery, she commanded the Nurse to kill 11 of them; fearing, it seems, the like shame and punishment as by her illigation was inflicted on the other Woman. The Nurse going to perform this on the other Woman, was met by the old Earl then returning home; who asked her what she had in her Apron. She made answer, Whelps. He desired to see them: she denied him. Angry at this refusal, he opened her Apron, and there found eleven of his own Sons, pretty sweet Babies, and of most promising Countenances. Examining the matter, he found out the truth, and injoyning the old Trot to be secret in it, he put the Children out to Nurse. Six years expired, the Earl invited to a Feast most of his own and his Ladies Kindred, and attiring the young Boys all alike, presented them unto their Mother; who suspecting, by the number of them, what the matter was, confessed her offence, is pardoned by the good old Earl, and carefully educates her children: whom the Father commanded to be called by the name of Guelphs, alluding to the Whelps or Puppies which the Nurse told him she had in her Apron. From the eldest of these Guelphs or Guelphs succeeded that Henry-Guelph, Son of Robert Earl of Altorf, whom Conrad the second made Duke of Bavaria; many of whose posterity enjoyed that Dukedom: increased at last by the addition of the Dukedom of Saxony, in the person of Duke Henry firnamed the Proud, Father of Henry called the Lion, and Grandfather of Henry and William the first Dukes of Brunswick and Lunenburg, whose Succession followeth in this Order.

The Dukes of BRUNSWICK and LUNENBURG.

1. Henry, firnamed the Lion, the last Duke of Saxony, and the first of this Title.
- 1195 Brunswick. Lunenburg.
2. Henry first Earl, after Duke of Brunswick.
2. William, first Earl after Duke of Lunenburg.
- 1213 3. Orto, Son of William, Duke of Lunenburg; after the death of Henry, Duke of Brunswick also.
- 1254 4. John, Son of Orto.
1279 5. Albert II. Son of Albert.
1318 6. Orto II. Son of Albert the 2.
- 1334 7. Magnus, Son of Albert II. on the failing of the other house, enjoyed both Estates.
- 1368 8. Magnus II. Son of Magnus the first.
- 1373 9. Henry, Son of Magnus the second.
- 1416 10. William, Son of Henry.
1482 11. William II. Son of William.
1503 12. Henry II. Son of William the second.
10. Bernard, Brother of Magnus the second.
- 1434 11. Frederick II. Son of Bernard.
1478 12. Orto III. Son of Frederick the 2.

- 1514 13. Henry III. Son of Henry the 2.
- 1568 14. Julius, Son of Henry the 3.
- 1589 15. Henry IV. Son of Julius, who married the Lady Elizabeth, Sister to Anne Queen of England.
16. Frederick-Ulric, Son of Elizabeth of Denmark and of Henry-Julius.
- 1634 17. Augustus, Son of Henry Duke of Lunenburg, succeeded, on the death of Frederick-Ulric, and the failure of the House of Brumwick in him, in this Dukedom.
- 1514 13. Henry III. Son of Orto the 3.
- 1532 14. Orto IV. Son of Henry the 3.
15. Ernst, the Brother of Orto, succeeded in his Brother's lifetime, furnishing his Estate for an Annual Pension.
- 1536 16. Henry IV. Son of Ernst.
- 1590 17. Ernst II. Son of Henry the 4.
18. Wolfgangus, the Brother of Henry the 4. and Uncle of Ernst the 2. now Duke of Lunenburg, Anno 1648.

The Arms of these Dukedom were first the same, that is to say, Gules, two Lions Or, Armed Azure; which Arms they took by reason of their extraction from the Kings of England, then Dukes of Normandy; retained to this day by the Dukes of Brunswick, without any addition. But those of Lunenburg have added three Coats more unto it: the whole bearing being quarterly, 1. Gules, two Lions Or, Armed Azure; 2. Azure, Seme of Hearts Gules, a Lion of the first, Armed and Crowned Or; 3. Azure, a Lion Argent, Crowned Gules; and 4. Gules, within a Border Compartment Or and Azure, a Lion of the second, Armed of the third.

HASSIA is bounded on the North with Brunswick, on the South with Vetavia or the state of Wetavia, on the East with Thuringia, and on the West with Westphalia. So called from the Hessi, who, having vanquished the Chatti, the old Inhabitants of this Country, possessed themselves of it.

The Christian Faith was first preached here by Boniface, or Winefride, an English-Saxon, (afterwards Archbishop of Meinz.) Anno 730, or thereabouts. Of whom I find this memorable Apophthegm, That in old times they were golden Prelates and wooden Chaires, but in his time were wooden Prelates and golden Chaires. Not much unlike to which I have read another, but of later date, viz. That once the Christians had blind Churches, and lightless hearts; but now they have lightless Churches, and blind hearts.

The Country is very fruitful of Corn, and affords good Pasture for the feeding of Cattel, of which they have great Drovers and Herds in many places; with great abundance of Stags and other Deer for the pleasures of Hunting, harboured in the Woods hereof, with which also many parts of it, it is very much shaded. It breedeth also in the Downs good flocks of sheep, enriched with the finest Fleece of any in Germany; the Staple-Commodity of this Country; and in the mountainous parts hereof there want not rich Mines of Brasse, Lead, and other Metals, which yield great profit to the people.

Chief Towns herein are, 1. Alendoff, on the Weser (or Visurgis) of much esteem for the Springs or Fountains of Salt which are thereabouts. 2. Fritzlar, upon upon the Eder, well walled, and situate in a fruitful and pleasant Soil, belonging to the Archbishop and Elector of Meinz, but, in regard of the convenient situation of it, much aimed at, many times attempted, and sometimes forcibly possessed, both by the Lantgraves of Hassia and Dukes of Saxony. 3. Fulda, on a River of that name, remarkable for the Monastery there founded by Boniface, Archbishop of Meinz, by the name of Saint Saviour, the Abbot of which is a Prince of the Empire, Chancellor of the Empress, and Lord of a goodly Territory in this Country, called from hence Suff. Fuld. 4. Frankenberg, on the Eder also, so called from the French, who encamped there in their Wars against the Saxons; first founded by Theodorick, the French King, Anno 520, but much enlarged by Charles the Great about the year 804. 5. Elfweghe, on the brow of an Hill, near the River Werr, of great trading for Wood, of which the Fields adjoining yield a rich increase. Being destroyed by the Hungarians it was re-edified and enlarged by the Emperor Henry the 2. and having suffered much misery in the long War between Adolph Archbishop of Meinz and the Lantgraves of Hassia, it fell at last into the possession of the Lantgrave, Anno 1387. 6. Melfingen, on the River Fuld. 7. Darmstadt, lately, if not at the present, the Seat and Inheritance of Count Ludowick, of the younger House of the Lantgraves, taken prisoner by Count Mansfeld, Anno 1622, and his whole Country exposed unto spoil and rapine, because (besides many other ill offices) he was the chief perfwader of the Princes of the Union to disband their Forces, provided for defence of themselves and the Palatinates, and to reconcile themselves to the Emperor. 8. Marpurg, the seat of the second House of the Lantgraves, descending from that Philip who was Lantgrave in the time of Charles the fifth, whom he so valiantly withstood; pleasantly seated on the Len, amongst Viny Downs and shady Mountains; honoured with an University founded here by Lewis Bishop of Munster, Anno 1426, and beautified with a magnificent Castle (the ordinary dwelling of those Princes) situate on an high Hill somewhat out of the Town, which gives it a very gallant Prospect over the Town and Country. 9. Geissen, a Town belonging to the Lantgraves of Cassels, and a small University also. 10. Dietz, upon the River Len, belonging also to the House of Cassels. 11. Cassels, the chief Town and ordinary Residence of the Lantgraves of the elder House, who are hence sometimes called the Lantgraves of Cassels: commodiously seated in a pleasant and fruitful Soil, and well fortified with strong earthen Walls and deep Ditches; but the Houses in it of no great beauty, being composed for the most part of Wood, Thatch and Clay.

Within the Limits of this Province is the County of WALDECK, not subject to the Lantgraves of Hassia, though included within the Bounds of it before laid down, taking up the Western parts thereof, where it meets with Westphalia figure very near a square, each side of which is the length of six ordinary Dutch, or twenty four English miles. The Soil is much of the same nature with the rest of Hassia, save that it hath fume veins of Quick-silver and inexhaustible Mines of Coal, which the other wanteth; these last in great plenty about Wildung and the strong Castle of Eisenberg, two of the best Towns and places of it. Others of chief note are, 3. Waldeck itself, on the River Eder, the first Seat of the Earls hereof, who have here an ancient Castle, from whence the whole Country takes its name. 4. Mangerick-luse, in a fair Castle whereof live the present Earls, 5. Wittenberg, in a pleasant and fruitful Soil, betwixt the Rivers Twifche and Alwa. 6. Corbach, famous in the times of Alberus Magnus for its Gold Mines, yielding great profit to these Earls. The Pedigree of which Earls is fetched from one Wittkind Earl of Salenberg, whom Charles, the Great made advocate or Patron of the Church of Paderborn in Westphalia, being an Office in those times of great Jurisdiction. By Wittkind the second, one of his Successors; this Office was surrendered into the Hands of the Chapter, for the sum of 300 marks in Silver; and to cut off all farther Claims, Henry, the Nephew of this Wittkind by his Son Orto, was by the Chapter gratified with the Town of Waldeck, of which he was the first Earl, whose Nephew Henry, firnamed Ferren, subdued Corbach, Anno 1366, and added it to his Estate. By a third Henry Grandchild of this Ferren, or Man of Iron; this Earldom, formerly held in Fee of the Church of Paderborn, was first under the Patronage and Protection of the Lantgraves of Hassia, Anno 1428, as it continueth to this day. The Earls hereof content with their own Estates, and more added to the Book than unto the Sword, have added little in the Wars to improve their Fortunes.

The ancient Inhabitants of the whole, both Waldeck and the rest of Hassia, and also of the Country of Nassau in Vetavia near adjoining, were the Gatti or Chatti, mentioned by the Ancients. It was first conquered (after the withdrawing of the Roman Forces) by the Hessi, and both subdued not long after by the Thuringians: subject unto the Lantgraves of Duringen, till the death of Henry the last of the Male-issue of Lewis of Orleans. In the division of whole Estate, the Western moiety of Duringen fell to the share of Henry Duke of Brabant, one of the Competitors who leaving the Title of Lantgrave of Duringen to the Marquess of Misia, took to himself the Title of the Lantgrave of Hessen, in memory of the Hessi spoken of before. Of his Successors the most puissant was that Philip who in the time of Charles the fifth much fwayed the Affairs of Germany, Anno 1520, he discomfited King Ferdinand, and restored Ulric to the Dukedom of Wittenberg, Anno 1530, he united all the Protestant Princes and Cities of Germany in common League at Smalcald, for the defence of the Protestant Religion, Anno 1545, he undertook the Cause of Gelsaria against the Duke of Brunswick, whom in a set Battle he took prisoner, together with his Son, and possessed his Country. Anno 1548, he united all the Princes and Cities of Germany in an offensive and defensive League against Charles the fifth. But that War succeeded not prosperously. For the Duke of Saxony, his perpetual Confederate, being taken prisoner, he submitted himself to the Emperor at Kala, or Hale in Duringen; his sons-in-law, Duke Maurice, the Marquess of Brandenburg, and Wolfgang Prince of Demens, having given their Bonds for his return. The Condition of his Pardon were first, that he should discontinue all his Towns, except Cassels. 2. That he should yield up unto the Emperor all his Munition. 3. That he should pay unto the Emperor 150000 Crowns the same night he was by the Duke of Alva invited to Supper, his Sons-in-law of Saxony and Brandenburg accompanying him. After Supper he was contrary to the laws of Hospitality and the Emperor's exact Promise, detained Prisoner. The fallacy stood thus: In the Emperor's Command with the three Princes the words were, that the Lantgrave should be kept, Nicht in einig gefenghene, that is, not in any Prison; which the Emperor's Secretary, by a small dash of his Pen, turned into Nicht in ewig gefenghene, that is, Not in everlasting prison. Well in prison he staid five years, which being expired, he was again set at large by Duke Almire the Overthrower and Restorer of the German Liberty. The residue of these Lantgraves in their several times occur in the ensuing Catalogue of

The Lantgraves of HASSIA.

- 1263 1. Henry of Brabant, Son of Henry Duke of Brabant, and of Sophia his Wife, Daughter of Lewis the sixth, Lantgrave of Thuringia, after a nine years War betwixt him and the Marquess of Misfat, divided the Estate, and took unto himself the Title of Lantgrave of Hessen.
- 1308 2. Orto and John, Sons of Henry.
- 1323 3. Henry II. and Lewis, Sons of Orto.
- 1376 4. Herman, the Son of Lewis.
- 1414 5. Lewis II. Son of Herman, firnamed the Mild.
- 1458 6. Lewis III. Son of Lewis the Mild.
7. William, the eldest Son of Lewis the third, dispossessed of his Estate by
8. William II. his youngest Brother.
- 1509 9. Philip, the famous Lantgrave spoken of before Son of William the second.
- 1567 10. William III. eldest Son of Philip, succeeded in one moiety of the Estate, and resided at Cassels, the other moiety being divided betwixt his Brethren, Ludowick of Marburg, and George of Darmstadt, Father of Ludowick of Darmstadt before mentioned.
- 1590 11. Maurice, eldest Son of William the third.
12. William IV. Son of Maurice, now living, 1648.

The Arms of these Lantgraves are Azure, a Lion Barry of Eight pieces, Argent and Gules crowned Or, bearing properly and originally the Arms of the ancient Dukes of Francia, were given by Conradus Salicus, Duke of Francia, and Emperor, to Lewis of Orleans, at such time as he invellied him in the Lantgravedom of Thuringia: on the expiration of whose line they were challenged and born by the Lantgraves of Hassia, as the direct Heirs of Lewis the 6. and his Brother Henry, the last male Princes of that House.

21. WESTPHALIA.

WESTPHALIA is bounded on the East with Hassia, Brumswick, and part of Lunenburgh; on the West with the Bishoppick of Calen, Cleve, Over-Jfels, West and East-Friesland, and the German Ocean; on the North with the Elb, and the Dukedom of Holftein; and on the South with Wateravia, and some part of Hassia.

It was thus called of the Wesphali, a Tribe or Division of the Saxons, distinguished heretofore into the Transalbinos, inhabiting beyond the Elb or Albia, in the County of Holftein, now a part of Denmark, the Ossphali, betwixt the Elb, the Ocean, with the River of Sala and the Wefer, taking up the Bishoppicks of Breme, Virden, Hildesheim, Halberstadt and Meydeburg, with the Dukedom of Lunenburgh and Brumswick; the Angriwarians, taking up the North-West part of the modern Westphalen, betwixt the Bishoppick of Breme and the Earldom of Oldenburg; and finally, the Wesphali or Western Saxons, inhabiting the rest of the modern Westphalen with the Earldoms of Mark, Berg, Zurphen, the Seignioury of Over-Jfels, and some parts of Golderland and Holland. But the Saxons being subjugated by the power of the French, and several new Estates erected out of that old Stock; the remnant of the Wesphali and Angriwarians (the Bishoppick of Breme being added unto the account) were comprehended and united in the name of WESTPHALIA.

The Soil according to the several parts of it, is of different natures: the parts adjoining to the Wefer being defart and barren, those towards the Earldoms of Marck, and Bergen mountainous and full of Woods; the Bishoppick of Bremen, except towards the Elb, full of dry Sands Heaths and unfruitful Thickets, like the wilde parts of Windsor Forrest betwixt Stanes and Fernham. In other parts it is exceeding plentiful of Corn, and of excellent Pasturage; stored with great plenty of wild Fruits, and (by reason of the many Woods) abundance of Acorns; with infinite Herds of Swine (which they breed up with those natural helps) of so good a relish, that a Carca of Wesphalie Bacon is reckoned for a principal Dish at a great man's Table.

The old Inhabitants hercof were the Chauci majores about Bremen; the Chamavi, Angriwarii and Bructeri, inhabiting about Munster, Osnabrig, and so towards the Land of Calen; and part of the Cherusci (before spoken of) taking up those parts which lie nearest unto Brumswick and Lunenburgh. All of them were vanquished by Drusus the Son-in-Law of Augustus, but soon restored to their former liberty by the great Overthrow given by the Cherusci and their Associates to Quintilius Varus. Afterwards uniting into one name with the French, they expelled the Romans out of Gaul, leaving their forsaken and ill inhabited Seats to be taken by the Saxons, with whom their mainders of them did incorporate themselves both in Name and Nation. Of that great Body it continued a considerable Member, (both when a Kingdom and a Dukedom) till the Proscription and Deprivation of Duke Henry the Lion: at what time the parts beyond the Wefer were usurped by Bernard Bishop of Paderborn; those betwixt the Wefer and the Rhene, by Philip Archbishop of Calen, whose Successors still hold the Title of Dukes of Westphalen: the Bishoppicks of Breme, Munster, Paderborn and Minden, having been formerly endowed with goodly Territories, had some accurements also out of this Estate, every one catching hold of that which lay nearest to him. But not to make too many Subdivisions of it, we will divide it only into these two parts, viz. 1. Westphalen specially so called, and 2. the Bishoppick of Breme.

1. In WESTPHALIA specially so called, which is that part hercof which lieth next to Cleve, the places of most observation are, 1. Gefcke a Town of good repute; 2. Brula a Village of great beauty; 3. Aruberg and 4. Fredeborch, honoured with the Title of Prefectures.
5. Wadenborch: 6. Homburg, Lording it over fair and spacious Territories. All which with two Lordships and eight Prefectures, more dispersed in the Dukedom of Engern and County of Surland, belonging unto the Bishop of Calen, the titular Duke of Westphalen, and really of Angriwaria, (Engern) as he styles himself: the Title and possession of Duke of Engern being acquired unto this first Emperor and King of Germany, firnamed the Fowler, with the consent of Otto the first, his elder Brother.
7. Mountabour, (perhaps Mont-Tabor) seated in that part hercof which is called Wesfervald, a Town of consequence, belonging to the Elector of Triers.
8. Rhenum, 9. Schamlat, and 10. Becken, reasonable good Towns; all of the Bishoppick of Munster.
11. Munster it self famous for the Treaty, and Conclusions made upon that Treaty for the peace of Germany: seated upon the River Em, and so called from a Monastery here founded by Charles the great which gave beginning to the Town; supposed to be that Mediolanum which Polony placeth in this Tract. A beautiful and well fortified City, and the See of a Bishop, who is also the Temporal Lord of it famous for the woful Tragedies here acted by a lawless cruc of Anabaptists, who chose themselves a King (that famous Tailor John of Leyden) whom they called King of Sionas; they named the City New Jerusalem, proclaimed a Community both of Goods and Women, cut off the heads of all that opposed their doings; and, after many fanatick and desperate actions, were by the care and industry of the Bishop and his Confederates brought to condign punishment. The Story is to be seen at large in Sheldons, Mr. Hooker's Preface, and some modern Pamphlets, wherein, as in a Mirrour, we may plainly fee the face of the present Times. 12. Osnabrig, first built as some say, by Julius Cæsar, as others, by the Earls of Engern; but neither so ancient as the one, nor of so late a standing as the others make it. Here is an Episcopal See founded by Charles the Great, who gave it all the Privileges of an University; liberally endowed at the first erection of the same, and since so well improved both in Power and Patrimony, that an alternate Succession in it by the Dukes of Brumswick hath been concluded on in the Treaty of Munster, as a fit Compensation for the Bishoppick of Halberstadt, (otherwise disposed of by that Treaty) of late enjoyed wholly by that Family. 13. Quakenburg on the River Hase. 14. Warendorp, and 15. Wildhusen; Towns of that Bishoppick. 16. Paderborn an Episcopal See also, founded by Charles the Great at the first Conversion of the Saxons; more ancient than Trong, yet more strong than beautiful. 17. Ringelstein, and 18. Osnabrig; Belonging to the Bishop of Paderborn.

- 19. Minden, upon the Wefer, another of the Episcopal Sees founded by Charles the Great; and by him liberally endowed with a goodly Patrimony: converted to Lay-uses since the Reformation, under colour of Administration of the goods of the Bishoppick and now, by the Conclusions at Munster, fetted for ever on the Electors of Brandenburg, with the Title of Prince of Minden. 20. Rintelen, a strong Town, conveniently seated on the Wefer, not far from Minden, to the Bishop whereof it doth belong.

Hitherto one would think that Westphalen had formerly been a part of S. Peters Patrimony, belonging wholly to the Clergy; but there are some Free Cities and Secular Princes which have shares therein. As 1. Warburg, an ant Town, but seated on an uneven piece of ground, near the River Dümmla: a Town which tradeth much in good Ale, brewed here, and sold in all parts of the Country: heretofore a County of it self under the Earls hercof, now governed in the nature of a Free Estate, and reckoned an Imperial City. 2. Brake, accounted of as Imperial also. 3. Herforden, a Town of good strength and note, governed by its own Laws and magistrats, under the Protection of Calen. 4. Lengow, belonging heretofore to the Earls of Liippe; but by them so well privileged and enfranchised, that now it governeth it self as a free Estate. Here is also 5. the Town and County of Ravenpurg, belonging anciently to the Dukes of Cleve, and now in the Right of that House to the Elector of Brandenburg; as also 6. the Town and County of Liippe, lying on the West side of the Wesfer; the Pedigree of the Earls whereof some fetch from that Sp. Manlius who defended the Roman Capitol against the Gauls, (they might as well derive it from the Geck which preferred that Capitol;) others with greater modesty look no higher for it than to the time of Charles the Great; one of the noble Families of the ancient Saxons. 7. Here also stands the Town and Cattle of Arenberg, commanding over a large and goodly Patrimony thereto adjoining; which being much encreased by the accession of Sedan in the neighbouring Belgium, was by the Heir-general of this House conveyed in Marriage to Engelbert the 9. Earl of Marck, whose second Son, called Eberhard, (but the only one he had by this Venter) succeeded in his Mother's Estates and Honours; which were kept undivided, till Eberhard, the 6. Lord thereof of the House of Marck, contenting himself with the Titles and Estates of Arenberg, left Sedan and the pieces which belonged unto it to his younger brother Robert. The great Grandchild of this Eberhard, called also Robert, created the first Earl of Arenberg, left his Estates and Titles to his Sister Margaret, married to John Lord of Brabant, a person of great note and power in the Helgic Provinces, and faithful to the last in the Cause and Quarrel of King Philip the 2. in which finally he lost his life, Anno 1568, leaving both his Estates and Title unto Charles his Son, frequently mentioned by the name of Charles Earl of Arenberg in the Stories of the Belgic Wars, in which he was no less considerable for his eminent valour, than his singular Fidelity to his Lord and Master. Some other Lords and Earls here are, but they most considerable: all of them Homagers of the Empire, but their Acknowledgments hercof little more than titular; though since in danger of performing more real Services; the Emperour Ferdinand the 2. after the Surprise of Holftein and some part of Denmark, Anno 1626, gaining fo far upon this Country, that had not the King of Sweden come in so seasonably, he had made himself absolute Master of it, and, by the opportunity of the situation of it on the back of the Netherlands, forced the United States to some great Extremities. As for the Title of Duke of Westphalen and Engern, it hath been long used (as before was said) by the Bishops of Calen; as also (but with better Right as to that of Westphalen) by the House of Lauenburg, descended from the ancient Electoral Family, writing themselves in that regard Dukes of Saxony, Westphalen, and Angriwaria or Engern.

2. The Bishoppick of BREME lieth on the other side of the Wefer, extending as far as to the Elb and the German Ocean. So called of 1. Breme, the principal City, seated on the Wefer, there broad and navigable; the City by that means well traded, populous and rich, beautified with fair and even Streets, and very strongly fortified against all invasions both by Art and Nature, the Town being so seated amongst fens, occasioned by the Over-flowings of the Rivers, that it may be easily drowned on all sides, to keep off an Enemy; adorned also with a spacious market-place, a fair Council-house, and a large Cathedral, the See of the Archbishop, who is the Temporal Lord of the Town and Territory. Other Towns of special note are 2. Osnabrig, not far from Breme, from whence great quantity of Linnen is brought yearly to England and other places. 3. Wurflen, on the Wefer also. 4. Ottendorp, on the River Bolba, not far from the fall thereof into the Ocean. 5. Buxtehude, on the Elb, not far from Hamburg, but on the higher tide of the water. 6. Stade, Stade, or Stradum, seated on the River Zwinge, near the fall thereof into the Elb; accounted the ancientest Town of all Saxony, and one of the first which was enrolled amongst the Hanse, and by special Privilege had the pre-emption of all the Rhenish Wine that passed by them, and the Right also of Coining money. But being over-topped by the Power and Trade of Hamburg, (5 Dutch miles from it) it grew at length so poor and in such decay, that their yearly Revenues came but to go 1. per annum, so that they were fain to sell their Privileges to the Town of Hamburg, and put themselves under the Protection of the Bishops of Breme. It revived again upon the coming thither of the Englisch Merchants, who finding some hard measure from the Hamburgers, fixed their staple here: by means whereof the Citizens in short time grew exceeding wealthy, the Buildings fair and and beautiful, the Town strongly fortified. It is situate in a place so easily overwhelmed with water, that the people, in ostentation of their Strength and security, used to have Ordinance of Stone planted over their Gates. But the late German Wars have made them sensible of their folly; when, notwithstanding their new Works, and an English Garrison under Sir Charles Morgan, they were compelled to submit themselves to the Earl of Tilly An. 1627, recovered after by the Swedes, in the course of their Victories.

As for the Bishoprick of Bremen, it was first founded by Charley the Great, in the person of Willibrod an English Saxon, one of the first Preachers of the Gospel in these parts of this Country. The Town, before that time a poor Village only, being made an Archbishop See, and the Metropolitan of all the Churches of the North, quickly grew up into esteem, as the Bishop did in Power, and Patronage, till they became Lords of this Tract. It was governed since the Reformation of Religion by Lay-Bishops or Administrators of the Rents of the Bishopricks, which under that Title they inverted to their proper use. And now of late, by the Conclusions made at Munster, is seized as an Inheritance on the Crown of Sweden, to be enjoyed, together with the Bishoprick of Verden, by the Kings thereof, with the Title of Dukes of Bremen and Verden: the ancient Liberties of those Cities, formerly granted by their Bishops, being still preserved.

22. EAST-FRIESLAND.

EAST-FRIESLAND is bounded on the East with the River Wefer, by it parted from Westphalen; on the West with the River Ems, which parteth it from Goettingen and the rest of West-Friesland; on the North with the German Ocean; and on the South with the Earldom of Mark and part of Cleveland. So called from the Frifis, who, casting out the old Inhabitants, possessed themselves of it, and called it by their own name, Friesland: divided by the Ems or Amisus, into the Western, spoken of amongst the Netherlands, and the Eastern or East-Friesland, in which now we are.

The nature of the Soil we shall see anon, when we come to the Subdivisions of it. The chief Rivers (besides those of 1. Ems, and 2. Wefer, spoken of elsewhere) are 3. Jade, which falleth into a great Bay or Arm of the Ocean, called from hence De Jade. 4. Dollart, on which standeth the City of Emden. 5. Delms, and 6. Honta, Neighbourd by Delmenhorst and Oldenburg, Towns of this Country. The whole is divided into 1. The Country of Emden or East-Friesland, properly so called; and 2. The Earldom of Oldenburg.

1. EAST-FRIESLAND specially so called hath on the West the River Ems, on the North the Ocean, on the East and South the Earldom of Oldenburg: called also the County of EMDEN, from the fair Town of Emden, the chief City of it. The Soil hereof is very fruitful both in Corn and Pasturage, sending great flocks of Oxen, Horses, Wool, Swine, Butter, Cheese, and all sorts of Grain, into other Countries; all of them excellent in their kind, not easily to be bettered (if equalled) in any place whatsoever. Chief Towns herein are, 1. Emden, so called from the Ems, on which it is situate; Dollart a small River falling here into it, a noted and well-traded Town, beautified with a Haven so deep and large, that the greatest Ships with full Sail are admitted into it. The people are rich, affirmed to have 60 ships of 100 tons apiece, and 600 lesser Barks, of their own; besides 7000 Buffes and Fisher-boats, maintained for the most part by their Herring-fishing on the Coasts of England. The Buildings are generally fair, both private and publick, especially the Church, the Town-Hall, and Earl's Palace. This last is a strong and stately Castle, situate at the mouth of the Haven, and on all sides encompassed by the Sea, and yet not strong enough to preserve the Townsmen in their due Obedience: who in the year 1595, taking advantage of the Absence of the Earl, kept him out of their Town, because he seemed not to approve the Calvinian humour; and have since governed in the nature of a Common wealth, confederate with the States of the United Provinces, for their better Establishment and support. So easily is Religion made a mask to disguise Rebellion. 2. Aurick, by some called Ansling, seated in the Islands, rich and well walled, of great resort by reason of the pleasure of Hunting, afforded very liberally in the Forests and Woods adjoining, drawing thither the Nobility and Gentry in great abundance. 3. Efen, on the Sea-shore, which gives the Title of an Earl to the Lord thereof; as doth also, 4. Jever, situate on the West of the River Jade; but both Earls subject to the Earl of East-Friesland. 5. Uredburg, (that is to say, the Free Village) so called from some Immunities granted by the Earls; possessed a while by those of Brunswick, who fenced and garrisoned it for themselves, but in the end recovered by Leard the 2. Earl. 6. Brock, the Seat and proper Government of the Ancestors of these Earls; from whence the parts adjoining are called Brockmerland. 7. Norden, another Prefecture or Captainship of the said Ancestors. 8. Dimort, a strong Castle and Retiring-place of the Earls. 9. Lingen, upon the Ems, a strong Town well fortified, and as well garrisoned; belonging to the King of Spain, as Vicar to the Empire over all Friesland, even to Dimarsh and the Confines of Denmark. A Dignity procured by Maximilian, Grandfather to Charles the 5. of the Emperor Frederick the 3. in right whereof the King of Spain, as Heir of the House of Burgundy, hath some pre-eminence over Emden, of little use to him since the falling off of the Belgick Provinces. More Towns of note I find not in it, but of Castles, stately dwelling-houses, and well-built Villages, an incredible number; standing so thick, that in many places they join together: some of them being withal so large, so well peopled, and of Streets so spacious, that they may compare with many Cities in Germany. Of all which the most City-like is named Leera.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Chanci minnes, described by Pliny, to be so barbarous a people, and so destitute of all necessary Provision for the life of man, that they had no drink but Rain water, preserved in great Troughs before the doors of their Cottages. Thence were ousted or subdued by the Frifons, a neighbouring people possessing North-Holland the District of Utrecht, with the Countries of Goettingen and West-Friesland, who having once passed over the Ems, extending their Dominions as far as Denmark; governed by Kings, but intermingled with and overpowered by the Saxons, till the time of Charley the Great, by whom the last King Rebald overcome in fight was persuaded to receive the Sacrament of Holy Baptism: but being told that his Friends and Kinsfolks were in Hell, because no Christians, Neither will I (saith he) be of that Profession, for I love to be amongst my Kindred. After this, Friesland was a member of the French Kingdom, till the erecting of the Earldom of Holland by Charles the Bald, An 893. at which time all Friesland on the West side of the Ems was conferred upon him; possessed, but not without much War and Bloodshed by his Successors; the Frifons ever and anon rebelling against them, and killing divers of them in the open field. Those parts of it on the other side of the Ems remained under the German Empire: governed by Deputies, puties, Lieutenants, and Provincial Earls, accountable to the Emperours for the Administration till the year 1453, in which Ulrich, Governor hereof for the Emperor Frederick, having got the Town of Emden out of the hands of the Hamburgers, was made Earl of East-Friesland, transmitting the Estate and Title unto his Posterity.

Earls of EAST-FRIESLAND.

- 1453 1. Ulrich, Son of Emno, the Son of Ezardus, Captains or Governors for the Empire in Brock and Norden, made the first Earl of East-Friesland by the Emperor Frederick, from the Citizens of Brunswick.
- 1466 2. Ezard, the Son of Ulrich, who got Frederick from the Citizens of Brunswick.
- 1528 3. Emno the Son of Ezard, who regained Greexyl, formerly usurped by the Dukes of Gelder.
- 1540 4. Ezard II. Son of Emno who married Katherine, Daughter to Othavian the first of Sweden.
5. Emno II. Son of Ezard the 2. and the Lady Katherine.
- 1586 6. Rodolphus Christianus, Son of Emno the 2. who, being well affected to the Lutheran Forms, (first introduced in the time of Emno the first) was by a Calvinian party grown up in Emden, dispossessed of that City, Anno 1595.
- 1608 7. Emno-Ludovicus, Son of Rodolphus Christianus, succeeded in this Earldom on the death of his Father, and is still living, for ought I can hear unto the contrary.

The Arms of the Earls of East-Friesland are Argent, four Bendlets Azure, charged with ten Hearts Or, 43 3, 2, 1.

2. The Earldom of OLDENBURG containeth that part of this Country which lieth on the West-side of the Wefer, betwixt the Bishoprick of Munster and East-Friesland specially so called, and to extending Northwards to the German Ocean. So called from Oldenburg, the chief City of it, and the head of this Earldom.

The Soil hereof is exceeding rich, but in Pastures specially, which breed them infinite Herds of Cattel, and furnish not this Country only, but some of their German Neighbours, and many of the more Northern Nations, with Horses, Beeves, Sheep, Swine, Butter, Cheese. Here is also good store of Pulse, Barley and Oats; plenty of Fruits, and Trees of all sorts; large Woods, and those well stored with Venison, which yield unto the Gentry the delights of Hunting. But the Air is cold and foggy in some extremity; especially in Winter, and nigh the Sea.

Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Oldenburg, on the River Honta, repaired, if not built, by Orbo the Great, who founded the Church of S. John Baptist. A Town of no great fate or beauty; the Houses being generally of Clay, but the Castle (the Dwelling-place of the Earls) of well-hewn Stones, of an orbicular form, with deep Ditches of water, The Town and Castle both being strongly fortified. 2. Delmenhorst, on the River Delms, a strong place and of great importance, built in the year 1247 by Orbo, Brother of Earl Christian the 2. and having been 65 years in possession of the Bishops of Munster, was suddenly surprised on Palm-Sunday morning by Anthony Earl of Oldenburg, Anno 1547, continuing ever since part of this Estate. 3. Beckenhusen, on a River which falleth not far off into the great Bay or Arm of the Sea which is called De Jade. 4. Benardens. 5. Ovelgard; both seated on a long Languet or Demy-Island betwixt the said De Jade and the River Wefer, called Butiada: both taken and the last well fortified by John Earl of Oldenburg, Anno 1520, belonging formerly to the Prefecture of East-Friesland, but never brought under the command of the Earls thereof. 6. Weferberg, the chief Town, of a spacious Territory. 7. Friede, a strong piece on the River Jade, built by Earl Christian, one of the younger Branches of the House of Oldenburg, about the year 1400. 8. Mellum; 9. Jadelle, places of principal importance; the one on the River Jade, the other near the Ocean. Here is also within this Earldom the Province of Amerlander, supported by some to have been the Seat of the Ambrogers, who accompanied the Cimbri and Tentones in their Expedition towards the Roman Provinces, and were slain by Marius.

As for the Earls of Oldenburg, they derive themselves from Walpert, one of the Nephews of Wittikindus, the last King and first Duke of the Saxons; who having about the year 850, built a strong Castle on the borders of Bremen, in the honour of his Wife Alseburg, (whom he dearly loved) called it Aseburgum, so called by the Latinists to this day, by the Germans Oldenborch. But his Male issue failing in Frederick the 7. Earl, it came to one Elinorus, the Son of Haisa, a Nobleman of the Frifian blood, who had married Richsa, the Daughter of John, the fifth Earl of this Family. From him in a direct Line descended Christian or Christiern, eldest Son of Theodorick; who, being fortunately advanced to the Crown of Denmark, An. 1448, left his Estate in this Earldom (but referring the Title, according to the fashion of Germany) to his Brother Gerrard, the better to take him off from his Pretensions to the Dukedom of Sleswick, and the Earldom of Holstein, in which he did pretend a share. The Patrimony of it was much improved by the additions of the Countries of Ruhringen, Olfingen, and Wangerland, all lying on the German Sea; bequeathed by the last Will and Testament of the Lady Mary, Countess of Jever in East-Friesland, to John Earl of Oldenburg, the third from Gerrard. The Succession of these Earls, in regard the Royal Line of Denmark, and by consequence of Great Britain, is descended from them, I have here subjoined in this ensuing Catalogue of

The Earls of OLDENBURG:

- 850 1. Walpert, of the Race of Wittikind, the first Earl of Oldenburg.
- 856 2. Theodorick, the Son of Walpert.
3. Theodorick II. the Son of Theodorick the 1.
4. Orbo, Son of Theodorick the 2.
5. John, the Son of Orbo, accompanied the Emperor Henry the 2. in his Wars against the Greeks and Saracens, Anno 1007.
6. Himo, surnamed the Glorious, Son of John.
7. Frederick, Son of Himo, fortunate in his Wars against the Frifians; the last of the Male-line of this House.
8. Elinorus, the Son of Haisa, a Nobleman of the Frifian blood and of Richsa his Wife, the Daughter of John the fifth Earl.
9. Elinorus II. Son to Elinorus the first.
10. Christiernus, Son of Elinorus the 2. surnamed the Courageous, or the Warlike; a professed Enemy of Henry the Lion, Duke of Saxony, from whom he took the City of Breme.
11. Maurice, the Son of Christiern, an Associate of Arnolph Earl of Holstein in his Wars with Denmark.
12. Christian II. Son of Maurice.
13. John II. Son of Christian the 2.
14. John III. Son of John the 2.
15. Canade, the Son of John the third.
16. Christiern III. Son of Canade; a Student in Ge- len, where he was initiated into holy Orders, which he relinquished, much against the will of his brother Maurice, on the death of his Father.

17. Theodorick, Son of Christian the 3. the first Earl of Delmenhorst of this Line; which fell to him at the death of Nicolas Archbishop of Bremen, descended from a younger Son of John the second.
- 1440 18. Christian IV. Son of Theodorick and Hedwig, Sister and Heir of Gerrard and Adolphus, Dukes of Sleswick, and Earls of Holstein; elected on the commendation of his Uncle Adolphus to the Crown of Denmark, Anno 1448.
- 1448 19. Gerward, the Brother of Christian the 4. a Prince of an unquiet spirit, always in Wars, and always worried. He lost the Town of Delmenhorst to the Bishop of Munster.
- 1500 20. John IV. Son of Gerrard, repaired the Ruines of his Estate, and settled the Distractions of it in the time of his Father, being then in Exile; and after very much enlarged it by the reduction of Butia.
- 1526 21. Anthony, the Son of John the 4. by a sudden Surprise recovered Delmenhorst from the Bishop of Munster, Anno 1547, which he strong ly fortified.
- 1573 22. John V. Son of Anthony, enlarged this Earl-dom with the Provinces of Ruffingen, Olfingen, and Wangerland, bequeathed to him by the last Will of the Countess of Jever, in East-Friesland.
23. Anthony II. Brother of John the 5. in whose life time he was Earl of Delmenhorst, and after his death of Oldenburg also: Still living, Anno 1648, for ought I can learn unto the contrary.

And thus we see the present Estate of Germany, distracted and divided amongst many Princes, Prelates, and Incorporated Towns, the chief of which are herein mentioned and described. But besides these there are many others of less note and smaller Territories, which yet are absolute and free: inasmuch that in one days riding a Traveller may twice or thrice meet with divers Laws and divers Coins; every Free Prince and Free City (whose Laws the Emperours are sworn to keep inviolable) having power to make what Laws and coin what Money they will. And hence, in the Censure of Kingdoms, the King of Spain is said to be Rex hominum, because of his Subjects reasonable Obedience; the King of France, Rex Animarum, because of their infinite Taxes and Impositions; the King of England, Rex Diabolorum, because of his Subjects often Infurrection against and Deposition of their Princes: But the Emperour of Germany is called Rex Regum, because there is such a number of Reguli or free Princes which live under his Command; or rather at their own Command, (for they do even what they list) as the Emperour Maximilian the first well noted.

And, to say truth, the publick Government thereof is nothing less than Monarchical; the Emperour being accompted amongst the Princes but as the chief Officer of the Empire; not reckoned of, by Bodin, and others of our great Statists and Civilians, as an absolute Monarch, such as the King of England, France and Spain, are confided to be. For the Privileges of the Free Cities being made perpetual, the great Estates Hereditary, and the Empire Eligible; the Emperours were brought at last to such low Condition, as to be made accountable to the States of the Empire; who if they be perfwaded in their Consciences, or but think they be so, that he is likely by his Male-administration to destroy the Empire, or that he will not hearken unto good Advice, ab Electorum Collegio Casarea majestate privare possit, (as my Author hath it) he may be deprived by the Electors; and a more fit and able man chosen into the place, and that too, as the Emperour Jodocus Barbatius hath declared in one of his Constitutions, An. 1410, sine Infidelitatis vel Rebellionis crimine, without incurring the crimes of Treason or Dilloyalty. So that the supreme Power and Majesty of the Empire seems to reside especially and contrarily in the Electoral Colledge; diffidually, in the Imperial Diet; by way of Execution, in the chamber of Spires; and other the supreme Courts of the several Circles. But that which makes that Body which they call the Empire is the Assembly of the Prelates, Princes, and Commissioners of the Free Cities in their Diets or Parliaments, the Emperour presiding in them: whom he that saw adorned in his Royal Robes, with the Imperial Crowns and Scepter, with the Titles of Cesar and Augustus given at every word, would think that the whole Action did take life from him; whereas, indeed, he hath not so much Privilege as a Negative voice, but is to put in execution such Decrees and Sanctions as these Estates assembled have thought fit to make; not able to do any act by his own Authority, which may speak him Emperour, but, on the other side, the Princes take power unto themselves of making Laws for, and imposing Taxes on, their Subjects, of raising War upon one another, or against a third; and doing many other acts of supreme Authority, which in the Emperour would be counted matter of Male-administration. Such Points as these, together with the appointing of Judges and the like chief Magistrates, (as they relate unto the Empire) are not to be concluded of but in general Diets; which may be summoned by or without the Emperour, as occasion serveth. And to this weakening of the Majesty and Power Imperial the neighbouring Princes have afforded their best assistance; jealous of their own Interests and decrease of Power, if that vast Body to which limbed should be strongly joyned, and all the several Members of it united under the command of one supreme Head. Clear proof whereof we have in those solemn Leagues and Confederations made in their several times against Charles the fifth and the late Emperour Ferdinand the 2. as soon as they began to be in some possibility of settling the Imperial Majesty in its proper splendour, and bringing down the Princes of it to a lower pitch.

As for the means by which the Empire is attained, it is, and hath of long time been, by the way of Election, as before was noted. The business was first projected in the Court of Rome by Gregory the Imperial, thought it the most expedient course to continue the Imperial Title amongst those of this Nation. But whatsoever was pretended, the Design of it chiefly was to make the Emperours less powerful, and distrust the Germans (whom they feared) the better opportunity to grow great in Italy. And that the Emperour might be such as the Pope should like of, the matter was so ordered, that the one half of the Electors should be also of the Ecclesiasticks, who, being obnoxious to the ways of the Popes, and for the most part driving on their Interests, Popes, and for the most part driving on their Interests, were very like to serve him on all occasions. The Electors only fix in number: that is to say, 1. The Archbishop of Mentz, Chancellor of the Empire, 2. The Archbishop of Colem, Chancellor of Italy, 3. The Archbishop of Triers, Chancellor of France, 4. The Count-Palatine of Rhene, Arch-Sewer, 5. The Duke of Saxony, Lord Marshal, and 6. the Marquess of Brandenburg, Lord Chamberlain. Upon equality of Voices the Duke of Bohemia (now King) was to come in for a seventh; who by Office is to be chief Cup-bearer in all great Solemnities. For upon days of great Solemnities, as Elections, Inaugurations, the first days of the Imperial Diets, and the like to these, these Offices are performed only; and then performed in this manner following, either in person or by Proxy. Before the Palace-Gate stands an heap of Oats, so high that it reacheth to the breast of the Horse on which the Duke of Saxony rideth, having in his hand a silver Wand and a silver Measure, both which together are to weigh 200 Marks. The Duke, still sitting on his Horse, filcheth up the Measure with Oats, then sticks his Wand in the remainder of the heap, delivereth the measure of Oats unto some of his Servants who stand nearest unto him, and so attends the Emperour into the Court. The Emperour being entered and sat down at the Table, the three Spiritual Electors, standing orderly together, say the Grace before him. Then cometh the Marquess of Brandenburg on Horse-back also, with a Basin of Water in his hand, (the Basin being of the weight of 12 Marks of Silver) and a fine clean Towel on his Arm; which, alighting from his Horse, he holds to the Emperour till he wath. Next comes the Palatine of the Rhene mounted on his Horse, with four Silver Platters full of Meat, every one of the weight of three Marks of Silver; which, descending from his Horse after due reverence made, he carrieth and placeth on the Table. And finally the Duke (or King) of Bohemia, entering the great Hall on Horse-back as the others did, with a Napkin on his Arm, and a covered Cup in his Hand of the weight of 12 Marks in Silver, alighting from his Horse, and presenting the Cup unto the Emperour. But we must know, that of late times these Offices are seldom or never performed by the Electors in their own persons. It is enough if they send their Ambassadors, or substitute some one or other of the Emperours Court to do for them.

The Election is usually celebrated at Frankford on the Maine, to which place the Electors or their Deputies are to make repair on the day appointed by the Archbishop of Mentz, whose Office it is (as being Chancellor of the Empire) to issue out the Summons for this Assembly. In their passage unto Frankford they are to be sufficiently guarded by every Prince through whose Territories or Dominions they are to travel; their Attendants not to exceed the number of 200 Horse, of which 50 only to be armed. When they are met, they go into S. Bartholomew's Church, the most Capacious of that City) where, after the High-Mass is said, the three Spiritual Electors laying their Hands upon their Breasts, and the Temporal Princes on the Book, make Oath to chuse a fit Temporal Head for the People of Christendom. Upon equality of Voices, as it sometimes happeneth, the Bohemian hath the casting Voice, and concludes the business. If in the space of 30 days they have not agreed upon a man, then must they have no other allowance but of Bread and Water, nor be suffered to go out of the City, till that necessity compelleth them unto some Agreement. Which being at the last resolved on, and declared accordingly, the Prince so elected is presently saluted by the Title of King of the Romans; the Title of Emperour being not properly to be given unto him, until he have received the Imperial Crown at the hands of the Pope: though since the time of Charles the fifth, without any such trouble to themselves or the Popes of Rome, the Title of both Emperour and Imperial Majesty is usually conferred upon them from their first Election. The Election being finished, and signified to the party chosen, the Inauguration was held anciently at three several places: viz. 1. at Aquileira, or Agen, in the Land of Gallicia, where he received the Silver Crown for the Kingdom of Germany; 2. at Milain, by the Archbishop whereof he was crowned with the Iron Crown, for Lombardy, or the Realm of Italy; 3. at Rome, where, at the hands of the Pope himself, he was crowned with a Golden Crown, for the Roman Empire. But since those Journies unto Rome and Attilin have been long laid by; the Emperours holding their Elections to be strong enough to make good their Title to that Dignity, being merely titular, and their Inauguration at Agen to be as effectual as if they had also visited the two other Cities. The form of which Elections, the Privileges of the Electors, and other fundamental Constitutions of the German Empire, we find summed up together in the Golden Bull of Charles the 4. by him first promulgated, an. 1359. But we must know, that since the publishing of that Bull, the business of Election hath received some change as to the number and the persons of the Parties interested. For, it pleased the Emperour Ferdinand the 2. on the Prohibition of Frederick the first Elector Palatine, to transfer the Electoral Dignity, with the Office of Arch-bishop, or Arch-Sewer, from that House to the Duke of Bavaria, the Title of Elector of Bavaria, with all the Powers and Privileges which belonged unto it, to be inrolled upon him and his Heirs for ever. Which action of the Emperour being protested against by some of the Electors, in favour of the Palatine Family, and in due care unto themselves, in not admitting such a dangerous precedent for the time to come, it was at last concluded and agreed on by the Pacification made at Munster, Anno 1648. That the Duke of Bavaria and his Heir enjoying the said Electoral Dignity with the Upper Palatinate, according to the Translation of it from the Palatine Family spoken of before; an Eighth Electorate should be added to the former number, to be enjoyed together with the Lower Palatinate by Charles Ludowick, the now Prince Elector Palatine, and his Heirs, who also, on the failure of the Line of Bavaria, are to be repossessed of their ancient Rights, the Title of Arch-Treasurer being given unto them at the present instead of that of Arch-bishop, or Arch-Sewer, which they had before.

Now as a step unto the Empire, and for the better assurance of the Imperial Dignity to the Austrian Family, it was cunningly projected by Charles the fifth, (having received the Imperial Crown from Pope Clement the 7.) that his Brother Ferdinand should be chosen King of the Romans whilst himself was living, and by that means be the more certain of the Empire after his decease. Which Policy being followed by all his Successors, the Title of Rex Romanorum, or King of the Romans, is grown to be the Title of the Heir apparent, or designed Successor, in the present Empire of the Germans; as that of Cesar was from the time of Adrian, in the Empire of the ancient Romans. Inasmuch as Rex Romanorum is now defined to be one who is already so far advanced in the Empire, that on the Death, Deprivation, or Resignation of the present Emperour, he is immediately to succeed. And so accordingly it hath happened since this Act of Charles, who though he laboured under-hand to leave the Empire unto Philip his Son and Heir, whom he found capable enough of so high an Honour; yet he could not do it: it being thought by many understanding men, that on notice of this like mind to transmit the Empire to his own Posterity, did secretly lend Duke Maurice his helping hand to drive him out of Germany, as in brief he did. As for the reasons, or, to say better, the pretences, upon which Charles did institute this Rex Romanorum, (for questionless the true reason of it was to perpetuate the Empire in the Austrian Family) they were these that follow. 1. Because that, having the command of many Nations, he could not always personally attend the Affairs of Germany. 2. The troubled Estate of Christendom, of the Empire especially, maria and Jaistland, save that it hath an Outlet into the Baltick, on the North West of Wageland. Chief Places in it are, 1. Kiel (Chilumium in Latine) seated upon a navigable Arm of the Baltick Sea, parting Wageland from the Duke-edom of Sleswick: a Town well traded, and having a capacious Haven, seldom without good store of Shipping from Germany, Lithland, Sweden, and the rest of Denmark. 2. Rembow, the best fortified Piece in all this Province. 3. Niemußer, on the North west of the Stear, not far from the head of it. 4. Wilster, on a small River so called. 5. Brantfede, 6. Borkholm, not much observable, but for a Monastery in which Henry one of the Earls hercof (of a younger House) turned Monk, and died, Anno 1241.

The ancient Inhabitants of this and the other three were the Saxons, Sigolons, and Sihalingis, placed here by Fotemy; whom I conceive to be no other than some Tribes of the Cimbri of whom this Cherfnefs took name; the two last of which passing into the name of the first, and in the Declination of the Roman Empire marching over the Elb, and spreading all along the Coasts of the German Ocean, molested with their Piracies and Depredations, the Shores of Britain, known by that name unto the Britains, they were incited to assault them against the Scots and Picts. Which action, with the Aid of the Jutes and Angli (Inhabitants together with them of the Cimbri Cherfnefs) they performed so honestly as to make themselves Masters of the best part of the Island. Such as remained behind, not being able to defend their own against the Scoties, were fain to quit the parts lying next to Macclenburg; which, being peopled by the Agri, took the name of Wageland. But the Saxons being vanquished by Charles the Great, there on the North-side of the Elb became a part of the great Dukedom of Saxony; and so continued till dismembered by Letharius, both Duke and Emperor, who gave the proper Holf (or Holfen in speciall) so called) with the Province of Schleswig to Adolph Earl of Schaumburg, who had deserved well of him in his Wars, with the Title of Earl of Holfen. An 1114. By Adolph the second, his Successor, it was settled in this House; who having made a full Conquest of it, caused him to be planted with Colonies of Dutch or German from Holland, Westphalen, and Friesland; by which means the name of Sleswice was at last worn out. By Gerrard the fifth the Dukedom of Sleswick was also added; conferred upon him by the bounty of Margaret Queen of Denmark, in whose Wars he served.

Adolph the last Earl of this House dying without Issue, the whole Estate fell on Christiern, Son of Theodorick Earl of Oldenburg, and of Hedstern, his Wife, Sister and Heir to Adolph before mentioned; who, being called to the Crown of Denmark commanded with his Brother Gerrard also of the Emperor Frederick the third, prevailed so far as to have the whole Estate erected into a Dukedom, Anno 1414, to be held by him and his Successors of the Sacred Empire. Which said, we will next add the Catalogue of

The Earls and Dukes of HOLSTEIN.

- 1114 1. Adolph of Schaumburg, by Letharius, Emperor and Duke of Saxony, made the first Earl of Holfen.
- 1137 2. Adolph II. Son of Adolph the first.
- 1164 3. Adolph III. Son of Adolph the 2. vanquished by Canutus King of the Danes, lost himself and his Country.
- 1232 4. Adolphus IV. in his Fathers life-time recovered his Estate from Waldemar the Successor of Canutus, overcame by him in a well fought Battle, Anno 1226, his Father then Prisoner to the Danes.

- 1261 5. Gerrard, the 2. Son of Adolph the fourth, his elder Brother John making choice of Wageland succeeded in Holfen.
- 1281 6. Henry the Son of Gerrard, the first that set up a Custom-house at Hamburg, for receipt of his Tolls and Taxes.
- 1310 7. Gerrard II. Son of Henry, slain treacherously by the Danes.
- 1339 8. Henry II. Son of Gerrard the second.
- 1381 9. Gerrard III. Son of Henry the second, created the first Duke of Sleswick by Queen Margaret of Denmark.
- 1404 10. Henry III. Son of Gerrard the third.
- 1427 11. Adolphus V. commonly called the XII. (those of the younger Houses being reckoned in) the last Earl of this House.
- 1459 12. Christiern of Oldenburg, King of Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, Son of Theodorick Earl of Oldenburg, and of his Wife Hedwigis, Sister of Henry and Adolphus the two last Earls, succeeded in the Earldom of Holfen, enlarged with the addition of Dithmarsch, and erected into a Dukedom by the Emperor Frederick the third, Anno 1474.

But seeing that Orho Earl of Schaumburg pretended a Right unto the whole, as the next Heir-male, according to the Constitutions of the Empire, of which it was holden; and Gerrard the Brother of Christiern put in for his Share, according to the ill Custom of Germany, of which it was then counted part: he was fain to buy his peace of both; giving to Orho 40000 Florens in ready money, with the Towns of Pioneburg, Haltzburg, and Brantfede, the ancient possessions of the Earls of Schaumburg, and 50000 Marks to his Brother Gerrard, besides his whole Interest in the Earldom of Oldenburg, as before was said. By this means Holfen, was united to the Crown of Denmark; the Kings thereof, as Dukes of Holfen, being counted Princes of the Empire; but neither send unto the Diet, nor contribute any thing at all to the publick Taxes, nor acknowledge any kind of subjection to it more than merely titularly. Only it was ordained at the request of the Subjects when first they were incorporated into that Kingdom, that in case of any grievance or unjust sentence in the ordinary Courts of Justice, wherein they found no remedy in the supreme Council of the Province, it might be lawful for them to appeal to the Imperial Chamber, as they had done formerly. Which as it was granted to content them at the present time, on sufficient Caution; so hath it seldom or never been put in practise; the very Grant or Privilege (if such it were) being in a manner worn out of memory. But since this uniting of these two Estates, the Title of Duke of Holfen and a good part of the Country was given unto Adolphus Brother of Christiern the 3. (created by Queen Elizabeth, one of the Knights of the Garter, Anno 1560) who governed it interchangeably with the King in their several turns, after whose death, and the death of all his Children dying without Issue-male, the Title of it was conferred on Ulrich, Son of Frederick the second, and Brother of Christiern the fourth, created King of the Garter by King James, Anno 1605; in whose posterity it remains till this present time.

2. The Kingdom of DENMARK.

IN which I. JUTLAND containeth all the rest of the Cimbri Cherfnefs, divided from the Dukedom of Holfen by the River Eyder, the ancient Boundary between the Saxons and the Danes; but principally by a long Trench and Wall from one Sea to the other of such breadth, that a Chariot or two Horse-men a-break might ride upon it. First built in imitation of the Pils Wall in England, by Godfrey King of Denmark, in the time of Charles the Great; either to hinder the daily Incurions of the Saxons, or as some, or to stop the current of the Victories of the said Charles, as others think. The Tract thereof, still very easy to be seen, is called Dennewerk (or the Danes Work) to this very day.

It was so called from the Jutes, who, together with the Angli and neighbouring Saxons, made a Conquest of the best part of Britain. The Country so abounded in Cattel, that it fended yearly into Germany 50000 Oxen, besides great store of Butter, Cheese, Tallow, Hides, and Horfes, divided commonly into North Jutland, and South Jutland, or Jutland specially so called, and the Dukedom of Sleswick.

SOUTH-JUTLAND, or the Dukedom of SLESWICK, is that part of the Cimbri Cherfnefs, which lies next to Holfen; called South-Jutland, from the Southern situation of it; and Sleswick, from the chief Town of it, and the head of this Dukedom. The Country, for the most part, is plain, little swelled with Mountains; the Fields whereof do interchangeably yield both Fish and Corn. For during one three years they feed it constantly, and reap the Fruits of it, and for the next three eat the Pools overflow the Land, to the end the Fish may eat up the Grasse, (whom they catch as often as they please) and the Mud which is left behind enrich the Soil. But besides their Pools, they have also on the Baltick Shores many goodly Bays; not only commodious for Merchants, but well stored with Fish, and with Salmons especially.

Chief Towns herein are, 1. Flensteborg, seated among very high Mountains on the Shore of the Baltick Sea, where there is a Port so deep, so safe, and so commodious, that all the Inhabitants thereof in a manner may lade and unlade their Ships close to their houses. 2. Hufsen, or Hufsum, upon the German Ocean, not far from the mouth of the River Eyder. 3. Haderslev, a Bishop's See, if not rather some Town or Manor of the Bishop's of Sleswick, situate on a navigable In-let of the Baltick Sea, wherewith it is almost encompassed; beautified with the fair Cattle of Hansburg, begun by John the eldest Son of King Christiern the first, then Duke of Holfen, but finished by Frederick the second, King of Denmark. 4. Lundenberg, in the Peninsule called Eyderstedde, over against De Strand, an Island of the German Ocean. 5. Sternberg, the ordinary Residence of the Governour for the King of Denmark. 6. Gutter, a strong Fort or Cattle of the Duke of Sleswick, at the end of a large Bay or In-let of the Baltick also; remarkable for the Toll-booth or Custom-house there erected, at which there is Toll paid one year with another for 50000 Oxen sent out of the North-Jutland into Germany. 7. Sleswick, originally by the Danes called Hyabum, built, as they say, by Hebe a Queen of the Nation; but by the Saxons called Sleswick, as the Town upon the River Sley, there running into the Baltick, and giving to the Town a fair and commodious Haven. This of long time hath been accounted the chief Town of this Province, honoured with an Episcopal See, and made the Head of the Dukedom, so giving name unto the whole. A Dukedom first erected by King Henry of Denmark, who gave it to Waldemar, great Grandchild of Abel, a former King, Anno 1280, to be held by him under the Right and Sovereignty of the Kings thereof. But the Male-issue failing, it returned to the Crown, and was by Margaret Queen of Denmark conferred on Gerrard Earl of Holfen, as before was said, Anno 1386. Repenting afterwards of that Act, he extorted it out of the hands of the Widow of Gerrard; but it was again recovered by the valour and good fortune of his Son Adolphus. After whose death it fell together with Holfen, upon Christiern of Oldenburg King of Denmark, as before related, by whom it was incorporated with that Crown, never since aliened, but assigned sometimes in Portion for the younger Princes; the Patrimony at this time of the Sons of Alexander, furnished of Sunderborg, (the place of his Nativity) Son of John, one of the younger Sons of King Christiern the third.

NORTH-JUTLAND, the most Northern part of all the Cherfnefs, hath on the South the Dukedom of Sleswick, but on all other parts the Sea. Divided commonly, according to the number of the Bishopsricks, into four Dioceses or Districts; that is to say,

1. The Diocese of RIP or RIPEN, bordering next to Sleswick, containing 30 Prefectures or Herets, (as they use to call them) seven Cities or walled Towns, and ten Castles. The chief of which are, 1. Ripen, the Episcopal See, situate near the German Ocean. 2. Kolding, on a Creek of the Baltick Sea; where Dorothy the Dowager of Christiern the third built a publick School, (one of my Authors calls it an University).

2. The Diocese of ARHUSEN, lying on the North of Ripen, but more towards the Baltick, containeth 31 Herets or Prefectures, seven Cities or walled Towns, and five Castles. The Chief whereof are, 1. Arhusen, the Episcopal See, seated on the Baltick, enjoying a commodious Port and well frequented; the first Bishop hereof being that Poppo who converted this Nation; Christianity and Episcopacy going for the most part hand in hand together. 2. Schanderborg, on the South of Arhusen. 3. Kalbe, a strong Cattle of the Kings, seated in the inmost part of a large Bay, occasioned by the Promontory or Cape of Hilleen, extending hence two Dutch miles to the high Hill of Ellemberg. Opposite whereto, and pertaining to this Jurisdiction, lie the Islands of 1. Sunfse, 2. Hirholm, 3. Tuen, 4. Hiansee, (perhaps Germa) 5. Hilgenes, and others.

3. The Diocese of WIBORCH, on the North of Arhusen, containeth fifteen Herets, the Islands of 1. Jegen, 2. Hanholm, 3. Ofstolen, 4. Cifland, 5. Egholm, and 6. Bodum; three Cities or walled Towns, and as many Castles. The Principal of which is Wiborch, the Episcopal See, an Island City, but situate on a water which runneth into the Bay of Linsfor. The ordinary Seat of Judicature for both the Jutlands, for all Causes, as well Criminal as Civil: the Court continually sitting from one day to another, unless perhaps the Judges do sometimes adjourn it for their own refreshments.

4. The Diocese of BURGAVE, or Vandalia, lying farther North, is commonly subdivided into four Parts or Members: that is to say, 1. Thylund, lying South of the Bay of Linsfor, on the Baltick side, whose chief Town is Aborch, the ordinary Seat and Residence of the Bishop of Vandalia, from hence many times called Aburgave, situate on a Bay aforesaid, which, opening in to the Baltick Sea, extended through the main Land Westward almost as far as the German Ocean. 2. Morset, lying on the Ocean, and containing three Prefectures or Herets; the Town of Nicoping the Cattle of Lundsted, and the life of Ageroe. 3. Hamborg, on the North-West of the Bay of Linsfor, containing 4 Herets, the Town of Thylund, where Christiern the third founded a publick School, or such another University as that of Kolding, the Cattle of Orum, and the Islands of Oland and Osholm. There is in this part also, the high Rock called Skarvingen, noted Sea-mark, fity serving to give notice to the Sailour of the Quick sands which lie underneath it and about this Coast. 4. Wenjsfel, Venhusen, or Wenstet, that is (as Mercator doth expound it) Pandulund feldes, the Seat of the Vandals, taketh up all the rest of the North of Fuinland, containing six Prefectures, the Islands of 1. Greiffholm, 2. Heitzholm, and 3. Tidholm, three Towns, and one Castle: the most remarkable of which is Schagen, within the most Northern point of all this Cherfoneuse. In this part is a very high Mountain called Mount Alberg, in which are found some marks and remainders of the ancient Giants, as the Inhabitants believe, and report accordingly.

The Inhabitants of both Fuinlands in the time of Protony and before, were the Cobandi, Chali, Phundusi, Charvades, and in the most Northern Tracts the Gmbri, of whom the four first were but Tribes or Nations. These moving toward the South in that great Expedition against Spain, made by the neighbouring Vandals on the Roman Empire, occasioned the Fuites, or Angli to enlarge or shift their Dwellings, each taking up the parts which lay nearest to them. The Fuites, or Gute, being a people of Scandia, and there placed by Protony, took up the Northern parts thereof, from them named Fuinland: the other being a people of the Suevi, dwelling on the South of the Elb, possessed themselves of those parts which lay next the Saxons, their old Friends and Confederates, (their chief Town being Sleswick) where Angelen, now an obscure Village, once of greater note, doth preserve their memory. But these uniting with the Saxons in the Conquest of Britain, and leaving none behind which were fit for action, or not enough to keep possession of the Country against the new Invaders, gave opportunity to the Danes to come in upon them; by whom the Country being conquered as far as to the River Eyder, were planted by Colonies of Danes, and made a part of that Kingdom: of whom we shall say more in the close of all, first taking a survey of the Baltick Islands, and such Provinces on the main Land of Scandia as properly make up the Kingdom of Denmark.

2. THE BALTICK ISLANDS are in number 35, and are so called, because they lie dispersed in the Baltick Ocean. At this day it is called by the German de Ost Zee, anciently by some Mare Suevicum, by Pomponius Mela Sinus Codanus, by Strabo Sinus Fennicus, but generally Mare Balticum, because the great Peninsula of Scandia, within which it is, was by some Writers of the middle and darker time called Baltia. It beginneth at the narrow passage called the Sound; and in interlacing the Countries of Denmark, Sweden, Germany, and Poland, extendeth even to Livonia and Lithuania. The reasons why this Sea, being so large, doth not ebb and flow, are, 1. The Narrowness of the Strait by which the Ocean is let into it; and 2. The Northern situation of it, whereby the Celestial Influences have lesser power upon it. The principal of this great shoal of Islands are, 1. Seland, 2. Fuen, or Fionia, 3. Langland, 4. Lawland, 5. Falstere, 6. Avis, 7. Alfen, 8. Tufing, 9. Ween, 10. Femer, and 11. Bornholm. Some others of less note we shall only name, and so pass them over.

1. SELAND, the greatest Island of the Baltick Seas, is situate near the main Land of Scandia, parted from it by a narrow Strait or Fretum, not above a Dutch mile in breadth, commonly called by the name of the Sundt or Sund. A Strait through which all Ships which have any trading to or from the Baltick, must of necessity take their course; all other Passages being barred up with impassible Rocks, or otherwise prohibited by the Kings of Denmark, upon forfeiture of all their Goods. So that being the only safe Passage which these Seas afford, one may sometimes see two or three hundred Ships in a day pass through it: all which pay a Toll or Impostion to the King, according to their Bills of lading. And to secure this Passage, and command all Passengers, there are two strong Castles, the one in Scandia, called Helsingburg, whereof more anon; and the other in this Island which is called Cronenburg.

But before we come to this Castle, we must view the other parts of the Island, being in length two days journey, and almost as much in breadth: the Soil so fertile, that, without any manuring or charge at all, it yieldeth plenty of all Necessaries for the life of man. It was anciently called Cadomania, and containeth in fifteen Cities or walled Towns, and twelve Royal Castles. The principal whereof are, 1. Haffen, or Hafnia, the Metropolis of the Islands, by the Dutch called Copenhagen, or the Haven of Merchants; situate near the Sea, with an handsome Port; the Isle of Amager, which lieth on the East-side of the Town, making a very safe Road for all kinds of Shipping. The Town is of an orbicular form, and reasonably well fortified; but the Buildings mean, for the most part of Clay and Timber, only to be commended for a spacious Marketplace: Yet herein, as the chief Town of all the Kingdom, and Situate in the heart of those Dominions, is the Palace-Royal, built of Free-Stone in form of a Quadrangle, but of no great Beauty or Magnificence. Most memorable for the University here founded by Hem, or Ericus the ninth; but perfected by King Christiern the first, by him and the succeeding Princes liberally endowed. 2. Fredericksburg, amongst Woods of Beech, built for a place of Pleasure by Frederick the second, where the King hath a fine Houle, and a little Park, in which (amongst other foreign Beasts) are some Fallow-Deer transported hither out of England in the 24. year of Queen Elizabeth. 3. Roskilde, not walled but counted for a City, as a See Episcopall; the Bishops whereof have anciently had the honour of Crowning and Inaugurating the Kings of Denmark. In the Cathedral Church heretofore to be seen the Tombs of many of the Danish Kings; some of them very fair and sumptuous, the most mean and ordinary. 4. Sora, of old times beautified with a goodly Monastery, the Revenues whereof, at the alteration of Religion, were converted to the maintenance of a Free-School built here by Frederick the first. But in the year 1623, Christiern the fourth, adding hereto the Revenues of two other dissolved Monasteries, the one in the Isle of Lawland and the other in Fuinland, founded here a new University, for the better supply of learned Ministers for the Churches of Denmark and Norway, (which before could not be provided for out of Copenhagen) and furnished it with men of eminence in all Arts and Sciences for its first Professors. 5. Ellenore, or Helsingore, a Village only, but much frequented by Seafaring men as their Ships pass by the sound, upon which it is. Near unto which is 6. the strong and magnificent Castle of Cronenburg, built with incredible charge and pains by King Frederick the second; the foundation of it being laid on huge Stones sunk into the Sea, and so fastened together, that no Storm or Tempest, how violent soever, is able to shake it; well fortified as well as founded, and mixt of a Palace and a Fort, being since the first building of it the most constant Residence of the Kings of Denmark, who from hence may easily discern each Ship which sails through the Sundt, each of which addeth more or less unto his Revenues. A profitable and pleasing prospect. By the Commodity of this and the opposite Castle, the King doth not only secure his Customs, but very much strengthen his Estate: the Castles being so near, and the Strait so narrow, that, by the addition of some few Ships, he may keep the greatest Navy that is from passing by him.

Unto the Government and Jurisdiction of this Island belong many others; the principal whereof are, 1. Amager, magria, Amager, or Amach, which helps to make up the Port or Road of Copenhagen, spoken of before; planted with Hollanders brought hither by the procurement of Christiern the second. 2. Mind, or Moen-land, the chief Town whereof is called Stegke. 3. (2) HUENE, or VEEN, a little South of Cronenburg Castle; a Dutch mile in length, but not quite so broad; remarkable only for the Studies of that famous Astronomer Tycho Brahe, to whom Frederick the second gave this Island, that living in a private and solitary place, removed from all company but his own Family only, he might with more convenience attend his Books. At this day most observable for the cattle of Oranopolis, or Orenborg, where the greatest part of his Mathematical Instruments are preserved in safety.

3. FIONIA, or FUNEN, the second Island of account in all the Baltick, is situate betwixt Seland and Fuinland, from which last it is parted by a Strait called Middelfart Sundt, so narrow, and of so small a Sea, that the Island and the Cherfoneuse join yoked together. A Country of a pleasant and delightful Situation, and as fruitful withal; containing 12 Dutch miles in length and four in breadth; and therein 24 Herets or Prefectures, 16 Towns, and 6 Royal Castles, besides many goodly Villages, and Gentlemens Houses. The chief whereof are, 1. Odensee, or Orbenfche (called in Latine, Orthonia) an Episcopall See, founded here, at the first conversion of this People, by Oltho the Great, whence it had the name. The Town is not large, but beautified with two fair Churches, the one dedicated to Saint Cannus, the other to St. Francis: situate in the midst of the Island, from which the residue of the Towns are almost equally distant; and so commodiously seated for Trade and Merchandize, as they do not any traffic in the Baltick Sea, but in Sweden, Norway, Russia, Flanders, and Germany. 2. Nyborch, 3. Foorby, 4. Swynborch, 5. Middelfart, whence the Strait is so named, 6. Bovent, and 7. Kartemunde; all seated on some Haven, or convenient Creek. The principal of the Castles are, 1. Newborg, 2. Hagenfchow, 3. Efchow, 4. Hingegels, 5. the Court of Kugard. In this Island, not far from the Castle of Hagenfchow, is the Mount of Offenberg, where John Ranzewius, An. 1430. discomfited the great Army of Christopher, the Brother of Anthon, Earl of Oldenburg, coming in those unsettled times to invade the Kingdom, under colour of restoring Christiern the second formerly deposed: in which Fight the Earls of Floye and Tockelborg were both slain in the place, and the Kingdom after that in quiet from the like Pretenders.

South of Fionia, and under the Government hereof, are about 90 lesser Islands, most of them inhabited: the chief of which are.

4. LANGLAND, seven Dutch miles in length, in which, besides many Villages and Gentlemens Houses, we have the Town of Rudskoping, and the Castle of Frænker.

5. LAWLAND, disjoynted from Seland by a little narrow Strait called Gronne-fundt; so plentiful of Corn and Cheefstuffs, that Ships full freighted with them are sent yearly hence. An Island which, besides many Castles, Villages and Manfion-houses of the Gentry, hath five good Towns, viz. 1. Nyffand, 2. Nyffou, 3. Tegor, 4. Rielm, and 5. Maribane; in which last anciently was a very rich Monastery, the Revenues whereof are now employed for the endowment of the new University of Sora, founded by Christiern the fourth, as before was noted.

6. FALSTRE, four German miles in length, affording plenty of Corn yearly to some neighbouring Islands. Chief Towns herein are, 1. Nicopen, which for the Elegancy of the place and Plantations of the Situation is called the Naples of Denmark. 2. Stubeop, from whence there is the ordinary passage into Germany, seven Dutch miles hence.

7. TEUSING, not far from Swynborch, or Swineburgh, a Town of Fionia; a Dutch mile in length, situate in a dangerous and troublesome Sen, from whence is no safe passage either to Seland, Fuen, or Fuinland, though much distant from neither. Chief places in it are, 1. Affens, towards Fuinland; 2. Niburg, towards Seland; and 3. the Court of Keitap, belonging to the noble Family of Kofenrant.

8. FEMER, or FEMEREN, a fruitful and well-peopled Island, lying in it the Towns of 1. Derborch, 2. Stabul, and 3. Piterfjarp. A place of great importance to the Crown of Denmark, not so much in danger of being made subject to the Imperialists by the taking of Helsing and both Fuinlands, as by planting too a strong Garrison in this small Island: and therefore with all diligence recovered by the King again, and better fortified than before, against all Invasions, Anno 1628. Of the remaining Islands which pertain unto Fionia, we find the names of 1. Aroe, 2. Ronfo, 3. Endelo, 4. Ebleo, 5. Bake, 6. Brando, 7. Zore, 8. Agerm, 9. Hellens, 10. Terdo, 11. Birkholm, of which nothing memorable.

Amongst these Islands, but not subordinate to Fionia, are, 9. ARIA, belonging to the Dukedom of Sleswick, consisting of 3 Parishes, some Gentlemens Houses, and the Town and Castle of Koping: supposed to be the habitation of the Arii, spoken of by Tacitus; but a Colony rather of them, as I suppose. And not far off,

10. ALSEN, another little Island, but of more repute called in Latine, Elyfa, opposite to the Gulf or Bay of Flensburg in the Dukedom of Sleswick, to which it also appertaineth. Well stored it is with Beasts for profit, and Game for pleasure; so populous, that some thousands of men may be easily and suddenly raised in it; consisting of 13 Parishes and 4 Towns: that is to say, 1. Gammelgard, 2. Offerbolm, 3. Arderbolm, and 4. the good Town and Castle of Sunderbolm, one of the ordinary Residences of the Dukes of Sleswick, and honoured with the Birth of many of their Princes of the Royal Family. Some think it was the Habitation anciently of the Elyfii, spoken of by Tacitus, and by him placed next unto the Angli: But being the Angli in those times dwelt about the Elb, I rather think, that when some Colonies of the Angli seated themselves in the Cimbrik Cherfoneuse, as before was said, some of the Arii and Elyfii might go along for company, and plant themselves near them and these Islands.

11. BORNHOLM, the last of all the Baltick which belong to Denmark, is situate more Eastward, opposite to that part of Scandia which is called Bleking, betwixt it and Pomerania. An Isle of excellent Pasturage, breeding plenty of Cattel, wherewith, as also with Butter, Cheese, Wool, Hides, and some Force of Fruits, they supply the wants of some of their neighbours, besides good quantities of powdered Beef and Mutton, which they barrel up and sell to Marrinicks. It containeth many good Towns and wealthy Villages; the chief whereof is Bornholm, which gives name to the Island. Both Town and Island were pawned by some former Kings unto those of Lubeck, from them redeemed by King Frederick the second for a great sum of money, after it had been in their possession about 50 years.

These Islands in the time of Pomponius Mela were by one general name called the Hemodes, in number reckoned to be seven; the residue either not inhabited, or not taken notice of, are no-where mentioned in the Ancients. Of these seven 1. the greatest and best peopled was called Cadomania, (supposed to be Seland), in which the said Author placeth the Tenenti. By Protony it is called

Scandia Minor, with reference to the great Peninsula of Scandia, supposed by him to be an Island. From this, or from the Sea adjoining, called Sinu Codanus, the people of these Islands and the next Eastern Continent took the name of Danes; spreading the name afterwards, as they call their Conquests: of which more anon. In the mean time we must cross over the Sounds, and take notice of those other parts of this Kingdom as lie on the other side thereof, in the vast Continent or Demy-Island (which you will find in Scandia: of which somewhat must be first pre-mised,) of regard that not only some parts of Denmark, but the whole Country of Norway (the Northern Islands excepted) are contained in it,

3. SCANDIA, by Pliny and Solinus called Scandinavia, by Jornandes Scanzia, hath on the East that Bay or Branch of the Baltick which is called the Finnish or Bodner Seas, on the North and West the main Ocean, on the South, where it points towards Germany, the Baltick or Ost See, as the Dutch call it, joined to the main Continent of Sarmatia by an Isthmus, or Neck of Land, at the bottom of the Bodner See, not parts thereof, it was generally by the Ancients thought to be an Island, but Strabo and Pliny magnitudinis, of an unknown greatness, as both Pytheas and Xenophon Lampiscenus do affirm in Pliny: by one of which it is called Baltica, by the other Baltia; from whence the name of Baltick by the Sea adjoining. But later Navigations and Experience have confuted that opinion, by which it is found to be no Island, but a part of the Continent and a great one too; containing the whole Kingdom of Norway, the greatest part of the Kingdom of Sweden, and some part of Denmark. That part hereof which belongs to Denmark is situate on the South of this great Peninsula, and divided into the three Provinces of Hallandia, Scania, and Bleking: and in them are 23 Herets or Prefectures, and 15 Cities.

1. HALLANDIA, or HALLAND, hath on the East the wild Woods which part it from Gothland, on the West the intervening Sea betwixt it and Juland, on the North Sweden properly and specially so called, on the South Scandia or Schonen. A Country which for the healthfulness of the Air, plainness of the Soil, commodiousness of Havens, plenty of Fish, pleasure of Hunting, for inexhaustible Mines of Brass and Lead, (with some veins of Silver) frequency of well-peopled Towns and Villages, and Civility of the Inhabitants, is not inferior to any. Places of most importance in it are, 1. Laholm, 2. Halmstad, 3. Falkenberg: all of them on the Sea, at the mouth of navigable Streams, whose names find not a very far upon the Sea-side also, but fortified with a very strong Castle on the top of an Hill; taken and garisoned by the Swedes, Anno 1569, and not without great difficulty recovered by the Danes again, Anno 1569.

2. SCANIA, or SCHÖNEN, hath on the East Flejsida or Bleking, on the West the Sounds, running along the shore hereof for the space of twenty German miles, on the North Halland, on the South the Baltick or Ost See. The Country is of the same nature with Halland, as before described the Character of that pertaining to all the three; this having over and above as peculiar to it, that the Sea-shores are stored with rich Sholes of Herrings, that some times them, are scarce able with wind and oar to break through them, and row off the Harbour, It is in length 72 miles, 48 in breadth. Chief Towns in which are, 1. Lunden, an Archbishop's See, the Metropolitane of Denmark and Norway; advanced upon that honour by the means and mediation of Ericus the first, who purposely made a journey to Rome to effect that business; the Church of Denmark being before that time subject to the Archbishops of Breme. This was about the year 1100. It is situate somewhat within the Land, but the Cathedral easily discernable by Mariners as they fail along. The City is but mean, and were it not for the Cathedral, of no beauty at all. But that indeed is affirmed to be a work of much Magnificence and Art; especially for the Clock, the Dial, and some outward adjuncts. For in the Dial curiously set out with divers Colours are to be seen distinctly the Year, Month, Week, Day, and Hour of every day throughout the year; with the Fasts, both moveable and fixed; together with the Motion of the Sun and Moon, and their passage through each Degree of the Zodiac. Then for the Clock, it is so framed by artificial Engines, that whensoever it is to strike, two horsemen encounter one another, giving as many blows a piece as the Bell sounds hours: and on the opening of a door there appears a Theatre, the Virgin Mary on a Throne with Christ in her Arms, and the three Kings of Magi (with their several Trains) marching in order, doing humble reverence, and presenting severally their Gifts; two Trumpeters sounding all the while, to add the Pomp of that Procession. 2. Malmoe, or Elbogen, (called by both names) at the very Southern point hereof, just opposite to Copenhagen in Seland, a well traded Port; the Birth-place of Gaspar Bartholinus, otherwise called Malmogius Damm, that great Mathematician, supposed to be the Author of the Clock and Dial before described. 3. Trelleborg, on the North of Elbogen, a Land-fortress, on the Sea-side, of great strength and consequence. 4. Helsingborg, a mean Town, but fortified with an impregnable Castle, just opposite to Helsingore and Cronenberg in Seland; the other of the two Keys which openeth into the Sound. 6. Rottenby, a Frontier-town bordering on Ferendia, a Province of Swetland. 7. Christiansburg, or Christiansborg, a strong piece built by Christiern the fourth, Anno 1604, compassed by the Sea, and fortified by Fens and Marshes, thought to be impregnable.

3. BLESIDA, or BLEKING, is bounded on the East and South with the Baltick Sea, on the North with Ferendia, a Province of Swetland, on the West with Scania or Schonen; more Mountainous and barren than either, but yet partaking somewhat of the former Character which we had of Halland. Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Ulfeda, on the Mouth of a River falling into the Baltick. 2. Christiernsburg, in Latine Christianspolis, on the borders of Swetland; raised out of the Ground by Christiern the fourth, to defend his Kingdom on that side, Anno 1604, but not long after by a warlike stratagem fortified by the Swedes in the late War betwixt those Kingdoms in the year 1611; destroyed and dispeopled by that Nation, who looked upon it as a dangerous and unpleasant Object, but since repaired and replenished. 3. Almoy, upon the River which divides the Kingdom not far from Christiernsburg.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Guts and Danciones, taking up the South-parts of this great Peninsula, Meridionalia tenent Guts & Danciones, as we find in Prohemio, Geogr. l. 2. c. 11. which in all probability must be meant of these Provinces. Of these the Gutes, passing over into the Cimbriick Chersonese, possessed themselves of the North parts of it, since from them called Juland. The rest, uniting with the people of those many Islands, stood like together in the Bay or Gulf called Sinu Codanus, (now the Baltick Sea) took the name of Danes; and years before the Birth of our Saviour. First taken notice of by that name in Jornandes de rebus Geticis, who lived about the time of Justinian the first; about which time, or not long after, it is conceived that they made themselves Masters of so much of the Cimbriick Chersonese as had been formerly possessed by the Tules and Angles, whose forsaken or ill-peopled Seats they possessed themselves of. After this we hear little of them till the time of Charles the Great, living in a confused estate, sometimes made subject to the Norwegians, sometimes to the Swedes, but always without Law and Order; till by the King Godfrey or Gottfrid they were regulated by Laws, and reduced to an orderly kind of life, Anno 797. About this time they first began to infect the Coasts of England, invaded Friesland with a Fleet of 200 Sail, and had much weakened and endangered the great Empire of France, if the unseasonable death of Godfrey, and the Quarrels which arose about the Succession after his decease, had not kept them off. Their Affairs at home being again well settled, they employed their whole Forces against England, as the weaker Enemy: over which they tyrannized 250 years, and reigned 26 under three Kings of that Nation. Out of that, and the terror of their name being over, they have been most buffeted with their Neighbours of Sweden and Germany; improving their Estate, but rather by Marriages and civil Contracts, than by force of Arms, with the addition of the Kingdom of Norway and the Dukedom of Holstein: their pretensions to, and for a time the possession of the Crown of Sweden getting them nothing in conclusion but Blows and Losses. So that we have no more to do than to sum up a Catalogue of the Kings hereof, till the uniting of the two Crowns of Denmark and Norway, leaving the rest that follow to another place.

A.Ch.

797

1. Gottfrid, the first Legislator of the Danes, and the Establisher of their Kingdom; a prudent and valiant Prince.

2. Olaf Son of Gottfrid, or Godfrey.

3. Heningus, Son of Olaf.

4. Siwara, Son to a Daughter of Godfrey, by the King of Norway.

5. Regner, Son of Siwara.

6. Siwara II.

7. Ericus, or Henricus, baptized at Munich at the same time with his Brother Harald, recovered the Kingdom to his House, (of which they had been ousted by the Race of Godfrey.)

8. Canutus, the Son of Ericus, the Heathenish Son of a Christian and pious Father.

9. Froto, the Son of Canutus, a professed Christian.

10. Gormo, (our English Writers call him Gormund) Son of Froto.

11. Harald, the Son of Gormo, or Gormund.

12. Gormo II. Son of Harald, an enemy of the Christian Faith.

13. Harald II. Son of Gormo the second, a good Christian.

14. Sueno, or Swain, Son of Harald at first a great Enemy of the Gospel, an Usurper of the Throne in his Father's life-time, and a great Scourge unto the English. Out of his Estate by Ericus of Swetland, he received the Gospel, regained his Kingdom, and established Christianity in this Country; his War on England still continuing.

15. Olaf, the eldest Son of Swain, King of Denmark and Norway.

16. Canutus II. Brother of Olaf, the first King of England of the Danes, succeeded his Brother in the Kingdoms of Denmark and Norway; to which he added also the Crown of Sweden.

17. Canutus III. Son of Canutus the second, the last King of England of the Race of the Danes.

18. Magnus, Son of Olaf King of Norway.

19. Sueno II. Sifter's Son of Canutus the second, by Ul' an English Duke.

20. Harald III. base Son of Sueno the second.

21. Canutus IV. another of the base Sons of Sueno, murdered at the Altar in the Church of Odenfe in the life of Froto; afterwards canonized a Saint.

22. Olaf II. another of the base Sons of Swain.

23. Ericus II. another of the base Sons of Swain, the Founder of the Archbishopric See of Lunden.

24. Harald IV. base Son of Henry or Ericus the second.

25. Nicolas, another of the base Sons of Swain.

26. Ericus III. another of the base Sons of Ericus the second.

27. Ericus IV. commonly called the fifth, (some one of the younger House being reckoned in) Nephew of Ericus the second.

28. Sueno III. Son of Ericus the third, and Canutus the fifth, Grandchild of Nicolas, both Kings; the first reigning in Scania, the other in Juland; both died without issue; Canutus being slain by Sueno, and he by Waldemar.

29. Waldemar, Son of Canutus, the lawful Son of Ericus the second, after the interposition of so many Bastards, succeeded at the last in the Throne of his Fathers. By his means the Ragains and Vandals embraced the Gospel.

30. Canutus V. Son of Waldemar.

31. Waldemar II. Brother of Canutus, and Duke of Sleswick before his coming to the Crown.

32. Ericus V. called the VII. Son of Waldemar the second, slain by the practices and Treason of his Brother Abel.

33. Abel, Brother of Ericus, slain by the Peasants of Friesland.

34. Christopher, Brother of Abel and Ericus.

35. Ericus VI. (VIII.) Son of Christopher.

36. Ericus VII. (IX.) younger Son of Ericus, supplanted his eldest Brother Christopher.

37. Christopher II. eldest Son of Ericus, at first dispossessed of his Birth-right by his Brother Ericus, after whose death he succeeded in the Crown, by the help of his Half-brother the Earl of Holstein.

38. Waldemar III. Son of Christopher the second against whom and his Encroachments the Sea-towns, commonly called the Hanse, did first confederate, and vanquished him in many Battels.

39. Margaret, Daughter and Heir of Waldemar the third, married with Aquin King of Norway, so uniting the Kingdoms: of whom and their Successors we shall speak hereafter, when we have took a view also of the Kingdom of Norway, and the Appendices thereof.

3. NORWAY.

NORWAY is bounded on the East with Swetland, from which it is parted by a perpetual Ridge of rough and wild Mountains, called the Doftine Hills; on all other parts by the Sea: that is to say, by the Frozen Sea upon the North; the German or Norwegian Ocean upon the West; and on the South with the Danish Sea,

At the first planting of this Island, the people did not trouble themselves with building Towns, but every one feared himself where he thought convenient, dwelling in Cells and Caverns digged in the bottom of the Rock. By means whereof the Inland parts have not many Houses: but the Sea-coasts, since the coming of so many Strangers to them, begin to be built in many places, the Buildings for the most part being of Timber, roofed with Flages with an Hole on the sides of the roof to let in their Light. So that we are not to expect many fine Towns or Cities: the principle of them which are, being, 1. Havens, in the North.

North, and 2. Schalbolt, in the Southern part; both Bishops Sees, having petty Schools, consisting of 24 Scholars apiece, to whom the Latine Tongue is taught at the charge of the Bishops. 3. Hafford, an Haven Town, where under Tents the Dutch Merchants barter their Commodities. And 4. Besfede, a Castle, the ordinary Residence of the Governour for the Kings of Denmark.

It hath been generally conceived that this Island is that Thule which the Poets so often speak of: as Tibullus Thule, in Virgil, Nec sit terris ultima Thule, in Seneca the Tragedian. Nor did there want some reason to perswade them to this opinion; this being indeed the farthest part of the old known World. But greater reasons are against it. For when Salinus saith, Mulsa sunt circa Britanniam Insule, in quibus Thule ultima; I hope Thule must be one of the British Isles. And when Tacitus saith of Agricola, Insulas quas Orcadas vocant domitis, despecta est Thule; I am sure that Island is so far from being known by any one of the Orcades, that it is at least being eight Degrees distant. So that Thule must be shewed al- in another place, and where that is, hath been known unready. As for Island, it was so far from being known to the Ancients, that it was hardly known unto those of Norway till the year 874, when some of the Norwegians were driven out of their Country by Harald the first, who first suppressing the many Petit Kings of the Norwegians, made many of them seek new Dwellings; of which some few arrived here, where finding room enough to plant in, and no great loss (if any) by change of their Dwelling, and they invited many of their Friends and Countrymen to come unto them. An. 1070, they were converted to the Gospel by some Preachers sent hither from Adelbert the Archbishop of Breme. By whose perswasion and procurement they founded two Episcopal Sees; adding thereto in tract of time eight Religious Houses: that is to say, the Monasteries of Pingore, Remfede, Madur, and Monkenere, under the Government and Jurisdiction of the Bishop of Halar; and those of Videy, Pernebar, Kirc-kebar, and Skagde, under the Bishop of Schalbolt. In the year 1260, it was first brought under the Crown of Norway, following since the Fortunes of it in all Changes both of Church and State; made subject with it to the Kings of Denmark, together with it reformed in matters of Religion according to the Confession at Augsburg, retaining still their Bishops, with a limited power, and turning the Revenues of their Monasteries unto other uses, as there they did, according to the will and pleasure of their Lords of Denmark.

2. South-west of Island lies another, and as cold an Isle, commonly called by the name of FREESLAND, from the continual Frosts unto which it is subject. By the Latines it is called Frislandia, to distinguish it from Frisia or Friesland in Germany. It is situate under the North Frigid Zone; but not so much within the Arctic as Island is; the longest Day here in the height of Summer not exceeding 20 hours; and yet the Soil is so cold and barren, that it beareth neither Corn nor Fruit, the Inhabitants living most on Fish; which as it is their only Food, so it is also their chief Commodity wherewith to entertain or invite the Merchant. And hereof there is such abundance caught upon their Coasts, that they are never without the company of Hanse-men, Scots, Hollanders, Danes, and English, by which last it hath been so frequented in their later times, that it hath been called by some the Western England. For quantity it is somewhat bigger than Island; but by reason of the bitter Air, and the Defects above-mentioned, very thinly inhabited. The chief Town of it is called Freezland, by the name of the Island; situate on the Eastern Shore of it. Besides which, there are some others set down in the Maps; as 2. Sa- meset. 3. Andesfort. 4. Sorand; but not much observable. Westward whereof, as Zieglerus (and out of him Maginus) telleth us, is a little Island called Icaria, giving the name of Mare Icarium to the Sea adjoining: so called (by his mistake or translation of the Fable) from Icarus the Son of Dadalus, a King of Scotland, who did once (but no body knows when) Lord it over these Islands.

III. GROENLAND, so called, as some say, from the Greenness of it in the Summer; as others say, by Antiphrasis, because never green, by reason of the sharpness of Winter. But the former Etymology is more agreeable to the state of the Country. For though it be continually covered with Snow, except in June, July, and August, (inasmuch that though the people be always clad with Furs and Skins, yet they feel no heat) yet in those months it is exceeding fresh and green, and affords good Pasturage. It is situate for the greatest part within the Arctic, between the 65. and 77. Degrees of Northern Latitude: so that the longest Day in the Southern part is 21 hours and a half; and in the most Northern they have no Night for three months and two weeks. The known length of it is affirmed to be 600 miles, and may be much longer than so for ought that any body knows: there being no perfect discovery made of it hitherto, though much frequented by the English and Hollanders, (two great Seafaring Nations) for the benefit of the Whale-fishing, much there in use. Their chief Commodities are Fish, white Bears, wild Deer, and some store of Cattel there bred upon their Pastures, but housed for the most part all the Winter. The greatest part of the people dwell in the Caves, and delight in Necromancy, to which they are more wilfully addicted than those in Island, because less acquainted with the Gospel.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Saint Thomas, (in which there is a Monastery of Dominican Friars) seated in the North-East part of the Island; concerning which Mercator speaks of one thing which is very observable, relating that it is not far from a flaming or burning Mountain, seated upon hot scalding springs, conveyed by Pipes of stone into the Monastery, and serving both as a Stove to warm them, and for a Fire to boil their Victuals. The Walls of the Monastery are built of Pumice-stones cast out of that Mountain; which, being tempered with the water of those burning Springs, doth make a glutinous substance, serving instead of Lime, and as long durable. The Gardens of the Convent, in regard of the heat, flourish all the year with Herbs, and sweet smelling Flowers; and the adjoining Sea, for the same reason being never frozen, affords good plenty of Fish and Fowl to the whole year about, not only for the Monks, but the neighbouring Islanders. So far and to this purpose he. The second Town of note is Iloa, not far from this Monastery: and 3. Mundeppe, on the South-East-point. Others, as in a Country not well discovered, we have little notice of: though it be near 300 years since Nicolaus Zenis, a Venetian, cast by Tempest on the Coast of Freezland, and by the King thereof employed upon new Discoveries, An. 1380, first made it known to us of Europe; it being immediately on that discovery possessed by the Norwegians, and made a Member and portion of that Crown.

As for the Norwegians themselves, now their fellow-Subjects, they were first known in the time of Pulomby by the name of Chedini, possessing then the Western parts of Scandia. Uniting with their Neighbours, both Danes and Swishlanders, they became better known in the flourishing times of the French Empire by the name of Normans; first called so by Eginhardus in his History of the Life of Charles the Great, infesting then the Sea-coasts of France and Belgium. Under this name they fell heavily heavily on the French, especially in the times of Charles the Simple; that they extorted from him that goodly Country, first Duke thereof, Amo 912, whose Successors much encreased their glory by the Conquest of England; as some private Adventurers of them did by the Conquest of the Kingdoms of Naples, Sicily, and Antioch. Afterwards settling on their own bottom, every one of these Northern Nations ading by it self, they were called Norwegians, sometimes, as formerly, commanding over all three Kingdoms, subjects successively to each; but most an end governed by their own Kings, till their final Subjugation by the Danes. And as a Nation acting solely and by it self, they subdued Ireland under the conduct of Turgissin, who tyrannized there for a time; as also all the Orcades and the Isle of Man, sold or surrendered by them upon good conditions to the English and Scots, who by those Titles still possess them. The Catalogue of their Kings, leaving out all those of the darker times (parallel to our Berne and the first Scottish Fergus) as merely fabulous, we will begin with King Suibdagamus, who was King of all the three Kingdoms, and at his death divided them again amongst his three Sons; whose Successors Amstus there reckoneth.

The Kings of NORWAT.

1. Subidagerus.
2. Haddingus.
3. Hetharinus.
4. Ollerus.
5. Fragerus.
6. Gaurus.
7. Rabertus.
8. Helga.
9. Halmunus.
10. Reginaldus.
11. Gunnaravus.
12. Ofmundus.
13. Olavus.
14. Ofmundus II. not long after whose time, An. scil. 800, the Normans began their Irruptions.
15. Aquinus.
16. Heraldus.
17. Olavus.
18. Sueno, King of Denmark by Birth and of Norway by Conquest.
19. Olavus III. Son of Suin or Sueno, succeeded in the Realm of Denmark and Norway, Cannus his younger Brother being King of England. In this King's time the Norwegians first received the Gospel.
20. Cannus, King of England, succeeded his Brother Olavus in the Kingdoms of Denmark and Norway to which he also added the Crown of Sweden.
21. Sueno II. by whom the Kingdom was restored to the Norwegians.
22. Cannus II.
23. Magmus.
24. Harald II.
25. Magmus II. King of Sweden and Norway.

1326 26. Magmus III. King of Sweden and Norway, in attending the Crown of Sweden for Ericus his eldest Son, conferred that of Norway on Haquin, or Aquinus, his second Son.

1339 27. Aquinus, King of Norway, younger Son of Magmus the third, married with Margaret, eldest Daughter of Waldemar the third, King of Denmark; so uniting the Kingdom. And though Olavus, the only Son of his Bed, died young without any Issue; yet the Danes, having once got footing in Norway; so assured themselves of it, that they have ever since possessed it as a subject Kingdom, keeping the Natives so poor and low, that they are not able to assert their former Liberties, and not permitting them to use any Shipping; so much as for transporting their own Commodities, for fear they should grow wealthy and strong at Sea. Besides the strong Garrison maintained in most parts of the Country kept it in such an absolute Awe, that they dare not stir against the Danes if their stomachs served them. So that now Norway being made subject to the Crown of Denmark, or both made fellow-Subjects to the same King, we must next look upon these Kings as Kings of each distinct and separate from the other but as they are in Fact and Title.

The Kings of DENMARK and NORWAT.

- 1376 1. Haquin, or Aquinus, King of Denmark and Norway; of this last by Descent, of the other by Marriage.
- 1380 2. Olavus, Son of Aquinus and Margaret.
- 1383 3. Margaret, Wife of Aquinus, Mother of Olavus, and Daughter of Waldemar the third, after the death of her Son, (in whose time she governed as his Guardian) took upon her the Kingdom in her own Right; not only keeping Norway in the State she found it, but adding unto Denmark the Crown of Sweden, won by the Vanquishment of Albert Duke of Mecklenburg, then King thereof. A gallant and magnanimous Lady, the Semiramis of Germany.
- 1411 4. Ericus, Duke of Pomeran, and Knight of the Garter, Son of the Lady Mary, Dutches of Pomeran, Daughter of Ingelburgis, the Sister of Margaret, by whom he was adopted for her Heir, succeeded after her decease in all the three Kingdoms: out of all before his death by a strong Faction made against him, and his Estates conferred on
- 1439 5. Christopher, Count Palatine of the Rhene, and Duke of Bavaria, (but in Title only) the Son of Margaret, Sister of Ericus; chosen by the joynt consent of all the States of these Kingdoms. After whose death (without Issue) the Danes considering the great advantage they had gotten by the addition of Norway, pitched upon Adolphus, Duke of Sleswick and Earl of Holftein, for the next Successor, that they might get in those Estates to their Kingdom also. Who, excusing himself by reason of his Age and want of Children, commended them to Christiern Earl of Oldenburg, his Kinsman and next Heir, who was chosen accordingly.
- 1443 6. Christiern, Earl of Oldenburg, upon the commendation of his Uncle Adolphus, chosen King of Denmark and Norway succeeded; his said Uncle in the Estates of Holftein and Sleswick, continuing since united unto that Crown, and added also thereto by Conquest the Kingdom of Sweden.

- 1482 7. John, Son of Christiern, succeeded in all three Kingdoms; Knight of the Order of the Garter.
- 1514 8. Christiern II. Son of John, King of Denmark, Norway and Sweden, which last he held under with great cruelty; hated, by reason of his Tyranny toward all sorts of People, and ousted of his Kingdoms by his Uncle Frederick, Anno 1522. by whom at last he was taken and kept in prison till he died, Anno 1559.
- 1523 9. Christiern, Brother of John, and Uncle of Christiern the second, chosen King of Denmark and Norway on the Abdication of his Nephew, Reformed Religion in both Kingdoms according to the confession of Augsburg.
- 1535 10. Christiern III. suppressed with great trouble the Party formed against him in behalf of Christiern the second, perfected the Reformation begun in the time of his Father, and was a great Benefactor to the University of Copenhagen.
- 1559 11. Frederick II. Son of Christiern the third, subdued Dümarsh, before unconquered by the Danes or Earls of Holstein, and added it unto that Dukedom, (both being united to that Crown though held of the Empire) Knight of the Garter.
- 1588 12. Christiern IV. Son of Frederick the second, Brother of Anne Queen of great Britain, and Knight of the Garter; who engaging in a War against the Emperor Ferdinand the second for the Liberty of Germany, was suddenly beat out of all the Cimbriick Chersonese by the prevailing Imperialists, but compounded the business upon very good Terms, and was restored to all his own.
- 1648 13. Frederick III. the youngest Son of Christiern the fourth, his eldest Brethren being all dead without Issue, succeeded in the Crowns of Denmark and Norway.

Having thus mustered up the Kings of these several Kingdoms, taken distinctly and conjunct; we must next look upon the way of their coming to their Regal Throne, their form of Government together with their Power, benefits and Revenues incident unto it. As for the manner of their coming to the Regal Throne, the Danes pretend their Kingdom to be Elective, and not Hereditary; yet so as they have always for the eldest Son on the Throne of his Father, unless some extraordinary occasion have disposed it otherwise. But they that look upon their Stories in the former times can see no such matter, the Kingdom going generally in the way of Succession, unless by Faction or Usurpation some popular and powerful Pretender hath interposed; as oftentimes hath happened in such other Estates as are Hereditary merely, without claim or colour of Election. 'Tis true, that the Male-claim failing in Olau the Son of Margaret, and the Princess which pretended by the Females after her decease not being of sufficient power to assert their Titles; the Kingdom was transferred to the house of Oldenburg, who held it on no other ground than by that of Election. Which, being an extraordinary case, is to make no President, being seconded by the ousting of King Christiern the first, though the advancement of Frederick unto that Estate: and, and the advancement of Frederick unto that Estate: these being acts of Violence and Force, and justified only by the false Topic of Success. But whosoever by the hand, the Danes got well by it; King Frederick taking up the Crown upon such Conditions as have made him and his Successors little more than Titular. For he was fain to swear at his Coronation, that he would put none of the Nobility to death or Banishment but by the judgment of the Senate, that the Great men should have power of Life and Death over their Tenants or Vassals; that no Appeal should lie from them to the King's Tribunal; nor the King be partaker of the Con-fiscations, nor, finally, advance any to Commands and Honours but by consent of his great Council. Which Oath being also taken by his Successors, made Bodinus say, Non tam re ipsa quam appellatione Reges esse; that they were only Kings in Title, but not Kings in deed. Yet in regard that the Nobility (so they call their Gentry) have but small Estates, none of them above the degree of Knights, (except only the Princes of the Blood) and that Decree conferred by the King alone; it is not often found that they have dared to cross or oppose their King, but when some of the Royal Family (out of private ends) have conferred with them in it: as in the case of Christiern the 2. deposed by the People, but those people headed and set on by his Uncle Frederick, who had an eye upon the Crown.

As for the Senate or great Council, spoken of before, it consists wholly of men chosen out of the Nobility, (who are to prove their Gentry by a long Descent) seldom exceeding the number of 28 to each of which there is allowed a convenient Salary, with some fair Castle in that Country for his Retirements, during his being of that Body: his whole Estate being freed also for that time from all publick Payments. Without their Counsel and advice the King is neither to determine of Peace or War, or to enter into any new League or Confederacies, nor impose any Tax upon the Subject; and unto them and the King jointly is the last Appeal: such being the Constitution of this Estate, that all Causes and Controversies are first decided in the Prefecture or Heret (184 in number) where they first arise; from whence it is lawful to appeal to the Judge of the Province, from him to the Chancellor of the Kingdom, and finally to the King and Council. By the Laws of Waldemar the first, who first reduced the Laws into set form and writing, the Bishops were to sit with his Council in all Causes of moment: but were discharged from that Employment by King Christiern the third, by whom it was also ordained, that the Clergy should not sell any of the Church-lands without leave of the King.

The Forces which this King or Kingdom are able to raise may best be seen by some of their particular Undertakings: those specially of Christiern the second, who, at the request of Henry the second of France, sent a Navy of an hundred Sail into Scotland against the English, and therein no fewer than 10000 Souldiers; and of Frederick then Duke of Holstein, who in his War against this Christiern, (whose removal from the Crown he had then projected) brought 80000 men into the field to make good his Quarrel. And questionless considering the many Ports and Islands that this King is Master of, both within the Baltick and without, it cannot be but he may suddenly raise a strong power at Sea. And then considering that each of the Nobility, which are here numerous enough, is bound to find a certain number of Horse upon all occasions; as are those also who hold Lands of the King, which the Danes call Verlingings: it will accordingly be concluded, that they are able to make good Levies for a sudden Service, especially in defence of their own Dominions.

The Revenue of this King consisteth principally in the great Impost laid upon all Ships which pass through the Sound: the greatness whereof may easily be conjectured at by the multitude of Ships which of necessity must pass by it in the Trade of the Baltick; though of late somewhat lessened of what it was, since the English found out and frequented the Northern passage into Muscovia. There are also some Crown-lands and a great yearly Toll made of the Cattel which pass into Germany; as also of the Fish transported into other Countries. And yet it is conceived that the Treasures of this King are not very great: partly because there is no other important Commodity but Fish to draw Merchants thither; and partly that there is not any one Town of any great Traffick in all his Realms for the entertaining of Commerce.

The chief order of Knighthood in it is that of the Elephant; instituted by Frederick the second. Their Badge, a Collar powdered with Elephants towred, supporting the Kings Arms, and having at the end the picture of the Virgin Mary.

The Arms hereof are Quarterly, 1. Or, three Lions passant Vert, crowned of the first, for the Kingdom of Denmark; and secondly, Gules, a Lion Rampant Or, crowned and armed of the first, in his Paws a Dank Hatchet Argent, for the Kingdom of Norway. What Arms belong to him as Duke of Holstein and Sleswick I am yet to seek.

There are in Denmark.

SWETHLAND.

SWETHLAND is bounded on the East with Muscovia, on the West with the Dofrine Hills, which divide it from Norway; on the North with the great Frozen Ocean, spoken of before; on the South with Denmark, Liesland, and the Baltick Sea, so called from the Sueci, Suethans, or Suehidi, and the word Land, added for a termination; of which more hereafter.

It is in length, from Stockholm unto the borders of Lapland, above 1000 Italian miles; and in breadth from Stockholm, lying on the Bodner Sea, to the Borders of Denmark, about twenty good days journey on horseback: inasmuch as they which have travelled the length and breadth of it, on this side of Lapland and the Gulf or Bay of Bodner, account it little less than all Italy and France together; but taking in Lapland, and the Provinces on the other side of the Gulf, bigger than both by the quantity of 900 miles.

The situation of it in regard of the Heavenly bodies is the same with Norway, under the same Parallels and Degrees; but of so different a temper, both for Soil and Air, as if disposed of under several and long-distant Climes. For the Air here is very pure, but not so sharp and insupportable as it is in Norway: though in some places, where the Moors and Waters settle, for want of care to open and cleanse the Water-courses, they have great Fogs and Mists, which do somewhat putrefie it. And for the Soil, it is more fertile than any of the other Northern Provinces: so that besides those Necessaries which they keep for themselves, they usually transport into other Countries store of Malt and Barley; together with great quantities of Brass, Lead, Steel, Copper, Iron, the Hides of Goats, Bucks, Oxen, and colly Furs. They have also some Mines of Silver, not mixt with any other Metal; plenty of Fish in their Lakes and Rivers; abundance of Pine-trees, Firre, Oaks, both for Ships and Houses; yielding besides, among the Woods, good store of Tar and Honey, and some other Necessaries. But hereof we shall speak more punctually in the several Provinces.

The principal Mountains of this Country are the Dofrine Hills, a vast and continual Ridge of Mountains which divide it from Norway. And though they want not Rivers fit for common uses, yet partly by reason of their great Frosts and flakes of Ice, partly by reason of the falling of Trees which lye cross their Channels, they have not many navigable, or any of great fame. The principal of such as be, are 1. Meler, at the mouth whereof stands the City of Stockholm, 2. Lusien, 3. Dalacarlus, giving name to the Province so called, or denominated from it. And of the Lakes, whereof there are exceeding many, that of most note is the Lake of Weret, which, receiving into it 24 Rivers, disburtheneth it self at one mouth into the Baltick, with such noise and fury, that they call it commonly the Devil's head.

The people are naturally strong and active, provident, patient and industrious; hospitable towards Strangers, whom they entertain with great Humanity; so healthy, that, if they do not shorten their days by Excess and Riot, they live commonly to 140 years of age; and so laborious, that a Beggar is not seen amongst them. Of no great note for Arts or Arms in the times foregoing: not much addicted to the one; and so kept under by the Danes, that they could not grow eminent in the other: but much improved in both respects in these later days: Eriens, the first King of the present Race, who cleared his Country of the Danes, and Gustavus Adolphus, the last King, who freed the Germans from the Yoke of the House of Austria, not being easily to be matched in the Arts of War. And since they began to give themselves to the sweets of Learning, this Country hath produced (amongst some other learned men) Olauus Magnus, Archbishop of Upsal, of great note for his History of the Goths and Vandals, the First-fruits of this Nation in the liberal Sciences. And it is probable by reason of their late Commerce with the German Nations, they will give better testimony to the World hereafter of their proficiency in this kind, as being generally exceeding apt to learn the Art Mechanical, every man in a manner being his own Artificer, without employing Smith, Mason, Carpenter, or any other manual Trades. Very Valiant they are both on foot and horseback, which their long Wars have against the Danes, and their late Wars in Germany, have given good proof of. Their Women are discreet and modest, free from that Intemperance which these Northern parts are subject to. Both sexes use a corrupt Dutch, common to all three Northern Kingdoms; except in Finland, and the Provinces on the other side of the Bodner Sea, where they partake somewhat of the Muscovite or Russian Language.

The Christian Religion was first planted amongst them by the care and diligence of Aufgarius Archbishop of Breme, the Apostle-general of the North. Corrupt with Popish Superstitions, it was reformed, according to the Augustine Confession, in the time of Gustavus Ericus, the first of that present Royal Family, solicited thereunto by that great prelate Lutheran Divine, and Lawrence, the first Peter Nevicus a Lutheran Divine, and Lawrence, the Archdeacon of Strengens; but chiefly moved (as others say) by a desire to appropriate to himself the Goods of the Church. And this appears to have had some strong influence upon him in it, in that he presently seized upon what he pleased; and King thought fit yet having pretended to no more than the Revenues, he was content they were lessened their Revenues both in power and number; should remain as formerly his Successors the Nomination of the persons; but so as the Approbation of the Clergy (in a kind of Election) doth usually go along with the King's appointment.

The Bishops are in number seven: that is to say, 1. Of Lincopen, containing in his Diocese 226 Parishes. 2. Of Vexime, under whom are 210. 3. Of Scara, ruling over the same number of Churches. 4. Of Strengens, under whom are a hundred only. 5. Of Abu, the greatest for extent of all, as comprehending under it 500 Parishes. 6. Of Wiborg, and 7. of Halsby; whose Dioceses for the most part lie out of the bounds of Sweden, in Aufconie, Livonia, and some other of the out-parts of the Realm of Poland: All of them are under the Archbishop of Upsal, as their Metropolitan, whose Diocese, extending into Lapland and Finnmark, containeth 171 Parish-Churches. By which account there are in all the Kingdom of Swethland but 1417 Parishes; but many of them a thousand or eight hundred Families: the people being dispersed in Forests and other places, where they have force of Timber to build them Houses, and store of Pasturage for their Cattle; which is the reason why they have not so many great Towns, nor so well inhabited, as is usual in far many great Countries, as for the Authority of these Bishops, they still retain their Voice in Parliament, and with them so many of the inferior Clergy as are from every Socken (a certain number of Parishes, like our Rural Deanries) the deputed to appear there in the name of the Church: the Affairs whereof the Bishops do direct and order, as well in as out of publick Meetings, according to the Ecclesiastical Constitutions formerly established; and if any great occasion be, they may either advise with their Consistorials, or call a Diocesan Synod, (as they think most fit) and therein make such Laws and Canons as they conceive to be most proper for their own Edification.

The whole Kingdom is divided into two parts, the one lying on the East, the other on the West-side of the Bay or Gulf of Bodner, called Sinus Bodnicus in Latine, being a large and spacious Branch of the Baltick Sea, extending from the most Southern Point of Gothland, as far as to Lapland on the North. According to which division, we have the Provinces of 1. Gothland, and 2. Sweden, lying on the West-side of the Gulf; 3. Lapland, (shutting it upon the North; 4. Bodia or Bodden, and 5. Finland on the East-side thereof; and 6. the Swedish Islands, where it minglith with the rest of the Baltick.

1. GOTH LAND.

GOTH LAND is bounded on the East with the Bodner Sea, on the West with the Mountains which divide it from Norway, and so much of Denmark as lies in the same Continent with it, on the North with Sweden, on the South with the Sea Baltick. So called either from the Goths, whose original Country it is commonly affirmed to be; or quasi good Land, from the goodness and fertility of the Soil, (Gothlandia, que Germanice Terra bona sunt, as Maginus out of Muslior hath it) the Soil being very fruitful Corn and a Cattle, affording plenty of Mines, with great store of Fish, and generally a better conditioned Country than any of the rest of these Northern Regions.

It is divided commonly into Ostro-goths, or East-goths; and West-goths, divided from the former by the great Lake of Werres, spoken of before; and South-Gothland, subdivided into Smalandia, Tuiscia, and Ferendia. Chief Towns in Ostrogoths are, 1. Lincopen, a Bishops See. 2. Ladefst, adorned with a very fair Haven. In West-goths, 3. Scara, on the Lake Werres, a Bishops See also. Elfsborg, on the Western Sea, betwixt Denmark and Norway, a place of consequence, and flanked with two very strong Castles in the parts adjoining, the one called Gambrie and the other Goldberg; 5. Traguelund, remarkable for Iron works, occasioned by the Mines adjoining. And finally, in South-Gothland there is 6. Fexime or Fexis another of the Episcopall Secs. 7. Walburg, a reasonable fair Town, with a strong Castle. 8. Elcholin, in that part hereof which is called Vercandia, near the Confines of Denmark; 9. Calmar, a noted and well traded port on the Baltick Sea, beautified with a Castle not inferior to that of Millium, and so well fortified throughout, that at the taking of it by Christiern the fourth of Denmark, Anno 1611, there were found mounted on the works 108 brass pieces of Ordnance, six men of war to guard the Haven, withal manner of Ammunition in proportion to them. 10. Gottenburg, (or Gothorun Burgus) the chief Town of the Goths or Gothland, as the name importeth enjoying a commodious Haven, on the Baltick also, and very much frequented for the Trade of Germany, to which it serves exceeding fidly; the principal Town of all this Province; and for that cause the ordinary Seat or Residence of the Governour for the King of Sweden.

The first Inhabitants of the South parts of Scandiae commonly affirmed to have been the GOTHS, whom Tornades in his Book de Rebus Geticis makes to have issued out of this Country, and to plant themselves on the North Banks of the Iffer near the Euxine Sea, some time before the Trojan War: ascribing to them whatsoever is reported in old Writers of the ancient Scythians, by their Encounter with Vexaris or Seslvis the King of Aegypt, the Acts and Achievements of the Amazons, their Congress with Alexander the Great in his Perseus War, and the like to these. In which Tornades, being himself a Goth is no more to be credited than Cicero of Mammoth a Welsh man, in the Story of Brute and his Successors, to whom he doth attribute the taking and sacking of Rome under the conduct of Brennus, whom he makes to be the Brother of Belinus a King of Britain. Most probable it is, that they were originally a Dutch or German people, part of the great Nation of the Suevi, called by Tacitus the Gothones, inhabiting in his time (as it is conceived) in the Land of Prussia; who, finding their own Country too narrow for them, might pass over the Baltick into the next adjoining Regions; and not well liking that cold Climate, might afterwards in some good numbers go to seek new Dwellings, and at last seat themselves on the Banks of the Iffer, where Tornades found them. That they were Dutch originally, besides the general name of the Gothones or Goths, and those of Ostro-goths and Wist-goths, into which they were afterwards divided; the particular names of Alaric, Theodoric, Ricaredus, (the names of their Kings and Captains) seem to me to evidence. That they were once seated in this Country doth appear as plainly, 1. by the name of Gothland here still remaining; 2. by the Title of Res Gothorun, which the Kings of Swethland keep in the Royal Style; 3. by some Inscriptions in ancient unknown Characters engraven on the Rocks near Scara in the Continent, and in Wibsy in the Isle of Gothland, supposed by learned men to be some monument of that People. And finally, that their first Dwelling, when first known by this name amongst the Romans, was on the North-side of the Iffer, is evident by the testimony of all ancient Writers, from the time of Antoninus Caracalla, with whom they had some tumultuary Skirmishes in his way towards Perfas, till their violent Irruption into Italy and the Western Provinces: most famous in this Interval for a great Fight with Decius the Roman Emperor, whom they overcame and slew in a Battle, Anno 253. In the time of Valens and Valentinian, the Roman Emperours, a Quarrel being grown amongst them, managed by Phrigiternes and Athanaricus, the Leaders of the opposite Factions; Phrigiternes, overthrown in fight, had recourse to Valens, from whom he received such Succours, that giving his Adversary another day for it, he obtained the Victory. Whereupon Phrigiternes and his Party received the Gospel, but intermixt and corrupt with the Leven of Arianism, by the practice of Valens, who sent them none but Arian Teachers, to whom and their Factions in the Church he was wholly addicted. Afterwards the whole Nation being driven over the Iffer by the barbarous Huns, they obtained of Valens the out-parts of Thrace for an Habitation, on condition they should serve under the pay of the Emperour and become Christians: the cause that Arianism over-spread the whole Nation generally, which had before infected but one part only. Ulpilas, a devout and learned man, was their first Bishop; who, for their better Edification in the way of Godliness, invented a new Gothick Character, and translated the Scriptures into that Language: in the Study whereof they so well profited, that many of them in the time of their first Conversion suffered death for it at the hands of Athanaricus, and were counted Martyrs. Burthened by Valens, and denied their accustomed Pay, they hara and depopulate the rest of Thrace, marching towards Constantinople; encountered in the way by Valens, whom they overcame and killed, after all his Favours. Vanquished by Theodofius the succeeding Emperour in many Battles, they became good neighbours, enlarging their Bounds with his leave and licence as far as Pannonia, and grown into such estimation with him, that Ricimer and Fravitas, two of that Nation, did obtain the Consulship: not to say any thing of that exorbitant power and favour which Gaisas had attained unto in the Court itself. Made insolent by so great Honours, and apt to pick Quarrels with their Patrons, they invaded Italy in two great Bodies, consisting of no fewer than 200000 fighting men. The first whereof, under the Conduct of Ricimer dagnifus, was discomfited and cut in pieces by Stilico, Lieutenant to Honorius the Western Emperour, at Fesule in the Straights of the Appennine. The other, by his Treachery permitted to pass, sacked Rome, and subdued the most part of Italy under the leading of Alaricus. He dying immediately after this great Victory, let the fruits of it to his Son Athaulfus; who marrying with Galla Placidia, the Emperour's Sister, relinquished Italy, and had all Gallia Narbonensis, and a great part of Hispania Tarraconensis, assigned unto him, where he erected the Kingdom of the Wist-Goths or Western-Goths, possessed of Spain and Tingitana for the space of 300 years and upward, when they lost that Kingdom to the Moor, as hath there been said. In the mean time the Goths which were left in their own Countries, distinguished from these by the name of Ostro-Goths, by reason of their more Eastern situation, kept themselves in quiet: being first subdued by the Huns, and when by Witmar freed from that subjection, not intermeddling or attempting any thing against the Empire, till called by Zeno Emperour of Constantinople into Italy against Odoacer and the Hermis, who had then subdued it. Which action they managed with so much prudence and good fortune by their King Theodoric, that they vanquished Odoacer, possessed Italy, and held it above 60 years; when, broken in many fit Battles by Belisarius and Narses, Lieutenants for the Emperour Justinian, their Kingdom and Name there came unto an end.

As for the Kings of the Goths, we have a succession of them in Tornades from Berig, who first conducted them out of Scandia towards the East, till the going of Theodoric into Italy; but made up with so little probability, that I dare give no more credit to it than the Stories of Brute, Dan, Fergus, or the Lady Scota; Pharao's Daughter. Such of whom there is any certain knowledge and succession are these few that follow

The Kings of the GOTHS.

- 344 1. Athanaricus, King of the Goths in the time of Constantine and Constantin, the Sons of Constantine the Great.
- 357 2. Alaricus, the first of that name; in the time of Constantine.
3. Phrigiternes, King of the Goths in the time of Valens, the first Christian Prince among that People.
- 360 4. Athanaricus II. in the time of the Emperours Valens, Gratian, and Valentinian the second; under whom the Goths were first settled on this side of the Iffer.
- 379 5. Rhadagisus, who in the time of Honorius first led the Goths into Italy; slain at the Battle of Fesula.
- 410 6. Alaricus II. who, pursuing the War of Italy, sacked Rome, subdued Naples, and the most of Italy.
- 412 7. Athaulfus, the Son of Alaric the second, who first erected the Kingdom of the Wist-goths in Gaul and Spain, continuing there for the space of 300 years and upward; the present Kings of Spain coming from this Stock.
- 417 8. Athalaricus, King of the Goths remaining in the East at the departure of Rhadagisus and Alaricus, distinguished from their Plantations by the name of Ostro-Goths: vanquished by Attila, they became Subjects to the Huns in the time of Theodofius the second and Valentinian the third, Emperours of the East and West.

9. Wilamir, one of the Bloud-Royal of the Goths, Vassal to Atilia, at the first, whom he assisted, served rather, in the great Battle near Tholouf against the Romans: but, taking advantage of some Quarrels amongst the Sons of Atilia, shook off that Yoke, and recovered the Kingdom of the Goths, in the time of the Emperour Marcianus.
10. Theodimir, Son of Wanibar, and Brother of Wilamir, in the time of Leo Emperour of Constantinople.
11. Theodorick, Son of Theodimir, kept at Constantinople in his youth as a Pledge or Hostage for his Father, where he was instructed in all the Greek and Roman Learning, and made the adopted Son (as is said by Scaliger) of the Emperour Zeno, by whom he was sent into Italy against Odoacer and the Heruli, and erected there the Kingdom of Tyflin, when it was destroyed by Belisarius and Narses, before is said: the name of Goths in Italy being thus extinct, but their Blood intermixt with the best Italian. The sum of their whole Story, for varieties sake, take thus out of Dn Baras.

The warlike Goths, which whilom issued forth From the cold frozen Illands of the North, Incamp'd by Vistula: but the Air almost B'ing there as cold as in the Baltick Coast, He with victorious Arms Scalonia gains, The Transylvanian and Palachian Plains; Then flies to Thracia, and then leaving Greeks, Greedy of Spoil, four times he bravely seeks To pluck from Rome (then Mars his Minion) The Plumes, which the from all the World had won, Guided by Rhadagisile and Alarick, (Legions Bold Vindimar and Theodorick, Thence flies to France; from whence expulst, his Rest ever since upon the Spanish Regions.

The Arms of these Kings are said to have been Or, three Ravens with displayed wings Purple, membered Gules. And let this suffice for the Original, Successes, and final Period of the Goths; referred by me unto this place, because most commonly conceived to be their original Country, at least the place out of which they issued, when they first moved towards the East to seek new Dwellings.

2. SWEDEN.

SWEDEN is bounded on the East with the Bodner Sea, on the West with the Defrine Hills, which part it from Norway, on the North with Lapland, on the South with Gothland. So called from the Suehans, or Suebids, the old Inhabitants herof; of whom more anon. A Country sufficiently fruitful, but for the goodness of the Soil inferior to Gothland; and not so well planned or inhabited as that is, by reason of the vast Woods which they will not suffer to be destroyed, and the greatnefs of some Marshes hitherto undrained: But might be made as rich and fertile, if the people would; as appeareth by that plenty of Corn growing amongst the Woods, though much hindered by their shade and thickness both from Sun and Rain. But for the Character of this Country, we had it formerly, when we spake of Swethland, in the general; relating specially to this as the principal part.

And, as the largest and principal part of this great Body, it contains in it many Provinces and Subdivisions:

as namely, 1. Upland, 2. Sudermannia, 3. Nericia, 4. Westmannia, 5. Delecarlie, 6. Vernland, 7. Coperalde, 8. Gertricia, 9. Helsingia, 10. Midelfara, 11. Angermannia, bordering on Lapland, the farthest of these Provinces towards the North. Many of these have no Towns or Cities of any greatnefs or beauty, the people living thin and scattered, where they have Wood for Building, Pasturage for their Beasts, and elbow-room enough for themselves and their Cattle. Of these the principal are, 1. Upsal, an Archbishop's See, and an University, situate not far from the Bay of Bodner, beautified with a large Cathedral, wherein many of the ancient Kings of Swethland are interred. From this City the Country hereabouts is stiled Archiepiscopatus Upsalensis. 2. Halm, by the Inhabitants called Stockholm, by the Russians Stecolme; the Royal Seat of the Kings, a noted and well traded Port, and the chief of the Kingdom; exceeding strong both by Art and Nature, as being situate in the Marshes, like Venice, at the mouth of the Lake or River of Meler, the passage to it out of the Bay being very narrow, and by consequence easily defended, and yet so deep withal, that the greatest Ships of Burthen may fail up to the City: the Port within the Streight being so safe and capacious, that it is able to receive at one time 300 Sail, which usually ride there without any Anchor. The Cattle of this City is conceived to be one of the strongest holds in the world; fortified for the more assurance of it with 400 brass Pieces, many of which are double Canon. 3. Nicepen, a Seetown on the same Bay also. These three are in that part hereof which is called Upland. Then there is 4. Strangene, an Episcopal See, and 5. Telge, on the Lake of Meler, in the Province of Sudermannia; the Title and Estate of Charles, Father of Gustaphus Adolphus late King of Sweden, before his getting of the Crown called Duke of Sudermania. Next, in the Province of Westmannia, there are 6. Arvika, on the West-side of the said Lake of Meler; and 7. Arvika, rich in Silver-mines, out of which are made the best Dross of Sweden: the Mines here being so rich and profitable, that out of every fifteen pound weight of Silver, the workmen draw a pound weight of Gold. 8. Helsing, upon the Bay of Bodner, in the Province of Helsingia, taking name from hence. 9. Orebro or Ourobo, a strong piece in Nericia; and 10. Lefjenger, on the Bay of Bodner, one of the farthest North of Sweden distantly and specially so called.

3. LAPLAND.

LAPLAND, the most Northern part of all Scandia, hath on the East Russia, on the West the Province or Prefecture of Warabys in the Kingdom of Norway, on the North the main Frozen Ocean, and on the South Bodia, or Bodden, on both sides of the Bay so called.

It is named thus originally from the Lappi or Lappones, the Inhabitants of it, as they are from their blackish behaviour; the word Lappon signifying the same with infernus or infernus in Latine; for such they are, rude, barbarous, and without the knowledge of Arts or Letters, as without Corn and Houses, or any certain Habitations; except only in Finnmark; feeding for the most part on Fish and the flesh of wild Beasts, with the Skins whereof sowed together they hide their nakednefs. Generally they are meer Idolaters, giving Divine honour all the day following to that living Creature, whatsoever it be, which they see at their first setting out in the morning; great Sorcerers, and abhorring the sight of Strangers, whom till of late they used to flee from at their first approach, but within few years past beginning to be more sociable and familiar. In a word, they are the true descendants of the ancient Finnii, (possessed in old times of all that Tract which lieth between the Bay of Finland and the frozen Ocean) whose natural rudeness and barbarity, unmixt with the conditions of more civil people, they do still retain.

It is divided into the Eastern and Western Lapland. The former appertaining to the Knez, or great Duke of Moscovy, by which people the Inhabitants are called Dikiloppo, or the wild Laplanders, is subdivided into Biermania and Corelia; of which, if there be any thing in them worth talking notice of, we shall there speak more. The latter doth belong to the Crown of Sweden, subdivided into two parts also, that is to say, 1. Finnmark, and 2. Scricfinnia.

1. FINMARK, being that part hereof which lieth next unto Norway, is the more populous of the two. The people are for the most part Idolatrous, but by the neighbourhood of the Norwegians, and resort of Strangers unto Warabys and the parts adjoining, somewhat civilized, and in the Borders of both Kingdoms favouring of Religion, possessed of Sheds or forry Houses, and those Houses reduced to Parishes under the Jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Upsal; the chief of which (if there be any chief amongst them) are named, 1. Samman, and 2. Hieljo. Called Finnmarks as the ancient Bounds and Marches of the Finni (of whom more anon) and therefore erroneously by Magnus made a part of the Kingdom of Norway.

2. SCRICFINNIA lieth between Finnmark and Russia. The name is derived from the Finni; a great People of Scandia, and Scrikigen, a Dutch word signifying leaping, sliding, or bounding, for such is their gait. An Etymology not much improbable, in that the Wooden-shoes with sharp bottoms, which they used for their more speedy sliding over the ice, of which this Country is full, are by the Germans (who also use them) called Scrikshoes, or Sliding-shoes. The ancient Writers call this people Scricfinnia.

These are indeed the natural and proper Laplanners, and unto these the former Character doth of right belong. Of stature very low, little more than Pygmies, but strong and active; well skill'd in Archery, and patient of Cold and Labour; much given to hunting of wild Beasts, whom they kill with their Bows, devour the Flesh, and cloath themselves with their Skins, which they tie at the top of their Heads, and leave no place open but for the sight; giving thereby occasion unto some to write that they are hairy all over, like Kine or Horses. Such Deer (whereof they have great plenty) as they take unkill'd, they make to draw in little Carts, as they shift their Quarters. But having served them for a while, they are killed at last, though perhaps for nothing but their Skins: a certain number of which they pay yearly to the King of Sweden in the way of Tribute. Three Companies of these Laplanners, so clad and Armed, as aforesaid, came into Lapland in the year 1630, to serve Gustavus Adolphus in those Wars: looked on with admiration by all Spectators.

Towns we must look for none here, where no Houses be: and yet there are some Sheds and Cabins on the Sea shore, which Mariners having made for their refreshment when they came on Land, have bestowed some names on, and possibly in time may become good Towns, now not worth the naming.

BODIA, BODDEN, or BODNER, is situate on the South of Scricfinnia, betwixt it and the Bay or Gulf named; extending Southwards on the West side of it, till it joins to Sweden, and on the East-side, till it meets with the Province of Finland

Hence is the division of this country into the Eastern, Northern and Western Bodden, with reference to the Situation of it on the Bay aforesaid. The Country is not very plentiful of Grain or Fruits, but full of great variety of wild Beasts, whose rich Skins yield great profit unto the Inhabitants, and by reason of the commodious situation on all sides of the Bay, is well stored with Fish. Anciently it was part of the possessions of the Finni, but how or whence it had the name of Bodia, Bodden or Bodner, I am yet to learn. But whencesoever it had the name, certain I am, that from hence the Gulf adjoining is called Sinus Bodicus, the Bodner Zee by the Dutch or Germans.

Chief Towns herein are, 1. Birkura, in West-Bodden; betwixt the Bay and a great navigable Lake. 2. Toronia, a well-traded Empory at the very bottom of the Bay, in North-Bodden. 2. Helsingiac, more North than that, towards the Borders of Lapland. And 4. Kerlabi in East-Bodden, on the Bank of the Gulf, conveniently seated for a Town of Trade.

5. FINLAND.

FINLAND hath on the North Bodia, on the South the Baltick Sea or Mare Suevicum, on the East Sinus Fennicus, on the West Sinus Bodicus. It is by Ammoser thought to be called Finland, quasi fine land; quid pulebrior & amantior fit Suecia, because it is a more fine and pleasing Country than Sweden itself. But indeed it is so called from the Finni or Fenni, a potent Nation who have here dwelt; whose Character is thus framed by Tacitus: Finnis mira Feritas, feda Paupertas, non Arma, non Equi, non Penates, Vtibus Herbes, Villis Pelles, Cabulis Humus, sola in Sagittis spes. The Finni, such they are, wonderfully barbarous, miserably poor, without Arms, Horses, or Household goods; Herbs their Food, the Ground their Bed, and the Skins of Beasts their best Apparel, armed only with their Arrows, and in them their hopes. A Character which agreeth every way with our present Finlanders, especially those of Scricfinnia and some parts of Finnmarkia; who are not so well reclaimed to Civility as the other are: but very different from that which Jornander gives them, who, living within 400 years after Tacitus, before they had much (if any) intercourse with foreign Nations, tell us of them, that they were Scanzæ Cultoribus omnibus mitiorer, more tractable and civil than any of the Inhabitants of Scandia, not excepting the Suebids themselves. If so, they did deserve to live in so good a Country, more plentiful and plain than Sweden, and neither so hilly nor so moorish.

The principal places to be as, 1. Abo, an Archbishop's See, situate on the most Southern Point of it, shooting into the Baltick. 2. Wyborg, a Bishop's See also, whose Jurisdiction for the most part is without this Province, on some part of Russia, all Finland being in the Diocese of the Bishop of Abo. A Town conveniently seated at the bottom of the Bay or Gulf of Finland, (called Sinus Fennicus in Latine) which divides this Country from Livonia; well fortified as the chief Bulwark of this Kingdom against the Moscovites; and so well garrisoned withal, that the keeping of this Town, and Rivalia or Revel in the Borders of Liefland, do cost the King of Sweden 100000 Dollars yearly. 3. Udden, on a Point or Promontory of the same Gulf, opposite to Narva, another Garrison of this King in Liefland. 4. Vorma, upon the Bodner Zee. 5. Cronaburg, more within the Land, at the efflux of a River out of the Lake called Piente. 6. Deckla, on the Banks of the great Lake called Holea. 7. Farta, more Northwards towards Lapland. Of which last four I find not any thing observable in the way of Story.

6. The

6. The SWEDISH Islands.

AND now at last I come to the Swedish Islands, here and there interperfed in the Baltick Seas, betwixt the Ifle of Bornholm, which belongs to Denmark, and Liefland or Livonia, appertaining to the King of Poland. the principal of which are, 1. Gothia, or the Ifle of Gothland; and 2. Ingula Ulanda, or the Ifles of Oeland.

1. GOTHIA, or the Ifle of GOTHELAND, is fituate over againft C.imar, a ftrong Town in the Continent of Gotland, in length 18 Dutch miles, and five in breadth, of a rich Soil, but more fit for Paftrage than Tillage, yielding great Herds of Cattle, ftore of Game for Hunting, plenty of Fifh, excellent Marble, and abundance of Pitch, which it fends forth to other Countries. There are in it 18 large and wealthy Villages, befides the Haven Town of Wifby, heretofore rich and of very great Trading, as much frequented by the Merchant as moft in Europe; but now much decayed and neither fo well peopled nor fo rich as formerly. The Trade removed hither from Wollin in Pomerania (deftrayed by Waldemar the firft of Denmark, Anno 1170) made it flourifh mightily, the greateft Traffick of the Baltick being managed here; but after that by reafon of the long and continued Wars betwixt Denmark and Swethland for the poffeffion of this Ifle it became unfafe, the factory was transferred unto other places. For being conveniently feated to annoy the Swedes, the Danes have much contended for it, and fometimes poffeffed it; but at the prefent it is in the hand of the Swethlander. By fome conceived to be the Eningia fpoken of by Pliny.

2. OELAND, or the Ifles of Uland, fo called in the plural Number, becaufe there are many of them, of which this the principal is fituate over againft Abo, the chief City of Finland. Of no great note, but that it is commodiouly feated to invade or annoy this Kingdom; and therefore very well fortified and aftrongly garrifoned: here being the good Towns of Uborg, 2. Umea; and 3. the ftrong Caffe of Cafrolm.

Befides which Countries here defcribed, the King of Sweden is poffeffed of the ftrong Towns of Narva, and Rivallia or Revel, and Pernau in Liefland of Kexholm, or Hexholm, in Curlia, a Province of Ruffia; with very fair and ample Territories appertaining to them: fubdued and added to this Crown by John the fecond, Anno 1581 except Rivallia which voluntary fubmitted to Ericus the fecond King of this prefent Race, Anno 1561. But being thefe Towns and Territories are not within the Bounds of Swethland; we fhall defer all farther difcours thereof to a place more proper.

The firft Inhabitants of this Kingdom, befides the Goths and Finni fpoken of already, were the Stones and Stiones, mentioned in Tacitus; together with the Phavones, the Pbiraffi, and the Levoni, whom we find in Petronius, placed by him in the Eaft and middle of this great Peninfula. Which, being the general names of fome mighty Nations are by Jornandes branched into leffer Tribes of the Suehans, Thyftad, Vagoth, Bergio, Hallin, Liatibids, Abelichin, Gawigib, Rauwarica, Rauwagici, Gramin, Azagria, Unixia, Archiattami, Enagere, Orbingi, and divers others by them named, but from what root the name of Sweden, Swedes or Swethland, by which the chief Province of it, the people generally and the whole Kingdom is now called, is not yet agreed on; nor fpoke of at all by Musfyer or Crantzius, which two (but fpecially the laft) have written purpofely of this people. Gafper Peninfar deriveth them from the Suevi, who anciently inhabited in the North parts of Germany, beyond the Albis; from whom the Baltick Sea, was called Mare Suevicum:

which people he conceiveth to have been driven by the Guthi and Daci into this Country, and by the change of one letter only to be called Sueci. But this hath no good ground to ftand on, though I meet with many others which are more improbable. For when they left thofe colder Countries they fell into thofe parts which are ftill called Suevia (the Schwaben of the modern Dutch) where we find them in the time of Cæfar. And after, in fula illa Gentium commigratione, when almoft all the Northern Nations did fhift their Seats, we find fuch of them as had ftaid behind to have accompanied the Vandals in their On-falls into Gaul and Spain. Of any expedition of theirs thro' the Baltick Seas, we grieve quidem; nothing to be found in more ancient Authors. We muft therefore refer the original of this people either to the Suiones, or the Suehidi, or perhaps to both; both being anciently feated in thefe Northern Regions. Of the Suiones we read in the Book of Tacitus infcribed De moribus Germanorum; by whom they are reported to be ftrong in Men, Armour and Shipping. And that they were Inhabitants of Scandia, appears by two Circumftances in that Author 1. That the people were not permitted to wear weapons quia Subitus Hostium Inceffus prohibet Oceanus, becaufe the Ocean was to them a fufficient Rampart; which could not be affirmed of the ancient Suevians, but agree very well with the fituation of this prefent Country, defended by the Baltick and vaft Northern Ocean from the fudden Affaults of any enemy. 2. Becaufe the Sea which hemmed in that people was conceived to be the utmoft bounds of the World; Trans Suiones Mare aliud, quicquid claudique Terrarum orbis finis, as his words there are: which we know to hold good of this Country.

3. Add unto thefe this paffage of the old Annals of the Emperour Lewis the fecond; where it is told us of the Danes, relictis patria apud Suiones exulabant, that they were banifhed into the Country of the Suiones, which cannot fo well be understood of any place as of this Sweden, being next neighbour unto Dynmark. And 4. that this People both by Musfyer and Crantzius, as are well called Suiones, as Sueci or Suedi; which fheweth what they conceived of their true Original. Then for the Suehans or the Suehidi, whom Jornandes fpeaks of in his Book De rebus Geticis, they are by him Placed in the Ifle of Scandia, (for fuch this great Peninfula was esteemed to be by moft ancient Writers.) Now that thefe Suehidi are no other than the prefent Swethlanders appeareth 1. by the propinquity of the Names. 2. In that he maketh the Finni and Finnibadi the next neighbours to them. And 3. in that they are affirmed by the fame Author to have furnifhed the Romans with rich Furs, and the Skins of wild Beasts with which Commodities this Country is abundantly well ftored. Now to which of thefe two Nations, either the Suiones or the Suehidi thofe of Sweden are moft indebted for their Original, will (I conceive) be no great controverfie: the Suehans and Suehidi of Jornandes being no other than a Tribe of the Suiones, though the greateft and moft powerful of all thofe Tribes; placed therefore in the Front to command the reft, and fo moft like to give the name unto the whole.

Their Government was anciently under Kings, affirmed fo to be by Tacitus, who telleth us alfo that they were abfolute and free, nullis exceptionibus, non precario jure regendi; not bound in Covenant with their people, nor holding their Estates at the will of the Subject. But their Hiftorians have gone for Antiquity hereof beyond the ftory of Brime or the Trojan War, (beyond which very few of that ftain have dared to pretend) as high as unto Mage the Son of Japhet, reigning here within 30 years after the Flood. But letting paff thefe Dreams and Doga-ges of the Monkifh times, certain it is that fometimes they were under the Danes, fometimes under the Norwegians, fometimes had diftinct Kings of their own; and finally fometimes were comprehended with the Danes and Norwegians under the general name of Normans, conducted by one King or Captain upon Forrain Actions. Omitting therefore the Succeffion of their former Kings, of Whole very being there is caufe to make great queftion; we will begin our Catalogue of them with Ternaticus, who entertained Herald King of Denmark and his Brother Regenfride driven out of that Kingdom by Gutricus or Godfrey, the Contemporary of Charlemain; of whole Succeffors Musfyer giveth us more certainty.

- 1363 28. Albert, Duke of Mecklenburg, Son of Euphemia, the Sifter of Magnus the fourth; to the prejudice of Aquinius King of Denmark and Norway, made King of Sweden, on that Quarrel Vanquifhed by Margaret Queen of Denmark and Norway Widow of Aquinius, Anno 1387. to whom, defirous of liberty, herefgned his Kingdom, and died in his own Country, Anno 1407.

- 1387 29. Margaret, Queen of Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, the Semiramis of Germany, having united the three Kingdoms under her Command, caufed an Act of State to be paffed in Calmar, a chief Town in Swethland, for the perpetuation of this Union unto her Succelfors; the Law and Privileges of each Kingdom continuing as before they were.

- 1411 30. Ericus IV. Duke of Pomerania, adopted by Margaret, of whole Sifter Jagelburg he was defcended, was in his life-time chofen King of the three Kingdoms, into which he fucceeded actually after her deceafe: but outed of them all by a ftrong Faction raifed againft him; Anno 1439, he died in a private Estate in Pomerania, Anno 1459.

- 1439 31. Chriftopher, Count Palatine, and Duke of Bavaria, (in Title only) Son of the Lady Margaret, Sifter of Ericus, fucceeded in all three Kingdoms. After whole death the Swethlander, being weary of the Danifh Government, broke the Agreement made at Calmar, for the uniting of the three Kingdoms under one Prince, and chofe one Carolus Caninus to be their King, Anno 1448.

- 1448 22. Carolus Caninus, one of the meaneft of the Nobility, and not long pleading to the great ones: whole Difpleafure when he had incurred, and feared the confequents thereof, he gathered together all the Treafure he could, fled unto Danzick, and there ended his days.

- 1455 33. Chriftiern, King of Denmark and Norway, called in by a party of the Swedes, and crowned King of Swethland; but out again under colour that he had not kept Conditions with them: the Kingdom being governed after that for a time by Marfals.

- 1458 34. John, King of Denmark and Norway, the Son of Chriftiern, received King by the Svedes, then over-powered by the Mufcovite: but their turn being ferved, they expelled him, again, returning to their former Government under Marfals. Of which Marfals (defcended from Steno Stur, the Uncle of Carolus Caninus by his Mother's fide) there were three in number; viz. 1. Steno, 2. Suanto, and 3. Steno Star the fecond of which the two firft died natural deaths, and the laft being by Chriftiern the fecond flain in Battel, this Kingdom was again poffeffed by the Danes.

- 1519 35. Chriftiern II. King of all three Kingdoms, ufed his Victory fo cruelly here, and his Subjects fo infolently at home, that here he was outed by Gulftavus Ericus and driven out of Denmark by his Uncle Frederick.

- 1523 36. Gulftavus Ericus, defcended from the ancient Race of the Kings of Sweden, having vanquifhed and expelled the Danes, was on the merit of that adtion chofen King of Swethland; which fill continueth in his Houfe.

- 1561 37. Ericus V. Son to Gulftavus 8.
- 1569 38. John II. Brother of Ericus; married Catherine the Sifter of Sigifmund the fecond; King of Poland.

- 1593 39. Sigifmund, the Son of John the fecond, in the life-time of his Father chofen King of Poland, Anno 1586, but was difpoffeffed of the Crown of Sweden (after a long War) by his Uncle Charles.

- 1607 40. Charles II. Duke of Suderman, the youngelt Son of Gulftavus Ericus, and Brother of John and Erik the two former Kings, firft governed here as Viceroy for his Nephew Sigifmund. But having an aim upon the Crown (to which he found the Lutherans not very favourable) he raifed up a Calvinian party within that Realm; according to whole Principles he began firft to withdraw his Obedience from his natural Prince, and afterwards to affume the Government to himfelf: fpeeding fo well in his Defign, that after a long War he forced his Nephew to defist from all farther 1611 41. Enterprizes, and made himself King, An. 1607. Gustavus Adolphus, Son of Charles, having settled his Affairs in Sweden, and whom Peace with the King of Denmark, with whom his Father was in War at the time of his death, fell first on his Cousin Sigismund, the King of Poland, from whom he took many places of importance in Prussia and Livonia; and in pursuance of that War was made Knight of the Garter. Afterwards, having settled a Truce with him, he passed into Germany, then in great danger of being absolutely intrahled to the House of Austria. In which he prospered so beyond all expectation, that in one year he passed over the Elbe, the Rhene, and the Danow, (which no Conquerour ever did before;) and having twice vanquished the Imperialists led by Tilly, and restored many of the German Princes unto their Estates, was in the current of his Victories slain in the Battel of Lutzen, Novemb. 1632; his body royally conveyed to Swedenland, and there interred.

1632 42. Christina, sole Daughter of Gustavus, of the age of seven years, acknowledged Queen of Sweden; the Estate being governed by the Counsels of the Nobility. After a long War, with variable success in Germany, they came at last to this accord in the Treaty of Munster, that she and her Successors, Kings and Queens of Swedenland, should peaceably enjoy all the higher Pomerany, with the Isles of Rügen, Wollin, and the Town of Stetin, in Lower Pomerany; the Town and Port of Wismar in the Dukedom of Mecklenburgh; and the whole Bishoprick of Bremen and Verden, and the Prefecture of the Town of Wülshufen; with the Title of Dukes of Bremen, Pomerany, and Verden, Princes of Rugia, and Lords of Wismar; and by those Titles to have place, as Princes of the Empire, in all Diets and Assemblies which concern the Publick. By which agreement (if it hold) the Swedes have not only got a good footing in Germany, a strong Influence upon all the Councils of the Empire, a Door open for more Forces, (if occasion be) and a free passage into the Western Ocean, which before they wanted; but may in time prove absolute Masters of the Baltick Sea, and make the Hamburgers, those of Lubeck, and possibly the Kings of Denmark and the Empire it self, be at their Devotion.

But leaving these things to the Doubtful issue of Contingency, let us next look upon the Forces and Revenues of the Crown of Sweden before the time of Gustavus Adolphus, or as he found them at his Succession to that Crown. For though the Swedes pretend their Kingdom to be Elective, especially since the falling of the Royal Line in Magnum the fourth, and Albert of Mecklenburgh: yet still the eldest Son or next Heir succeedeth; unless put by Faction and strong hand, as in the case of Sigismund and his Uncle Charles. Which Charles so ordered his Affairs, that having engaged the Kingdom in a War against his Nephew, he was solicited at the last to accept of the Crown: to which he would by no means yield, till a law was made for the entailing the same for ever unto his Posterity, whether male or female, as an Hereditary Crown. But whether Hereditary or Elective, the King once settled in the Throne is an absolute Monarch; having not only a power to levy Taxes on his Subjects, as he seeth occasion, as five, six, seven, eight Dollars, or more yearly upon every Householder, according to the proportion of his Estate, but also to grant a certain number of Peasants unto such as he means to favour, to be as Subjects and Vassals to him, according to his well-deserving. And whereas in the Constitution of this Government every Parish hath a Landman or Consul to decide the Controversies of the same, as every Territory hath its Vicount, and each Province his Lamen; there lieth an Appeal from the Landman unto the Vicount, and from the Vicount to the Lamen; who, if they be supposed not to judge uprightly, then the Appeal lies unto the Council, and from the Council of Estate to the King himself, (in whom is fixed the Sovereignty and Dominie Resort), and not unto the King and Council, as before in Denmark.

The Forces of this King are either by Sea or Land. By Sea he is Commander wholly of the Bay of Bodney, and hath a great Power in all the rest of the Baltick; being able to fit out 70 good men of War, as John the second did in the year 1578; seven of which were good Gallies, and all the rest did carry above 50 cast Pieces of all sorts, besides many other good Vessels fit for service. And if a Navy of this size will not serve the turn, he is not only furnished with Timber, Cordage, and all other necessaries for the building of Ships, and with good store of Ordnance and Ammunition for present use, but is able to raise upon a sudden 6000 Mariners, and upon little warning as many more; all which he entertaineth at no other charges in a manner than to find Victuals: inasmuch as John the second, before mentioned, did use to say, that that which cost the King of Spain a Million of Crowns, cost him 100000 Dollars.

For his Land-Forces they may best be estimated by the Trained Bands (as we call them) in every Province; there being in all 32 Vexilles (or Ensigns) of Foot constantly trained and mustered in the several Provinces; each Vexille comprehending 600 or 700 men, amounting in the Total to 20000 Foot; all in a manner Musketers; ready to march whenever the Kings occasion shall so require. And then for Horse, there are eleven Cornets in continual readiness for Sweden and Gothland, and two for Finland, maintained at the Charges of those Countries: to which the King may add at his own charges as many more as he pleaseth. And for an instance of what this King is able to do, without putting his Estates in hazard by draining them too dry of men to make good his Kingdom, we find that John the second, in his Navy of 50 Ships spoken of before, had above 18000 Land-Soldiers, besides Mariners. And in the Army which Gustavus Adolphus, the late King, brought into Germany, there were mustered no fewer at one time than 12000 Horse, and 34000 Foot, all Finnis and Swedish. For the accommodating of which Armies with Artillery and the like Engines of War, it is thought that the Kings hereof are Masters of 8000 great Pieces, for the most part Brass, with Mortar-pieces and Granaado's in proportion to them.

But that which makes his Land Forces most considerable is their Hardiness in enduring the extremities of Wind and Weather (inasmuch that it is usual with them to stand Centinel a whole Winters night of 18 hours long without being relieved) their exact Discipline, and Obedience to their Commanders, and finally their indefatigable Industry in making their own Shoes, Apparel, Stocks for Muskets, and all other necessaries. Which doth not only make them fit to endure any labour which is put upon them in the Wars, but keeps them from Idleness and the pride of Mutinies; the ordinary effect, in great Armies, of sloth and ease. Nor do they want encouragement on the Kings part neither; who, 1. gives to every Soldier Victuals, which he accounts not in their pay, and 2. If a Soldier dier be taken Prisoner, him the King doth usually redeem at his own charges. And 3. if a Soldier's Horse be slain under him, the King supplieth him with another. Which make the Soldiers (very sensible of such Obligations) exceedingly conformable unto his Commands, how dangerous soever they seem to be.

Finally, as for his Revenues, they must needs be great, there being four ways allowed him to amass his Treasures. First the Revenues of the Church, confining before the Reformation of seven Bishopricks and sixty Monasteries, which enjoyed very great Possessions; all seized on by Gustavus Ericus, and by him incorporated to the Crown excepting only what is given back to maintain the Bishops. Secondly, Mines, which are here of all Metals in very great plenty, except of Gold and Silver, which they have more sparingly; the Tenth whereof in all places belongs to the King, and yields him such a fair Livrade, that in the year 1578 the King's part out of two or three Mines of Copper only amounted to 30000 Dollars. Thirdly, Tenth out of all increase, as Rye, Wheat, Barley, Fish, Oxen, Skins, and the like Commodities; the sum whereof though not certainly known, (because the increase is so uncertain) yet it was once computed, that the Tenth of the Oxen only came in one year to 18000 Dollars, besides Provision for his Household. Fourthly and lastly, Customs imposed on Merchandise, and paid in all his Haven-Towns for all Commodities imported or exported, of what sort soever. Besides all which, he hath his Contributions in all times of War, power of imposing Taxes, (though moderately used) as his Necessities require; and on the Marriage of a Daughter, the Kingdom is to provide her Portion, which of late times hath been fixed at the certain sum of 100000 Dollars, besides Plate and Moveables. Out of which several Items to sum up the Total: It was observed, that in the year 1578 John the second (all Charges, ordinary and extraordinary, being first deducted) did lay up into his Treasury no less than 700000 Dollars; which was a vast sum for those times, considering especially the great Charge which the King had been at that year, in furnishing a Navy of 70 Sail, and raising 18000 Land-Soldiers, (besides Horse) for defence of his Realm against the Danes. And yet it is conceived by some knowing men, that his Revenues would be much greater than they are, if he did employ Strangers to work the Mines, which the Native do not husband to the best advantage; and yet are fearful to discover them to other Nations upon some Jealousies, which they are naturally addicted to: or if he would turn Merchant, and in his own Ships send out Corn and Cordage, with Masts and Timber fit for Building, and in them bring back Salt and other Necessaries which his Kingdom wants, letting them at a far less price than now they go at, and yet gaining very greatly by it too.

The Arms of this Kingdom are Azure, three Crowns Or.

There are in Swedenland.

O F R U S S I A.

R U S S I A is bounded on the East by Tartary, on the West with Livonia and Finland, from which it is divided by great Mountains and the River Pola; on the North by the Frozen Ocean, and some part of Lapland; and on the South by Lithuania, a Province of the Kingdom of Poland, and the Crim-Tartari, inhabiting on the Banks of Palm Maoris and the Euxine Sea. It stretcheth partly in Europe, and partly in Asia, the River Tanaïs or Don running through it, the common Boundary of those great and noted parts of the World.

It was thus called from the Rossi or Russi, a People of Mount Taurus, or Tavrica Cherfoneus, (if not both) who in the declining times of the Greek Empire possessed themselves of some parts of it, and, being the prevailing People, imposed their Name on all the rest. Called also Russja Alba, to distinguish it from Russja Nigra, a Province of Poland; quod Incola omnium Gentium ipsius imperii subiectarum (as one observes, discoursing of the Affairs hereof) Vestibus albis & Pileis plerumque utuntur, because the Inhabitants use to wear white Caps and Vestments. And why not thus? since the People of Margiana and Sogdiana in Asia have the name of Tselibus only because they wear green Turbans, as the word importeth. Finally, it is called Moscovite, from Moscovia the chief Province of it; as that is denominated from the Moschi, of whom more anon.

In reference to the Heavenly bodies, it is said by some to be situate betwixt the 8. and 20. Climates; the longest Day in the Southern parts being but 16 hours and an half, and almost 22 hours and a half in the Northern part. But this is to be understood only of the Province of Moscovia properly and specially so called, and not of the whole Empire of the Moscovite according to the Bounds before laid down. For taking in the Northern Provinces belonging to it, as East-Lapland, Candora & Peterson, lying within the Arctic Circle, the longest Day in Summer will be full 6 months, (for so long do those Countries see no Night at all;) which is a mighty disproportion from the length of the longest Day in the most Southern parts, being but 16 hours and a half, as before is said. And by this Rule we are to take the Dimensions also. For though some make the length hereof from North to South, that is to say, from Cala in the North to Afracan near the Caspian Sea, to be no more than 2260 Versts, or 3590 Italian miles; yet they confess that, reckoning forwards from Tronfchina, the farthest point of Peterson, the full length there of will be nigh so much more. And for the breadth, reckoning from Narva on the Bay of Finland, (now in possession of the Swedes) to the Province of Siberia in the East, it amounteth to 4400 Versts, or 6300 Italian miles, each Verst being estimated at three quarters of an English mile. Which mighty Territory, if it were peopled answerable to some other parts of the World, would either make it too great for one Prince to hold, or make that Prince too great and puissant for all his neighbours.

The people, as is commonly reported of them, are very perfidious, crafty and deceitful in all their Bargains, False-dealers with all they have to do with, making no reckoning of their Promises, and study nothing more than ways to evade their Contrasts. Vices so generally known and noted in them, that when they are to deal with Strangers, they defile their Country, and pretend to be of other Nations, for fear lest no body should trust them. Destitute they are of humane Affections, and so unnatural, that the Father insults on his Son, and he again over his Father and mother. So malicious one towards another, that you shall have a man hide some of his own Goods in the house of some man whom he hateth, and then accuse him for the stealth of them. They are exceedingly given to drink, infomuch that all heavy and intoxicating Drinks are by Law prohibited, and two or three days only in a year allowed them to be drunk in. For the most part they are strong of Body, swift of Foot, of square Portion, broad, short and thick: gray-eyed, broad-bearded, and generally furnished with prominent Paunches. The commons live in miserable subjection to the Nobles, and they again in as great Slavery to the Duke or Emperour; to whom no man of all the vulgar dares immediately exhibit a Petition, or make known his Grievances, nay, the mean Lords and officers are afraid in this kind, and, but on great submission, will not commend unto the Duke a poor man's Cause. They are altogether unlearned, even the Priests meanly indoctrinated it being cautioned by the great Duke, that there be no Schools, lest there should be any Scholars but himself: so that the people use to work commonly on the Lord's day, holding it fit to be kept by none but Gentlemen; and to say in a difficult question, God and our Great Duke know all this; and in other talk, All we and our Great Duke know, is all from our Great Duke; according to whose pleasure every man is preferred what Habit he shall wear, both for matter and fashion, suitable unto their Condition. In the time of my Author their Habit was a long Garment without Plaits, which hung down to their heels, commonly of white or blew, with very straight Sleeves; on their Legs wearing Buskins up as high as the calf, for the most part red, high at the heels, and beset with nails of Iron. The stuff and trimming of the Dress is the only difference betwixt the Noble and the Peasant.

The Women are attired also much after this manner; but if great and noble, suffered to set forth themselves with frowns of Pearls and Precious Stones which hang so thick about their ears, that they do almost pull their ears from their heads. A second Marriage is conceived no blemish in point of Chastity, but the third condemns them of Incontinence. They are naturally subject enough to the Lusts of the flesh, but private, and fearful to offend; if once lascivious, then most intolerably wanton. It is the fashion of these Women to love that Husband best which beareth them most; and to think themselves neither loved nor regarded, unless they be two or three times a day well favourably fawled. The Author of the Treasury of times telleth a Story of a German Shoemaker, who travelling into this Country, and here marrying a Widow, used her with all kindness that a woman could (as he thought) desire; yet did not the fenn contented. At last learning where the fault was, and that his not beating her was the cause of her Penitence, he took such a vein in cudgelling her sides, that in the end the Hangman was fain to break his Neck for his labour.

They use the Slavonian Languages, but so corrupt and mixt with other Languages, that they and the Slavonians understand not one another's meaning but by circumstance only: yet in Turgia (out of which the Hungar- rians are thought to have issued) they speak a corrupt Hungarian; and in Petozora and the Country of the Czeremissians they have a Language to themselves, distinct from others.

They first received the Christian faith in the year 987, or, as some say, Anno 942, by the preaching and ministry of the Greeks sent hither by the Patriarch of Constantinople; of which Church they are constant followers, both for Rites and Doctrine: but not without some Superstitions of their own superadded to them; viz. not coming near a Cross, Church or Monastery, but they kneel down, and make the sign of the Cross, saying Mily Hspodi, i. e. Lord have mercy upon us; nor entering into any Church untill washed and bathed. They bear a deadly hatred to the Jews, whom they suffer not to live amongst them; and so great friendship unto a Calif, that they hold it a great offence to kill one, or to eat his flesh. Their Church is governed by 18 Bishops, and 2 Metropolitans, all of them subordinate to their Archbishop or Patriarch; as he in former times to the Constantinopolitan, by whom he used to be confirmed. But about an hundred years ago they withdrew themselves from that subjection; the Patriarch being nominated by the Great Duke, and consecrated by two or three of his own Suffragans. Without the counsel and advice of this Patriarch, the Emperour or Great Duke doth nothing of any moment. The Bishops are all chosen out of the Monastick or Regular Clergy; which makes the Monks (being all of the order of S. Basil) to live very religiously, in hope to be advanced to the Episcopal Dignity. And for the Secular Clergy, or Parochial Priests, there is not much required of them, but to say their Masses, (which being in their own Language they may easily do) and to read now and then one of Chrysolostom's Homilies, translated heretofore for the use of those Churches. After the death of their first Wives they are not permitted to marry; in other things little they differ from the rest of the people. Once in the year it is lawful and usual with them to hold a Synod, at which the Patriarch hath his Crozier or Pastoral-staff carried before him, as the Pope's Legate hath the Cross; where they make Constitutions for the publick Government, and the regulating of Divine matters; which are punctually and carefully observed by the Prince himself.

As followers of the Greek Church, (but so as to be counted a Church distinct) they differ much both from the Romish and Reformed. 1. Denying the Holy Ghost to proceed from the Father and the Son. 2. Denying Purgatory, but praying for the Dead. 3. Believing that Refuges enjoy not the presence of God before the using Legion. 4. Communicating in both kinds but with the Wine vened bread, and mingling warm Water with the Wine, which both together they distribute with a Spoon. 5. Receiving Children of 7 years old to the Sacrament of theceiving Eucharist, because then they begin to sin. 6. Forbidding extreme Unction, Confirmation, and fourth Marriages. 7. Admitting none to Orders but such as are married, and yet prohibiting Marriage to them that are actually in Orders. 8. Rejecting Carved Images, but admitting the Painted. 9. Observing 4 Lents in the year. 10. Repeating it unlawful to fast on Saturday; or to eat Blood, or any thing that hath been strangled, according to the first Council holden at Hierusalem. 11. And finally, dissolving Marriage by Divorcement upon every flight occasion, or conceived displeasure. Which diversity betwixt the Romans and this people in point of Religion hath bred much a difference betwixt them in point of Affection, and made them so ill-concited of one another, that if a Misfortune be known, or but suspected to have conversed with any of the Church of Rome, he is accounted to be a polluted person, and must be solemnly purged and purified before before he be admitted to partake of the blessed Sacrament.

In matters of War the people are indifferently able, as being almost in continual Broils with their Neighbours; and have a Custom, that when they go to the Wars, every Soldier give to the Emperour or great Duke a peice of money, which at the end of the War he receiveth again; and by that means the number of the slain is exactly known. At their Funerals they use to put a Penny into the Mouth of the party deceased, a pair of Shoes on his Feet and a Letter in his Hand, directed (such is their Superstition) to S. Nicolas, whom they deem to be the Porter of Heaven: an opinion doubtless very prejudicial to the Pope's and S. Peter's Prerogatives.

This Country is not so populous as spacious. The Eastern parts are vexed with the Tartars, who, like Lepp's Dog, will neither dwell there themselves, nor suffer the Muscovites to plant Colonies in them: the Western parts almost as much molested by the Swedish and Polonian Kings; the Southern by the Turk and Precepens; and the Northern by the coldness of the Air, which is of such vehemency, that Water thrown up into the Air will turn to Ice before it fall to the ground. The better to resist the extremity of this Cold, are not only the Cloathes of this people, but their very Houses, are lined with thick Furs. Every Gentleman or man of note hath in his Dwelling-house, a Stove or Hot-house in which they keep as it were to thaw themselves. Such as travel on the way use often to rub their Nose or Ears with Snow or Ice, to settle and recal the motive Spirits into those parts which otherwise they would be in danger to lose; the ignorance of which preventing Chirurgery was not the least cause that, in the year 1598 of 70000 Turks which made an Inroad into Muscovia, 40000 were frozen to death. By reason of these extremities of Frosts and Cold, it is the Custom of this people to lay the Bodies of their dead all the Winter long on heaps in the Belfreys of their Churches, where they lie without putrifying or any ill favour to the end of March; at what time the Air beginning to wax warm, and the earth to be fit for digging each Family looks out their dead bodies, and takes care to bury them. This excess of Cold in the Air gave occasion to Cathalian in his Anticus wittily, and not incongruously, to feign that if two men being somewhat distant talk together in the Winter, their words will be so frozen that they cannot be heard; but if the parties in the Spring return to the same place, their words will melt into the same order as they were frozen and spoken, and be plainly understood. Such is their Winter: neither is their Summer less miraculous. For the huge Seas of Ice which in a manner cover the whole surface of the Country, are at the first approach of the Sun suddenly dissolved, the Water quickly dried up, and the Earth dressed in her holy-day Apparel: such a mature growth of Fruits, such flourishing of Herbs, such chirping of Birds as if here were a perpetual Spring. The reason of which strange and sudden alteration is conceived to be the long lying of the Snow on the Face of the Earth, keeping it from the rigour of the Winter Frosts; which being dissolved by the Sun in the beginning of the Spring, doth so thoroughly drench and loke the Ground, (being of a light and Sandy mold) and consequently make it the more penetrable by the beams of the Sun shining hotly on it, that it forceth in a manner the Herbs and Plants to shoot forth in great plenty, and that too in a shorter time than can be imagined.

The whole Country generally is very much overspread with Woods, parts of the great Heronian Forest, heretofore over-running all the North, and still more visible here than in other places: either by reason of the Aliveness of the people, naturally given to Sloth and Ease; or for that the Country is not populous enough to overcome them: or that there is already Ground enough for Tillage to supply their necessary uses. For here do grow the goodliest and tallest Trees of the World, through which, by reason of their thickness, the brightness of the Sun-beams can hardly pierce; affording shelter to great multitudes of Cattle, but of wild Beasts especially, whose Skins are better than their Bodies, as Bears, Martens, Zibellines, wolves, black foxes, whose skins are of very great estimation. Of the timber of these Trees are squared all necessities both for Forts and Houses: the Fortifications in this Country being made of huge beams fastned together, (the Chinks filled with Earth) not easily shaken by Battery, though much subject to Fire. And out of them issueth an unspeakable quantity of Pitch and Rosin, which are hence distilled: besides an everlasting Fountain of Wax and Honey; the Bees, without the Midwifery of the Art of Men, building their Hives or Houses in the hollow Trees. Concerning this there goeth a Story (reported and believed for a certain truth) of a Countryman who accidentally had slipped down into a great hollow Tree, where he stood up to the breast in Honey, continuing there two days without other sustenance: at the end whereof a Bear coming to partake of the Booty, he laid hold of his Legs and so terrified him with his Cries that he made him leap out with the man at his heels. The Country yieldeth also great store of Flax and Hemp, which is transported yearly into other Countries, (and would make them very excellent Cordage, if the people had any skill in Manufactures or Mechanical Arts) and in some places rich Pastures, and such store of Corn, that therewith they do furnish Lapland, and the North parts of Sweden. Fish they have also in good plenty, which they salt and drie, and either vent it to the Merchant, or lay it up in store for their Forts and Families. By which account it will appear that the Principal Commodities which they send abroad are rich Furs, Flax, Hemp, Whales-grate, Honey, Wax, Pitch, Rosin, Nuts, Filibers and the like: which either the Dutch and English buy of them at the fort of S. Nicolas, or the Armenians at Albracan near the Caspian Sea; giving them in return Cloath, Silks, Tapestry, and some other Merchandise, transported to the value of 50000 Rubles yearly. Particularly of Wax 50000 Pood, (every Pood containing 40 English Pounds) of Tallow 100000 Pood, 100000 Hides, 100 Ships laden with Flax and Hemp, the rest of their Commodities proportionably in the time of my Author; since whose time the Trade herof hath been much increased.

This Country not improperly may be called (as by some it is) the Mother of Rivers. The chief of which are, 1. The Dona, called Tanais by the old Geographers, and by them thought to be the only Boundary betwixt Europe and Asia; the Northern parts of this Country being then unknown. It disburtheneth it self into Palus Meotis; and hath its Fountain not out of the Rhiphaean Mountains, as was thought of old, but out of a great Lake called Ivanowefero, in the Forest of Obonickiles or Tephanickiles, some 20 English miles from the City of Tulla, and having run a great way Eastward, turneth back again and then proceedeth Southwards towards the Maris, as was said before. 2. Borysthenes, now called Nieper, whose spring was unknown unto Herodorus, but now discovered to be near Daipereck, a Village of Muscovy specially so called, in the Forest of Wolkynkie. Whence passing South, and running by the Town of Solenzke, it receiveth many other Rivers, and amongst them that of Defna (by the ancient Writers called Hypanis) notwithstanding whose muddy waters it still retains its natural Clearness, and so falls into the Euxine Sea. 3. Tumana, (so called by the Sarmatians and their Slaves. For when the Asiatick Scythians went to plant themselves in Media, and the parts adjoining, some of the Sarmatians, then inhabitants of this Tract, went along for company. Their long stay caused their Wives, despairing of their return, to comfort themselves with their Slaves both at bed and board; to whom they brought a lusty increase of Youths: who being well grown, and hearing that the Sarmatians were upon their coming back, joined together against them: the Slaves to retain their Wealth and Freedom which they were possessed of, the Women, for fear of the displeasure of their Husbands, and the Young men, for defence of their Fathers and Mothers. With joynt Forces they go out to meet them before their entry into the Country; neither are the Masters slow in their advance, hoping to take them unprovided. At Novogrod they have the first fight of each other. The Masters, scornful to defile their Swords on so ignoble an Enemy, assaults them with Whips, and by the terror thereof got a signal Victory. In memory of which Battle, the people of that City have ever since stamped their money with the figure of an Horseman shaking a Whip in his hands: And it is the Custom of all Moscovites, that the Maids in the time of wooing send such a Whip, curiously wrought by her own hands, to that Sutor whom the revolves on for her Husband, in token of her future Subjection to him. But of this more hereafter in another place.

6. CORELIA. 7. BIARMIA.

Sixty Dutch miles from Novogrod lieth the Province Scalled CORELIA, extending Northwards as far as to a branch of the frozen Sea where the longest Day is 20 hours and a half; the Nights proportionable in the Winter make it cold and barren. It bordereth on the East of Finland, from which it is parted by a long and rough ridge of Mountains. By reason of which Situation betwixt two great Princes, the people are enforced to pay Tribute to both, though properly the Subjects of the great Duke of Moscow. Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Keshalm or Hexholm in the hands of the Swedes, and 2. Corelsburg the chief Towns of the Province, belonging with the rest of the Country unto the Moscovite. By some this Province is made a part of the Eastern Lapland; but, I think, erroneously: the people having some good Towns, and favouring of some Humanity, neither of which are known or heard of amongst the Laplanners. 3. Nodenburg, on the mouth of a Lake, which by the River called Wajuga emptieth it self into the Bay of S. Nicolas.

On the North-side of that Branch or Arm of the Frozen Ocean which bounds Corelia lieth the Western part of Lapland, which by a proper name is called BIARMIA: the Country of the Dikloppi, or wild Lappins, as the Moscovite call them: to whose Duke or Emperor they are subject. We had their Character before when we were in Swetland, nor shall we need to repeat it here: as Barbarous and as rude as the worst sort of those mentioned in Scythia, and as Idolatrous as they; but more (if more may be) inclined to Lustfulness than the others. In the Winter Solstice, when the Sun entrencheth into Capricorn, they have Night for three whole months together, during which time, lurking in their Caves, they have leisure to confute with the Prince of Darkness: being very great Sorcerers, able (as some affirm) to raise Winds, Clouds, Tempests, and do many strange things. Towns here are none. Some Sheds and Cabins on the Sea-coasts, patched up by the Sailors for their reception and refreshment as they came on Land, and named according to their fancies, but not here considerable.

8. PETZORA. 9. CONDORA. 10. OB-DORA. 11. TUGRIA.

Opposite to Biarmia, or West-Lapland, on the other side of the Bay, leading towards the Port of S. Nicolas, lieth a large Promontory or Head-land, stretching out far into the North, beyond the Arctic comprehending in it 4 Provinces of the Russian Empire; that is to say Petzora, Condora, Obdora, and Tugria: belonging formerly to the Tartars, but won from them of late years by the Russian Emperours; extending by that means their Territories to the River Ob, but not a whit improving them in Power or Patrimony. Howsoever somewhat must be said of them, because parts of this great Body which we are to dissect.

PETZORA, so called from a River of that name, is fenced on every side by Mountains and unpassable Rocks, extending Northwards to the Sea, and crooked with a vast Chain of Hills, part of the Hyperborei, spoken of before; so high, that a certain man, having travelled in the ascent of them 17 days together, is said to have returned back again, despairing to attain the top of them: covered in the Winter-time with perpetual Snows, in the Summer with as scorching Heats, by the continual lying of the Sun in all parts thereof. The people are of a plain and simple nature, and received the Russian Faith and Empire at one time together, Anno 1518. The chief Town of it is Petzora, or Pechora, at the fall of that River into the Sea, a small Town, but having three Churches in it: the people whereof, though otherwise sufficiently simple as before is said, do in the Summer-time catch Patridge, Ducks, Swans, Geese, and other Fowl, which they salt and lay by till the Winter, and then live upon them. So good a Tutor is the Belly, that the Poet did not unfitly give the titles of Artis Magister and Angeni largior Venter: whereof this may serve for one example.

CONDORA lieth on the North of Petzora, more near the Pole; by consequence is a colder Country, and of worse condition; one half of the Year being continual Day, and the other half a long Night. The people are universally Idolaters, worshipping some Images (or Idols) in the shape of a Man, others in that of Bears, Wolves, &c. which they adorn with the Richest Furs they can get, and hide them in their Caves for fear of the Ruffes; who if they Chance to light upon them, as they hunt those parts for Sables, Foxes and Bevers, take away their Furs, and bestow a greater heat upon them in Fires. The chief Town hereof is Pusskora, over against Nova Zemla, on near the great Lake called Ozera, whence it hath the name; situate in the 68 Degree of Northern Latitude, 50 minutes over.

OB DORA, so called from the River Ob, on both sides of whose Banks it lieth, is the most North-Eastern Province of all those Dominions; won to the Obedience of the Ruffes in the Reign of Theodore the Son of Iohn, Great Duke of Moscow. At what time the people had no Cities, lived in Hoods or Companies; ate the Beasts they took, knew no Corn nor Bread. They were then very good Archers, sharpening their Arrows with Fish-bones; with which bones and their Sinews of the Beasts they loured Furs together for their Clothing; which they wear inward in the Winter, outward in the Summer, covering their Houses with Elk-skins, to which he sent condemned persons, and brought it into the form of a petty Kingdom. But his Successor Boris built Towns, the chief Town hereof, with divers other Towns on both sides of the Vater, not worth naming here. But notwithstanding this Subjection to the Moscovite, they continue still in their old Idolatry, worshipping an ancient Idol in form of an old Woman, holding in Each Arm a Child, and a third at her feet, called by them Zlatu Babu, or the Golden old Wife; to which they offer precious Furs, sacrifice Harts, and therewith do consult touching things to come. But some account this for a fable or a meer mistake.

TUGRIA, or TUHAR, lieth also on the Northern Seas, but more South than either of the others, betwixt Petzora or Pechora, and the Province of Dvina: the longest Day in Summer being not above 21 hours, or not fully that. The people are for the most part Idolaters, and worship the same Images as do those of Obdora: affirmed by some to be the Progenitors of the present Hungarians, who, Coming out of this Country, overran all Pannonia, and there fixed their Dwellings. For proof of which it is affirmed that they spake the old Hungarian Language, not used but in this Country and the North parts of Hungary, betwixt Danubius and Tibiscus which more learned men affirm to be the Targyean, the Language of the Targyes, who anciently possessed that Country in the times of the Romans. But leaving this dispute to another place, certain it is they are subject to the Moscovite, but so poor and miserable a people, that they have few Towns and not many Houses; and so bare of money, that in stead thereof they pay Furs for Tribute to their Emperour.

SEVERIA, or SIBIOR, as the Moscovites call it, lieth in a long Tract on the Banks of the River Ob or Oby, South of Obdora and the rest of the four last Provinces. The Country is very fruitful, and abounding with all things necessary, notwithstanding that there be great Defarts, and some Forests also; but those Forests well stored with black Foxes, Ermines, Sables, and the like wild Beasts, which yield more profit by their rich Furs, than any more fertile Country doth by its Corn and Fruits. In somuch that in the year 1589 there were collected out of this Province only in the way of Tribute for the Emperour, 466 Timber of Sables, (every Timber containing 40 Skins) five Timber of Martens, 180 Casks of black Foxes, (every Cask containing 40 Skins) besides other Commodities. The Woods also do offer good plenty of Honey, and the Plains of Herbage, well watered with the River Sema, which falleth into the Defina, and both together into that of the Nieper, or Borjissenes. There are in it many Towns and Castles, the principal whereof are, 1. Sibir, on the West side of the River Ob, which gives name to the Province. 2. Branki, not far from the great Forest from hence named. 3. Siarodus, 4. Pawoolu, and 5. Cernigie. [Here by mistake the two Provinces of Siberia and Severia (which differ as the farthest North-East and South-West points of Moscowia, between which there is a vast Tract of ground) are confounded, part of the Towns belonging to one, part to the other; as do the two Rivers, the Ob, and the Nieper.]

The people hereof, by reason of their continual Skirmishes with the neighbouring Tartars, are the most Warlike Nations of all the Ruffes: heretofore governed by a Duke or Prince of their own, who at the first acknowledged no Superiour; but afterwards was severally and successively tributary to the Lituanians, the Polesanders, and the Moscovite; and finally, the last Duke, being fallaciously of Treason, was ousted of his Estate by Basilius the Great Duke, who added it to the rest of his Dominions, as it hath continued ever since.

or Severia, a large Province, distant 250 Dutch miles from Mosko; so called from Perno, or Pernia, the chief Town hereof, situate on the River Vishlora, or Vishlora. The second Town of note is called Siewrskysky. The people (as also those of Sibir) are of the Moscovite Religion, and live most by hunting wild Beasts, whose Flesh they eat, and make good Merchandise of their Skins, many of which they pay yearly to the Great Duke in way of Tribute, who makes a good Commodity of them, selling them to the Merchant at excessive rates. They have no Corn of their own growth, nor will they buy any elsewhere; but instead of Bread, eat the flesh of Stags dried and prepared in the Sun; speaking a Language of their own; different from the rest of the Ruffes; and in stead of Horses and Oxen, make use of great Dogs and Stags, whom they train up to draw their Sleds from one place to another. There is good store of Woods amongst them; but they want Cedars, and they have paid dearly for that want. For Iohn Vasilievich, meaning to pick a Quarrel with them, sent to them for certain loads of Cedar-wood whereof he knew there grew none in their Country; and upon word returned that they had no such Wood he fined them at 12500 Rubbles.

REZAN, a great and goodly Province, is situate betwixt the River Tana and that of Occa, the most fruitful Country of all Russia, and (if report be true) of the whole World also: it being credibly affirmed that one grain of Corn doth bring forth six Ears; the Stalks hereof growing so thick, that an Horse can hardly pass through them, or a Quail sic out of them, but with very much difficulty. Here is also great plenty of Fruits, better than are to be found elsewhere in Russia; together with good store of Honey, Fish, Fowl, and other Commodities; besides Ermines, Bevers, and the like, common in these Countries. Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Tulla, famous for the Fountain or Spring head of the River Tana, which riseth near it. 2. Colluga, well garrisoned for fear of the Crim-Tartars. 3. Collura, a Bishop's See; as is also 4. Rezan, the principal of the Province, which it giveth name to, seated upon the Banks of the River Occa. A Country populous and well planted, according to the Great Duke 15000 Boiars, or Gentlemen which serve on horse-back; and betwixt 30 and 40000 Foot.

15. WIATHKA. 16. CASAN.

South-east of Rezan, beyond the banks of the River Kanma, and about 150 Dutch miles from Mosko, lieth the Province called WIATHKA, fenny and barren, but well stored with Fish and Honey, and wild Beasts good plenty. Heretofore subject to the Tartars, and then the receptacle or retreat of all fugitive Servants, here very gladly entertained: but the Tartarians being expelled, it was made Subject by Basilius to the Dukes of Moscow. I do not read of any Towns which should be here, which makes me think that they do still retain so much of the Tartar with them as to live in Hoods and Companies, without any fixt Dwellings; or at the best in scattered houses, not hitherto unto Towns and Villages, except it be the Town of Wiabk it self, built since the subjection of it to the Moscovite, and made a Garrison, to defend these out-parts of this Empire against the Incurfions of the Tartars.

CASAN, a Kingdom formerly of Tartaria deserta, lieth on the South-east of Wiabk, the most civil people of the Tartars, but owing much of that Civility to their conversation with the Moscovite, (though none of the civillest themselves) tilling their Lands and building Houses where they may with safety. For although the Soil herof to be tolerably fruitful and fit for Habitation, yet the Country for the most part is desolate and ill inhabited; partly by reason of some vast Defarts, lying betwixt the Cities of Casim and Afracan; but principally in regard of the Crim-Tartars, who will not suffer the Moscovite to plant it with Colonies of his own people, nor the Natives to live there in quiet, except only in the Western parts, where they are protected by Garrisons. Chief Towns herof are, 1. Casim, upon the River Volga, which gives name to the Kingdom; since the Subjection of this People to the great Duke, and since their Conversion to the Faith, made a Bishop's See. 2. Surick, upon the River Sura, in the middle of the vast Defarts betwixt Casim and Afracan; built by Basilius the great Duke, for a Stage or resting-place for Merchants and Travellers, that there they might repose themselves without fear of the Tartars. The people herof had once a King of their own, as before was said; the last of which named Chelebeck, submitted himself unto Basilius, the great Duke, and became tributary; but afterwards revolting, he was vanquished by John Vasilvich, An. 1553, and his Kingdom thereupon united to the Empire of Russia: the Emperors since that time writing themselves Cesar Casanicki, or King of Casim. And possibly enough it is that Basilius, who first made it tributary, might from hence take the name of Basilius Casim, according to the custom of the ancient Romans.

Under the Government herof are the Czeremissis, a People that live in great Forreits without any Houses, living for the most part of Honey and the flesh of wild Beasts, with the Skins of which they are apparelled. Their Language is different from the rest. They are swift of foot, and very good Archers, carrying their Bows in their hands continually, and practising their Children to timely in it, that they give them nothing to eat (after such an Age) until they can hit a White which is set before them.

ASTRACAN lieth also South East of Casim, more near unto the Caspian Sea; parted from Casim by those Defarts spoken of before, but situate on the same Branch of the River Volga, which, having run a course of 2000 Italian Miles, dischargeth it self into this Sea with no less than 70 Mouths or Channells. It took this name from Afracan the chief Town herof, situate about 20 Italian miles from the fall of one of those 70 Mouths or Channells into the Caspian: by the commodiousness whereof it is one of the best Towns of Trade in all these Dominions, the Armenian Merchants coming hither, and bartering their Silks and Manufactures for the Furs and other natural Commodities of the Russes or Moscovites. A Kingdom formerly, but a Kingdom of less esteem than that of Casim; conquered (together with it) by Basilius the great Duke, An. 1494, and by him made Christian. But afterwards revolting, they were more absolutely subdued by John Vasilvich, who brought into the field against them no fewer than 120000 Horse and 200000 Foot, (enough to over-run a far greater Country) and yet had hardly got the better, but for the terror of his great Ordinance, which the others wanted. Upon that Victory it was made a Member of the Empire of Russia, the Emperour whereof hath since styled himself the King of Afracan.

18. NOFOGOR DIA Inferior.
19. The MORDWITS.

BUT it is now time we return towards Europe, out of which we have wandered up and down in the skirts of Asia tracing out the several Provinces of this Empire, since our first crossing over the Bay of Gravovic, or Saint Nicolas into the Country of Petzora. But in our way we must first take a view of the Dukedom of Novogrod the Lower, so called to difference it from Novogrod (distant the Great) spoken of before, situate almost in the midst betwixt Casim and Mosco, distant from the last 100 Polonian miles, and 60 miles from the Borders of the other; every Polonian mile being reckoned at four Italian. The Country is generally very rich both for Tillage and Pasturage, inferior unto none in all this Estate but Razan and Volodimir only. So called from Novogrod, the chief Town situate at the Confluence of the Occa and Volga; besides which it hath the neighbourhood of a very great Lake, which storeth it plentifully with Fish. A City of great esteem in all this Empire, partly for the great number of Houses, in that not easily equalled by any other; partly for an impregnable Castle cut out of the main Rock with incredible charges in the time of Basilius the great Duke; but principally for a stately and magnificent Temple, built above 600 year ago, in imitation (or emulation, as some say) of the famous Church of S. Sophia in Constantinople. To this Town the Story of the Scythian or Sarmatian Slaves ought, in my mind, to be ascribed; though commonly reported of the other Novogrod, in the West parts of this Empire. My reason is, because it is not likely that the Sarmatians dwelling on the Borders of the Baltick Sea should cross all this Country, to join with the Astuck Scythians, so remote from them in a needless War, which those of this Trade might well do, as near Neighbours to themselves not of the same Nation or Extraction with them; nor is it probable that the Slaves would suffer their Masters to wait all the Country as far as the Baltick Sea, and to increase their strength by the Spoil thereof, before they met them in the Field to give them Battel.

Subject to the Estate herof are the MORDWIT Tartars, lying on the South, betwixt the Volga and the Dona at Tanais, where it becometh to return Westwards towards the Euxine. A people much of the same nature with the Czeremissis, but that they have some Villages and scattered Houses, which the other either want or else care not for. They are idolaters for the most part (and the rest Mahometans) carrying their Idols in their Carts wherever they go; worshipping that Beast all day which they first feed in the morning, and swearing by it for that day, as their chiefest Deity.

AND now again we are in Europe, where the Great Duke hath almost as many Titles as Towns with Territories. Four of them (besides some before) are either situate in the Province of Moscow, or else so intermingled with the Towns thereof, that they may easily be taken (or mistaken) for Members of it. The principal are, WOROTINE, seated on the West side of the River Occa, a distinct Dukedom of it self; so called from Worotin the chief City of it, built upon that River, about 3 Dutch miles from Colliga in the Province of Razan lying on the farther Bank thereof; beautified with a strong Castle, and a pleasant Soil. The 2. Moscow, the next Town of note, remarkable for the Head of the River Occa, which ariseth in the fields adjoining.

TUVER, or OTUVER, as some call it, is a large and goodly Country lying along the Banks of the River Volga; so populous, that it is said to contain 40000 Bouars or Gentlemen fit to serve on horseback, and double that number of the common or inferior sort. It gives the Title of a Duke to the Russian Emperour, and is so called from Tuver the chief Town thereof, and a Bishop's See; affirmed to be a fairer and more stately City than Mosco it self, from which it is distant 36 Dutch miles.

WOLO-

WOLODOMIR is one of the most fruitful Countries in all Russia, not paralleld by many Countries in the World; the Soil here (if all be true which is said of it) yielding such an Increase, that many times the Husbandman hath twenty, and sometimes twenty five, for one. It gives the Title of a Duke to the Russian Emperour, and hath precedence before Moscow in the Style Imperial. So called from Wolodimir, the chief City of it, and a Bishop's See, and that so named from the Founder, who probably was the same Valadimir (one of the first Kings of the Russes) who married Helena the Daughter of Nicephorus Phocas, Emperor of Constantinople. The City is situate 36 Polonian miles on the East of Mosco, anciently the chief Seat and Residence of the Great Duke, and so continued till the time of John, the Son of Daniel, who first translated it to Mosco, that from thence he might more easily confront and oppose the Tartars, with whose Irruptions and Invasions both he and his Predecessors had long been troubled. Under the Government herof is the City of Snjdale, of great esteem, and very well peopled as long as the Royal Seat remained at Wolodimir, betwixt which and Mosco it is seated. After it fell into decay, and being once destroyed by the Tartars, could never since recover its ancient Lustre; having now little to uphold its reputation but a Bishop's See.

DWINA, so called from the chief Town, is situate on the Confluence of two Rivers, Tschud and Sachana, whence it hath the name; Dwine in the Language of that Country, signifying two, as twain doth with us amongst Country-people. A Country of great extent, but exceeding barren, which makes the Villages herof to stand very thin, the Towns (considering the great compals of it) to be very few, and the Inhabitants for the most part to live upon dried Fish and the flesh of wild Beasts, which they have no want of. The chief Commodity is Salt, with which they use to furnish the neighbouring Provinces, and provide such Necessaries for themselves as they stand in need of. Chief Towns herof are, 1. Dwine, spoken of before, situate in the midst of the Province, on the meeting of the said two Rivers, which here united into one Stream take the name of Dwine, or Dwina, the greater; known by that name until its fall into the Northern Ocean in the Bay of Gravovic. 2. Sagan, so called of the River (one of the two which makes the Dwine) upon which it is seated. 3. Colmagro. 4. Pinnegue, two strong Castles.

Unto this Province (because I know not else how to dispose of them) I must reduce these four Towns following: that is to say, 1. Ujing a Bishop's See, situate on the Western side of the River, over against the Town of Dwine, and in a Country to fit furnished with Necessaries, that the people eat dried Fish instead of Bread, but have Salt enough to season it from those of Dwine. 2. Cargopol, a Bishop's See also, on the same side of the River that Dwine is of. 3. S. Nicolas, a well-known Port, and a Bishop's See; situate at the influx of Dwine into the Gulf of Gravovic, or the Bay of S. Nicolas, from hence denominated. A Town much traded since the discovery of the North-east passage by the Englisb, and the removal of theirs and the Dutch Traffick from Novogrod hither; from hence dispersed with more ease and speed into all the parts of this vast Empire. 4. S. Michael, on the Sea-side, commonly called Archangel, a Town of great Trade, by the Englisb especially, who have of late here fixed their Staple, to the great enriching of the place; by reason whereof the Englisb Merchants have not only great Privileges and Immunities (as the Authors of so great a benefit unto this Estate) not granted to others, but the whole Nation have found better and more noble entertainment from them than any others have received. The cause of which was primarily the great opinion which their Emperours had of Q. Elizabeth, who held very good correspondence with them, continued ever since by mutual Embassies on both sides; and secondly, the conformable Behaviour of the Englisb themselves, so acceptable to those Barbarians (both Prince and People) that when John Vasilvich mailed the Hat of another foreign Embassador to his Head, for his too much perverseness, he used our Sir Thomas Smith with all kindreds imaginable. Another time, when the Jesuite Possesine began to persuade with him to approve of the Religion of the Church of Rome; upon the information of the Englisb Embassador, that the Pope was a proud Prelate, and would make Princes kiss his feet, he grew into such a rage, that the Jesuite was afraid he would have beat out his Brains. But to return again to the Port of S. Nicolas; it is so called from an Abbey there built unto that Saint, the Tutelary Saint and local Patron of the Nation. Which said, I will see fail from this Port to the Russian Islands, and see what may be said of them to our present purpose.

24. The RUSSIAN Islands;

THE RUSSIAN Islands are but two, both of them in the Northern or Frozen Ocean, on the Coasts of this Country; that is to say, 1. Sir Hugh Willoughbie's Island, and Nova Zemla; both subject (if to any) to the Knez, or great Duke of Moscow.

1. WILLOUGHBIES ISLAND was so called from Sir Hugh Willoughbie, because he first discovered it, Anno 1553, and was heretobes found frozen to death the next year following. For being employed by the Merchants of London in the time of King Edward the sixth, to find out a new way to Moscow, Cabate and China; he proceeded so far as to this Island; (situate almost opposite to the Bay of S. Nicolas) where the Weather proved so extreme, and the Frosts so vehement, that his Ship was set fast in the Ice, and all his people with himself frozen to death, in which condition they were found the next year after, with an exact description of their Voyage and Fortunes. Notwithstanding which disastrous beginning, the Enterprize was pursued by some noble Adventurers, as Jenkinson, Burroughs, Pet. Jackman, and others of the Englisb Nation, who opened the way as far as to the River Oib, (the East Border of Russia), but by reason of the length of the way, the vast floating Islands of Ice, and perpetual Night for many months together in Winter, could advance no farther.

2. NOVA ZEMLA, situate on the East of Willoughbie's Island, opposite to Finsloe in Candora before mentioned, was first discovered by such Adventurers as followed Willoughbie's Design. Famous for nothing but a race of short-statured men, not above four foot high, a degree above the height of Pigmies; not yet so far discovered as to know any thing thereof, but by the relation of the Russes, who affirm the Inhabitants to have neither Religion, nor Civility, nor the Precepts of any Law; but that they worshipped the Sun, Moon, and Northern Star, to which they offer an yearly Sacrifice of their Deer; that the Island is woody, desert, and not easy for travel, having in it neither green Bough nor Grass, yet harbouring great force of Bears, and such voracious and dangerous Beasts. Found experimentally true by William Barrenvelt and his Associates, employed by the Hollanders for this Diktovery, Amo 1994, and 1996, in which last year, after many dreadful Combats with huge flakes of Ice, they were forced to winter in this Iland, where they built an Houfe, as well to preserve themselves from being buried in Snow, as from being devoured by the Bears. (some of them 13 foot in length) which, with the loss of two of their company devoured by those savage creatures, they at last effected; some of them coming home in safety the October following. And though they seemed to give some hope that a way might be found un to Cathai on the North of this Iland (themselves having gone as far North as the 81. Degree of Latitude, within 9 of the Pole) yet it is generally conceived that the undertaking is unprofitable, the success impossible.

And so likewise, to return to the Story of Russia, called anciently by the name of Sarmatia Europæa, but known no farther Northwards than the Head of Tanis. And for Sarmatia Europæa, it was bounded in the time of Ptolemy by the Baltick Sea and some Terra Incognita on the North, the Taraxes Metanasis (now Transylvania and the Upper Hungary) upon the South, the River Vistula, or Wesell, which divided it from Germany, upon the West, and the Tanis upon the East. Beyond that, all along the Banks of the Euxine Sea to the Mare Caspium, and as far North as any Conqueror had gone, it was called Sarmatia Asiatica: the Countries farther Eastward being then called Syberia. By which account, as Russia, containeth not all Sarmatia Europæa, of which Prussia and the rest of the incorporate Provinces of Poland was for a part; so neither is it totally comprehended in it, extending beyond Tanis into Asiatica. The ancient Inhabitants, called by a general name Sarmatae, by the Greeks Sarmatæ, were subdivided, for so much of this part of it was then made known, into the Agathyrsi, Rubeni, Pagiritæ, dwelling in the North; the Osis, Alanni, Roxolani, &c. dwelling in the South. Amongst many other barbarous Nations, these were some of the principal. And from these Roxolani, as the principal of all the rest, Matthias à Michon, a learned Polander, doth derive the Original of the Rosses. (which we now call the Russians) descended herein by the more learned Bohacrus, who provehth out of ancient Authors, that the Inhabitants of Taurica Cherfoneus (from which the passage into this Country is both short and easie) have been formerly called Rhos, Tauricus or Pòs gætiobus, Taurus vocari gentes Rhos, as he saith from Tetxez. Which Ros, or Rhos, first mingling with the Alani, a Sarmation People, might get the name of Roxolani; and afterwards possiding the more Northern Countries, or mingling with the Rossi, of Mount Taurus (from whom those of Taurica descended) in their enterprizes on Constantinople and the parts adjoining, return to their old name of Rossi. The Rossi, or Rossiani, were then the first Lords of this Country generally, the Moscovites possessors of a Province only; so called from the Moschi, spoken of by Lucian in his Pharsalia, and placed by Pliny near the head of the River Phasis, which rising from the Armenian Mountains, falls into the Euxine. Derived no doubt from Mosch, (or Moschas as the Ancients called him) the Son of Taphet, placed originally in the North and North-east of Syria, on the Confines of Calchis and Armenia; where Phry, as before is said, hath fixed the Moschi, and where there is a long Chain of Hills, which most of the old Writers call Montes Mosci. But to return unto the Rossi, we hear not of them by this name till the time of Michael the third, Emperor of Constantinople; in whose Reign they infested the Euxine Sea, and had the boldness to attempt the Imperial City, Ama 864; said by Cædrenus and some other of the Eastern Writers to be a People of Mount Taurus:

(next neighbours to Mosch or the Moschi. Failing in their attempt upon Constantinople, and not willing to go home again, they spread themselves, with their Confederates and Associates in this Expedition, upon the North-west Banks of the Euxine Sea; enlarging their bounds Northwards with less opposition than they were likely to have done on the Southern parts: Constantinople being once again in vain attempted in the Reigns of Constantine the 7th and Hermicus Auexep. Converted to the Christian Faith, or growing into better terms with the Eastern Emperors, Helen, Daughter of Nicephorus Phocas, is married to Valodimir one of their Kings. From that time forwards they turned their Forces on the Polanders and their weaker neighbours; save that, provoked by the death of one of their Country, slain accidentally at Constantinople in a private Quarrel, they made another fruitless Journey against that City, in the time of Michael Calaphates. Enlarging their Estate to the West and South, they became Masters of a great part of Sarmatia Europæa, Lithuania, Podolia, Russia Nigra, and other Provinces, now subject to the Crown of Poland, being then parts of their Estate. Anno 1240 the Tatars, under the Conduct of Batib, or Batay, Son of Occatan Chan, broke in upon them and subdued them: the Country before this entire, under one sole King, being broken afterwards into divers petty and inferior Governments, according to the will and pleasure of the insolent Victors. The principal of these (descended from the former Kings) were Lords of Tolodimir, Mosco, and some other Cities; held by them with no other Title than that of Lords of Moscow, and for that Tributary to the Tartars as were all the rest. Their Seat was originally at Tolodimir, till the time that Johan, the Son of Doulet, the fifth Lord of the Russies, defended of the old Regal Line, taking a good liking of the River and Town of Mosco, repaired the Town, being before but mean and ordinary, and made it the chief Seat of his Principality. From whence the residue of the Russies, united in succeeding times unto this Estate by Marriages, Fraud and Conquest, had the name of Moscovites. But notwithstanding this increase of their power and Empire, the Tatars held them for their Inaffinity, and tyrannized upon the Country with a barbarous Violence. Under which Thralldom they long groaned, till the Tartarians, being divided amongst themselves, and grown less terrible to their Neighbours, were outed of their Power and Command here by the valour of Johan, son of Basilus the second, who thereupon changed the Title of Lord into that of Duke and after into that of Great Duke as his Fortune thrived. Yet not so great, but that he was contented to be an Homager of the Tatars: it being finally agreed on at the end of their Wars, that the Tatars should relinquish all their Holds in the Country; and on the other side, that once every year, within the Castle of Mosco, the Great Duke, standing on foot, should feed the Horle of the Crim-Tartar with Oats out of his own Cap. This Homage was by Basilus changed into a Tribute of Furs; which being also denied by his Successors, (as they grew in power) occasioned the long Wars betwixt the Nations; in which always pressing on thereby sudden Inroads, sometimes by Armies of no less than 200000 fighting men. But notwithstanding all their Power, and the Friendship of the Turk to boot, the Moscovite is not only able to assert his Sovereignty, but hath also wrested from them many good- ly Provinces.

As for the Princes of this Country, I shall not trouble myself (as I fee some do) in tracing a Succession of them as far as from the times of Augustus Caesar; when neither the Raffi nor the Moschi had here any footing. We will therefore go no higher than the time of George, whose Daughter Anne I find to have been married married to Henry the first of France. From whom in a direct Line descended another George, with whom we do intend to begin our Catalogue, as being the last King of the Russ before the coming of the Tartars. He, willingly yielding to the Storm, waded the Title of King continued only with the Title of Lord, as more safe for him, and less invidious to the Tartars. The fifth from whom, called Iohn, (as before is said) having removed his Seat to Mosco, took to himself the Title of Lord of Mosco, the chief seat of that Power and Sovereignty, which he transmitted afterwards to his Posterity; affecting for that cause the Title of Duke of Moscow (though all the conquered Towns and Territories have their place also in his Style) as much as that of Emperor of Russia; which some of them have: as thus all since the time of Basilius, who styled himself Basilius, by the Grace of God, Emperor and Lord of Russia, Great Duke of Volodimir, Moscow, Novogrod the great, Pleskov, Smolensk, Tver, Jugra, Viathka, Bulgar, &c. Lord and Great Prince of the lower Novogrod, Cernigov, Rozan, Volodga, Plov, Biele, Rosl, Jurjandla, Poltovsk, Bielozersk, Adore, Obdora, Condora, &c. King of Caslar and Astracan. But leaving them to their swelling and voluminous Title, (little inferior unto that of the Kings of Spain) let us next look on the Succession from the time afore said of

The Great Dukes of MOSCOWIE.

1. John, the first Great Duke, who shook off the Tartarian Bondage.
2. Basilius Cæsar, won the Provinces of Severia, Rosovia, and Smolensk, with the Realms of African and Cafan.
3. John Basilus, conquered Livonia and Lithuania. Both which his Successor.
- 1548 4. John Basilides, or Wassilius, lost in his age; though in his youth he had subdued the Moychacian Tatars to his Empire, and vanquished Selim Emperour of the Turks, Anno 1569. With this King the English first began to confederate.
- 1583 5. Thorowst Johannisides, the last of the old Royal Line of Moscowie.
- 1591 6. Kaïs Theodoris, Brother to the Wife of the last Great Duke, partly by the last Will of his Predecessor, partly by practising with the people, obtained the Empire, but being an unmerciful Tyrant, was dispossessed by the Polanders coming in favour of one
- 1605 7. Demetrius, pretending himself to be the Son of John Wassilius, (and generally believed to be so) preferred in a Monastery from the Tyranny of Bohis, in hatred of whom he was brought in by the Polander; by whose aid he overcame the Tyrant, and rooted out his Family, and was with great joy crowned Emperor in the City of Mosco. But the Russian Lords declining to have a Prince imposed on them from Poland, rose in Arms against him, and at last vanquished and slew him in open Field: his Wife, a noble Polonian Lady, being sent poorly home, and the Polander's beaten out of the Country.

- 1606 8. Baſti Tuſſanwicz, firnamed Snizkius, the chief of the Conſpirators, was by the reſt of his Faction choſen Knez, or Emperour; and held the State with great Trouble till the year 1610, when
- 1610 9. Demetrius II. another pretender to the State as the ſon of Iohn Waſilwicz alſo, in oppoſition unto Snizkius, ſet up by a ſtronger Faction, gave occaſion to the Poles to work upon this diſtemper, by whom Snizkius was taken Priſoner, Demetrius ſlain, Smolens and other great Towns ſubdued, and Vladislaus, Prince of Poland, recommended to the Ruſſians to be choſen Emperour. But the Ruſſes, loth to fall under the power of the Poles; and weary of their own Conſuſions, made choice at laſt of
- 1613 10. Michael Fedorowicz, Son of Theodore the Patriarch of Moſco, who at laſt ſetled this vaſt Empire, and managed it in a more conſtant way of Peace with the Turks, Tartar Poloniſh, and Sweediſh, than any of his Predeceſſors had done before him.
- 1646 11. Alexius Michaelwicz (or the Son of Michael) ſucceeded his Father in the Empire; troubled at firſt with ſome Diſtempers in that State, (as in all other Countries about that time) but now quietly ſetled, Anno 1643.

The Formalities with which these great Emperors are invested or fettered in the Throne are not many nor stately, such as they be; he that desires you out of the History of the Life of Yohannes Baptista, written in Latine by Karlus Oederbomus. On the 2. of June, Anno 1533, Theodo Yohannes went towards the Temple of S. Michael, being the principal Church in Mofco; the Streets all covered with Flowers, the Doors of the Citizens crowned with Garlands, the Air echoing with the noise of Flutes and Trumpets, and the people flocking to behold their Prince, that had not the Gaue with naked Swords forced a passage through them, it had been impossible for him to have gone on. Being now come to the Church-door, the Lords of the Country (Kozes they there call them) went out to meet him; the Archbishop of Mofco, clad in his Pontificalibus, when he came into the Church, unbared him. The Pavement of the Church was hidden with Tapestry, and the Stalls adorned with costly Hangings. The Great Duke fate down in his Throne, being attired in a garment of Silke, buttoned down with Golden Buttons: on his Head he wore a Purple Cap spangled with rich Jewels, and on his Fingers abundance of Rings. Being thus feared, the Patriarch made a Prayer to God to bless him, his People, and his Government: which was seconded by the joyful Shouts and Acclamations of his Subjects; amongst whom no small force of Silver-money was flung by the Treasurer, and so they returned to the Palace.

The Government of this Country is meerly Tyrannical, the Emperour being absolute Lord of the Lives, Lands and Goods of all his Subjects : all of them, the noble as well as the base, subscribing themselves in their Petitions to him by the name of Kelovity, that is, Slaves. Whereupon Maibom, a Turkish Bashaw, was used to say, that his Master and the Muscovites were the two most absolute Princes in all the World. First for their Goods ; when any Embassador returns home, the Great Duke takes any Embassadors which he hath received, giving from him all the Presents which he hath received, giving him perhaps some small Reward, perhaps none at all : and as for Lands, they pass not from Father to Son, but as he confirms it. But more particularly, (besides the case of Permia spoken of before) Tohn Vasilvich sent a Command to Mosco, to provide a Coal-pack of live Fleas for a Medicine : and when the Citizens returned answer that it was impossible, he fined them at 700 Rubbles for their Disobedience. Another time he laid a Multitude of 300000 Rubbles upon his Nobility, because he had no good Sport in his Hunting : which they again extorted from the common people ; and under colour of want, commanded from some Bishops and Monasteries the sum of 100000 Rubbles, from some 50000, more or less from others, according to their Revenues. And it is usual with the best of them to cause the Boiars (or Gentlemen which serve on horse-back) to pretend themselves robbed, that he may send unto the City to find out the Felon, and, on a Non est invenius, fine them at discretion, sometimes 8000, sometimes 10000, and sometimes 20000 Rubbles. Then for their Lives, there is a Story, that Vasilvich having found that one of his Secretaries had received a Goose stuffed full of Silver for a Bribe, caused him to be brought into the Market-place of Mosco, where without any legal Trial, he commanded the Executioner first to cut off his Legs about the Shins, and then his Arms about the Elbows, (fill asking the miserable man how he liked Goose-flesh) and in the end to cut off his Head ; in similitude of a Goose ready for the Spit. And that they may the better preserve this Power, the Great Dukes sell themselves unto the people but in Apparel of ineffable value, joyning the Ornaments of a Bishop unto the Majesty of a King, by wearing a Mitre on their Heads shining with Diamonds and rich Stones : and when they wear it not on their Heads, they place it before the Chair of State, (over which are the Images of Christ and the Blessed Virgin) holding in their hands a most rich and all their Fingers full of Rings. And Crozier-Staff, and all their Entertainments the great upon solemn Festivals with Cupboards of Plate of infinite value, and filled with men clothed with Cloth of Gold to the very foot : all of them seeming to be men of the chief Nobility, but many times being no other than the gravest and portliest Citizens of Mosco, richly apparelled for the time out of the Emperor's Wardrobe ; which to such as do not understand the Fraud, look like so many Princes, and cause no small wonder at his Magnificence. So that the people seeing him in such Royal state, and knowing no more than what they are taught at home, reverence him as Slaves, not Subjects, and look upon him rather as a God than a King.

Having to absolute a Command on their Lives and Goods, it will be easily supposed that he may raise what Forces and amass what Treasures he hath a mind to. First, for his Forces, it is said that he is able to raise 300000 Horse, if more than be : and that he may come near that number it is more than probable, in that Tohn Vasilvich, in his War against those of Afracan, had actually 120000 Horse ; and that a great part of the Country is in the hands of the Boiars, bound by their Tenure to serve with Horse whenever he please ; and by him enfeoffed with Lands, sent by the Emperor, and by those of these Lands are to find (during pleasure only) who for these Lands are to find 65000 Horse with all things necessary for the Wars, and those in a continual readiness fit for present Action. Then for such Horse as he himself doth keep in continual pay, there are no fewer than 25000 which attend him as a Guard to his person, all of them well-experienced men and fit for Service : which added to the 65000 spoken of before, make up a standing Body of 90000. Had he Foot enfeoffable unto this proportion of Horse, there were no dealing with him ; but therein his Militia is defective : Vasilvich to his great Army of 120000 Horse having but 20000 Foot ; the Foot-men which he hath in continual pay amounting to 12000 only, far short of such a standing Body of Horse as before we spoke of. And this defect hath been the reason why the Polanders with far less Armies have prevailed against them : the Great Duke not being able with all his power to hinder King Stephen of Poland from taking Vilocolne, or besieging Pleskow (though his Army was not above 60000 in both Horse and Foot) for want of standing Bands of Foot to make good his ground. Generally both Horse and Foot are very obedient to their Captains and Superior Officers : patiently enduring all Discomforts of Cold, Rain, and Hunger ; (in that regard fitter to keep a Fortress than serve in Field) and so regardless of their Lives in the day of Battle, that they will rather lose them than either yield themselves Prisoners or demand Quarter.

For his Revenues, they may be what he will himself, considering (besides his extraordinary power of oppressing his Subjects before mentioned) the many ordinary ways he hath of amassing Treasure : viz. the Forfeiting of home-bred Commodities, and ingrossing the foreign ; selling them at what price he list, and hindering all men else from Trade till his own be sold ; provision of Rent-corn and Victual, raised in some years to 200000 Rubbles, Rent-wood and Hay to 300000, Poll-money to 400000, Customs on Merchandise to 800000. By which and other means of collecting Monies, and the Domain of his Crown, though he raise vast Sums : yet it is thought that, his Household-charges being deducted, there remain not towards all other Expences three millions of Rubbles ; every Rubble being as much as an English Mark.

The Arms are Sable, a Portal open of two Leaves and as many Degrees Or.

And so much for RUSSIA.

OF POLAND.

POLAND is bounded on the East with Russia and the Crim-Tartar, from whom it is parted by the River Borysbene ; on the West with Germany, on the North with the Baltick Sea and some part of Russia, on the South with the Carpathian Mountains, which divide it from Hungary, Transylvania and Moldavia.

It is an aggregate Body, consisting of many distinct Provinces united into one Estate, of which Poland, being the predominant, hath given name to the rest, called altogether the Realm of Poland : and that so named from Pole, which in the Slavonian Language (the common Language of the Country) signifies plain ; because it is but little swelled with Hills. It is of Figure round, in compass 2600 miles, situate under the eighth and twelfth Climates ; so that the longest Day in the Southern part is but 16 hours, and about 18 hours in the parts most North.

This Country is plain, but full of Woods, which serve to rectify the Air, being naturally so cold that they have neither Wine nor Grapes ; instead whereof they use that kind of Drink called Ale, in former times the usual Beverage of England and this Country only. Barley they have, and Pulse in such abundant measure, that no small quantities of each are transported yearly : nor yield they any thing at all to Denmark or Hungary for their plenty of Cattel. But of this more in our description of the several Provinces.

The People are very industrious, and studious of all Languages, especially of the Latine ; to which they are so devoted, that there is scarce a mean man who is not able in some measure to express himself in it. According to their abilities they are rather prodigal than truly liberal ; and good Souldiers generally. The Peasants live in miserable Servitude unto their Lords ; the Lords in such Equality of estate amongst themselves that none of them (excepting the greater Princes) exceedeth 25000 Ducats of yearly Rent. Proud in their Garb, costly in their Apparel, impatient in their Humours, and delicate in Diet. These last Conditions are common to the Women also, who are for the most part indifferently fair, and rather witty than well spoken. But this, being the peculiar Character of the Polander properly so called, is not perhaps communicable to the People of the rest of the Provinces, whom we shall speak of severally in their proper places.

The Christian Faith was first planted in this Kingdom at several times and by several persons, according to the different parts of which it consisteth : in Poland specially so called in the time of their Prince Mieslav, Son of Nemomysslav, Anno 963 ; in Livonia, by the Preaching of one Meinardus, Anno 1200, or thereabouts, in Lithuania, not until the year 1386, at the admission of Yagello to the Crown of Poland, and then done (as some say) by Thomas of Walden (or Waldensis) an English Friar ; in Samogitia and Vithinia, at the same time with Lithuania ; in the rest at other times and on other occasions : yet so that in many places of it Idolatry was never totally rooted out, the seeds and practice whereof in many Points still remain amongst them. Corrupted by the Superstitions of the Church of Rome, a Reformation was endeavoured at such a time as Tohn Hus flourished in Bohemia, the next neighbouring Kingdom : but by the rigour of Vladislaus the sixth, then King thereof, assisted by his Bishops and Noblemen, it was at that time hindered. Afterwards in the time of Luther, some who had studied at Leipsick, and Wittenberg (Universities of Saxony) brought his Opinions home with them into the Province of Poland ; as some Dutch Merchants (with the rest of their Commodities) did into Danzick, the chief Town of Pomerellia, Anno 1525 : from whence it spread it self over most part of that Country. According as it was favoured or disliked by the Palatines, Chastellans and other great men of the Realm, so was its entertainment either good or bad : the Gracians in the mean time taking opportunity to win some parts of it to their side, and confirm others in it, who, being originally Members of the Church of Greece, because originally converted by the Bishops thereof, did still continue in Conformity and Obedience to it. In the end, by reason of the over-great Liberty of the Nobility and People, and want of Power in the King to controule their doings, every man took up what Religion he best liked ; some following the Augustine Confession, others the Helvetian, others adhering as tenaciously to the Church of Rome ; and some inclining to new Sects, or rather to old Heresies under new Disguises, have brought in such a Miscellaneity of Babel of Religions into this Estate, (Jesuites, Lutherans, Calvinists, Socinians, Arrians, Anabaptists, and indeed what not ? being here all tolerated) that at last it grew into a by-word, that If any man had lost his Religion, he might find it in Poland, or else believe it to be vanished. A by-word afterwards applied unto Amsterdam, communicable since unto other places, Libertas Proprietatis, or the Liberty of Propriety, being now as much allowed of in some parts of Christendom, as Libertas opinandi was in Rome under Nero's Government, ubi & sentire quae velis, & quae sentias loqui liceat, when as a man might think as he listed of the publick, and speak what he thought. But whether this be such a variety temporum Felicis, such a Felicity of these our Times, as Tacitus conceived the time to be of those, future times will shew.

But to return again to Poland : notwithstanding this mixture of Religions, yet that most publicly allowed and countenanced is the Religion authorized by the Church of Rome, asserted here by the Zeal of the Kings unto that Cause, and the great Power of the Bishop's, who seeing how those of their Order have sped in Germany and other places, under colour of Reformation of some things amiss, have hitherto upheld the Ecclesiastical Estate in the same form they found it. The Government of the Church is as formerly by 3 Archbishops and 19 Bishops, who challenge a Jurisdiction over all the Kingdom, but exercise it upon those only who submit unto them : those who embrace the Doctrines of Luther or Calvin following the Forms of Government by them established ; as others do some new ones of their own devising. And for those Provinces and people which lie towards Greece, or were parts heretofore of the Russian Empire, and still hold a Communion with those Churches, they have Archbishops and Bishops of their own Religion; that is to say, the Archbishops of Vilna and Lemberg, the Bishops of Polozco, Lutsk, Pinsk, Palodimir, Presnisl, and Kiovla. Yet amongst all these different Churches and forms of Government there is this Conformity, that whenever the Gospel is read openly in the Congregation, the Nobility and Gentry use to draw their Swords, (according to an ancient Custom which they had among them) signifying their readiness to defend in against all Opposers. Which reason doubtless gave beginning to the standing up at the Creed and Gospel in the Primitive times, retained still in the Church of England, whereby we do declare how prepared and resolute we are to defend the same: though some of late, holding it for a Relique of Popery, with greater nicety than wisdom, have refused to do it.

Principal Commanders of this Country in the Art of War were, 1. Casimir the third, the great Establisher of this Kingdom after long Difficulties. 2. Tagello, or Vladislav the first; who first brought down the Pride of the Dutch Knights in a famous Victory. 3. Casimir the 4. the fortunate Conqueror of the Knights of Prussia, brought by him under the Command of the Kings of Poland. 4. Sigismund the first, by whose Valour and good fortune the Dutch Prussians were totally suppressed, and the greatest part of Prussia for ever added to that Crown. 5. Sigismund the second, surnamed Augustus, fortunate in his Wars against most of them of Livonia, by him united to this Kingdom, Of most special note for learning, Hesius a Divine of the Papal Party, whose great Abilities advanced him to the fate of a Cardinal. 2. Crollius, and 3. Volkelius, of the contrary Party in Religion, men of great parts, but Heterodox and unfound Opinions. 4. Cromerus, the Historian. 5. Keckerman, the Professor at Danzik or Dantzick; a man of universal Studies, but of greater industry than exactness.

Chief Rivers of this Kingdom are, 1. Vistula or the Weyssel, the ancient Boundary betwixt Germany and Sarmatia Europaea; which, rising in the Carpathian Mountains passeth by Cracovia, the chief City of Poland, and dividing Prussia from Pomerellia, falleth into the Baltick Sea, not far from Dantzick and is navigable for the space of 400 miles, of old called Vaudisla. 2. Warta, which runneth through the lesser Poland. 3. Dniester, the Iss, watering Livonia; and 4. Doroshenes, or the Nieper, passing through Podolia: both spoken of before, when we were in Russia. 5. Nieper, by Ptolemy called Tyras, which falleth into the Exzine Sea, having first parted Podolia from Moldavia. 6. Jugra, by some called the lesser Tanais, arising in Lithuania, and falling into the more noted Tanais which is now called Dan. Of less note there are, 1. Reubeh, or Reubon. 2. Chironus, now called Pregel. 3. Boz; said by some to be the Hypanis of the Ancients. 4. Ademel. 5. Niemem, the Alderander of the Northern parts. 6. Windaw, a Lithonian River falling into the Baltick. Mountains of note here are not many; the Countries for the most part being plain and champaign, and those which be are rather Boundaries betwixt this and some other Kingdom, than proper unto this alone. the chief of which are those called Sarmatici dividing Germany from Sarmatia Europaea; by Solius named Sewo, by Ptolemy the Carpathian Mountains; the Boundary at this time betwixt Poland and Hungary, of which more anon.

The common Mires and Landmarks being thus laid down, we will next take a view of those several Provinces of which this Kingdom doth consist, being eleven in number; that is to say, 1. Livonia, 2. Samogitia, 3. Lithuania, 4. Poltinia, 5. Podolia, 6. Russia nigra,

7. Mosovia, 8. Podlussia, 9. Prussia, 10. Pomerellia; and 11. Poland specially so called: all of them (except the proper Poland) within Sarmatia Europaea.

I. LIVONIA.

LIVONIA, or LIEFLAND, is bounded on the East with the Empire of Russia, on the West with the Baltick Sea, on the North with the Gulf or Bay of Finland, on the South with Samogitia and Lithuania; extended in length along the Shore of the Baltick for the space of 125 Dutch, or 500 Italian miles, and 40 Dutch, or 160 Italian miles in breadth: and called thus perhaps from the Levoni, a people of Germany, inhabiting not far from the River Vistula.

The Country is for the most part plain, without any Mountains; furnished with Corn and Fruits in so great abundance, that they send part thereof into other Countries: and yet there is much Ground untillied in it, by reason of the Bogs and Marshes, which are very frequent. Here is also store of Wax, Honey and Pitch, but they have neither Oyl nor Vine: the want of which last is supplied by Meech. Of tame Beasts fit for man's service they are well provided; as also such whose Skins are of more value with the Merchants than their Flesh at the Market; as Ermins, Sables, Castors, and others of that kind, besides good store of Game for Hunting, the Country having in it many large VVoods, parts of the Herzoyan. And as for the Rivers, there are few Countries which have more; it being watered by the Windaw, the Beck, the Divine, the Reubon, all of them falling into the Baltick; many great Lakes, whereof the chief is that of Bybays, 45 miles long, and full of Fish.

The people are much given to Gluttony and Drunkenness, especially in rich mens houses, where it is to be had: for the Peasants live in want, though meer Slaves to their Tyrannical Landlords, who spend in Riot and excess what they get by Drudgery: and when at any time the poor VVretch leaves his Landlord to mend his condition with some other, the Lord if he can overtake him, will cut his Foot, to make him sure for the future. They are mixture of many Nations: as the Esfones, which are the natural Inhabitants; (derived from the Esfis, a Dutch people, spoken of by Ptolemy) of which Nation are almost all the Peasants; the Moscovites, Swedes, Danes, Dutch and Polanders, intermingled with them, coming in upon several Conquests, and planting themselves in the best parts of it, in which they still Lord it over the Native, but the Dutch especially, for long time Masters of the whole.

The Christian Faith was first here planted by Meinardus of Lubeck, employed herein in the time of Frederick the first; at the persuasion of some Dutch Merchants who traded hither, by the Archbishop of Breme, by whom he was made the first Bishop of the Livonians. The Church hereof at this time is governed by the Archbishop of Riga, the Bishops of Dirpt, Alfisa, Ofel, Carland, and Rivallia, in those parts which remain subject to the Polander, the Religion of the Church of Rome is only countenanced. Such part of it as encroaches the Swedes or Danes are for the most part of the Lutheran Profession, planted with Colonies of that People. But the Esfones, or original Inhabitants, as they have a Language, so they have a Religion by themselves also, mixt of the Christian and the Pagan. Extremely well affected unto their Priests, to whom they present Saff; Candles and Fruits, when they come to them for their Blessings; great lovers of Confession, eatmeers of Holy water, and diligent frequenters of their Churches; but so extremely ignorant in all Points of Religion, that there is hardly one in a Village that can say his Pater Noster. When they bury any of their dead every one drinketh an Health to him, and powreth his part upon him, when his turn comes to drink; putting into the Grave with him an Hatchet, Wine, Meat, and a little Money for his Voyage. And in some places they are wholly idolatrous, (if not converted very lately by the care of the Jesuites) some of them worshipping the Sun, others Stocks and Stones, and some Serpents also. The Language of the Country is for the most part the High Dutch, being the Language of those Nations who first Lored over them; the Esfones having generally a peculiar Language, which none of the others understand.

It was divided formerly into the Provinces of Carland, Efland, Semigall, Virland, Harland, and Lettenland; but these six, since the Conquest of it by the Polanders, are reduced to three, Harland and Virland being united unto Efland, and Semigallia unto Carland.

Chief places in Efland are, 1. Rivallia, or Revel, a Bishop's See, and a well traded Port, situate on the Gulf of Finland; a Town belonging to the Swedes, the keeping whereof, and of Wiborg on the Borders of Moscovy, stand him yearly in 100000 Dollars. 2. Habsley, or Habsfel, (Alfia in Latine) is a Bishop's See; and 3. Pernaw, a well-fortified place, belonging to the Swedish side, ever since the Conquest of these parts of the Country by John the second. Places of great importance to the Crown of Sweden, as also other peices of this nature are, which, standing in an Enemies Country, not only do defend our own, but offend our Adversaries. For they are not only Doors, to open a farther passage into their Territories, whenever we shall see occasion; but whilst the Enemy is besieging thereof, or otherwise bulked in recovering them into his power, our own State is preferred in quiet, and time may yield fit opportunity to relieve them if they be distressed, without waiting of any part of our proper Countries. Of which nature was Calais when it was in the hands of the English; the Garrisons which the Spaniards and Portuguezes have in Africk and India: the Charge of keeping them being sufficiently defrayed (if the charge prove greater than the income, as sometimes it doth) by the advantages they give unto him which hath them. 4. Velin, a strong Town, fortified with an impregnable Cattle, betrayed by the Dutch Garrison at that time in it, together with William of Eustenburg, the Great Master into the hands of John Basilius the Great Duke of Moscovy, who fill holds it. 5. Derps, or Derbern, (in Latine Tupanum) a Bishop's See, situate on the Beck, or Embeck, betwixt two Lakes, in the midst of the Province, and taken at the same time by the Moscovites, who, transporting the Livonians into other places, planted these parts with Colonies of his own people. 6. Tervelf, a Cattle of great strength, taken then also by the Russies, but being recovered by the Polander, was blown up with Gunpowder, that it might no more come into the hand of the Enemy. Hitherto nothing of this Country which belongs to the Polanders; these that follow do: that is to say, 7. Borchholm, the Seat and residence of the Bishop of Rivallia, since the taking of that Town by the Swedes. 8. Wesenberg, incommoediously faced betwixt two neighbours, Narva and Rivallia; but serving very well to prohibit the Incursions of those Garrisons farther into the Country. 9. Wernbeck, in that part of Efland, which is called Odapp; and 10. Wesselsien, in that part thereof which is named Pervia.

In LETTE N L A N D, lying in the midst betwixt Efland, and Carland, the places of most note are, 1. Riga, (the people call it Rig) seated on the Mouth of the River Divina, falling there into the Baltick first built & planted at the charges of the Merchants of Breme; after that the Archbishop's See, the ordinary Residence of the Great Master, and the chief City of the whole Province of Livonia. A Town well fortified, according to the modern Rules of fortification, with a strong Wall, large Barlarks, double Ditches, Palisadoes, and well provided, of all manner of Ammunition: a famous Empory, of great resort for foreign Merchants, who carry hence, Pitch, Wax, Hemp, Flax, and such other Commodities. They are governed (notwithstanding their Subjection to the King of Poland) by their own Laws, and such stout defenders of their Liberties, that they will by no means admit of any Foreigner to have Command of the City, obedient in all other things to the will of that King. 2. Dummbud, an impregnable Fortrefs, two Dutch miles from Riga, well garrisoned by the Polanders, who here take Toll of all foreign Merchants. 3. Blacks, a Garrison of the King's betwixt Riga and Dummbud, where the Merchants are tolled over again. 4. Wenden, more within the Land, on the River Freider. 5. Wolmar, upon the same River. 6. Kakenhauze, a strong Town on the Banks of the Divina. This Country belongs wholly to the King of Poland, and stood firm for him in the VVar made by Charles Duke of Sunderman against his Nephew Sigismund King of Poland and Sweden, when almost all Efland had submitted to him.

CORLAND, the third and last member of this Division, containing Semigall also, lieth South of Lettenland, and North of Samogitia and Lithuania: an entire Dukedom of it self, but hidden under the Sovereignty and Homage of the Kings of Poland. Places of most importance in it are, 1. Cosdow, 2. Goldingen, 3. Kias, (the Dutch call it Windaw) the Seat of the Great Master of the Tennick Order in time past; now most frequented as the place of parliament or general Assembly for Affairs which concern the publick. 4. Dabins, 5. Grubbin, on the Sea-side but of no Trade at all. 6. Hafesport. And then in Semigall, 7. Mitaw, the Court and Residence of the Dukes of Carland. 8. Selwerg, 9. Bejfinborg, 10. Doletus. There is no Town in all this Dukedom in any Trading, though lying for a great space all along the Baltick; because none of them are furnished with commodious Havens. A Dukedom first begun in the person of Guthardus Keler, of one of the noble Families of Denmark; the last Great Master of the Dutch Knights in this Country, who in the year 1562 surrendering his Order, and the whole possession of Livonia to Sigismund Augustus K. of Poland, received back again for him, and his Heirs for ever the Dukedom of Carland and Semigall, to be held by them of that Crown; the Nobility of these Countries doing then presently their Homage and Allegiance to him as their Hereditary Prince. Since which time the Princes of this House have continued Feudataries unto Poland, but not reckoned as parts or members of the Body thereof; not coming to the Diets, nor liable to the publick Charges, nor having any thing to do in the King's Election: in a word, rather honourable Neighbours of the King's of Poland, than Subjects to them. The present Duke is like to be much increased in Estate and Power, if the now Marquis of Brandenburg (whose Sister is his Mother) should depart without Issue. For by that means there will be added to this House the great Dukedom of Prussia, those of Cleve and Gulick, together with such other Countries possessed now by that Marquis as he holds by descent from the Heirs-general of those Dukedoms: which makes him cast an eye already upon those Estates.

There belong also to Livonia some few Islands situate in the Baltick Sea; that is to say, 1. Offisa, 2. Dachden, 3. Mona, 4. Wormfe, 5. Wangen, and 6. Keyn. Of which the four last do belong to the King of Poland, Dachden to the King of Swedish, and Offisa, or Ofel, to the Danet. This last is the chief of all the fix, distant from the main Land of Livonia 12 Duch miles; 14 of the same miles in length, half as much in breadth: the chief Towns herof being 1. Ostia, a Bishop's See, which gives name to the Island. 2. Sonneburg. The Island was made subject to the Dane by Magnus, Brother of Frederick, the second King of Denmark; who, being chosen Admirator of the Bishoprick of Derpt in Estland, made himself Master of this Island and some other pieces, which, dying without issue, he bequeathed to the King his Brother, Anno 1580.

As for Livonia it self, it was first under the Levoni and Estii, two German Nations, from whom the Country had the name of Livonia, the People of Estlanders or Estones. Distracted into his many petit Principalities, it was made acquainted with the Christian Faith by the care of the Merchants of Bremen, as before was said. Meinard their first Bishop being dead, and Reinhold his Successor slain by such of the people as had not yet received the Gospel; the Knights of the Port-Juive, or the Sword, were sent hither, to defend the Preachers and the Doctrine by the force of Arms. Finding themselves too weak to effect the business, they united with the Order of Dutch Knights in Prussias to whom from that time forwards they became subordinate; the great Master of Livonia acknowledging him for Prussia for his Superiour. These Knights continued Masters of it without contradiction till the year 1557, (embracing in the mean time the Opinions of Luther, Anno 1528) then quarrelling with the Archbishop of Riga, of the House of Brandenburg; because he would not adhere unto their Opinions; who, to secure his own Estate was forced to put Riga into the hands of the Polanders. Afterward being overlaid by the Moscovite, who had taken from them almost all their Country, they were fain to put themselves under the Protection of Sigismund-Augustus King of Poland, Anno 1559. But William of Fursenberg, the great Master being betrayed by his own Mercenaries into the hands of the Moscovite, Gothardus his Successor (following the example of Albert the great Master of Prussia) transacted with the said Sigismund for the whole Estate, which he surrendered to his use in the Castle of Riga, March 5, 1562, together with his Cross, the Seal of the Order, the Charters and Grants of many of the Popes and Emperours which concerned the same, as also the Keys of the City and Castle of Riga, the Office of great Master, the Rights of Coinage, and all the Powers and Privileges appertaining to it: receiving back again from Ratzevili, the King's Commissioner, the Dukedom of Curland to him and his Heirs for ever, as before is said. By this Transaction the Kings of Pole became Masters of Livland, and were more absolutely settled in it after a long War betwixt Stephen King of Poland and John Wasilwick the great Duke of Moscovie, who in the end surrendered all his Claim therein to the said Stephen and his Successors, Anno 1582, reserving only some few Towns on the Eastern Borders: the Dane and Swehlanders taking occasion by their Troubles to impatronize themselves of Narva, Rovalia, Osel, and some other pieces.

2. SAMOGITIA.

SAMOGITIA is a small Province wedged in betwixt Livonia and Lithuania, having Livonia on the North, Lithuania on the East and South, and the Baltick Sea upon the West: in length extending 50 miles from East to West, but not of an answerable breadth. It is so called from the lowliness of the situation, (the word Samogitis in the Language of the Inhabitants signifying terram inferiorem, or the Low-lands) by the Moscovite in fame sense called Samozkafelma. This lowness of situation makes it very watery, and almost continually frozen: but withal it hath many Forests, which yield unto the people abundance of Honey, better, more pleasing to the taste, and less mixt with Wax, than in other places.

The people are supposed to be of the Saxon Race, of a good Stature, well set, bold, and apt for War; but withal boisterous, rude and barbarous: Christians in general, but many of them do still retain their old Idolatries; nourishing amongst them a kind of four-footed Serpents, about three handfulls in length, which they worship as their Household-gods, attending them with fear and reverence when they call them out to their repast: and if any Mischance do happen to any of the Family, it is imputed presently to some want of due observance of these ugly Creatures. They are naturally inclined to Divinations, Charms and Sorceries, and frequently abused (as for the most part such people are) by Diabolical Illusions. Nay, they which profess the name of Christ are so ill instructed, that they use to marry many Wives, without consideration of Blood or Parentage: it being ordinary for a man to marry with his Brother's Widow, and not unusual to marry the Relict of their Fathers, (a Fornication not so much as heard of in S. Paul's time amongst the Gentiles.) They have some Customs also as unprofitable as these are heathenish; breaking up their Land, as they do in Moscovie, with Spades or Sticks. And when one of their Governours, observing the Husbandry of other Nations, had brought them the use of the Plough; it turned that for two or three years, either by the indolence of the Weather, or some other Accident, they had not so much Corn as they used to have. Which Want the people attributing to the use of the Plough, ne quicquam aliud in causa esse putantes, and not believing that there was any other cause of it, grew so much incensed, that the Governour, fearing some Sedition like to follow on it, was forced to leave them to the old way which they were wont. An humour like to that of the prelate Jrishi, in ploughing with their Horses tails, spoken of before. So pernicious for the most part are ignorant and superstitious people, in standing to their ancient Customs, though absurd and hurtful.

Towns they have few, their Houses for the generality being poor and low, covered with Straw or Dirt, with an Hole open in the Roof to let in the light. The principal of those they have (but rather Villages than Towns) are 1. Bigla, near the head of the River Swiate; 2. Lingaw, of which nothing memorable.

This Province hath always followed the fortunes of Lithuania: subject, when that was so, to the Kings of Russia, converted when that was to the Christian Faith, and finally united with it to the Crown of Poland.

3. LITHUANIA.

LITHUANIA hath on the East the Empire of Russia, on the West Prussia, Moscovia and Poland, on the North Livonia and Samogitia, and on the South Volhinia and Podolia. So called from Litus the Ceremonial Staff, used anciently by the Augurs in their Divinations; to which the Inhabitants herof being very much addicted before their receiving of the Gospel, were called Lituanii; but this is but conjectural only. Yet rather thus, than that it should be people by some banished Indians, first named Italici, then Litalici, and after, by a most unlikely Corruption; come to Lithania, as Matthias a Michon would have it.

The Country for the most part is full of Moors, Forests, some great Lakes like a Sea for bigness, and many navigable Rivers; which frozen over in the Winter make the the ways more travelling at that time of the year than they are in Summer. The Air in most places is exceeding cold, which makes their Wheat (whereof they have some abundance) to be seldom ripe, and other Fruits of the Earth to come slowly forward. Their Forests yield them Bugles, Ermines, Sables, Deer, wild Horses, plenty of Honey, Wax, and Pitch: but their breed of Cattel is less here, and of smaller stature, than it is in Germany. These Forests also are the Store-house out of which the English and Hollanders furnish themselves with Timber, both for Ships and Building; returning to them in exchange Salt, Wine, and other Necessaries which are wanting here.

The people anciently had Fire and Serpents for their Gods, nourishing the last in their houses, and keeping the other continually burning; the Priests and Ministers of the Temple always adding Fuel, that it might not fail. The Vestal Fire was not kept more carefully at Rome, nor with greater Ceremony. To this God, whom they called Disiphan, or the Lord of the Smoke, they used to sacrifice young Pullets; to the other, their Cocks. The seed of this Idolatry is so implanted in them, that it is said, that in a Village of the King's called Lovanisk, not far miles from Vilna, their chief City, they do to this day worship Serpents. Converted by their Prince Jagello to the Christian Faith, Anno 1386, they yet retained such Customs as are inconsistent with Christianity, marrying, when and as often as they please; no Bond being so soon cancelled as that of Matrimony. For a married man to use the body of an Harlot is accounted (as indeed it is) an opprobrious Crime: but for the Wife to have her Stallions and Adulterers is a thing so ordinary and unblamable, that the Husbands call them their Coadjutors, and prize them far above the rest of their Acquaintance. The common people are in a miserable Servitude unto their Lords, pillaged and beaten by them upon any occasion; yet must not come before them with an empty hand. And if any of them have committed a Crime deserving death, he must hang himself as soon as the Sentence is signified to him, or else is beaten and tormented in a cruel manner, that Death at last is looked on as a better Life.

The Country is divided into ten parts or Provinces, subject unto the Jurisdiction of so many Palatines; that is to say, the Palatine of 1. Vilna. 2. Track. 3. Minske. 4. Novogrod. 5. Brestia. 6. Volhinia. 7. Kovia. 8. Mishan. 9. Vitebsko. 10. Polozskie. But Novogrod and Polozskie being conquered by the great Duke of Moscovie, and added unto that Estate, and Volhinia reckoned of late times for a distinct Province of it self, not depending of it, the remaining number is but seven, most of them taking names from their principal Towns. The chief of those, and others which deserve place here, are, 1. Vilna, a Bishop's See, equal in bigness to Cracon, the chief City of Poland, so called of the River Vil, or Viln, upon which it is seated; built there in the year 1205 by one Godeimir, great a Prince of these parts; well walled, but the Gates thereof open night and day; large, rich, and well frequented by foreign Merchants, especially by those that drive the Trade of Moscovie, who have here their Hall, one of the chief Ornaments of the City. They have in it also some Churches built of Stone, (but the most of Wood) the principal whereof is the Monastery of S. Bernard, which is a very comely structure. The Natives call this Town Vilensk, the Dutch Die Wilde. It is situate in the very heart of the Country, the longest Day in Summer being here 16 hours and half a quarter; whereas in the most Southern parts of the Country it is but 16, and in the most Northern not fully 18. 2. Kovia, or Kief, situate on the Nieper, or Bory- sthenes, where the River Dvina falls into it: heretofore a beautiful and most stately City, having in it above 300 fair Churches, of which some remain unto this day; the Ruines of the rest to be traced out amongst Shrubs and Buihes, the receptacles of wild Beasts. The Seat at that time of the Metropolitan of the Russian Empire, containing also under his Jurisdiction the Countries of Walachia in Dacia, and Nigra Russia in Poland. But being destroyed by Batu or Bozda the Tartarian, in the Conquest of these parts by that People, it never could come near its former Lustre: yet still it holds the reputation of a Bishop's See, acknowledging the Patriarch of Moscow for his Metropolitan, and consequently is of the Communion of the Greek Churches, not of that of Rome. 3. Grodno, on the River Chernus, the chief Town of the Palatinate of Track, memorable for the death of Stephen King of Poland. 4. Grumwald, more memorable for the great Defeat given near it, by Jagello Duke of Lithuania and King of Poland, to the numerous Army of the Dutch Knights invading this Province; so confident of their Success in the undertaking, that they brought with them abundance of Chains and Torches, with the one to lead captive the Nobles of Poland, and with the other to fire their Cities. But Jagello, then newly made a Christian, putting his confidence in God, with an Army of untrained Soldiers so tamed their Pride, that he slew 40000 of them; so that they never recovered of that Blow whilst their Order stood. 5. Pinsk, in the Palatinate of Brest, 6. Klom, reckoned a Country of it self, and 7. Sirifin, fortified with a Castle; both under the Palatine of Moscow. The rest of the chief Towns may be known by the Palatinates which they give their names to, but not else observable.

The ancient Inhabitants herof were the Aorsi, Pagari, Sevari, Tribes of the Sarmata Europaei. Unto this name of Lithuanians, they became subject to the Kings of Russia, till the breaking of that Kingdom by the Tartars. At what time Erdozovi, then their Prince, (but an Homager and Tributary to the Russians) withdrew himself from their Command; as did also many other of the conquered Princes. Afterwards Mindech, one of the Dukes or Princes of it, being made a Christian, was by Pope Innocent the third honoured with the Title of a King, but returning again unto his Vomit, he lost that Title. In the end, Anno 1386, Jagello Duke of Lithuania, marrying with Hedwigis Queen of Poland, was upon three Conditions chosen King of that Realm. 1. That he should immediately receive the Christian Faith. 2. That he should draw all his Subjects to the same Belief. And 3. That he should unite this Dukedom to the Crown of Poland. Of these two first were performed without any delay, though the second not without some difficulty, the people being obstinate in their old Idolatry, especially in the Religious content they had of high Trees, which to cut down was held both unwise and impious. They could not be weaned from this conceit, till by the authority of the King their loftiest Trees were felled, and their Woods grubbed up: which when they saw done without any danger to the Prince, or any of those whom he employed in that Service, Regis mandato et autoritate edere caperunt, they then began to hearken unto his Commands, and generally received the Gospel, and were baptized. In the last point there was a longer time of deliberation: For the Princes of the House of Jagello, loth to deprive themselves of their Patrimonial Estate, which was hereditary unto their Posterity, and to subject it to the Election of the Polanders, in which it was possible the Princes of their Family might be pretermitted, deferred the accomplishment hereof from one day to another, under colour that the Lithuanians would revolt if they went about it. But Sigismund-Augustus, in whose person the Male-illue of Jagello failed, forcing what Divisions might ensue after his decease, and fearing that the Moscovites would renew their old Pretensions, united it into the Crown: ordaining that the Bishops, Palatinus, and a certain number of the Cheftellans by him established, should have their place and Suffrage in the great Council of Poland, power in the chusing of the King, and all other Privileges which the natural Polonians have. Since that it is accounted a chief Member of that Body politic; subject to those Corruptions, Changes and Innovations in matters of Religion, which have been predominant in the others, excepting those parts only which relate to the Church of Greece, or Mosco, adhering pertinaciously to the Rites thereof.

VOLHINIA, by some accounted one of the Palatinates of Lithuania (as once it was) but by others a distinct Province of itself, is bounded on the North and East with Lithuania, on the South with Podolia, and on the West with Russia Nigra and Podlaffia. So called, as Maginus is of opinion, from the Volgar, who, dwelling on the Banks of the River Volga, came afterwards into this Country, calling it Volgaria, whence by degrees it came unto Volhonia, and at last unto Volhonia. But this conjecture is improbable, and of no good grounds.

The Country yields good plenty both of Grain and Fruits, Pools which abound with very good Fish, Forests which do afford them store of Game and Honey, and much good Pasturage for their Cattel. That people are of the same nature with the Lithuanians, but more strong and warlike, & better weaned from their old Superstitions and heathenish customs than the others are. They are of the same Language and Religion with those of Russia, to which, together with the rest of Lithuania, it did once belong. It is divided commonly into three parts or Provinces, all taking name from the three principal Cities of it: that is to say, 1. Luske, in Latine called Lucovicia a Town of above 1000 Families, where 127 only (in the time of my Author) were of the Romish Religion, the residue being Russians, Gracians, and some Armenians. The Seat and Residence of two Bishops, of which one, being of the Communion of the Church of Rome, is of the Province of the Archbishop of Lemberg in Russia Nigra; but they which are of the Communion of the Church of Greece have also a Bishop of their own, who acknowledgeth the Patriarch of Mosco for his Metropolitan. 2. Polodimir, a Bishop's See also, of the same condition. 3. Keromence, which (as the rest) hath under it many fair Towns and Castles, besides large Villages. The whole was once part of Lithuania, as before was said; but of late difmembr'd from it, and united to the Crown of Poland, as at a distance; but so, that the greatest part of it is immediately subject to the Duke of Olitzky who is said to have 4000 Feudataries in his Country, the greatest Prince of those who hold Communion with the Church of Greece in the whole Realm of Poland.

5. PODOLIA.

PODOLIA hath on the North Volhonia, part of Lithuania, and the great Empire of Russia, on the South Moldavia, from which it is parted by the River Tyras, now called Niefter, on the West Russia Nigra, extending Eastward through vast uninhabited Countries as far as to the Euxine Sea. The reason of the name I find no where guess'd at. The people are for the most part of the same nature and original with the Russians, to whose Empire it formerly belonged also, till gain'd (if such a Subjection as they give the King may be call'd a gaining) to the Crown of Poland, at such time as the Russies were intrall'd to the power of the Tartars.

The Country is generally so fertile, that the Husbandman is accustomed to reap an hundred for one, in regard it bears at one Ploughing for three years together, the Countryman being put to no farther trouble, than at the end of the first and second years to flake the Corn a little, as he reaps or loads it; that which so falls serving as Seed for the next year following. The Meadow-grounds is so strangely rich and luxuriant, and the Grass so high, that a man can hardly see the Heads or Horns of his Cattel; of so swift a growth, that in three daies it will cover a Rod which is thrown into it, and in few more to hide a Plough, that it is not an easy work to find it. If chief things seem beyond belief, let Maginus, who reported them, bear the blame thereof; though better take it on his word, than go so far to disprove him. And yet, which adds much unto the Miracle, the ground is in most places so hard and stony, that there needs six yoke of Oxen to break it up; to the great toil both of the Cattle and the men. It is also said that in this Country there are great Flocks of Sheep, many Herds of Oxen, abundance of wild Beasts, and great store of Honey. And yet for all this Plenty and abundance of all things necessary, the Country for the most part, especially towards the East, is but meanly inhabited, by reason of the frequent incursions of the Tartars bordering next unto it, who have so wast'd it in times past, and thereby so discouraged the people from Building, Planting, and all other works of Peace and Husbandry, that in so large and rich a Country there is nothing to be seen but some scattered Houses, few Villages, and not above five Towns of note, viz. 1. Orzhov, at the Influx of the Borysthene or Nieper into the Euxine Sea. 2. Vafzov, at the fall of the River Bog into that of Nieper. 3. Braclem, more high upon the Bog. 4. Comenica, on the Borders of Russia Nigra, built by some divine hand, as it were, amongst the Precipices of highland inaccessible Rocks, and so well fortified withal, that it is impregnable, as is apparent by the many and great Repulses which the Turks, Tartarians, and Valachians have received before it, with much shame and loss. 5. Lemberg, remarkable for the Sawces or Salt-meats which they send thence into other Countries. The former fortunes of this Province, and how it was brought under the Crown of Poland, (with which it was incorporated long since) we shall see anon.

6. RUSSIA NIGRA.

RUSSIA NIGRA hath on the East Volhonia, Podolia, and Moldavia, on the West Mosovia, and Poland specially so called; on the North Lithuania and Podlaffia, and on the South the Sarmatian or Carpathian Mountains. It is called also Roxolania, from the Roxolani, a chief People of Sarmatia Europaea, and by some Ruthenia; but generally Russia, from the Rossi spoken of before in the Empire of Russia, who spread themselves over all these parts. Some hold that it was first called Russien, which signifieth in the Slavonian Language a scattered Nation, or a Nation diftinated and dispersed into many parts; and that this was the name generally of all that speak the Slavonian Tongue, and followed the Religion and the Rites of the Church of Greece, extended from the Frozen Sea to the Adriatick, and from the Euxine to the Baltick. This and a greater Tract of ground I grant to have been heretofore possessed by divers Nations under the name of Slavonians; a very considerable part of Germany and Poland being conquered by them. But for the name of Russia, given at first to all the Russian Empire, Empire, distinguish'd now into Russia Alba and Russia Nigra, I adhere unto my former Vote, conceiving that it came from the Rossi, an Armenian People, inhabiting about Mount Taurus, who in the year 864, or thereabouts, attempting the taking of Constantinople, and after placed themselves on the Northern Banks of the Euxine, getting ground of the Slavonians to the North and East, till they had made themselves Masters of all Russia Alba, Lithuania, Volhonia, Podolia, and this Russia Nigra. Distinguish'd from the former by the adjunct of Nigra, after the destruction of that great Empire by the coming in of the Tartars, either from the colour of their garments or their black and more Southern Complexion. In which regard it is called also Russia Meridionalis, or the Southern Russia.

The Country is generally fruitful, abounding in Horses, Oxen, Sheep, Sables, and Foxes: such store of Bees, that they breed not only in hives and hollow Trees, but in Rocks and Caves. Well watered both with Pools and Rivers, affording them great plenty of Fish, more naturally spawning here than in other places, inasmuch that if a Pond be digg'd, and spring accordingly, the Fish will breed therein of their own accord, without being brought from other waters. The greatest want heretofore is Wine, either supplied with Medes, or from other places. And it is said that in the Territory of Chelm the Branches of the Pine-Trees, left upon the ground for three years together, will be converted into Stone.

The people are generally valiant, and so strong of body that they use Bows of 12 foot long. Being formerly governed by Dukes, they do but ill brook the name of King; which much induc'd the King of Poland to send Colonies of natural Polonians into most parts of the Country, inasmuch as most of the Knights and Gentry of it are of that Extraction, and follow the Religion of the Church of Rome; the Peasants and the Original Inhabitants of it being more generally affected to their Rites and Doctrines of the Church of Greece.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Chelm, in the Territory whereof it is affirmed that the Branches of Pine-Trees, left upon the ground for three years together, are converted to Stone. 2. Premislen. 3. Halitz. 4. Belzo. 5. Grodock, and 6. Leopolis, by the Natives call'd Lemberg, built by one Leo a Moscovite; a Town of great Traffick, and an Archbishop's See, who is of the Religion of the Church of Rome. But the Patriarch of Mosco hath here also an Archbishop of his own ordaining, there being Churches both in the City itself, and all Russia generally, (as before was said) which are of the Communion of the Church of Greece. There are also in this City some Armenian Merchants, who have a Church, a Bishop, and some Priests of their own Religion.

Of the Affairs of this Province, and how it was a part once of the Russian Empire, hath been said already. Difmembr'd from it by the Tartars, it had a while Dukes or Provincial Governors, subject and tributary unto those Barbarians; as had also Podolia, its next neighbour. Both conquered by the Polanders, were for a time kept under by strong hand and the power of Garrisons. But being upon all occasions apt to revolt, by reason of the hard hand which the Kings held over them, (by whom they were treated rather like Slaves than Subjects) they were allowed unto the State, by giving the same Liberties and Immunities, both for the Nobility and the Commons, which the natural Polonians had; and by that means made Fellow-members of that Commonwealth. The act of Ladislav the 6. the Son of Jagello, imitating therein the ancient Romans, who most augmented their Forces, and assur'd their Estates, by communicating the Freedom of Rome and the Privileges of Latium to many of the conquered Provinces: and was imitated by Sigismund the first, Sigismund-Augustus and Stephen, his Successors in their incorporating of Prussia, Lithuania, and Livonia, to the Crown of Poland.

MASSOVIA is bounded on the East with Lithuania, on the West with Poland specially so called, on the North with Prussia and Podlaffia, on the South with Russia Nigra or Meridionalis. So called from Masse, one of the Dukes heretofore, who in the year 1045, being vanquished by Casmire Duke of Poland, fled into Prussia and there unfortunately died.

The Country is large, and for the most part full of Woods, where they find store of Bugles and wild Bulls. The people are strong, valiant and courageous in War; differing little from the Polonians in Speech, Manners, or Apparel, save that they use a kind of Whittling, which the others do not. The principal Towns of it are, 1. Wlansaw, the chief of the Province, and heretofore the Residence of the Duke or Prince, remarkable for the belt Medes or Metheglin. 2. Czirkov. 3. Peltonkie. 4. Gadzick. 5. Lozara. 6. Droic the Seat of a Palatine, but not else observable.

This Province was once subject to Princes of its own, not subject or subordinate unto any Superior. Of which number that Masse was one, from whom it was named Massovia. In the year 1246 and 1262, being strangely wast'd and distressed by Mindoy Duke of Lithuania, they were fain to put them- selves under the power of the Polanders, by whom they were made the Portion of the second Son of that Kingdom. But John and Stanislaus, the two last Dukes heretofore, dying without Issue, it returned unto the Kings of Poland, and became incorporate to that Crown, and priviledged in the Election of the King, and all matters which concern the publick, as all others of the Polonians are, Anno 1526.

8. PODLASSIA.

PODLASSIA is bounded on the East with Volhonia, on the West with Prussia, on the North with Lithuania, and on the South with Massovia and Russia Nigra. The reason of the name I know not. The Country differs not much from those before: the people being a mixt generation of Russies, Moscovites, and Polonians, partake a little of the Manners and Garb of those several Nations from which they lineally are descended.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Bielsko. 2. Bransko. 3. Swars, all of them having fair and ample Territories. 4. Tyoczekyn, strongly fortified and well garrisoned, as being the place where the King's Treasures are kept. 5. Krysin, beautified with a Royal Palace, and a pleasant Park, wherein are store of wild Beasts for Hunting, and Fish ponds very well replenish'd. 6. Narew. 7. Volosyn, and 8. Augustow, a very strong Town, built and fortified by Sigismund-Augustus and by him thus named, Anno 1569, at what time he difmembr'd this Province from Lithuania, to which before it appertained, uniting it for ever to the Crown of Poland.

9. PRUSSIA.

PRUSSIA is bounded on the East with Lithuania and Podlaffia, on the West with Pomerania, on the North with the Baltick Sea, and on the South with Poland and Maffovia. Called first Borussia, from the Boruffi, who subdued it, (of whom more anon) which by an alphabetic alteration was changed into Prussia, by which name it is still called.

The Country is extended all along the Baltick Sea, from the City of Danzick in the West, to Labiau on the Mouth of the Memell, East, for the space of 50 Polish miles; and from Tornau, bordering on Maffovia, to Memel in the Confines of Lithuania, 55 miles of the same measure. The Air thereof is very mild and temperate, the Soil both profitable and pleasant; full of Lakes and Rivers stored with Fish, plentiful of Corn and other Necessaries, and well clad with Forests, which yield them Game for Hunting, rich Skins for profit, and abundance of Honey; of which last they make Meds for their own use, (their ordinary Drink where there is no Wind) and sell the rest unto the Merchant. But the Commodity wherein they do excel their neighbours is their plenty of Amber, which is the juice of a Stone which growth like a Coral in a Mountain of these Baltick Seas, covered quite with water, and slummed by Mariners three leagues off, for fear of Shipwreck: the Mountain is reasonable large, about 30 yards high of English measure. And when any Tempest riseth in these Northern Seas, especially in September and December, the Liquor by violence thereof is rent from the Rock, and cast into divers Havens, and on divers Coasts of this Country, and sometimes upon those of Sweden and Pomerania: the people leaping into the Sea when it rageth most, whence they take up first some Store of Woods, after that this Liquor, which being taken out of the water hardeneth like to Coral. Besides the beauty hereof, and the quality it hath of attracting Straws and Iron, as the Adamant doth, burning like Pitch, and others of this nature; it is excellent good for stopping Bloud, all kind of Agues, Falling-fickness, Dropsies, Stone, Cholick, weaknefs of Stomack, Head-ach, and the Yellow-jaundies.

The people especially the Gentry, descend from the Germans, and retain much of their nature; having more Art and Industry than the other Polonians, and being more tenacious of their ancient Customs. They were Idolaters for long time together, converted first unto the Faith in the time of the Emperor Frederick the 2 by whose letting on they were subdued by the Order of the Dutch Knights, An. 1215, and either won or forced to the Christian Faith. As Christians, governed since the plantation of the Gospel by the Bishops of Culm, Warmia, Sambia and Pomejan, Suffragans to the Archbishop of Gnesna; under whom those parts do still continue which have not yet forsaken the Church of Rome: the Lutherans, Calvinians, and other separate Congregations distinct from them, having their own Forms both of Doctrine and Discipline.

Few Provinces of the North are better watered than this is, both for Lakes and Rivers: some of the Lakes being seven Dutch miles in compass, and well stored with Fish. The Rivers are 12 in number; that is to say, 1. the Vistula. 2. Chrauca. 3. Nogat. 4. Elbing. 5. Vasera. 6. Pasaria. 7. Alta. 8. Pregel. 9. Offa. 10. Drebowicz. 11. Lissa. and 12. Lavia, all plentifully stored with Fish; besides a large Sea-Coast both for Trade and Fishing no small commodity to the Natives.

The Country, formerly divided into twelve Dukedoms, (so they called the parts and fractions of it) was by the industry of the Dutch Knights so adorned and beautified, (after they had once brought it under their Obedience) that there were no fewer than 72 Castles and 62 good Towns of their foundation. Which number being much increased in these later times, hath made it the most flourishing part of the whole Kingdom of Poland. But the Order of the Dutch Knights being suppressed in this Country by an Agreement betwixt Sigismund the first, King of Poland, and Albert of Brandenburg, the last great Master of the Order; both Town and Country are divided between the Successors of the said Albert, as Dukes of Prussia, and of the said Sigismund, as Kings of Pole: the Dukedoms or Divisions of Hogeland, Warmia, Galindia, Atschelou, Culmigeria, with the City of Marienburgh, the Sovereignty of Danzick and Melbing, with the whole Country of Pomerellia, lying on the West-side of the Vistula, being allotted to the King; the residue, containing the Divisions of Schalawenia, Sambia, Natanzia, Nadzwila, Bartonia, Sudavia, and Pomesania (except the City and Territory of Marienburgh) to the Dukes of Prussia.

Chief Towns belonging to the Duke are, 1. Alameda well-frequented Port, the Mart-Town for the Commodities of Lithuania, which are brought hither, and here bought by the foreign Merchant: part of this Province interpoling betwixt Lithuania and the Baltick. 2. Koenigsberg, as the Dutch Regiment, as the French, and Moss Regiments, as the Latins call it; situate in the Province of Sambia, at the bottom of a Gulf or Bay, where the Pregel falleth into the Baltick Sea: built by the Dutch Knights in the year 1260, and made an University by Albert the first Duke hereof 1225, the Seat and principal Residence of his Successors; as also of the Bishop of Sambia, in Latine called Sambiensis, by the name of the Province. 3. Mulneburg, founded by the Dutch Knights, An 1279. 4. Brandenburg, on the South-side of that Bay, but more near the Sea; built, as I guess, by some of the Great Masters of that Family. 5. Ragnitz, the farthest Town of note towards Lithuania. 6. Angerburg, in Schalawenia, as was also Ragnitz. 7. Nordenburg, in Bartonia. 8. Ortelburg, in Galindia: of which little memorable. 9. Mariemader, the farthest of the Duke's Estate towards the Vistula, and the ordinary Residence of the Bishop of Pomesan. Besides which there are reckoned in this Division 80 good Towns more, and about 54 Castles, though not much observation in the course of Story.

Chief Towns pertaining to the King are, 1. Braunsberg, upon a Bay of the Baltick Sea which they call Frifch-Haff: a Town of good Trade by reason of the commodious Haven, and the ordinary Residence of the Bishop of Warmia. 2. Frauenberg, on the same Bay, not far from Braunsberg. 3. Refel, the chief Town of the Diocese and Dukedom of Warmia. 4. Strasburg, in Atschelou, confining on Dukedom, specially so called, at the Siege whereof by Gustavus Adolphus King of Sweden, Anno 1628, Elias Tryp, one of the Engineers of that King, found out the use of Leather Ordnance, which afterwards did that King great service in the Wars of Germany. 5. Culm, on the River Vistula, a Bishop's See. 6. Marienburgh, on the Nogat, built by the Dutch Knights, An 1302, and made the Seat of the great Masters of their order, translated first from Polemnia or Acon in Syria to the City of Venice, from thence to Marpurg, and at last to this place by Sigismund the twelfth great Master of it, whose constant Residence in this Town occasioned the Bishop of Culm to remove thither also. A very fair and well-built City, the chief of those which do belong to the King of Poland: by him so well garrisoned, and furnished with such store of Victuals, Ammunition and other Necessaries, that it was thought able to hold out for a Six years Siege. But it proved otherwise when besieged by the King of Sweden, who took it in less space than 10 many months; being on the falling of a Peace betwixt the Crowns rendered again unto the King of Poland. Beneath this Town, down towards the Baltick, is a pleasant Island made by the Nogat and the Weyffel, for the fertility of the Soil, and the great number of Houses, Villages, and People, not equalled (for the muchness of it) in all this Country.

To

To this part also belongeth the fair port of Elbing, (or Melbing, as Maginus calls it) situate on the Bay of the Baltick called Frifch Haff; spoken of before, not far from a Fishful Lake; well traded, rich, and full of very wealthy Merchants, of great repute from other Nations, and much frequented by the English Merchants, who have here their Staple for the Baltick; a small, but neat and well-built City, and fortified with a very good Wall, governed after the manner of a free Estate or Commonwealth, under the Patronage and Protection of the Kings of Poland, in like sort as Danzick also is, of which more anon.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Venedi, the most potent Nation of this Tract, extended all along the Coasts of the Baltick from them by Ptolemy called Sinu Venedicus: containing under them the Githones, Phini, Salanes, Phrugudiones, Auarini, and more within the Land the Sodini and Galinda, whose name the Dukedom or Province of Galindia doth still retain. But great and potent though they were, they were subdued by the Boruffi, inhabiting at the foot of the Riphaean Mountains, who, weary of their own cold and barren Dwellings, removed into the Western parts, and vanquished the Venedi, and those other Nations, possessed themselves of this Country, which they called Borussia, now by us named Prussia. By Venedus one of their Princes having twelve Sons in all, it was divided into 12 Provinces or Dukedoms, one for every Son; continuing by that means distracted into divers petty Principalities, till the coming of the Marian or Dutch Knights, sent hither by Frederick the second, Anno 1215, by whom the Provinces or Dukedoms of Sudavia, Mischelou, and the greatest part of Nadzwavia, were laid waste and desolate: the rest submitted to their power, and received the Gospel. After this it continued subject to this Order of Knights till the year 1419, when, weary of their Extortion and the continual change of Masters, they revolted to the King of Poland, to whom they offered their Obedience: seconded by the yielding up of Marienburgh, with many other Towns and Castles, sold to King Casimir by the Garifon Soldiers, Anno 1457, for 476000 Florens. But the Knights disdaining to be so dealt withal, and refusing to swear Allegiance to the Kings of Poland, they brake out into open War, which was managed with variable Success on both sides; Ludovicus, the then Great Master, being so successful at the first, that he once Beat the King, out of the Field, routed his whole Army, slew 30000 of his men upon the place, and took 136 of his chief Nobility: nor was he vanquished at last, but by the Treachery and Rebellion of his own people.

In the end, wearied and worn out on both sides by continual Wars, Albert of Brandenburg, then Great Master, having for 14 years together courageously maintained the Honour of his Order, and for the four last years importuned in vain the Assistance of the Emperor and Princes of Germany, began to think of some Expedient to compound the business. Being inclined to Luther's Doctrines, and willing to advance himself unto this Estate, he secretly practised with Sigismund the first of Poland to end the War to the advantage of both parties. By whom at last it was agreed, That Albert should relinquish his Order, and surrender all Prussia into the hands of the King: That the King, possessing the Western parts, with the Town of Marienburgh, and the Sovereignty of Dantz and Melbing, should invest Albert with the Title of Duke of Prussia, settling on him and the Heirs of his body the whole Eastern Moiety, containing the Provinces or Dukedoms before specified: and finally, that Albert and his Heirs should hold the said Estate, as Homagers to the Crown of Poland, taking place in all Assemblies at the King's right hand. According to this Agreement, Anno 1525, Albert, attired in the complete habit of Master of the Dutch Order, presents himself humbly on his knees before Sigismund at Cracon, the King then sitting on his Throne. The King, raising him from the ground, caused him to put off those Robes and attire himself in a Ducal Habit: which done, an Instrument was read and published, whereby the King conferred upon him and the Heirs of his body the Dukedom of Prussia, to be held of him and his Successors Kings of Poland. An act at which the whole Order were extremely incensed; but they could not help it, and thereupon retired into Germany, where there were some good Lands left, to maintain such of them as had no mind to quit that Military honour; leaving their old Estates unto Prussia to the King and the Duke, whose Successors have hitherto enjoyed their part of it, with the Title of

Dukes of PRUSSIA

- 1525 1. Albert of Brandenburg, Son of Frederick Marquess of Onoloweb, or Onsach, created Master of the Order by the Emperor Maximilian, Anno 1511, and the first Duke of Prussia by Sigismund, the first of Poland, Anno 1525, founded the University of Koenigsburg, Anno 1544.
- 1562 2. Albert-Frederick Son of Albert the first Duke, married Mary-Elmior, Daughter of William Duke of Cleve, Gulick, Berg, &c.
3. Anne, Eldest Daughter of Duke Albert-Frederick, Dutchess of Prussia, brought the Estate in Marriage to
4. John-Sigismund, Marquess and Elector of Brandenburg, who was confirmed therein by Sigismund the 3. of Poland, pretending an Elcheat thereof for want of Heirs-males of the body of Albert the first Duke.
5. George-William, Marquess and Elector of Brandenburg, in right of his Father, Duke of Prussia in right of the Lady Anne his Mother, and of Cleve, Gulick, Berg, &c. by Descent from Mary-Eleanor his Grandmother.
6. Frederick-William, Son of George-William Marquess and Elector of Brandenburg, Duke of Prussia, Cleve, Gulick and Berg; of whose Investiture in the Dukedom of Pomeran and other large and goodly Seigniories we have spoken elsewhere.

As for the Government of this Province standing thus divided, that of the Duke is more Monarchical than that of the King, the one being absolute and uncontrollable in his Estates, the other subject to the great Council of Poland. If any difference grow between them, Delegates appointed by the King, but taking a new Oath to do equal Justice either at Marienburgh or Elbing, do compound the business: who, together with some other of the Duke's nomination, receive all Appeals in which the Duke is interested as one of the parties.

The Revenues of this Dukedom are thought to be 120000 Ducats yearly.

The Armes thereof are Argent, an Eagle Verr, membréd and crowned Or, langued Gules.

10. POMERELLIA.

POMERELLIA is bounded on the East with the River Vistula, by it parted from Prussia, on the South with Poland specially so called, on the North with the Baltick Sea, and on the West with the Dukedom of Pomerania.

merania, of which it was anciently a part, till separated from it, and united to the Crown of Poland under this new name.

The Territory is small, and consequently not capable of many Towns and Cities of consideration. Those of most note are, 1. Nemenburg, on the Banks of the Vistula, or Wesell. 2. Diricham, or Dirfaw, (in Latine Dirisavia) a well fortified Town and of great importance, at the Siege whereof, Anno 1627, Gustavus Adolphus, King of Sweden, received the Order of the Garter. 3. Dantzick in Latine, called Danifigum, and sometimes Gedamum, situate at the mouth of the same River also, a fair and well-built City, the Houfes for the most part of Brick, and the rest of Stone raised with great beauty and magnificence fix or seven floors high; beautified with a fair Council-house for affairs of State, and many publick Gardens for disport and exercise. It consisteth of three Cities, governed by as many Senates; the one called Vancrat, or the fore-City; the second Altstat, or the old City; and the third Reichstat, or the Emperour's City: but all inclosed with one Wall, and governed by one chief Senate or Common-Council chosen out of all three. A Bilhop's See, and the second Trade, fuch a noted Granary of all sorts of Corn, issued from hence to supply the wants of other Countries, that 1000 Measures of Wheat (besides other commodities in proportion) are here daily sold. Heretofore it was reckoned as Imperial, but now as a Free State, acknowledging the King of Poland for their Protectors, to whom they allow many Customs upon their Merchandize, and permit their Officers to remain there for receiving them. The first Town in the Kingdom of Poland which gave entrance to the Doctrines of Luther, An. 1525, but in so tumultuous a manner, that they that favoured his Opinions depofed the old Common-Council-men, and created new ones of their own, profaned the Churches, robbed them of their Ornaments, and shamefully abused the Priests and Religious persons, abolished the Mass, and altered all things at their pleasure. But by the coming of the King they grew somewhat quieter leaving one Convent of Black Friars and two of Nuns, who still enjoy the exercise of their Religion.

This Country once a part of the Dukedom of Pomerania, was given by Suanibore, once Duke thereof, Anno 1107, to Rugillus his second Son; whose Posterity enjoyed it till the year 1295, when Msteviv 2. dying without Issue, gave it to Primiſlaus Duke of the Poloni, whose Successors have ever since enjoyed it by that Donation. It is called Pomerellia, for distinction sake, from the first separating of it from the Dukedom of Pomerania.

11. POLAND.

POLAND properly and especially so called is bounded on the East with Mosovia and Podallia, on the West with Silesia and the Marquifate of Brandenburg, on the North with Prussia and Pomerellia, and on the South with the Sarmatian or Carpathian Mountains, which divide it from Hungary. It is in length 480 Italian miles, 300 of the same Miles in breadth; and took this name (as afore is said) from the word Pole, signifying as much as plain, the Country being plain and level, little swelled with Hills.

The Air hereof is pure and healthy, but sharp and cold; the Country plain, shaded with thick dark Woods, parts of the Hereyian, full of wild Beasts for hunting, and of Bees for Honey, which they have here in great abundance together with such plenty of Grain but of Rice especially, by reason of the continual breaking up of new Grounds gained out of the Forests, that it may be called the Granary or Store-house of the Western parts of Europe; the Grain is first down the Wesell into Dantzick, and thence transported by the Merchant into other Countries, according to their several wants.

The Character of the people we have had before; adding now only, that in matters of War they are stout and resolute, so forward in giving the Charge and Pursuit of the Enemy, that John Wasilwick, the great Duke of Mosovia comparing them with the soldiers of his own Dominions, was wont to say, that the Polonians wanted a Spur to drive them forwards, and the Polander had need a bridle to hold them back. Their Language is the Sclavonian Tongue; most generally spoken also in the rest of the Provinces, but with some difference in the Dialect or Pronunciation.

It is divided commonly into two parts, the Greater and the Lesser Poland. The GREATER, lying wholly on the Western side of the Wesell, and so accounted anciently as a part of Germany, contains 9 Divisions, under the Jurisdiction of the 9 Palatines of 1. Pofna, 2. Kalifch, 3. Siradia, 4. Lancicia, 5. Vladiflav, 6. Brzeſſye, 7. Rawa, 8. Plozky, and 9. Dobrzyn; each of them so called from some Town of note. The chief whereof, and of the rest contained in them, are 1. Pofna a Bilhop's See, and the principal of the Greater Poland, seated among the Hills on the River Warra, built of Free-Stone, with very large Suburbs beyond the River, but much subject unto Inundations, which add much strength unto the place; of great repute by reason of the Martyr of Fairs held twice a year. 2. Kofien situate amongst Marshes, and fortified with a double Wall. 3. Ofrezow, bordering on Silesia, begirt with Woods. 4. Gneſſia, the ancientest Town of Poland, founded by Lechus their first Prince, the Seat of him and his Successors, till removed to Cracow, situate in Kalifch, and by old prescription the first place for Inauguration of the Kings of Pole, in regard that here Prince Boleslaus, the first King of this Country, received the Regal Diadem at the hands of Ordo, the third. The Town is well walled, and the See of an Archbishop, who is the Primate of the Kingdom, by ancient Privilege the Pope's Legat for all Sarmatia Europaea, and in the Absence of the King or Interregnum, the Vicar-general of the Kingdom, having power to summon the Diets, to conclude and publish their Decrees. 5. Pietrekem, a walled Town in the Palatinate or Division of Siradia, situate on a moorish soil; the place in former times of the general Diets, since removed to Warsaw. 6. Vladiflav, on the Wesell or Vistula, a Bilhop's See. 7. Belgoſſa, a walled Town on the Vara, a Navigable River, conveying the Merchandize of these parts into the Vistula. 8. Kruffick, in Brzeſſye built of Wood, standing on a great Lake named Gopia, in the Castle whereof Popeſtus the 2. Duke of Poland, was after a strange manner devoured with Rats swarming out of the Lake. 9. Plozky, upon the Vistula, a Walled Town, and a Bilhop's See, with a Castle to it. 10. Warsaw, upon the Banks of the same River, of no great note in former times, but of late grown the best frequented and most traded Town in all the Province; honoured for the most part with the Court of the King, the holding of all publick Diets, (removed from Pietrekem to this place) and the Transaction of all business both of Peace and War, which must needs draw to it great resort of all sorts of people; the fruitfulness of the Soil and commodiousness of the situation rendering it very capable of those publick Meetings. 11. Alma bordering on the Dukedom of Prussia.

The LESSER Poland, lying on the south of the Greater, and divided by the River Wesell, comprehendeth only three Divisions, under the government of the Palatines of 1. Cracow, 2. Sandomir, and 3. Lublin. Principal Cities of the which are, 1. Cracow, upon the Wesell, (called in Latine Cracovia) a Bilhop's See, the chief of all the Kingdom, the Seat of the Prince, and the Sepulchre of the former Kings; by Ptolemy called Caradunum, fortified with a double Wall (of the old fashion) a deep Ditch, the Castle of Pand situate on the top of an high Rock, and beautified with an University, or general Study of good Arts and Sciences. This Buildings are more fair than elsewhere in Poland, of Free-stone, and four Stories high; but for the most part covered with Shingles, or Tiles of wood: in the middle is a large Market-place, in form quadrangular; and in the middle of that the Common-Council-house, about which are many Shops of Merchants. On one side of it standeth the Cathedral Church; and on the East-side of the City the Palace Royal, high seated on an Hill over-looking both the Town and Country, fair and well built, of form somewhat near a Quadrangle, but lying open to the South without any Buildings above the Wall, affording thereby to the Gallery, being on the North-side of the Castle, the more excellent Prospect. 2. Lelom, a walled Town with a Castle on the River Biala. 3. Sandomir, a walled Town with a Castle also, seated on an Hill, under which runs the Vistula or Wesell. 4. Wislica, a walled Town amongst Marshes, encompassed with the River Nid. 5. Lublin a walled Town, but more strongly fortified by the Marshes and Water with which it is environed, remarkable for three yearly Fairs, drawing hither Merchants from most parts adjoining, as also Moscovites, Armenians, Turks and Grecians. The Jews inhabiting the greatest part of the Suburbs, have here their Synagogue, making the Town, especially at the time of those Fairs, a Medley of all Nations and Religions. 6. Cafimir, on the Wesell, so named from the Founder of it, a King of Poland.

The old inhabitants of this Country were the Avii, Heverones, Elyſii, and the Nabarvali, parts of the Suevi Legit spoken of by Tacitus, all of them lying on the Dutch side of the Wesell, by consequence within the Bounds of the ancient Germany: the people of all the rest of the Provinces before described being of the Sarmatian Race, next neighbours to the Germans, and not much unlike them in Persons, Customs, or Conditions. But these dispersed and scattered Nations of Sarmatia Europaea, being united in the common name of Sclaves, part of them settled in that part which we now call Poland, at that time reckoned and accounted of as a part of Germany. The time of their first coming hither, and the manner of their Government when first settled here, is not very well known. But for the first it is most certain, that it was some time, and that not long, after the death of Mauritius the Eastern Emperour; and for the next it is as certain, that on the coming of Lechus, a Croatian, who led his Country for a Murder, with his Brother Zechus, they settled into a more constant form of Government than before they did. For Lechus, seeing his Brother's good Success in Bohemia, where the Sclaves received him for their Prince, passed into Poland, the next Province, and was as cheerfully received by the Sclaves thereof, who looked upon him as a Prince of their own Extraction, and without quarrel or competition submitted themselves to his Commands, Anno 650, or thereabouts. Of this there is good constant amongst our Authors. But neither the names or number of his Successors do occur in Story till the time of Cracut, the Founder of Cracovia, the chief City of Poland, and the Legislator of this People. After this, the Succession of their Princes and the success of their Affairs becomes more certain: the Estate hereof being much improved by the conquest of many Sarmatian Countries, all which together constitute and make up the Kingdom of Poland, so called from this predominating and prevailing Province. The sum of their Affairs is this. The Posterity of Cracut failing in Popeſtus the second, Priflus is elected Duke; the Princes from that time forwards becoming Elective, but always with respect to the next of blood. In the time of Miciflaus, Son of Nemomyſlaus, they received the Gospel, Anno 963. Boleslaus the Son of Miciflaus was the first who had the Title of a King, conferred upon him by the Emperor Ordo the third about the year 1001, relinquished by Vladiflaus the first, and not resumed again till the time of Primiſlaus Duke of Pofna, Anno 1300, after which it became perpetual. In the person of this Primiſlaus Pomerellia is united to the State of Poland, Anno 1295; in that of Jagello, or Vladiflaus the fifth, the great Dukedom of Lithuania, incorporated into this Body as a Member of it in the time of Sigismund Auguſtus. By Vladiflaus the sixth, Son of Jagello, Podelſia, and Ruffia Nigra were also added by Sigismund the first, Preſſia and Mosovia; Podallia by Sigismund Auguſtus, who also took Vallinia, out of Lithuania; by Stephen, the actual possessor of the greatest part of Livonia; by Sigismund the third, a Title to the Crown of Sweden. The Princes follow in this order.

Dukes and Kings of POLAND.

A.Ch.

deposed by Lefum the fifth, who again seized on the Estate.

- 1243 27. Boleflaw V. furnamed Pudicim.
 1280 28. Lefum, V. furnamed Niger, the adopted Son of Boleflaw, and his Cousin-german once removed; after whose death, An. 1289, the Estate, being divided into many Factions, was for some time without a Prince, settled at last on 1295 29. Primiſlaw, furnamed Poſtumus, Duke of Poſna, who again assumed the name of King, continued ever by his Successors.
 1296 30. Uladiſlaw, furnamed Loſſium, Brother of Lefum, elected by Wenceſlaw King of Bohemia, Anno 1300; after whose death, An. 1306, he resumed the Estate.
 1333 31. Cafimir III. furnamed the Great, Son of Uladiſlaw the fourth, the first Establisher of the Kingdom after all those Troubles, died without Issue.
 1371 32. Lewis, King of Hungary, Nephew or Grandson to Charles King of Hungary, by Elizabeth the Sister of Cafimir.
 1383 33. Hedwig, the youngest Daughter of Lewis, her elder Sister Mary succeeding in the Realm of Hungary, chosen Queen of Poland; married to Jagello Duke of Lithuania, Christianized, and called Uladiſlaw the fifth.
 1386 34. Uladiſlaw V. Duke of Lithuania, elected King upon his Marriage with Queen Hedwig.
 1435 35. Uladiſlaw VI. Son of Jagello, or Uladiſlaw the fifth, by Sophia, Daughter of the Duke of Kiev, King of Hungary also; slain at the Battle of Varna by Amurath the second, King of the Turks, and without Issue.
 1447 36. Cafimir 4. Brother of Uladiſlaw, first brought the Knights of Prussia under his Command; Knight of the Order of the Garter.
 1593 37. John Albert, the second Son of Cafimir; his elder Brother Uladiſlaw being permitted, on his accepting of the Crowns of Hungary and Bohemia.
 1502 38. Alexander, the third Son of Cafimir.
 1507 39. Sigismund, the fourth Son of Cafimir his elder Brother dying without Issue: he suppressed the Order of the Dutch Knights in Prussia, and added part thereof unto his Estate.
 1548 40. Sigismund II. furnamed Augustus, the last of the Male-Issue of Jagello.
 1574 41. Henry, Duke of Anjou, Son of Henry the second, the French King; chosen on the death of Sigismund-Augustus, the only Stranger to the Blood in all this Catalogue. On the death of his Brother Charles the ninth, he departed secretly into France, where he succeeded by the name of Henry the third.
 1579 42. Stephen Babor, Vaivod of Transylvania, by the recommendation of Amurath the third, Emperor of the Turks, having first married Anna, Sister of Sigismund the second, is elected King. He united Livonia to the Crown, and had a great hand upon the Muscovite.
 1587 43. Sigismund III. Son of John King of Swehland, and of Katharine his Wife, another of the Sisters of Sigismund the second, King of Poland and Swehden. He valiantly opposed Osman the Great Turk, invading his Dominions with an Army of 30000 fighting men.
 1633 44. Uladiſlaw VII. eldest Son of Sigismund the third. After whose death the Kingdom was extremely embroiled by Factions, especially by the mutinous and feditious Cofacks, not fully settled by the Election of 1648 45. Cafimir V. Brother of Uladiſlaw the seventh, now King of Poland, Anno 1648.

The Government of this Kingdom is nothing less than Monarchical. For though the first Dukes hereof were absolute Princes, and ruled after a Despotical manner, having power not only of the Estates of their Subjects, but of Life and Death, without Formalities of Law; yet when they once became Elective, they lost much of that power: which decayed so by little and little, that at the last the King is counted little better than a Royal Shadow; Stat magni nominis umbra, in the Poet's language. A Diminution which began first in the times of Lewis of Hungary and Jagello of Lithuania; who, to gain the Succession to the Kingdom, contrary to Law, the one for his Daughter, the other for his Son, departed with many of their Royalities and Prerogatives, to buy the Voices of the Nobility. Since which time, the Nobility in all their Elections have so limited and restrained the King's Authority, and enlarged their own, that without their consent in Council he may neither make a War, nor treat of Peace, nor impose Taxes, nor alienate any of his Demesns, nor do any thing of importance which concerns the Publick: inasmuch as Borowis, a great Statesman doth expressly say, That the Government of Poland doth rather seem an Aristocracy than a Monarchy, a Common wealth rather than a Kingdom. Besides, the King not only takes solemn Oath at his Coronation to confirm all the Rights and Privileges which have been granted to the Subject by his Predecessors, but adds this Clause, Quod si Sacramentum meum violaveris, incola Regni nullum nobis obedientiam prestare tenebitur, that if he violate this Oath, his Subjects shall not be obliged to yield him any Obedience. Which as Badinus well observeth, doth rather favour of the condition of a Prince of the Senate, than of the Majesty of a King. He is respected accordingly by the Great ones, who look not on him as their King but their elder Brother, (and perhaps not that) and reckon his Decrees but of three daies lasting. Which notwithstanding, the King, once chosen and intronized, hath sole power in many things without consulting with the Senate; as viz. in assembling Diets, choosing the Secular Counsellors, disposing absolutely also of his Vassals and the Revenues of the Crown to what use he pleases; being sole Judge of the Nobility in Criminal Causes, which is a strong Bridle to rein them in with. By which, and either uniting himself unto the Clergy, or the well forming of his party amongst the Nobility, he may do many things not allowable in strictness of Law: the power and influence which he hath in the publick Government being proportionable to the strength of his Wit and Brain.

And here it is to be observed, that none but the Clergy and Nobility have any Suffrage in the Election of the King: that is to say, the 26. Palatines, and 60. Chaffellans, with the four Marſhals, and some others of the principal Officers of State; in behalf of the Nobility; and the Archbishops and Bishops in the name of the Clergy; but of the Commons none at all. Which is the reason why there is so much care taken to preserve the Privileges of the two first Orders, without obtaining any Immunities for relief of the third; who are most miserably oppressed on all sides, rather as bondmen than Tenants in respect of their Lords, and not so much Subjects as plain Slaves in regard of the King; whereof somewhat hath before been noted. Nor are the Common people excluded only out of these Elections, but have no place nor Vote in the Council of State, or in any of the general Diets: the first consisting only of the Prelates, Palatines, Chaffell-

Chaffellans, and principal Officers spoken of before, the nominating of which pertained to the King alone; the other aggregated of all persons of those several Orders, and the Delegates of each Province and principal City, sent thither for the rest of the Nobility, whom they represent. Yet notwithstanding this exclusion of the Commons from this Common-Council, they there conclude of all matters of publick Interest not properly determinable by the great Council or Council of State: in which perhaps (especially in the case of Taxes) the Commons may be more concerned than any other.

The Forces of this Kingdom or Commonwealth relate unto Land-Service only. For though they have a large Sea-coast upon the Baltick, yet the Daners, Swedes and Hanse Towns, having got the start of them, keep them from doing much at Sea. And for Land-Forces, they consist of Horſe especially, whereof they are able to raise 80000, (that is to say, 10000 out of Poland, and 60 or 70000 out of Lithuania and the Eastern Provinces) of which one half at least are thought to be for action. And this seems probable enough, in regard of those great Bodies of Horſe which Stephen and Sigismund the third had against the Moscovite, whereof the one had 40000, and the other 30000, (besides Draught-horſes) very well appointed. But for their Foot, they are not at so good a pass; their Infantry being for the most part Germans or Hungarians, whom they hire for money; of which two Nations King Stephen, in his Enterprise upon Livonia, had no less than 16000 to convey his Ordnance. Upon coincidence of this great number of Horſe, and their readiness to serve upon all occasions, the Polanders bear themselves so high, that they neither fear the power of a foreign Enemy, nor regard the fortifying of their Towns, or the building of Fortresses on their Frontiers; boasting that they are able to defend their Country without such Helps against any Nation whatsoever, and trusting more to a Castle of Bones (as was courageously said by Savage an English Gentleman) than to a Castle of Stones. And for the raising of these Horſe, the Gentlemen of the Country are bound by their Tenure, (like the Turk Timariots) not only to serve in person for defence of the Realm, but to maintain a certain number of Horſe in continual readiness, especially in those parts which lie next the Tartars, where their numbers are exceeding great, and with whom many times they join to afflict and harraſs their own Country, though in pay against them. Of these some serve in the manner of our Men at Arms, some like unto our Light-horſe, others like the Tartars. And these they call commonly by the name of Cofacks, (or Adventurers): a race of men trained up to steal, waste, and depopulate, wherever they come, having little but their Swords to live by; a murderous and wicked people, chiefly in their Drunkenness, and that not only towards Strangers, but their natural Countrymen. The cause of that Sedition which for some years past, hath more depopulated and distracted that flourishing Kingdom than all the Armies of the Turks.

As for the Revenues of this King, they are computed at 600000 Crowns per annum, drawn chiefly out of Salt and some Mines of Silver: the Profits arising from the Demesns of the Crown being for the most part given away in Pensions and Gratitudes to the Palatines, Chaffellans, and other great men of the Realm, to make them the more pliant to his desires. Most of which Sum is put up yearly in his Coſſers, or expended in the purchase of Estates for his younger Sons: his Daughters being married at the publick Expence, and the expence of his Household defrayed by the Lithuanians and most part of Poland, for the time that he remains amongst them. Nor do the Wars at any time exhaust his Treasure, in which case, by Decree of the Diets, he is unable to lay Impositions and Taxes upon the people, levied in the way of Excise, or upon their Lands: which do amount to such a Sum that by means hereof King Stephen maintained War three years against the Moscovite, without expending any thing of his own Revenue.

Chief Orders of Knighthood in this Kingdom are, 1. The Marian or Dutch Knights, instituted under the Walls of Acon or Ptolemais in the Holy Land, in a Church whereof, dedicated to the blessed Virgin, their Order was first allowed, from whence they are called Equites Mariani. The Institution was in the year 1190. The first Great Master was Henry Walpot. The Christian being beaten out of Syria, they first removed to Venice, and from thence to Marpurg in Hessia, where, and in some other parts of Germany, they were endowed with fair Revenues: hence they were named Equites Teutonic, or the Dutch Knights. Sent into Prussia by the Emperor Frederick the second Anno 1239, or called in, as some say, by the Moscovite against the Prussians, they fixed their Seat at Marinburg, under Sigismund the second Great Master, Anno 1340, or thereabouts. In the time of Ludovick, the 18. Great Master, they were forced to submit to Cafimir the fourth of Poland, Anno 1450; which was the occasion of the long War between them and the Polanders, continuing till the time of Albert of Brandenburg, the 24. and last Great Master in this Country, who surrendered his Order (as before is said) to Sigismund the first, by whom he was created the first Duke of Prussia. Such of the Knights as disliketh this action retired into Germany, where they chose one Walter Cronenberg Master of the Order: the Title being afterwards conferred upon Maximilian, one of the younger Sons of Maximilian the second, but the Order sensibly decaying, and at this time of little estimation in the World.

2. Of the Port glaive, or Sword-bearers, (Enſſeri in Latine) confirmed by Pope Innocent the third, by whom they were sent into Livonia, to defend the Preachers of the Gospel against the Infidels, at the first Conversion of that Country. Being too weak to effect that business, they united themselves with the Dutch Knights by the Popes authority, and instead of Knights of the Sword, were called Knights of the Cross. Separated therefrom in the time of Onorus their Great Master, Anno 1541, the Dutch Knights being then dispossessed of Prussia, and these inclining wholly to the Opinions of Luther, they a while subsisted of themselves. What became of them afterwards, and how the Order was extinguished, hath been shown already in Livonia.

The Arms of this Kingdom are quarterly, 1. Gules, an Eagle Argent, crowned and armed Or, for the Realm of Poland; and 2. Gules, a Chevalier armed Cap-a-pee, advancing his Sword, Argent, mounted on a barbed Courſer of the second, for the Dukedom of Lithuania.

There are in the whole Realm of Poland

Of the Romiſh Church, Archbishops 3. Bishops 19.
 Of the Greek Church, Archbishops 2. Bishops 6.

And so much for POLAND.

But this Division and the Subdivisions depending on it being since the coming in of the Turks almost out of use, we will now look upon it as it stands divided at the present, betwixt the Emperor, as King of Hungary, by a mixt Title of Defect and Election; and the great Turk, as Lord of the most part of it by Arms and conquest, two parts of three at least being forced into his possession. But here we are to understand, that by reason of the great Jealousies and Distrusts betwixt these great Princes, every ordinary Town is fortified and garrisoned like a Town of War, and so are almost all the Houses of the Nobility and Gentry throughout this Country: so that it were an infinite labour to specify in this place all those Towns and Fortresses which do occur in reading the Hungarian Histories of these later times. Some of the principal for Strength, Antiquity, or other mark of Estimation which is set upon them, we shall here subjoin.

And first in the Emperor's part of the Lower Hungary, we have; 1. Rab, on the meeting of the Danub with the River Rob, coming out of the Lower Hungary, whence the modern Dutch name, by Antoine called Avabo, by the French Javarian, by our present Latinists Javarinum. Memorable heretofore for being the Boundary of the two Pannonias, Inferior and Superior; heretofore divided: of late most principally for a strong Fortress against the Turks, by whom it was once taken, Anno 1594, but within four years after again recovered by the Industry of Monsieur de Vaudrecourt, a French Gentleman, as the French-men say; but as the German write, of the Earl of Swartzenburg, at that time Governour of Komara. 2. Altburg, in the Road leading towards Austria, a strong Town, and the best out-work of Vienna, for which cause most aimed at by the Turks, but without success. 3. Cafre-Novo, a new-erected Fortress, as the name importeth, but of special strength, erected purposefully, in the time of the Emperor Rodolph, to confront the Turks. 4. Sabaria, anciently the Metropolis of Pannonia Superior, the Birth-place of S. Martin Bishop of Tours; now of less account, by the Hungarians called Kimarrowinbath. Others conceive it to be that which the Dutch call Leibnitz. 5. Sridan, the Sidrana of Ptolemy in the Confines of Hungaria and Dalmatia, by the common people called Strigman. A Town of good repute, till destroyed by the Goths; but after made of more esteem by the Birth of St. Hieron, one of the four chief Fathers of the Latine Church, and for all parts of Humane Learning nothing inferior to the best of the Grecian Sages. 6. Sopron, (Sopronium in Latine) on the Borders of Austria. 7. Komara a strong piece, in an Island of the same name created by the Circling of the Danub, oft-times attempted by the Turks, but in vain at all times. Then in the Upper Hungary we have 8. Presburg, on the edge of Austria also, but on the North-side of the River, the Carnum of Anonimus, but by the modern Latines called Pozsonium; seated in a pleasant healthful Country, on the River Lye, whose waters the Danub there receiveth; in the Suburbs whereof, on the top of an high Mountain, standeth a goodly Castle, the ordinary Residence of the Emperours, as Kings of Hungary. For though it be a little City and not very beautiful, yet being safe by the Neighbourhood of Austria, it hath been made the Metropolis of this Kingdom since the loss of Buda. Before the Walls herofore did Count Dampierre, one of the chief Commanders of Ferdinand the second, in the Wars of Hungary and Bohemia. 9. Fildak, a place of great Strength and consequence taken by Solyman the Magnificent in his first Attempts upon this Kingdom, and lost by Amurat the third, the Turk in vain attempting the recovery of it. 10. Nitria, a Bishop's See on the River Bach. 11. Vacia, a Bishops See also, on the River Danubius, once in possession of the Turks, but restored again unto the Christians at the making of the Peace between the Emperor Rodolph and Sultan Achmet. 12. Cafrova, a strong piece towards Transylvania. 13. Lippe, in the Borders of that Country also, commanding the Entrances thereof and therefore much affected by the Princes or Vaindotes of that Province; possessed by whom in the latter times of the Emperor Rodolph, it was by them incorporated into Transylvania; but how long it continued so, I am not able to say. 14. Tokys, a place of great strength, and as great Fidelity, the people and Garrison herofore holding out for the Emperor Rodolph, Anno 1605, against some of his rebellious Subjects, in the time of so extreme a Famine, that the Soldiers did not only eat two Boys, but many times call lots who should eat one another. 15. Eperies, a place of no less consequence, and exemplary Loyalty. 16. Newfal, or Newhenfel, a strong Town, and so strongly fortified, not far from the spring-head of the River Gran, which in the year 1621 proved fatal to that great Commander the Count of Bucagy, who at the Siege herofore the Town being then in Rebellion against Ferdinand the second, Emperor and King of Hungary lost his life. For going privately to view some places of advantage for a general Assault, he fell into an Ambush of Hungarians, who suddenly set upon him, discomfited his small Party, killed first his Horse under him, and at last himself, having in that Skirmish received 16 wounds. There were slain with him at the same time also Torquato, an Italian Prince, Count Ferdugo, a Spanish Earl, and one of the Gentlemen of the House of Austria.

Places of most importance in the Turk possession are, 1. Buda, by the Dutch called Offen, supposed by some to be the Curia of Ptolemy; by others the Atrium of Anonimus; and to have took the name of Buda, either from Buda the Brother of Attila, said to be the Re-founder of it, or from the Budin, a Scythian People, mentioned in Herodotus. It is unevenly seated amongst Hills on the Southern Shore of the Danub, but in the most fruitful part of all the Country, exceedingly well fortified, especially by a strong Castle, thought to be impregnable, and therefore very carefully guarded by the jealous Turks; adorned with many Buildings, both private and publick and furnished with some Medicinal Bathes, which owe much of their pomp and sumptuousness to their new Masters the Turks, who took it from the Christians August 20. 1591. Solyman the Magnificent then being present at the taking of it. Before that time the Seat-Royal of the Kings of Hungary, and the chief City of the Kingdom; as now the Seat of the chief Bassa, or Lord-Lieutenant for the Grand Seigneur. 2. Alba Regalis, by the Dutch called Stul-Weissburg, betwixt the Danub and the Dreus, strongly, but unwisely seated, in the midst of an inaccessible Marsh, joined to the firm land by three broad Causeys, blockt up at the ends with three great Bulwarks; but for all the Situation of it, taken by the Turk Anno 1543; before that time the usual place both for the Coronation and Intermitt of the Kings of Hungary; recovered from the Turks, Anno 1601, and lost again unto them in the next year after. 3. Walpo, or Palpo, on the River Dravus, taken by Solyman marching towards the Alba Regalis, to leave no enemies behind him at the Siege of that City. 4. Gran, in Latine called Strigium, seated upon the Danub, but opposite to the Mouth of Gran, which arising in the Upper Hungary doth there end its course, whence this Town had the name of Gran, its founder, of a long time with the See of an Arch-bishop, who is the Primate of the Kingdom, and of great power in all business which concern the State; taken by the Turks Anno 1534, Solyman the magnificent being in person at the Siege, and lost again, Anno 1595, at what time Sit

Thomas

Thomas Arundel of Wardor Castle in Wiltshire carried himself so gallantly, that forcing the Water-Tower, and taking thence with his own hands the Turkish Banner, the Emperor Rodolph created him a Count of the Empire, and King Tamas afterwards made him Lord Arundel of Wardor; but the Christians were not suffered to keep it long; for being many times after besieged by the Turks, who were resolved not to end the War without it, it was finally recovered by them, Anno 1605. 5. Funkirchen, in Latine called Quinque Ecclesie, from five Churches in it, a Bishop's See, conceived to be the Tomburium of Animmus, taken by the Turks Anno 1566, and giving them a great Command on the River Dravus, upon which it is seated. 6. Sirmih, betwixt the Danub and the Sam, or Savus, now noted for a Vein of the best Wines, but otherwise of no estimation at the present, though heretofore of most account in all this Province; the Metropolis (as I conceive) of Pannonia Inferior, the Seat of the Præfatus Prætorio Illyric before the Division of the Empire, honoured with the personal Residence of many of the Emperours, and made in those respects the Stage of many great and memorable Actions. For here Vernatus or Brutatus, as other call him, took on himself the Purple Robe, and was declared Emperor by the Illyrian Souldiers lying here in Garrison: here, being deserted by his own Souldiers, he submitted himself unto Constantinus, the Son of Constantine the Great: here Gratian the Emperor, Son of Valentinian the first was born; and, finally here was held a Council against Phoebus, Bishop of this City, who held that Christ had no existence of God the Father till he was conceived and born of the Virgin, which Tenet, being contrary as well to that of the Arian as the Orthodox Prelates, was here condemned by both parties in the time of the said Constantinus, (who was there in person) Anno 356. 7. Ziget, a strong Town, situate in a Marsh-ground on the North-side of the Dra, taken by Solyman the magnificent, Anno 1566, who there ended his Days. 8. Maria, upon the Confluence of the Dra and the Danub, once a Roman Colony, and as remarkable in the Stories of elder times as 9. Belgrade, on the Confluence of the Sam and the Danub, hath been in the later. This last being a Town of divers names: first called Taurunum or Taurunum; after Alba Græcia, by the Dutch accordingly Greichs Weissburg, by the French and modern Latinists Belgrade and Belgradum, from a beautiful situation of it, hemmed in upon the North with the Danub, on the East with the Sam, on the other sides defended with strong Walls, deep Ditches, and impregnable Rampiers. It belonged anciently to the Despots of Servia, by whom it was conveyed over to Sigismund, King of Hungary, as best able to keep it, the Despots being satisfied with Lands and Territories of a better value. It was the Bulwark heretofore of Christendom against the Turks, who, received before it many great and notable Repulses, (of which the most memorable were those of Amurat the second, and Mahomet surnamed the Great;) but taken at last to the great loss and shame of the Christian World, not succouring the Defendants in convenient time, by Solyman the magnificent, Anno 1520. Then on the North-side of the River, in the Upper Hungary, there is 10. Pesth, over against Buda, on the River Danub. 11. Colucca, an Arch-bishop's See, on the same River also. 12. Zegedin, on the West-side of the River Tibis. 13. Ayria, an old Bishop's See; and strongly fortified, having a great Command over all those parts of the Country in vain besieged by Italy the Bassa of Buda with an Army of 36000 Turks, in the time of Solyman the Magnificent, Anno 1552, but taken by Mahomet the third, himself lying at the Siege in person, Anno 1578; not far from which, immediately after the taking of Ayria, Mahomet gave the Christians so great an Overthrow, that, if he had pursued his Victory, it is thought that he had annihilated the Conquest of Hungary; as on the other side, the Turks were so worried and disordered at first, (Mahomet himself and most of his Commanders flying out of the Field) that, had the Christians followed the chase, and not booked themselves to the Spoil of the Camp, they had in probability for ever freed that Kingdom from the Turkish Tyranny. This Battle, from a Village near unto which it was fought, was called the Battle of Kerflure, a Battle of so strange a Fortune, that the Conquerors were driven out of the Field, and the vanquished Army ran away with the Victory. 14. Hatroon, a very strong Town, and as strongly garrisoned, recovered by the Christians after two long Sieges, and many sharp Assaults, Anno 1558, and presently again abandoned, upon the noise of Mahomet's coming into Hungary, with a dreadful Army. 15. Temeswar, on the East of that River towards Transylvania, the ordinary Residence of a Turkish Bassa. 16. Gyula, a strong Town on the Borders of Transylvania, betrayed by Nicholas Keresk, Governour herofore, in the last year of Solyman; on a promise of some great Reward; but Selimus the Son of Solyman caused him to be put into a Barrel stuck full of Nails, with the points turned inwards, and so to be tumbled up and down till he (most miserably) died: there being on the Barrel this inscription written, viz. Here receive the reward of thy Avarice and Treason; Gyula thou seldest for Gold: if thou be not faithful to Maximilian thy natural Lord, neither wilt thou be true to me. 17. Singidun on the South of Gyula, betwixt which and Belgrade are the Fields of Maren, memorable for the slaughter of 50000 Turks, slain here in Battle under the fortunate Conduct of John Hunyadi.

The first Inhabitants of this Country on the North-side of the Danub, and the West of the Tis, or Tib is, were the Jazyges Mezani, and on the East-side or the Tis the Daci, known, but not conquered, by the Romans; on the South of the Danub the Pannoni, (by some called the Pames) subdivided into the Asdi Latavici, Wericiami, Jassii, Qseriati, and some others inhabiting the West parts thereof, for Pannonia Superior, and the Ercumales, Brouci, Aravisci, and Scordisci, dwelling in the Eastern parts, or Pannonia Inferior. First conquered by the Romans, Anno U.C. 719. L. Cornificus and Sexsus Pompeius being Consuls; but many times rebelling, and not fully subdued till forty years after the Infurrection of Bato, being then crushed by Augustus Caesar, and thereby the whole Province settled in Obedience. Divided first into two parts or Provinces, Superior and Inferior; out of which Savaria, and Valeria were after taken, as before is noted. Under the Romans it continued, till subdued by the Huns, a People not heard of in the time of the Roman Greatness, unless we take them, as some do, for the Chuni of Ptolemy. But being those Chuni are placed by him betwixt the Bastarna and the Revalani, on the South-West of Borythene, I see not how to fit that dwelling upon the Himis, who were shut up within the Fens of Palus Marotis, and by all the Writers of those times accounted a Nation not so much as heard of when they first set footing in Europe. Letting that therefore pass as an improbable and ill-grounded Conjecture, certain it is that from the Fen-Countries of Asia, on the other side of the Tanais, they came first into Europe, living in their own Country a poor and miserable life, till God thought fit to make use of them as a Scurge to chastise the Christians of the West, then grown luxurious, and almost incorrigible, by too much Felicity; and to that end miraculously opened them a Passage never found before. For having neither mind nor meaning to invade the Roman Empire, which possibly they had not heard of, nor knowing how to clear themselves of that uncomfortable Country in which they dwelt; it pleased the great Disposer of all things, by following an Hart or Stag which they had in chase, to throw them a safe passage into Europe through the Fens of Mæris, which before they thought to be unpassable. The retreat made by those Hunters at their coming back, of the port made by those Hunters at their coming back, of the rich and pleasant Land which they had for their Clans, with all the several Rascalties depending on them, to flock into Europe: into which they fell so suddenly and unexpectedly, that they forced the Goths, then dwelling on the North-side of the Ister, to fly over that River, and supplicate to the Emperor Valens for new Habitations. This happened in the year 373, Athanaricus the second, or Ermanaricus, (as Jornandes calls him) being then King of the Goths, and Balamir Captain of the Huns. Fleeted with this Victory, Balamir, or Balamber, (as Sigebert calls him) takes the name of King, Anno 386, or thereabout, and following the course of the Ister towards Pannonia, which he had an aim at, found a great Army raised on the other side of the River, of purpose to encounter with him, commanded by Detricus General for the Roman Army, and Macrinus, (or Matrimus) Commander in chief of the Pannonians. Both Generals pre-suming too much on the depth and wideness of the River, and knowing well that the Huns had neither Boat nor Ship to pass them over, betook themselves unto their Rest with too much security. But the Huns, to the number of 100000, having crossed the River upon Bladders, fell on the Quarters of the Romans, whom they flew like Sheep, Macrinus after this fought two Battles with them, in the first whereof he was victorious, there being lost on both sides about 30000 men: but in the second being slain, and his Army routed, the Huns possessed themselves of both Pannonia's, buying this Victory with the loss of 40000 men, in the year 401. Balamir being dead, Blada and Attila his Sons succeeded, Anno 436; and Odoas, dying also in the year 450, left Attila sole King of the Huns, that great Scourge of the Christian World, who having first wasted Ibrycum and Thrace, compelled the Emperor Theodosius the second to buy his Peace of him at the price of 6000 pound weight of Gold, and an yearly Tribute. Invited afterwards by Geiseric King of the Vandals in Africa to War upon the Goths of Spain, (out of which Country they had driven him) he forced his way through all the Nations between him and Gaul, and beating down all the Towns and Fortresses on the River Rhene, on that side of the Roman Empire, entered that Province in the Reign of the Valentinian, divided at that time betwixt the Romans, French, Burgundians, and the Goths of Spain. Discomfited by Aetius and the Kings of those Nations then in League against him, in that famous Battle near Cholais, spoken of before, (with the loss of 18000 of his men) he went back by the way of Italy, where he sicked Aquileia, Millain, Vincenia, Pavia; and not without much difficulty was diverted from the Spoil of Rome, by the intercession of Pope Leo: committing in all places such unpeakeable Cruelties, that he was always after called (as he styled himself) Malleus orbis, and Flagellum Dei. Returning home he picked a Quarrel with Mariarius the Eastern Emperor, as if the Tribute promised him by Theodosius had not been well paid. But being pacified for the present, and mindful of his former project upon the Goths, he resolved once again to try his Fortune with that People; and was again defeated by them under the Conduct of Theodismund the third King of the Frigoths, or Goths of Spain, and so returned ingloriously to his Country. Choked after with his own blood, violently breaking out at his Nostrils on his Wedding-night, he left Pannonia to his Sons, named Hernac, Aladaricus and Chabas, who, disagreeing amongst themselves about the Kingdom gave an advantage to the Goths; then possessed of Dacia, to make themselves Masters of this also; who were scarce through-warm in their new Estates, when sent by Zeno the Emperor into Italy against Odoacer where they finally perished. After this time we hear no more of the Goths in Pannonia, or any-where of the Huns, at all, unless acting under the Avars, or joining with them in the name of Hun-Avars, as some think they did.

The Country, being thus left to the next Invader, was presently possessed by the Longobards, said to be originally of Scandia, and there called Wimili, (and of the Wimilith in Scandia Jornandes speaketh) afterwards, ob longas barbas, Longobardi. Concerning this last name, take along with you this old Wives Tale, recited, but not approved of, by Paulus Diaconus. The Vandals, warring upon the Wimili went unto Goddan, (he should rather have said Wodin) to sue for the Victory: which the Wimili hearing, wrought by countermine, and sent Gambitta, the Mother of their King Anjon, on the like bulwicks to Frea, Goddan's Wife. So it was that Goddan had promised the Vandals, that they should be victorious whom he saw first in the morning: Whereupon Frea, willing to please Gambitta, and not loving, as it seemeth, the sight of Men, gave order that all the Women of the Wimili, parting their Hair, bringing one her Lover one Cheek, the other over the other, and tying both under their Chin, should appear betimes before the Window the next morning. This they did, and the fleeing them to her Husband, he demanded of her, Qui sunt isti Longobardi? Hence the occasion of the name. And like enough they might be called so from the length of their beards, though otherwise the whole Tale be vain and foolish. Compelled by scarcity of Victuals to seek new Habitations, they killed first on the Island Rugia and the adjacent Countries; and settled about the time of Cornelius Tacitus in those parts of Germany, which now make up the Bifindricks of Meyburg and Halberstadt. Afterwards, finding that Country too narrow for them, they left their Dwellings there, and fell upon some parts of Poland; next on this Pannonia: and at last, having tarried in Pannonia 42 years, or thereabouts, at the solicitation of Nannus, (provoked by many Indignities from the Emperor Seppia, the Wife of Justinus the second) An. 568, under the leading of their King Alboinus, they went into Italy; and there lost their Kingdom; being at the end of 206 years overthrown by the power of Charles the Great, the mightiest Monarch of the West. Of their Kings, before their coming into this Country, I shall only make mention of Lamifus their third King, and of him this Story. Agimond, the second King of the Lombards, one morning went a-hunting: as he was riding by a Fifth-pond, he espied seven Children prajling for life, which one, as said Paulus Diaconus, (it may be many Harlots) had been delivered of, and most barbarously thrown into the water. The King amazed at this spectacle, put his Boat-spear or Hunting-pole among them. One of the Children handed the spear, and the King, softly drawing back his hand, wasted the Child to the Shore. This Boy he named Lamifus, from Lama, which in their language signifieth a Fifth-pond. He was in the King's Court carefully brought up, where there appeared in him such tokens of Vertue and Courage, that after the death of Agimond, he was by the Lombards chosen to succeed him. This Lamifus, together with his Predecessors, and Successors, were thus Recorded.

The History of this People epitomized by Du Baras (but with far more of the Poet than the true Historian) is summed up thus.

The Lombard strong, who was in Scowland nurs'd,
 On Rugeland and Livonia sojourn'd first.
 Then having well reveng'd on the Bulgarian
 The death of Agimond, the bold Barbarian
 Surprized Poland: thence anon he presses
 In Danow's Streams to rinse his Amber Tresses.
 When he freighted after had surrendered
 The doubled-named Ister's flow'ry bed
 To scar-fac'd Hugn's; he hunteth furiously
 The rest of Gauls from wealthy Insurbie.
 There reigns 200 years, triumphing fo,
 That Royal Tefin might compare with Pe.
 Which after all in French men hands again,
 Won by the Sword of worthy Charlemaign.

The Longobards having thus left the Stage, the Avars entered. Some say they were the Avarin of Pliny, a Sarmatian People; but most probably (as Nicetus) a People of Scythia, inhabiting about Palus Maotis. They first began to stir in the reign of Tiberius the 2. (forced by the Turks, their next neighbours, to pass farther Westward) and gave that Emperor's Forces a great Overthrow at the Mouth of Danubius. Tiberius notwithstanding did somewhat quiet them; but he being dead, they took heart again, and with great Courage warred upon Mauritius, his next Successor. Their King at that time was called Caganus, we may English it Cham, as not being the proper name of any one; but the common Attribute of all their Chiefs. This Caganus made his first Wars upon the Turks, which People were about that time first made known to the Inhabitants of Europe, and with the help of the remainder of the Huns, invaded and possessed Pannonia, vanquishing both the Emperor's Forces, and the Goths and Gepide, who had still kept some footing in it, and on the departure of the Lombards were of no final power, the name of Goths being swallowed up in that of the Gepide, though not quite extinct. After this Blow Mauritius raised a second War, but more with an intent to revenge himself on his own Soldiers, which had formerly offended him, than with hope of prevailing against the Enemy. Comenichus, according to the Emperor's directions, betrayeth his Army; 12000 of them were slain, and the rest taken. Caganus, an heroic and merciful Conquerour, offers to ransom them for 81. 6d. a piece (for so much was that the Emperor, as much loving his Gold as hating his Soldiers; had denied that Condition; he offered them all for one Nannus, and after for half a one: but being also here unsatisfied, he put them also to the Sword. For this cause the rest of the Soldiers not long after made Phocas, one of the Centurions, Emperor; and he most barbarously stewed the Emperor in his own Blood, putting him, his Wife, Friends, and Children to the Sword. After this we find mention of them in the time of Phocas and Heraclius, foraging Thrace to the very Walls of Constantinople, afterwards settled in Pannonia and part of Noricum, containing now the Upper Hungary and some part of Austria, divided from the Bavarians by the River Enns. They continued possessed hereof till the time of Charles the Great, by whom after a War of eight years, they were utterly subdued, and driven out of these parts; their Country being peopled with new Dutch Colonies: the remainders of them were forced to betake themselves into Transylvania, or that part of Hungaria which lieth beyond the River Tibiscus, there subject for a time to Suanibogius, King of the Moravians; in whose overthrow by the Hungarians they were so broken, that their Name was never heard of.

And so we come to the Hungarians, the last and principal Actors on the Stage of this Kingdom, the givers of the present Name: before whose coming into this Country it had no other name than that of Pannonia; for ought I can find, in any Authors for those Times. A Scythian People; as the Huns and Avars were, by Jornandes calls the Hungary; first known in Europe by their Aids in the time of the Emperor Amulphus, when, wandering in Sarmatia Europæa without any certain A-board, they were by him called into this Country against Suanibogius King of the Moravians before mentioned; from whom they took Transylvania, and so much of the modern Hungary as lieth on both sides of Tibiscus, inhabited at that time by the Slaves and some scattered remnants of the Avars, whom they killed up, or forced to seek new Habitations, planting themselves in those places which they took from them, and now the Upper Hungary. In the right of Lewis the 4. Successor to Amulphus, they passed over the Danow, and subdued Pannonia, dismembering it from the Empire and name of Germany: after that they ranged with unmerciful Cruelty over all Germany, Italy, Greece, Scythia, Dacia, till, broken by the Forces of the Dutch Emperours, and mollified by the softness of the Christian Religion, they became more quiet. Their Government at the first was under Dukes: Stephen the 4. Duke, on his receiving of the Gospel, being honoured with the Title of King, enjoyed by his Successors to this very day. In the time of Ladislaus, furnished the Saints, Dalmatia and Croatia were added to the Crown of Hungary, bequeathed to him by his Sister Zelemira, the Widow of the last King. In that of Bela the 4. the Tartarians, to the number of 50000 fighting men, brake into this Country, and like a violent Whirlwind carried all before them, Anno 1248, tyrannizing here for 3 years space, committing merciless Massacres, and making horrible Spoils wherever they came. In that of Stephen the 4. Austria and Bulgaria were made tributary. By the Daughters of Bela and Stephen, both the 4. of those names, the Houses of Naples and Bohemia came to claim the Kingdom of Hungary; as Lewis the first, by Elizabeth his Mother, Sister of Constance the 2. did the Kingdom of Poland. The rest of their affairs shall be briefly touched at in the following Catalogue of

 - 1047 6. Andrew, eldest Son of that Ladislaus.
 - 1059 7. Bela, the Brother of Andrew.
 - 1062 8. Solomon, the Son of Andrew, expelled his Kingdom by
 - 1075 9. Geisa II. Son of Bela.
 - 1078 10. Ladislaus, furnished the Saint, Brother of Geisa the second.
 - 1096 11. Coloman, Son of Geisa 2.
 - 1114 12. Stephen II. Son of Coloman.
 - 1132 13. Bela II. Nephew of Geisa the 2. by his Son Almus.
 - 1142 14. Geisa III. Son of Bela the 2.
 - 1162 15. Stephen III. Son of Geisa the 3.
 - 1172 16. Bela III. Brother of Stephen the 3.
 - 1191 17. Emericus, Son of Bela the 3.
 - 1201 18. Ladislaus II. Son of Emericus, reigned but 6 months, being slain by Treason very young, and without Illue.
 - 1201 19. Andrew II. Son of Bela the 3. and Brother of Emericus.
 - 1236 20. Bela IV. Son of Andrew the 2.
 - 1271 21. Stephen IV. Son of Bela the 4.
 - 1273 22. Ladislaus III. Son of Stephen the 4.
 - 1290 23. Andrew III. Nephew to Bela the 4. by his Brother Stephen.
 - 1302 24. Charles, furnished Martel Son of Charles King of Naples, by Mary, Daughter to Stephen the 4. Against whom was chosen Wenceslaus King of Bohemia, Son of Wenceslaus the second, and of Anne his Wife, Daughter of Bela the fourth, and after three years Otho of Bavaria, descended from Elizabeth, another of the Daughters of Bela the fourth, was chosen also by a Faction against Wenceslaus. But Wenceslaus surrendering his Claim to Otho, and Otho not long after being forced to renounce his Title, Charles Martel remained King of the whole.
 - 1345 25. Ludovicus, Nephew to Charles Martel by his Son Caribert, succeeded King of Poland also, in right of Elizabeth his Mother, Sister of Casmir the 2.
 - 1383 26. Charles II. King of Naples, descended from Charles of Naples, and Mary, Daughter of Stephen the 4. before mentioned, by their Son John of Durazzo, one of the younger Brothers of Charles Martel, poisoned after a short Reign by the Widow of the former King, to make a way for her Daughter to the Crown.
 - 1387 27. Sigismund Emperour, King of Bohemia, and Duke of Luxemburg, succeeded in right of Mary his Wife eldest Daughter of Lewis or Ludovicus, her younger Sister Edugis being Queen of Poland.
 - 1438 28. Albert of Austria, Emperour, and King of Hungary and Bohemia, in right of Elizabeth his Wife, the Daughter of Sigismund.
 - 1410 29. Ladislaus or Vladislaus, Son of Jagello King of Poland, in the minority of Ladislaus the Son of Albert chosen King of Hungary; unfortunately slain at the Battle of Varnus, with 30000 of his people; and perhaps his Perjury might deserve it. For having made and sworn a Truce with the Turk, the Pope's Legate, upon a seeming advantage, absolved him of his Oath, and drew him into the Field. At the beginning the Christians had the better: but at the last, Amurath the 2. against whom they fought, lifting up his eyes to Heaven, and desiring Christ to look upon the perfidious dealing wherewith his Followers had dishonoured him, re-encouraged his men, and so got the Victory.

1444 30. Ladislaus V. King of Bohemia, the Son of Albert by Elizabeth, Daughter of Sigismund and Mary.

1458 31. Matthias Corvinus, Son of the famous Hunniades, after the death of Ladislaus the 5. King of Hungary.

1491 32. Vladislaus II. or Ladislaus VI. Son of Casmir the 4. of Poland, and of Elizabeth the Daughter of Albert, succeeding in the Kingdoms of Hungary and Bohemia; his three younger Brothers successively in that of Poland.

1517 33. Ludovicus II. King of Hungary and Bohemia, both born dead before the ordinary course of nature; being in the 21. year of his Age, and in the tenth of his Reign, unfortunately drawn unto the Field, to encounter Solyman the Magnificent, one of the hardest Captains in his time. The Battle was fought at a Village called Mogacz, or Mugacz, just betwixt Belgrade and Buda; in which 19000 of the Hungarians were slain, and the young King drowned in the Flight. A most lamentable Discomfiture. Lewis thus dead, John Sepusio, Vaivod or Governour of Transylvania, was by the States chosen King of Hungary. But Ferdinand, Archduke of Austria, and Brother unto Charles the fifth, challenged the Kingdom in right of Anne his Wife, Daughter to Vladislaus, and Sister to Lewis King of Hungary and Bohemia. On this Pretence he invaded the Kingdom, and drove out John his Competitor; who, to recover his Right, called Solyman the Magnificent into the Country, who took so fast footing in it, that his Successors could never since be removed.

1527 34. John Sepusio, Vaivod of Transylvania, chosen King upon the Death of Ludovicus, the 2. outed by Ferdinand of Austria, restored by Solyman the Great Turk died Anno 1540: after whose death the Hungarians caused his Son Stephen, an Infant, to be crowned King in his Cradle, of which he was immediately deprived by Solyman his pretended Patron, who, under colour of preserving that Kingdom for him, seized Buda, and other the chief Towns thereof, which he after kept unto himself.

1540 35. Ferdinand of Austria, elected King of Bohemia, in respect to the Lady Anne, his Wife, Sister of Ludovicus the 2. Anno 1527, did in the same Right lay Claim to the Crown of Hungary, chosen to which by a party prepared for him, he was always in contention with with John de Sepusio; each of them acknowledged King by their several Factions: but he was by both sides received on the death of John.

1572 37. Rodolphus, Emperour, &c. Son of Maximilian.

1608 38. Matthias, Brother of Rodolphus, afterwards Emperour.

1618 39. Ferdinand II. of Graz, next Heir unto Matthias of the House of Austria, afterwards Emperour, &c. against whom a Party of Hungarians called in Bethlen Gabor, Prince of Transylvania, whom they elected for their King intending (as they said) to crown him also. But the Affairs of Bohemia going on the Emperour's side, Gabor relinquished his pretensions, and hearkned to a Peace betwixt them.

1625 40. Ferdinand III. Son of Ferdinand the second, chosen and crowned King in the life of his Father, and in the year 1627 King of Bohemia also, succeeding after him in the Empire, and now living, Anno 1648.

This Kingdom doth pretend it self to be Elective, and to have special Privileges indulged them by their former Princes; and anciently indeed it was so in both respects, the last especially; King Andrew giving authority to his Prelates, Peers, and other people, Ut sine nota alicujus Insultatus, &c. that without any imputation of Disloyalty they might contradict, oppose, and resist their King, if he did any thing in violation of their Laws and Sanctions. But both their liberty of Elections and pretence of Privileges have been so shaken and restrained by their Kings of the House of Austria, that the Elections are become matter of Formality only, and their Privileges depending wholly on their Prince's pleasure, now grown too potent for them to contend withal, unless they should betray their Country into the hands of the Turks. To whom some of them have exprest some strong Inclinations, the Oppressions laid upon them by the Austrian Family being deemed unaffordable.

The Forces of this Kingdom, when it was entire, may best be seen by those great Armies which they have brought into the Field against the Turk. By whom two parts of three being since subdued, that which remains must not be thought able to answer the proportion of former times; though they have done more than could be reasonably expected from it. For at the Battle of Kecsehar, Anno 1596, there were 6000 Hungarian Horse, and 10000 Foot of this Nation only; besides those of Germany and Transylvania: and the next year, notwithstanding the Discomfiture of that Army, they raised no less than 20000 Horse and Foot, on the notice of some Preparations among the Turks. 'Tis true, their Foot are commonly but meanly armed; the defect wherein is rather to be imputed to the Prince, than unto the people, who can but bring their Bodies (which is all they have) for defence of their Country. And for their Horse, (whom they call Heyducks) maintained in continual readiness at the charge of the Nobility and principal Gentry, they are next Cousins to the Cosacks, almost as mischievous as they, and hold as strict Intelligence with the Turks as those do with the Tartars.

The chief Revenues of this Kingdom come from the Silver-Mines, out of which is yearly raised about a million and a half of Guildens. Maximilian the second made it up two millions, by seizing on the Lands of Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, and assigning annual Pensions to the Bishops, Canons, and other Religious persons. Most of which Sum comes clearly to the Emperour's Coffers, the Precidary Souldiers being paid with Contribution-money raised upon the Country; and the Lieutenant-general, whose entertainment comes to 30000 Dollars yearly, defrayed upon their Purves also.

The chief Order of Knighthood in this Kingdom was that of the Dragon, instituted by Sigismund Emperour and King hereof, at such time as by the Council of Constance against John Hus and Hierom of Prague, and by the Intercessions of his Sword proved upon their Followers, he had cast down (as he conceived) the Dragon of Heretic and Schism. But the Device proved of no long continuance, expiring almost with the Author.

The Arms of Attila the Hun, once the King of this Country by the name of Pannonia, are said to have been Guel, a Falcon displayed Or, murrened and crowned Argent. But the Arms of the Kingdom at this time are Barrewife of eight pieces, Guel and Argent.

SCLAVONIA.

SCLAVONIA is bounded on the East with Servia, Macedonia, and Epirus, from which it is parted by the River Drinus, and a Line drawn from thence unto the Adriatick, on the West with Carniola in Germany, and Istria in the Seignory of Venice, from which last it is divided by the River Asia, on the North with Hungary, on the South with the Adriatick Sea. So called from the Slaves, or Slavi, a Sarmatian People, of whom more anon.

It contains in length from Asira to the River Drinus, according to Pliny's Computation, 800 Italian miles, the greatest breadth being 325 of the same miles. But others reckon the length of it at no more than 480 miles: who may be reconciled with Pliny by supposing this, that there last measure in a straight and direct Line from River to River; and that Pliny coasted by the Creeks and Reaches of the Adriatick. It is situate in the Northern Temperate Zone, betwixt the middle Parallels of the sixth and seventh Climates; so that the longest Day in Summer is about fifteen hours and an half.

The Country is generally fruitful of all those Commodities which are found in Italy, to which it is little inferior; yielding not only Wine and Oyl in very good plenty, but good store of Cattle; and of wild Beasts of pleasure is no want at all; some rich Veins also of Gold and Silver. The Northern parts are mountainous, cold for the most part lying under Snows, not capable of Wine, or any the like Productions which require much Heat. But even these mountainous parts afford very good Pasturage, and breed a wealthy race of Sheep, which bring forth young twice a year, and are shorn four times. Nor do the Sea-coasts come behind in advancing the Profit of the People, not only yielding store of Fish, but the benefit of many excellent and convenient Havens.

The People are courageous, proud, stubborn, and untractable, of strong Bodies and able constitutions, fit for works of Drudgery; and so employed by the Venicians, when first brought under their Command: who, using them in all servile Offices both at home and abroad, occasioned the neighbouring Nations to call their Villains or Bond-Servants, as they of Venice did by the name of Slaves; that being originally as to this People the name, not of their Condition, but of their Ancestors and Country.

The Christian Faith was here planted, I mean in reference to this People who do now inhabit it, about the time of Charles the Bald, Emperor of the West, Anno 877, Sueropius being the first of their Kings who embraced the Gospel. But lying in the mid-way of Greece, and Italy, the Religion of the Church of Rome, and that of the Greek Church are both allowed of; that of the Greeks being as prevalent in the East parts hereof, as that of Rome is in the Western. But here it is to be observed, that though this People, according to their Division into East and West; follow the Rites and Ceremonies of those several Churches; yet on both sides it is indulged them to celebrate Divine Offices in their natural Language, contrary to the usage of the Church of Rome in all places else. And yet the people are not all of the Christian Faith, the Turkish and Mahometan prevailing in those Towns and Territories under their Obedience.

But though they be not of one Religion, they are all of one Language, which is the old Sarmatian (or Scythian) Tongue, generally spoken in the Empire of Russia, Livonia, Poland, Silesia, Bohemia, Moravia, some part of Hungary, Istria, Scythia, where we now are, Dacia, Epirus, Georgia, Mongrelia, (both in Asia) and by all the Captains, Officers, and other Souldiers of the Turkish Empire: the Language generally spreading over all those Countries which either were Sarmatian in their first Original, or made theirs by Conquest under the united name of Slaves, or otherwise intermixt with them by the necessity of Commerce and Trade, or dispatch of their common Buusinesses. Inasmuch as, taking in the Subdivisions of the Provinces and Countries before specified, it is affirmed by Gesner, a right learned man, that there are no fewer than threefold Nations which have the Scythian Tongue for their vulgar Language.

Chief Mountains in this Country are those called Scardonia, (from Scardonia, one of the best Towns of Istria) dividing Dalmatia in the middle, and extending along the Coasts thereof; by Ptolemy called Arduum. Of Rivers those of special note amongst the Ancients were, 1. Titius, now Varischa; separating Istria from Dalmatia. 2. Asira, now Asja, the utmost bound upon the West as 3. Drimsi is upon the East: of which the first fell into the Bay of the Adriatick, which is called Gulfus Quernero, (Sinus Planaticus by the Ancients;) the other into the Sav or Savus, somewhat West of Budgrade. 4. Narvon, now Narento, running not far from Epidaurum.

The Boundaries and Land-Marks being thus set out, I should proceed to the Division of the Country as now it standeth. But I must first look on it as it stood in the time of the Romans: in whose time that part of the whole Province which lay from the River Asira to the Titius was named Liburnia and Istria; that from the Titius to the Drinus was called Dalmatia. But the Istrians being the stoutest and more warlike People, and such as created greatest Troubles to the Romans, it pleased the Conquerors, when they had fully subdued both Nations, to call the whole Country by the name of Istria; and not so only, but to extend this name over all their Provinces (the Diocese of Thrace excepted) which lay betwixt the Alps and the Euxine Sea, the Adriatick and the Danube, for so far the Jurisdiction of the Præfatus Prætorius of Istria did in fact extend. Hic Præfatus (saith Zosimus) Constantinus, cui Insituatur, Macedones attribuit, Thessalos, Creteneses, Greciam, et circumjacentes Insulas, Epirum, Arumque, Illyricos, Dracos, Triballos, Pannonias, Valerium asque Myriam insuperiorum. And that all these did then pass by the name of Istria appear as well by that of Pollis in the Life of Claudius, the second, expressly saying, Illyricum, Thraciam, Myriam, Daciam.

Dacos Dalmatiam & Pannoniam continebat; as by that of Socrates the Historian, who lib. 32. cap. 10. calleth Sirmium the chief Town of Pannonia Inferior, and lib. 5. cap. 6. The Scythia, the chief City of Macedon, Urbes Illyricas, or Illyrian Cities. By which account Istria, in the largest extent of that name, contained no less than 18 Provinces of the Roman Empire; that is to say, 1. Noricum Andeterranum, 2. Noricum Ripense, 3. Pannonia Superior, 4. Pannonia Inferior, 5. Valeria, 6. Savia, 7. Dalmatia, 8. Moesia Superior, 9. Dardania, 10. Dacia Mediterranea, 11. Dacia Ripensis, 12. Macedonia, 13. Thessaly, 14. Achaia, 15. Crete, 16. Epirus Vetus, 17. Epirus Nova, and 18. Prævalitana. These 18 Provinces being cast or made up into three Dioceses, viz. the Diocese of Istria specially so called, containing the seven first, 2. the Diocese of Macedon, containing the seven last, and 3. the Diocese of Dacia, comprehending the other four, were governed by the Præfatus Prætorius for Istria, who had first his chief Seat and Residence at Sirmium before mentioned. But in the Division of the Empire betwixt the Sons of Theodosius the Great into the Eastern and Western, the Diocese of Istria specially so called (after that named Illyricum Occidentale) was laid unto the Western Empire, under the Governance of the Præfatus Prætorius of Italy; and thereupon the Seat of Residence of the Præfatus Prætorius for Istria removed from Sirmium unto Thessalonica. So that we are now to look upon Istria in a stricter Notion, as a Diocese of the Western Empire, containing the seven Provinces before specified, whereof both Noricum, both Pannonia, and Valeria (if at least Stiermark be that Valeria, as some say it is) have been described already in their proper places. There now remain only Savia and Dalmatia to be spoken of: the first containing all those parts of this Country lying on both sides of the Savus (whence it had the name;) the last those parts heretofore which lie towards the Sea, known by the ancient name of Dalmatia, the Region of Illyria properly so called being added to it. But as new Lords give new Laws, so they give new Names: the Country being divided by the Scavo into two Kingdoms, viz. of Croatia, and Dalmatia; of which the first contained the Province of Savia, the last took up the whole Province of Dalmatia, bounded as before, but keeping the name of Scythia to it self alone, being indeed the only Province in which the name and memory of the Scavi is retained amongst us. Afterwards as it came to be divided (as at last it was) betwixt the Kings of Hungary and the State of Venice, we find it subdivided into three 6 parts; that is to say, 1. Windischland, 2. Croatia, 3. Bosnia, 4. Dalmatia, 5. Liburnia, or Contado di Zara, and 6. the Scythian Island.

1. WINDISCHLAND.

WINDISCHLAND is bounded on the East with part of the Lower Hungary, from which it is separated by a Line drawn from St. Nicolaus near the River Dravus, to the Town of Polega, standing on a little River which falls into the Savus; on the West with Carniola, or Krain a Province of the Archdukedom of Austria; on the North with the River Dravus, on the South with Croatia. It is thus called by the Dutch, as the Land or Country of the Winithi, or Wendi, the greatest Nation of the Slaves, whom generally they call by the name Windisch; and anciently, for so much of it as lieth on the North of the Savus, accounted part of Pannonia Inferior; as afterwards of the Province of Savia, till conquered by the Slaves, and laid unto their Possessions, from them named Windischland, as before.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Windischgratz, located on the Dravus, the Venundria and Vindemana of the Ancients. 2. Sagana, near unto the Savus. 3. Gradiska, on the South, and 4. Zagabria, on the North of the same River: from which last a great part of this Country is called Comitatus Zagabrinus. 5. Novigrad, on the Savus also, but more near to Germany. 6. Petrovina, situate at the foot of the Mountains which are between the Savus and the Dravus; and divided Hungary from Scythia. 7. Sissek, or Sisthen, (the Sissa of Pliny and Antoninus) situate on the Sav, over against Zagabria, where it receiveth the River Kulp, famous for the notable Recitance which the Turks there found, Anno 1593, who, hoping by the Conquest of this Province to open a free passage into Germany, entered it with a puissant Army, (having in their way taken the Castle of Offrowitz, and the strong Town of Whititz, in Croatia) and late down very strongly entrenched before this Town. But the Town held it out most gallantly against all their Batteries and Assaults, till relieved by a power of Germans who came to succor them; by whom 8000 of the Turks were slain in the place, and most of the rest drowned in the River Savus as they fled hastily and (through that great haste) blindly from the Sword of the Conqueror.

This Province, for the most part, is under the Princes of the House of Austria, as Kings of Hungary, to which Crown it formerly belonged: those parts of it which lie next to Hungary, on the North and East, groaning under the Tyranny and Bondage of the Turkish Garrisons.

2. CROATIA.

CROATIA is bounded on the North with Windischland, from which it is parted by the River Una, or Wana, on the East with Bosnia, on the South with Liburnia, or Contado di Zara, on the West with Carniola. The reason of the name I find not among my Authors, but only it was imposed by the Slaves at their first coming hither, who comprehended under this name all the Island parts of Scythia, from the Mountain Arduum to Pannonia, including Bosnia and Windischland, though distinguished afterwards.

The Country is for the most part cold, mountainous and hilly, overlaid by the Branches of the Mountains Babii, spoken of by Ptolemy; yet reasonably fruitful; stored with all necessary Provisions for the life of man, and would yield more increase and profit both to Lord and Tenant, were it not for the still neighbourhood of the Turks, to whose Tyranny and Oppressions it hath been and is still exposed. The People for the general are held to be good Soldiers, mentioned in our modern Stories by the name of Crabats.

Chief Towns in it are, 1. Masch, or Mosch, bordering upon Germany, the Alera of the Ancients. 2. Offrowitz, a strong Fort on the same Frontier. 3. Whititz, by the Dutch called Zibigen, by the Ancients Fuinim, the Metropolis or chief place of the Country, encompassed like an Island by the River Una, and fortified with strong Works by the help of Art; but taken by the Turks, Anno 1592, and all the Soldiers in it cruelly murdered, contrary to the Articles agreed on at the Surrender of Zeng, 5. Wacker, 6. Tarnow, 7. Modrichitz, of which little memorable.

This Country, with the rest included anciently under this name, was one of the two Kingdoms of Scythia, the Princes whereof were usually entituled Kings of Croatia and Dalmatia. In the year 1007 the Venicians having before possessed themselves of some Towns on the Sea-side, first set footing there. How the whole Country of Scythia came to the Crown of Hungary shall be shewn anon. It is held a part of it, in the right thereof, by the House of Austria; part of it by the Turks, in the way of Conquest: the Venetians having now no share in it, for ought I can find.

3. BOSNIA.

BOSNIA is bounded on the East with Serbia, a Province of Dacia, on the West with Croatia, on the North with the River Savus and the East parts of the Lower Hungary, on the South with Dalmatia. So called, as some think, from the River Bosna, which runneth through it; as others, from the Bessi, a People of Dacia, driven out of their Country by the Bulgari; and removing thither, by the Change of a Vowel called Bessi, whence the Country Bosnia.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Jajica, by the Latines called Jajzga, situate on the top of an high Hill, at the bottom whereof it is almost encompassed with two Rivers, which there uniting pass from thence unto the Savus. The Town, by reason of the rocky Precipices of the Hill, the Unfordableness of the River, and an inaccessible Castle, is held to be impregnable: the Metropolis in former times of this petty Kingdom, and the ordinary Sepulchre for the Kings thereof. 2. Warbosna, at this time the chief Town of the Country, but now walled about. 3. Caracach, the usual Residence or Retiring-place of the Bosnian Kings. 4. Schmanica, not much observable. 5. Darobica, the first Town taken by Mahomet the Great in his Conquest of this Kingdom; as 6. Clissa was the last, the unfortunate King Stephen being taken in it.

This Country anciently accounted of as a part of Croatia, together with it was united to the Crown of Hungary, under the Patronage and Homage whereof it was erected into a Kingdom, but the precise time when, I find not. Some say about the year 1420. If so, a Kingdom of late date, and short continuance. For in the year 1464 Mahomet the Great, first Emperor of the Turks, having taken Constantinople, and almost all the rest of Greece, call his eye upon it, suddenly surpris'd it, and having taken Stephen the last King heretofore, most barbarously commanded him to be slay'd alive. After whose death this Kingdom was converted to a Province of the Turkish Empire, and governed by one of the Bassia's of it, as it still continueth.

4. DALMATIA.

DALMATIA is bounded on the East with Albania, from which it is parted by the River Drino; on the West with the Tiatis, (now Variscia) which divides it from Liburnia; on the North with Bosnia, on the South with the Adriatick Sea. This only of all the Provinces of Scalavonia retaineth its ancient Name and Bounds. So called from Dalmatium, the chief Town hereof in the time of the Romans, from which the People were called Dalmatae, and the Country Dalmatia.

The Country in the time of the Romans was full of Woods, and those Woods of Robbers, who from thence issued out to make Spoil and Booty. Dalmata sub Sylvis agunt, inde ad Latrocinia promptissimi, saith the Historian. And by the advantage of these Woods they intercepted and discomfited Gabinus, one of Cesar's Captains, marching through their Country with 1000 Horse and 15 Companies of Foot towards Macedonia, to the Aid of his General against Pompey. But their Woods being destroyed, they became more peaceable, and, instead of Robberies by Land, began to exercise themselves at Sea in the way of Merchandizing, to which their large Sea-coasts and commodious Havens served exceeding fitly.

Places of most consideration in it are, 1. Sebenico, on the Sea-side, not far from the Influx of Tiatis or Variscus, by Ptolemy called Scium, in whose time a Colony of Roman Soldiers was sent hither by the Emperor Claudius. 2. Salonia, a Roman Colony also, one of the Juridical Resorts for these parts of the Province, and the ordinary Arsenal for their Natives. Renowned in ancient Stories for the Retreat of Diocletian, a native of this Country, who, having governed the Roman Empire 20 years with much Felicity, but a great deal of Cruelty, depos'd himself, and retired to this City, where he followed the Trade of a Gardner, working with his own hands, and observing with great content the productions of Nature. Inasmuch that when Maximianus Herculius, his Associate (who at his perswasion had done the like) invited him to resume the Empire, he returned this answer, Urnam posuisti olivæ Olea nostris manibus plantata, &c. That if he would come unto Salonia, and see how well the Words which he had planted with his own hands did thrive and prosper, he would never trouble his head with Crowns, nor his hands with Scepters: a rare expression of a settled and contented mind. The name and some of the Ruines do still remain, to preserve the memory of so remarkable a place.

3. Spalato, East of Sebenico; a Sea-Town, and an Archbishop's See, who writes himself Primate of Dalmatia; as anciently and of right he was, till the Bishop of Venice, being made a Patriarch by Pope Eugenius the fourth, An. V. C. 1450, assumed that Title to himself, together with a Superintendency over all the Churches of this Country, as subordinate to him. Of note for many learned Prelates, but for none more than for Marcus Antonius de Dominis, who, seeming to loath the Romish Superstition, came for Refuge into England, Anno 1616, and having here both by Preaching and Writing laboured to overthrow the Church of Rome, upon I know not what Projects he declared himself to be of another mind, Anno 1622, and returned again to Rome, where he writ as reproachfully of the Church of England. So that we may lay of him, as Socrates in his Ecclesiastical History saith of Eusebius, who under Constantinus was a Christian, under Julian a Pagan, and a Christian again under Justinian, Totiusque ipsius nonnullis in doctrinis et pietate in se habens. So wavering and inconsistent a Turn—Cato was Eusebius us from his beginning to his end. But Eusebius sped better than Antonius did, he being received into the Church upon his Repentance: but this infatuated man was imprisoned in the Castle of St. Angelo, and his dead Body burnt to ashes. A just reward for so great Levity and so gross Apostasie as he had shewed unto the World in his going hence. 4. Amisus, the Pignium of Ptolemy, mounted on a high Rock, and defended with an impregnable Castle. 5. Stagno, upon the point of a long and spacious Cherfoneuse, not far from which the River Narva (or Narvona) falls into the Adriatick. 6. Castel Nova, a strong Fortres within the Gulf of Cattaro, now in possession of the Turks. 7. Amisuri, on the further or Eastern side of the Bay, an Archbishop's See; but that and the Sees of his Suffragan Bishops being few in number, are now in the possession of the Turks. 8. Cattaro, on the same side of the Bay, by Ptolemy called Asorium, inhabited in his time by Roman Citizens; now a strong hold for the Venetians against the Turks, and giving name unto the Gulf, which formerly called Sinus Rhizencium, from Rhizena, (now Rispa) situate at the bottom of it; as at this time called from this Town Gulfo de Cattaro. 9. Daligini, by Ptolemy called Ulcinium, originally founded by the Colchians and therefore called Colchidum by some ancient Writers. 10. Scutari, now within the Land, (the Sedra of Ptolemy and Strabon) strongly seated on a steep Rock, memorable for the stout Resistance which it made for a whole year against the whole Puissance of Mahomet the second, battered for the most part of that time with 70 pieces of Ordnance of wondrous bigness, especially that called the Prince's Piece, which carried a stone or bullet of 1200 pound weight; but taken at the last, Anno 1578. Not far from this Town is the great Lake called by Strabo Labentia, now the Lake of Scutari, 130 miles in compass, and environed on all sides with Mountains, except towards the North: out of which, issue the Drino, now called Drino, or Drina, which, parting Scalavonia from Macedon and Servia passeth into the Savus. 11. Alesio, the Lissus of Ptolemy, the farthest Town of all Dalmatia towards Greece; memorable for the Grave of Scanderbeg, who was buried here, whereof more hereafter. 12. Medon, raised out of the Ruines of Dioclea, an ancient and famous City, the Birth-place of the Great Emperor Diocletian, spoken of before. 13. Dalminium, once the Metropolis of this Province, situate on the River Drino; first sacked by Marcus Figulus, a Roman Consul, An. V. C. 689; and after, on a new Revolt, by one Nasica, spoken of by Strabo: not able after two such Ruines to revive again: nothing being now left of it but the name and memory.

Betwixt the Cherfoneuse of Stagno and the Gulf of Cattaro stands the Town and Territory of RAGUSI, not subject, as all the rest are, either to the Turk or to the Venetians, but governing themselves by their own Laws and Magistrates, as a free Commonwealth: paying only to the Turk 14000 Scutins yearly in a way of Tribute, and as much in Presents; discharged in that regard of Customs and Impositions in all his Dominions. It was anciently called Epidaurus, (of which name there were two other Cities in Peloponnesus). But that Town being raised by the Goths, the inhabitants, (after their departure) not knowing where to retire themselves, built this in the place of it, at the Foot of a steep Mountain, enjoying a pleasant situation near the Sea, with a little, but commodious Port, forced out of the water by the art and industry of workmen. The Town is well built, fortified with Walls and a well-furnished Castle; now an Archbishop's See, and a noted Empory rich and strong in Shipping, commanding over a small and barren Territory within the Land, and some peccant Islands in the Sea. So that the Riches of it proceed not from their Rents and Revenues rising out of the Earth, but by the benefit of their Traffick upon the Waters: in which they are secured by the Protection of the Turk, without which they had fallen before this time into the hands of the Venetians; as on the other side preferred by the State of Venice from being a Prey to their Protectors. They were of more Wealth heretofore than they are at present; at what time they traded to most parts of this Western world in those great Vessels which from hence were called Raguses, but corruptly Argosies; the last of which (their number lessening with their Trade) they lent unto the King of Spain for the War of England Anno 1588, in which Action it was lost and wrecked on the Coast of Ireland.

5. CONTADO DI ZARA.

CONTADO DI ZARA, or the Country of Zara, called anciently Liburnia, and Illyria specially so named, is bounded on the East with Dalmatia, on the West with Istria, on the North with Croatia, and on the South with the Adriatick Sea, or Gulf of Venice.

It took this latter name (the former being long discontinued) from Zara, the chief Town thereof, the Zadera of Ptolemy and the Ancients; a Roman Colony at that time, now an Archbishop's See, enjoying a safe and large Port, and situate on a low Cherfoneuse thrusting out like a Promontory into the Adriatick, belonging to the State of Venice, by whom it is well fenced and fortified against foreign Invasions. For the position and command of this Town there have been great Wars betwixt the Hungarians and the Venetians, to whom it seemeth to be of such importance, that being once taken by the Hungarians, it was redeemed for 100000 Crowns of Lodovick King of Naples, pretending against Sigismund of Lussemburg to the Crown of Hungary. In this Town is the Church of S. John de Malvasia, which was built by a company of Sailors, who, being in a tempest, made a Vow, that, if they escaped, they would consecrate a Temple to S. John de Malvasia, whose Morter should be tempered with Malmsey; and accordingly they paid their Vows. Far less did another Master of a Ship intend to perform his Promise, though he spoke bigger, who, in a like extremity of Danger, promised our Lady to offer at her Altar a Candle as great as the main Mast of his Ship: For when one of his Mates, joggling him, told him he had promised an Impossibility: I will, Fool, (replied the Master) we must speak her fair in time of need; but if ever I come ashore, I will make her be content with a Candle of Eight to the pound. And in a like fit of Devotion was he who on the same occasion plainly told God, that he was no common Beggar, he never troubled him with Prayers before; and if he would hear him that time, he would never trouble him again.

Other Towns herein considerable are, 1. Albona, retaining still the old name, (the Albona of Ptolemy) situate near the River Arfa, the Divider of this Province from Istria. 2. Flavona or Flanona, situate against the Gulf of Querquero, of old called Sinus Flavianicus, as before was noted: of ill report amongst Sailors, for frequent Tempests railed on every Wind. 3. Zugna, by Ptolemy and Pliny called Senia, situate on a Flat or Level. 4. Nona, of old called Enona, compassed with the Sea. 5. Scerifia, now a poor Village, in the place were stood the Argemutum of Pliny. 6. Scardona, now a mean Village also, heretofore of great note, and the Juridical Resort for the whole Province; from whence the neighbouring Mountains had the name of Scardonicæ, the Bounds of this Country and Croatia.

The ancient name of this Country was Liburnia, as before is said, but extending more Northwards beyond the Mountains of Ardium or Scardonicæ; this and Dalmatia being then the Membra dividenda of the whole Illyria. The People heretofore, called by one General name Liburni, were much given to Piracies; and for the better speed therein, the Authors and inventors of those swift Vessels which were called Liburnica and Liburna. Of which thus Horace,

Amice, propugnacula.*

That is to say,
In a Liburnian flote thou be Amongst the stoutest Ships at Sea.

In imitation of which Vessels, being swift and light, the Romans, in the time of their Wealth and Pride, invented a kind of Chair or Litter, (such as those we call Sedans), wherein they were carried on mens Shoulders with such ease and pleasure, that they could not only sleep or read, but write in them also. The Porters or Bearers of them were of this Nation commonly, from whence, or from the fashion of the Vessel which they did resemble, they were called Liburni. Of these thus Juvenci in his third Satyr,

*Si vocat officium, turbæ cedentis vehetur
Dives, & ingenti currit super ora Liburno;
Aique obiter leget, aut scribet, vel dormiet intus:
Namque facit Somnum clausâ Læticia fenestra.*

Thus Englished by my honoured Friend Sir Robert Stra-plem, in his excellent Translation of that harsh Satyrift:

When business calls, a Crowd the rich man thins,
And o're men's Heads in's huge Sedan he runs,
Reads, writes, and sleeps within it, as he goes:
For Sleep will come if he the Curtains close.

Besides which office of Chair-carriers, or Sedan-men, as we call them now, this People being, when once conquered, a servile Nation, furnished the Romans with chief Beedles whom they employed in calling the Citizens from the Fields to their public Buifness: to which the same Poet alludeth in the next Satyr, saying, Clamau-te Liburno, Currite jam sedis, &c. But to proceed. The nearness of this Country to the Adriatick occasioned the Bay of Guernero, or Cornaro, as some call it, commonly called Sinus Flauiticus, to be sometimes named Sinus Liburnicus; the parts of Italy on the other side of it to be called Regna Liburnorum in the Poet Virgil; and gave the name of Liburnades to a Shore of Islands lying on the Coast herof, 60 at least in number, as is said by Strabo. To which and other Islands of Illyricum they are now to haften, leaving the Stories of Illyricum to the close of all.

6. The SCLAVONIAN Islands.

Along the Coasts of Sclavonia lie a Cluster of Islands, to the number of a thousand, as is said by Pliny, most of which (if indeed to many) are but Rocks, not Islands, or not inhabited at all, nor of any note. The Principal whereof, and such as deserve place here, are 1. the Liburnades before mentioned. 2. The Abyrtides. 3. The Isles of Ragusi. 4. Arbe. 5. Curzola. 6. Zara. 7. Lissa and Brazzia, the rest not being worth the looking after as to our Design. The whole number of the Inhabitants is reckoned in the total to no more than 40000 persons.

1. The LIBURNADES, said by Strabo to be 60 in number, lie all along the Coasts of Liburnia, or Cor-vada of Zara. The chief whereof are 1. Iffa, now called Pago, containing 100 miles in compass, having a Town of the same name; but in all that Tract of ground not above 1500 Inhabitants, in the time of my Author, by reason of the sharp Ayre, and great want of Fuel. The Salt-petre here yield great Commodity not only to the People themselves, but also to the State of Venice, supreme Lords herof. 2. Tragurium, now Trau and Trabu, so called from the chief Town herof, built by those of Iffa: fo near the Continent, that it seems to be a part thereof. By Mela it is named Tagurium, with some little difference.
3. Pharus, so called from the Pharii, or Paris, of whom it was once a Colony, long since come to Ruine. It is now called Lesina, the greatest of all the Adriatick, as being 150 miles in compass, and very fruitful for the biggess. It hath a Town of the same name, which enjoys a safe and speculous Harbour, unwall'd and of no great beauty, but fortified with a strong Castle, which commandeth both the Harbour and the Shipping in it. The Bird's-place of Demetrius Pharius, so often mentioned in the Stories of Greece and Rome.

2. The ABYRTIDES are in number many, fo called from the River Abyrtus, which thereabouts falls into the Adriatick; according to that of Lucan, Et cadit Adriacis flumens Abyrtus in undas.
Abyrtus foaming with his hail,
Into the Adria falls at last.

But whether that River were so called by the Celchians at their landing there, in memory of Abyrtus, the Son of Ææus King of Colchis, whom they went to seek, or for some other reason, I determine not. Certain I am, it could not be so named from the scattering of his Limbs hereabouts by Medea, his unnatural Sister, as is said by Pliny; that cruel fact being done on the Shores of the Euxine, the place being called Tonos afterwards upon that occasion. But of those Islands, being in number many, as before was said, two only are of special note; that is to say, 1. Vegia, or Vegio, not far from Segna on the firm Land, containing in compass betwixt 80 and 100 miles, and about 10000 Inhabitants: the most populous of all these Seas. It hath a Town of the same name, with a very fair Harbour: the Island by Pliny called Curilla, the chief Towns of it in his time being, Fulfinium and Cur-cum. 2. Abforum, as Ptolemy, Abyrtium as Pliny calls it, in whose time it was one Island only, but now divided into two by the Venicians, letting in the Sea between them: the one of them is called Cherjo the other Ofero, both joined together by a Bridge made by the Venicians, and both together making up 140 miles in compass, each of them having one Town only, and that of the same name with the Island; the Inhabitants in both not exceeding 5000 persons. Stored with sufficiency of Corn, plenty of Wine, and abundance of Wood, great quantities whereof are sent yearly to Venice. They have also goodly Herds of Cattel, and great Flocks of Sheeple, affording by their Flesh, Wool, Cheefe and Butter, a good increase of profit to the Owners of them.

3. The Islands of RAGUSI, (for so I call them which belong to the Commonwealth) are but three in number.
1. Gravosa, a very pleasant place, full of gardens of Oranges, Limons, and Pomegranates. 2. Languste, environ-ed about with very high Mountains, in which are the Ragusan Farms, made rich by great Charge and Industry of the several Occupants, so as to yield them Wine, Oyl, and most excellent Fruits; which they receive more plentifully from a goodly Plain situate in the midst hereof, and naturally more fruitful than the other parts. Near to this last Island is good fishing for Sprats: and in both an Art of making their trees to bring forth Oysters, by bending down their Boughs, and staying them under the water with Stones; so as in two years there are so many Oysters fastned to them as is strange to see, and in the third year they are very good meat. Melyda, lying betwixt Ragusi and the Isle of Curzola, by Pliny called Atlita, and on that ground supposed by some to be that Island on which St. Paul did suffer Shipwreck, Acts 26.
But the name of Barbarus which the Text joins to the Inhabitants of it, not proper to an Island betwixt Greece and Italy in the times of St. Paul, and his Landing, when he parted thence, at Syracuse, an Haven of Sicily so far from this so near unto the other Melita, which is now called Malta, sufficiently refel this Fancy, though otherwise not improbably grounded.

4. Of those which are known only by one single name the chief are, ARBE, so called in the time of Pliny, from the best Town off it, but by Ptolemy it is named Scar-dona. A pleasant Island, in compass about 50 miles, and containing some 3000 Inhabitants; the only Haven's life of all the Adriatick; but that defect is abundantly com-pens'd by the natural Sweetness of the place, which fo entertain'd certain disolute Rovers of Austria, that they fell upon it Anno 1618, and had like to have occasioned an heavy War betwixt Ferdinand, Archduke of the House of Croatz, (not long after chosen King of the Romans) and the State of Venice, if Philip the third of Spain had not made up the Breach.

5. CURSOLA, by Ptolemy and Strabo called Cereyra, or Melena, more rightly Cereyra Melana, or Cereyra Nigra, to difference it from Cereyra, now Corfu, in the Ionian Sea. The chief Town of it, being of the same same name with the Island, was founded by the Gnidians of the Isle of Crete. It is sufficiently fruitful, but of Wine especially, forty miles long, in compass ninety, and very populous for the biggess; notwithstanding that the people, being Sea-faring men, do much use the Seas, and build many Ships. In the year 1571, a little after the taking of Cyprus, and before the Batel of Lepanto, it was invaded by Ulu, Aly, General of the Turkish Fleet, with a Navy of 60 Gallies: for fear of whom Comarcus, the Venetian Governor, together with the Townsmen and Garison Souldiers, abandoned Curzola, the chief Town hereof. The silly Women thus forsaken, and preferring Death before Dishonour, defended the Walls, and with Fire, Stones, and such other Weapons as they had, they beat off the Enemy; till at the last a violent Tempest forced the Turkish General to remove his Gallies farther off, to the place of safety.

6. ZARA, LISSA, BRAZZIA, three small Isles, not otherwise memorable but for their Misfortunes, spoiled by the Turks at their departure from Curzola who carried thence 1600 Christians into cruel Bondage. The rest I purposely omit, being rather Rocks than Islands, barren and stony for the most part, and not much inhabited.

The ancient Inhabitants of Illyricum, in the full extent of it, comprehending Liburnia and Dalmatia, were the Iapades, bordering on Italy, the Scirtreus, or Scirtarii, confining upon Macedon, the Mazae, in the midst about Sabina; the Peuvitte, lying towards Pannonia; the Derii, Ceraunii, Dauris, Pirææ, Scindote, Sardiotæ, and others of inferiour note, all making up the great & potent Nations of the Liburni and the Dalmatæ, and comprehended generally in the name of Illyrians. Of these the Liburnian Illyrii (Illyrici, sen Liburni, as they are indifferently called by Florus) were the first who felt the Forces of Rome:
which growing State they had provoked by their frequent Piracies, but more by murdering the Embassadors which were sent unto them to require Satisfaction; Tenna their Queen, a proud and imperious Dame, commanding Execution to be done upon them. Warred upon by the Romans for many Injuries under the conduct of Cimindus, one of their Confuls, they were overthrown, (as having more of the Pirate than the Souldier in them) some of their chief Nobility executed, in revenge of the Wrong done to the Embassadors, an yearly Tribute imposed on them, and the Queen deprived of the greatest part of her Kingdom, conferred by the Romans on Demetrius Pharius, one of their Confederates. But he proving unfaithful to them in their War with Hamilcar, and Genius, their last King, who commanded over Illyricum, siding against them with Per-seus King of Macedonia, Anitus the Pretor is sent with a sufficient Army to make an end of that work, who used such diligence therein, that Sodra the chief Town of the Kingdom was taken, and the King himself, together with his Wife and Children, made Prisoners; by consequence the whole War ended antequam geri Romæ nasceretur, before they knew a Æque that it was begun. The Liburni after that became chief Subjects, the whole Country on the taking of Genius being made a Province of the Romans Anno U.C. 586, and they employed at Rome in many service offices, as before was said: and then the Dalmatians began to cast off the Yoke. But Dalmatius, their chief City, being first sacked by Marcus Fulgus, and after by Nasica before mentioned, they continued quiet and obedient till the time of Augustus Cæsar, when they again rebelled at the infliction of one Batte, a man very potent with the People, who, having ten yeares together maintained the Liberty of his Country, at last, broken and worn by the Forces of Germanicus and Tiberius, submitted himself unto the two Generals; who, asking the reason of his Revolt, were answered, because the Romans sent not Shepherds to keep, but Wolves do devour, their Flocks. Thus finally conquered, it continued a Roman Province till the coming of Odoacer into Italy who brought it under his Command, as the Guths also did, having vanquished him, and thereby made themselves Masters of Italy and the rest of his Purchases. But the Kingdom of the Guths being brought to an end by the good fortune of Justinian, and the valour of Belisarius and Marcellus, two of his Commanders, (but very ill requited by him) Illyricum became a part of the Eastern Empire; continuing under the power of the Grecian Emperours till the time of Phocas, that bloody Tyrant; when it was made a Prey to the Sclaves.

Of these though we have spoken before in several places, as their Fortunes and Affairs have led us, yet being this is the only Country which preserves their name, we will here speak more exactly of them than we have done hitherto; especially as to their Manners, Name, and first Original, and finally of their Successes in this Country.
And first for their Original, I take it for a thing past question that they were no other than natural Sarmatians, inhabiting on the North of the River Ister, joining themselves under this Name in their Undertakings and Attempts on the Eastern Empire: as the many Nations of Germany took the name of Frank and Alman in their Actions and Achievements against the Western. But why they took this name rather than another, is not yet agreed on. Some fetch the original of it from Sclava, which in the Sclavonian Tongue signifieth a Speech or Word, because they were all of one common Language; others from Slava, signifying in that Language Fame or Glory, in regard of that great Fame and Honour which they had ac-chieved by their Successes on the Empire. But when I find a potent Nation of the Wimithi, Wimti or Venedæ, a Sarmatian People, called Sclavini by Jornandes, possided in his time of the farther Shores of the River Ister, opposite to Illyricum and Thrace, and by that Name warring and forging these Provinces and other parts of that Empire in the time of Justinian, as we read in Procopius that they did; I see no reason why we should look farther for the name of Sclaves than from these Sclavini. For having in the time of Phocas subdued this Country, and called it Sclavi-nia or Sclavonia, after their own Name; by that and other fortunate Successes on the Eastern Empire, and the Honour they had thereby gotten, they might very well induce the rest of the scattered Tribes of the Sarmatians to unite together with them both in Name and Action, & try their fortunes in the Conquest of the West of Europe, as these had done already on the East parts of it. In which Design they sped so well, that they became Masters of almost all those Countries which lie betwixt the River Vistula and the Euxine Sea, the Adriatick and the Baltick; communicating their Language unto all the Provinces and Nations conquered by them; and to most their Manners, Rites and Customs. Their Government was at first by Kings, but so that the Succession seldom held in a Race or Family, and those that had the Throne did not long enjoy it. For having a Law amongst themselves, that he who killed a Tyrant should succeed in his place; they had few Kings whom force or other would not vot to be a Tyrant, and then dispatch him out of the way, that a greater Tyrant than himself (as it commonly happeneth in such cases) might possess the Power. Infomuch that they had a new King almost every year, none of them for the space of an hundred yeares dying natural deaths, and all that while the People (as it must be) were most miserably torn in pieces by intestine Wars. They were not cured of this Distemper, till the several Tribes and Nations of them (as Polers, Maravians, Bohemians these here, & those of other Countries) had their several Princes succeeding one another in a regular way. Their Religion was Gentilism at the first. For being originally Heathens, they worshipped such Gods as other of the Gentiles did; Jef-fan for Jupiter, Ladon for Pluto, Marzin for Mars, Zie-vine for Venus, and Nian for Diana. They had also a God-dick called Agade, to whom they prayed for fair weather and a temperate Air. To their Children they used to give no Name till they began to grow great, and then they conducted them to the Temple of their Gods; where they cut off their first Hair, and offered it as a Pledge of their future Service: at which Solemnity they called together their Friends and Kinsfolk to make merry, with Banquets, Dancing, Singing and all kind of Sports; offering in sacrifice an Hog, and Wine mixed with Honey, somewhat like Methueglin.

The Gospel was first generally received amongst them by the Preaching of Cyrril and Methodius, two right godly men, who had before converted the Georgians and Circassians, two great Asian Nations, employed therein by the Patriarch of Constantinople, with good Success as to the Work, and with no small Honour and advantage to those Patriarchs also. The Eastern Slaves, inhabiting those parts of this Country which lie next to Greece, and all the Dacian Provinces, except Transylvania, being of the Communion of the Church of Greece, but privileged to officiate all Divine Services in their natural Language. The rest, as more obnoxious to the power of the Kings of Hungary and the Ceyman Emperors submitted by degrees to the Popes of Rome, who by this means did reap where they never sowed.

But to return unto the Story. The Slaves, thus settled in this Country, (since called Scalavonia) continued absolute Masters of it, under the Title of Kings of Croatia and Dalmatia, till the year 970, when growing unravishable by their frequent Piracies, and having ravished or surprized a company of Venitian Ladies, they forced that State (as the Liburnians did the Romans) to make War upon them: which ended in the Loss of Lesian and Cinzola, two of their best Iland, and almost all the Sea-Towns on the Coast of the Adriatick, possessed for the most part since that time by the State of Venice: a Tribute also of a hundred Barrel of Wine, and a Present to the Duke of 3000 Concy-Skins being laid upon them; Petro Ursula being then Duke of Venice, and Marcion King of the Scalavonians. Afterwards Zelamirus, the last King, dying without Issue, bequeathed the Kingdom to his Wife, and fled freely to her Brother Pladislaus, King of Hungary, furnished the Saint; the right heretofore accruing by this means to the Kings of Hungary, but the Possession of a great part of it remaining to the State of Venice: the cause of much War and Bloodshed betwixt those Princes, till the Turk came to part the Fray, and got the greatest part for himself by their Disagreements. Betwixt these three Scalavonia at this time stood thus divided: the Venitians possess the greatest part of the Ilands, and all the Sea-coasts from the River Arfa to the Bay of Cattaro, (the House of Austria, in Right of the Crown of Hungary, the Inland parts of Windischland and Croatia; and the Turks (who first for footing herein the Reign of Mahomet the second) the whole Kingdom of Bosnia, the Patronage of Ragusa, some Towns in Windischland and Croatia, and all the Residue of Dalmatia, from the Bay of Cattaro to Albania.

The Arms of Scalavonia were Argent, a Cardinal's Hat, the Strings pendant, and platted in a True-love Knot, meeting in the Base, Gules.

There are in Scalavonia

Archbishops 4 Bishops 26.

And thus much for SCALAVONIA.

DACIA.

DACIA is bounded on the East with the Euxine Sea and some part of Thrace, on the West with Hungary and Scalavonia, on the North with Podolia and some other Members of the Realm of Poland, on the South with the rest of Thrace and Macedonia. So called from the Daci, who here first inhabited; in Strabo better known by the name of Davi: who proving, when first known to the Romans, an officious people, willingly putting themselves to Service in hope of Gain, occasioned the Romans in their Comedies and common Speech to call a Sycophant or Servant by the name of Dacus.

It lieth on both sides of the Danow, fronting all along the Upper and the Lower Hungary, and some part of Scalavonia: extended from the 7. Climate to the 10. so that the longest Summers Day in the most Northern parts thereof is near 17 hours, and in the most Southern 15 hours, 3 quarters.

By this account, with reference to the other Limits before laid down, it differeth much in Situation and Dimensions from the ancient Dacia described by Ptolemy: that lying wholly on the North-side of the Danow, but taking in so much of the Upper Hungary as lieth on the East-side of Tibiscus, this comprehending all the rest of the ancient Dacia, with both the Myfia and Dardania, and in a word, the whole Dacian Diocese in the largest extent thereof, the Province of Prevalatana excepted only; which, though a Member of this Diocese, was no part of Dacia, but rather of Macedon or Albania. For the clearer understanding whereof we may please to know, that Dacia properly so called was situate on the Northside of Danubius, as before was said, extending as far Westward as the River Tibiscus, where it fronted on the Tasceges Metanassa; inhabited by a military and valiant People, who many times, especially when the Froft did favour them, passed over the River, and infected the Roman Provinces. And though repressed and made tributary butary by Julius Cæsar, yet they brake out again in the time of Augustus, who sending Leontius against them with a puissant Army, compelled them to retire. On the other side of the River, planting the Southern Banks thereof with strong Towns and Garrisons, to restrain them from the like incursions for the time to come. By means whereof, Si Dacia tunc non vixit flammata atque dilata est, faith the Historian, though Dacia was not overcome, yet it was removed somewhat farther off, and the Provinces thereby secured from the attempts of that people. After this, from the time of Cotilo, with whom Augustus had to deal, we find little of them till the Reign of Decabalus their last King, a man both ready in Advice, and quick in Execution, Against him Domitian made War by Julianus his Lieutenant, who gave Decabalus a great Overthrow, and had then utterly vanquished him, if his Wit had not better befriended him than his Sword. For fearing that the Romans making use of their Victory, would enter and take possession of his Country, he pitched in the way a great number of Stakes in Battel-array, putting on them the old Crevilles of his Soldiers; which, looking like so many armed Arms, frightened the Enemy from approaching the Country. Trajan was the next that made War against him and brought him to that Exigent, that having with much loss endured some few skirmishes, he yielded himself, and acknowledged a Friend to the Senate, and a People of Rome. But being one of an high spirit, and born in a free Air, he once again fell off from the Romans, but to his own destruction: for seeing by the Valour of Trajan his Kingdom conquered, and his Palace taken and destroyed, he fell upon his own Sword, and Dacia was made a Province of the Roman Empire. Lost in the time of Gallienus, it was again recovered by Aurelianus; who, finding how difficult and chargeable the keeping of it was like to be, transplanted the Roman Colonies, and the more civil sort of the Natives, to the other side of the River, placing them betwixt the two Myfia, (in some part of each) and calling the Country given to them by the name of Dacia, or New Dacia, leaving the Old unto the Goths, and others of the barbarous Nations, whose Thoroughfare it was in all their Enterprises and Designs upon the Roman Empire. It was divided by Aurelianus into the two Provinces of Dacia Mediterranea, and Dacia Ripensis, this lying on the Banks of the Danow, the other more within the Land: which, with the Provinces of Moesia Superior, Dardania, Prevalatana, and part of Macedonia Salutaris, made up the whole Diocese of Dacia in the times succeeding. It was subject with that of Macedon to the Præfæctus Prætorio, for Illyricum, and consequently appertaining (after the Division) to the Eastern Empire. And it continued in this State till the time of Justinian, who being a Native of this Country, subducted it from the Command of that Præfect, and instituted both a Præfæctus Prætorio for this Diocese only in Civil matters, and a Primate for the affairs of the Church; both settled in the City of Justinian, of his own Foundation; enlarging the Jurisdiction of the first by the addition of some part of Macedonia Secunda, and Pannonia Secunda, and giving to the other all those Preliminaries which had been anciently enjoyed by the greater Patriarchs. But this new Institution was of no continuance. For first the Slaves, and afterwards the Russians, Hungars, and Bulgarians, breaking over the Danow, dismembered it piece-meal from the Empire and divided it under new names amongst themselves. Of which, together with the nature of the Soil and people, I shall speak anon, having first took a view of the Rivers, Hills and other Landmarks, which are to be my chief Guides in the Chorography or Description of them.

The Rivers then of most note are 1. the Danow, which here at Axiom, or Axiopolis, a Town of Bulgaria, takes the name of Ister continuing it from thence to its Affluence, where it falleth into the Euxine Sea with 7 Mouths or Channels; that is to say, 1. Pence, 2. Naracastona, 3. Califonia, 4. Plendistona, 5. Spiricoftona, 6. Boreofstoma: the name of the last I find not amongst my Authors, quia languidissimum nec perpetuum, as it is in Ptolemy. 2. Marulius, now called Marich, 3. Ternes, 4. Aluta, keeping its old name. 5. Hierafus, All of Old Dacia, and all falling into the Danow or Ister: as do also Ciabrus, now Ibar, a River of Cervia. And 6. Succania of Bulgaria, or the Lower Myfia. Chief Mountains of it are, 1. The Carpathian. 2. Scardus, 3. Ozbelus; whereof the first parteth it from Sarmatia Europea, the second from Dalmatia, and the third from Macedon.

This laid, we will proceed to the description of the several Provinces which have comprehended under this name of Dacia; that is to say, 1. Transylvania, 2. Moldavia, 3. Wallachia, 4. Raficia, 5. Servia, 6. Bulgaria: The first four in Old Dacia, on the North-side of the Danow, The two last in New Dacia, on the South thereof.

TRANSYLVANIA is bounded on the East with Moldavia, on the West with the Upper Hungary, on the North with Russia Nigra, a Province of the Saim or Poland, from which it is parted by the Carpathian Mountains; on the South with Raficia and Wallachia.

It took this name from the great Woods lying betwixt it and Hungary, the name in Latine signifying the Country beyond the Woods. By the Dacian it is called Siebenbergen, from seven Castles or strong Holds anciently built in it to defend the Frontiers: Septemcastrens in some Latine Authors upon that occasion. But by the more elegant Latinists it hath been named Pannadacia, as that part of Dacia, which either was inhabited by the Pannonians, or made subject to them.

The Soil doth naturally abound with Wine, Corn, and Fruit, of which it was so plentiful in the time of the Romans, that the Emperor Trajan caused a piece of Money to be coined, having the figure of Ceres, holding in the one hand a Cornu-Copia, and in the other a plain Tablet with this Inscription. Abundantia Dacia. Particularly, besides great plenty of Wheat and most Excellent Wines, it yieldeth great store of Cherries, Damascens, Malacatoons, Musk-melons, not inferior to those of Italy, and also Centaury good store, and many other Medicinal plants; some Mines of Gold and Silver: many of Iron, Brass, Copper, and not a few Veins of Salt and Sulphur. Of Cattel such abundance, that many times large Oxen are sold for a Florin, or half a Crown piece; and a most notable breed of Horses: not to say any thing of that variety of Wild Beasts which they have in their Woods and Forests, and all sorts of fowl both for food and pleasure. So populous withal, (for the most fruitful Countries are commonly populous also) that Cyprius, Governour hereof in the Minority of Stephen the fourth Son of John de Sepisius, Anno 1551, advanced an Army of 70000 able men, consisting of the Natives of this Country only, for the Siege of Lippe, a strong Town of Hungary, but on the Borders of this Country.

The People are much of the same nature with the Hungarians, to whom they have been a long time subject, but somewhat more stubborn and untractable; speak the same Language as they do, with some difference: in the Dialect only; converted at the same time to the Christian Asian Faith, and under the same form of Ecclesiastical Government. In former times they used to read, as the Jews do, from the right hand to the left; but of late hours they conform to the Western Nations, from whom they are generally defended.

For that the people of this Country are the Progeny of the Saxons, is evident 1. by the Saxon Language yet in part retained. 2. We find that Charles the Great, like a politic Conqueror, placed many of that Nation here, weakening for their strength at home, and fortifying the Bounds of his Empire. And 3. by a Story recited by Vorslegan, who touched in our Description of Brumfick; the whole Narration is this. Halberstadt was beyond credit troubled with Rats, which a Musician, whom they called the Pydpyer, undertaking for a great mass of money to destroy, they agree: hereupon he tuned his Pipes, and all the Rats in the Town dancing after him are drowned in the next River. This done he asked his pay, but is denied: whereupon he frieth up a new fit of Mirth: all the Children, male and female, of the Town, follow him into the Hill Hamel, which presently closed again. The Parents miss their Children, and could never hear news of them. Now of late some have found them in this Country, where I also leave them: only telling you this, that this marvellous accident is said to happen the 22. of July, 1376. Since which time it is said that the people of Halberstadt permit not any Drum, Pipe, or other Instrument to be sounded in that Street: and established a Decree, that in all Writings of Contract or Bargain, after the Date of our Saviours Nativity, the Date also of this their Childrens Transmigration should be added in rei memoriam. But though the Dutch or Saxons make up the main body of them, yet being conquered by the Hungars, they received many of their Colonies: and in the Northern parts there remain still some of the old Scythians planted there by Attila. Out of those Members is the Body of this State composed: so strong and populous, that it is conceived to be able to raise an Army of 90000 men; and actually did arm 6000 Horse and 12000 Foot for the Battel of Kerefure, Anno 1596, being more by 2000 than the whole Realm of Hungary sent unto that Service.

Chief Towns herein of the foundation of the Dutch or Saxons, are 1. Hermestad, in the Latine Hermanopolis, (of old called Cibinium, from the River Cibin, on which it was situate) so named of one Herman the Founder of it, little inferior to Vienna for strength or greatness, well fortified both by Art and Nature. 2. Cronstad, in Latine called Corona, by some Brassovia, by others Stephanopolis; this last name being given by Stephen King of Hungary, who repaired and beautified it; situate on the Borders of Walachia, amongst fruitful Mountains; remarkable for a fair Library and a kind of Academy; and the most noted Empory or Mart-Town of all this Country; of great Resort especially in the Time of their publick Fairs, by Turks, Arabians, Greeks, Armenians, Poles, Polanders, Walachians, and other Nations. 3. Bisricia, (by the Dutch called Neren) so called from the River Bisric, which runneth through it: so pleasant and so sweet a Town, that there is no dirt or mire to be seen at any time; or if there be, the people presently swell up the River, and so cleanse the Streets 4. Mediasia (by the Dutch Medwisch) so called quasi medius confinis, because situate in the midst of the Country; a Town almost as neat as Bisric. 5. Sagowaria or Schenburg, on the declivity of an Hill. 6. Zabscus, or Latze, once the chief Town of the Saxons, but now much decayed; situate in a very deep Valley, well fenced with Waters, and those Waters well stored with Fish. 7. Clanfenburg, or Calsfuer, the Zugma of Ptolemy, in Latine called Claudiopolis, from Claudius the II. Emperor, by whom re-edified: at first a Colony of the Saxons or Dutch only, but of late times the Hungarians, coming in as strangers, were at last privileged as Citizens and inhabited it together with them. The Town is well seated in the middle of a pleasant Plain, encompassed with an handsome Wall, and beautified with elegant Buildings. 8. Abdus, now Weissenburg, the Apulum of Ptolemy, situate on a small brook then called Aphus, (But now Oran) whence it had the name. Built on the side of an Hill near the River Maris, (or Marila) over-looking a large and fruitful Plain: heretofore a Bishops See, and the ordinary Residence of the Prince or Vaivod of Transylvania; but now a Garrison of Hungarian Soldiers, holding it for the Emperor, as King of Hungary.

Chief Towns belonging to the Hungarians, and by them inhabited, are, 1. Waradin, much mentioned in the Stories of the latter times, since these invasions of the Turks, situate on the Borders of Hungary, 2. Thorda, built in or near the place where stood the Salina of Ptolemy, so called from the abundance of Salt-pits which were then about it. 3. Engedine, by the Romans called Amnium, from a Causey leading to it, raised by one Annius, and from him so named; some Fragments whereof are still remaining 4. Drova, remarkable for a Vein of the best Wines, 5. Fenuschium, affording very pleasant Wines also, not inferior to those of Venusium in Italy. 6. Zilab, of which little memorable. 8. Milenback, not far from which, betwix which and the Town of Bresl, is a very strong Fortrefs, commanding a direct and narrow passage leading into this Country out of Hungary.

In the North part hereof lieth the Province called ZECKLAR, inhabited by the Scythi, an old brood of Scythians, brought hither by Attila on his first Conquest of this Country; and here still continuing. A people which have much in them of the ancient Huns, and had heretofore a particular Language to themselves, but now they speak the Hungarian generally, differing in the Dialect only. But though by the necessity of Commerce and Cohabitation, they are brought into the same Language, they still retain their ancient Customs, governed by their old Laws, and living after the same manner as the Switzers do; each of their Cantons (seven in number) being absolute in and of it self, but all united with the Transylvanians, and with one another, for defence of the whole Country against the several Pretensions of the German and Turkish Emperours. And though they acknowledge some Subjection to the Emperour as King of Hungary, yet it is but what they lift themselves: being anciently privileged from all Taxes, more than the paying of a Bull for every Household, in the way of an Heriot at the Coronation of the new King, when and how oftsoever it may chance to happen. Their Cantons (Sedi they call them) are, 1. Sepp, 2. Orbay, 3. Kyldi, 4. Czyk, 5. Gyrie or Udarheli, 6. Marus-Zek, And 7. Arman-Zek; so called from the chief Town in each Division. In former times no Nobleman, nor any one of better Means and greater Eminence than other, was known amongst them; but now of late that Parity (or Confusion rather) is grown out of credit, and some begin to over-top the rest both in Power and Title as in other places.

The first Inhabitants of the old Dacia, whereof this Province was a part, were the Anarti, Taurisci, Rhaetici, Canconesi, the Buridenesi, and Biethi, &c. First conquered they were by Lyfimbach, the great and mighty K. of Thrace, one of the Renowned Captains of Alexander the Great; in token whereof, innumerable Medals in the age of our Grandfathers were found in this Country, leaving his Image on the side, and this word Victoria on the other. How they were afterwards subdued by the Emperour Trajan, and quitted by Aurelianus, hath been shewn already

dy. Being forsaken by the Romans, it was won by the Goths, their constant Dwelling till forced over the Danube by the Huns, the next Possessors of this Country; the Road or thorough-fare from that time of those barbarous Nations which out of Asia made there Inroads on the Europeans. Having been successively subdued by the Selaves and Rosses this part hereof was conquered by Stephen, the first King of Hungary, furnished the Saint, by whose persuasion and inducements they received the Gospel. They were governed after this time, as Member of that Kingdom, by a Deputy, whom they called the Vaivod of Transylvania, (the word Vaivod signifying as much as Præfatus Militia, or a Lord-Lieutenant) a man, by reason of the greatness of his place and power of most Authority in that Kingdom. The name and Succession of these Vaivods till the time of John Huniades, comes imperfectly to us; but after that more clear and constant in this order following.

THE VAIVODS AND PRINCES of TRANSYLVANIA.

1. John, surnamed Huniades, made Vaivod hereof by Vladislaus the IV. A man of great Valour and Renown, the great Defender of his Country against the Turks, whom he overthrew in many Battels, especially in that of Maros, where he slew 50000 of them. He died about the year 1458.
2. Stephen, of the noble Family of Cattory, Vaivod in the time of Matthias King of Hungary, the Son of Huniades.
3. Stephen II. surnamed de Sepiso, from the place of his Honour and Estate; not so much memorable for any thing as for being Father of Barbara, the Wife of Sigismund King of Poland and of
4. John II. called also de Sepiso, after the death of Levis the II. chosen King of Hungary, of whom before amongst the Kings of that Realm
5. Americus, Bishop of Veradium, made Vaivod by John de Sepiso, on his taking of the Crown of Hungary, treacherously murdered, for not complying with the Turk Anno 1534.
6. Stephen III. surnamed Maylat, a noble Hungarian, but extremely ambitious, having not long after the death of Americus usurped the Vaivodship, was in the year 1540 confirmed in that Dignity.
7. Stephen IV. Son of John de Sepiso the late King of Hungary, by Solyman the Magnificent made Vaivod of Transylvania, being then an Infant, (by whom he had been deprived of his Kingdom of Hungary, not long before being inroached upon not long after by the said Solyman, this Country was put into the hands of Ferdinand King of Hungary, other Lands being given to the young Prince in exchange hereof.
8. Stephen V. surnamed Dobus, for his Valour shewed against the Turks in defending Agria, made Vaivod of this Country by the said King Ferdinand. But Solyman not liking that this Country should be at the Devotion of the Kings of Hungary, conferred the same (under the Vallage of his Empire) upon one
9. John III. whose Family and surname I have no where found; a professed Champion of the Turks, and as professed an Enemy to Ferdinand and his Successors in the Kingdom of Hungary.

10. Stephen VI. surnamed Battery, (of which House he was) made Vaivod by the Turks; and afterwards on the Commendation of Amurath the III. chosen King of Poland.
11. Christopher Battery, Brother of Stephen, on whose Election unto Poland, he succeeded here; and was the first, who leaving the Title of Vaivod, took that of Prince of Transylvania.
12. Sigismund, Son of Christopher, took off the Turks Boudage, defeated many of their Armies, and slew some of their Bassas, (the Scanderbeg of the times he lived in) But not being able to hold out against so potent an Adversary, he resigned his Estate to Rodolphus the Emperour, having for it in exchange the Dukedoms of Oppelen and Ratibor in Silesia, and an annual Pension of 50000 Joachim, But finding his Pension ill paid, he made a new Renegation of it to.
13. Andrew Battery, Cousin of Sigismund slain within the year by the Vaivod of Valachia. After whose death
14. Rodolphus, Emperour and King of Hungary, is admitted Prince of Transylvania, on the second Renegation of Sigismund. But his Soldiers behaving themselves with too great Insolence, Sigismund was called back again, but never well settled: so that at last he was faine to leave the Country in the power of the Emperour and retire to Prague, where in the year 1613 he died unlamented. In the mean time
15. Jusuf or Iffran, surnamed Bajazy, a Nobleman of this Country, made Prince hereof by the great Turk, and supported by him, cleared the Province of the Germans; and being followed by great Companies of those of the Reformed Religion, he not only obtained of the Emperour Rodolphus a Confirmation of this Estate unto himself, but liberty of Conscience, and the free exercise of Religion for both the Nations, presently after which he died, Decemb. 30. 1606.
16. Sigismund II. of the noble Family of Ragotzy, elected in the February following by the Transylvanians: but finding himself not able to make his Election good against the Emperour, and being unwilling to subject himself unto the Turks, and after the end of one year he relinquished the Government, and betook himself again to a private life.
17. Gabriel Battery, of the Family of the former Princes, succeeded by the favour of Achmet the great Turk, after whose death, so welcome to his Neighbours and Subjects,
18. Bathlem Gabor by the same Achmet was made Prince of Transylvania; a professed Enemy of the House of Austria, but one that with a great deal of noise did them little hurt.
19. Stephen VII. surnamed Ragotzy, on the death of Bathlem Gabor, succeeded Prince, by the power and favour of the Turks, under whose Clientele and Protection he doth still enjoy it, (as his Predecessors did before him) against all pretensions of the Empire and Realm of Hungary: as on the other side he is defended by the Emperour and Crown of Poland from being made Thrall unto the Turks.

2. MOLDAVIA.

MOLDAVIA is bounded on the East with the Euxine Sea, on the West with Transylvania, on the North with the River Niester, the Tyras of Ptolemy and the Ancients, by which it is parted from Podolia, a Province of Poland; and on the South with Valachia.

It is so called as some say, quasi Maotavia, from its nearness to the Fens of Maotia; or rather from the Huns and other People of those Fens who possessed the same. Others conceive that it was first called Maur-davia, i. e. nigrovum Davorum Regio, the Country of the black Davia, (for by the name of Davi were the Dacians called, as we find in Strabo and some others) the Dacians called, from their Completion, or the colour of their Caps made from their Garments; as Nigra Russia, a near neighbouring Province of the Realm of Poland, on the like occasion. But the more probable opinion (as I take it) is, that it took this name from the River Moldavia, which runneth through it, as the Moravians had the name from the River Morava. The Nature and Religion of the People we shall find in Valachia, whereof anciently it was reckoned for a part.

The Country is very fruitful in Corn, Wine, Grapes, and Wood; but more used for pasturage than Tillage, by reason of the great want of People to manure the Land: by means whereof it affordeth great plenty of Beef and Mutton, whereby they supply some parts of Poland and the populous City of Constantinople. And these they issue out in so great a Number, that the tenth penny, exacted by the Prince or Vaivod in the way of Custom amounteth to 150000 Crowns per annum: and yet the Clergy and the Gentry are discharged of this impost. But the main Trade of this Country is not driven by the Natives: the Port Towns being full of Armenians, Jews, Hungarians, and Ragusan Merchants who foretell the Markets, and barter all their Corn and Wine into Russia and Poland; their Skins, Wax, Honey, powdered Beef, Pulse and Butter into Constantinople: it being credibly reported, that from the Ports of this Country no fewer than 500 Ships laden with Corn, Vintages, and other Provisions necessary to the life of man, are yearly sent unto that City.

The Country is in a manner round, the Diameter each way being near upon 300 English miles: but so ill inhabited, by reason of the neighbourhood of the Turks, Tartars and Polonian Cossacks, that certain English Gentlemen having in the year 1609 travelled at least 240 miles in the Country, could meet with in all the way but nine Towns and Villages; and for an hundred miles together the Grapes so high, that it rotted on the ground for want of Cattel to eat it, and of men to order it. So that we are not to expect, in it many eminent Cities or Towns of note; though it afford two Archbishops and two Bishops Sees, Followers (as all the rest of the People are) of the Traditions and Doctrines of the Church of Greece.

The principal of those which be, are, 1. Oczacoma, Zucconia, or Socava, the Vaivod's Seat. 2. Fuciania. 3. Faezling, of which little memorable. 4. Kotim, a place of great strength, on the Borders of Poland, by some called Cochina, the ordinary Magazine of the Country. 5. Jassy, commonly called Tau, the chief Town for Wealth and Trade in all this Province. 6. Bender, a strong Town on the Euxine Sea. 7. Polada, near the Danov. 8. Bialograd, situate on or near the River Tyras, now called Niester, a strong Town against the Tartars, and Polonians. 9. Kilia, anciently called Abichela situate on the Shore of the Euxine Sea, for the most part com-passed round with the waters of it, and therefore said by Ptolemy to be an Island. 10. Ac-German, of old called Alproctron, and Monastyrum, a very strong Town on the same coast also. Both taken by Bajazet, the second Emperor of the Turks, Anno 1485. But these three Towns are not so properly in Moldavia, at least not in Moldavia properly so called, as in a little Province called Bessarabia, lying on the Euxine, formerly counted part thereof, till conquered by the Turks, in the year aforesaid, it became a Member of that Empire. A Tract inhabited by the Bessi in the times of Ptolemy, who being driven out of their Country by the Bulgarians, settled themselves (as some say) in that part of Sclavonia, which is now called Bosnia.

The whole Country, following the Fortune of Transylvania and the rest of Dacia, till the coming of the Seleuces and Rosses, was for a while accounted part of the Russian Empire, till the dismembering of that Empire by the Tartars. After which it was sometime Homage to the Polanders, sometime to the Hungarians, according as the Vaivods or Princes of it could best Conditions. By Mahomet the Great it was made Tributary to the Turks, but the Tribute at the first was very light and easie not above 2000 Crowns per annum: that mighty Emperor, who aimed at more profitable Conquests, being loath to spend his Forces on so poor a Purchase as the addition of this Province would have been unto him. But Bajazet his Son finding how fit it lay for the more absolute Command of the Euxine Sea, took in that part hereof which is called Bessarabia, reducing it into the form of a Turkish Province, Anno 1485; as before was said; imposing on the rest an increase of the former Tribute; and so left it unto the disposal of its natural Prince. After which time the Vaivods fearing to be made Vassals to the Turks, did many times rise in Arms against them, aided therein sometimes by the Hungarians, and sometimes by the Polanders, which last pretended to the Sovereignty and Chieftie of it. Bogdanus, Vaivod hereof in the time of Solimani the second, uniting himself more closely to the Polonians, became thereby suspected by the Turkish Tyrant; who with a great power chased him out of his Country, and gave the same unto a John, a Moldavian born, but bred up for the most part in the Turkish Court (where he renounced his Faith, and was circumcised) under the yearly Tribute of 6000 Crowns. But John the new-made Vaivod was no sooner settled, but he returned again to his first Religion, and for that cause grew less affected by the Turks. Which being observed by the then Vaivod of Valachia, he persecuted to obtain that Dignity for his Brother Peter; offering to double the said Tribute, and to assist in Subjugation of the Country. The Turk, accepting of these Offers, compounds an Army of 70000 Valachians, 30000 Turks, and 3000 Hungarians, with which they fell into Moldavia, and were so gallantly received by the noble Vaivod, that few of them escaped the Slaughter. But being afterwards betrayed by his old Friend Czariviche, and against faith given, barbarously murdered by the Turkish Bassa, Moldavia fell into the hands of the Turks, and was united to that Empire, Anno 1574: the Vaivods from that time forwards being nominated by the Turkish Emperours, and governing as Substitutes and Lieutenants for and under them. And though Aron, one of the succeeding Vaivods, did shake off his Yoke, and confederated himself with Sigismund Prince of Transylvania, and Michael, Vaivod of Valachia, for Defence of themselves and their Estates against that Enemy: yet being afterwards supplanted by Rajpan, one of his own ambitious Subjects, and that confederacy disjointed, it became subject first unto the Polonians, by the power and practice of Zomiskie, Chancellor of Poland; and then unto Rodolphus, Emperor of Germany; and finally unto the Turks, as before it was. And though the Polanders have since made use of some opportunities in imposing Vaivods on this Country, in despite of the Turks: yet was it commonly to their own Loss, little or no Benefit to the Moldavians, and in the end drew the whole Power of the Turks upon themselves in the Reign of Osman; they never since intermeddling in the Affairs of this Province, but leaving them entirely to the Turks disposing; who receive hence some yearly Tribute, but have not hitherto obtained the entire Possession of it, so long since aimed at by those Tyrants.

3. VALACHIA.

VALACHIA is bounded on the East with Moldavia, and a branch of the Ister, or Danubius, bending towards the North; on the West with Russia, on the North with Transylvania and some part of Moldavia, and on the South with the Danubius wholly, by which it is parted from Servia and Bulgaria. First called Flaccia, from one Flaccus a noble Roman, who, on the Conquest hereof in the time of Trajan, brought thither an Italian Colony; afterwards by corruption Valachia, and at last Valachia.

But the name of Flaccia or Valachia was first of more large extent than it is at present, comprehending all Moldavia also: divided in those times by a Ridge of Mountains into Cisalpina, and Transalpina; the name of Moldavia being afterwards appropriated to the one, and that of Valachia (properly and specially so called) unto the other. The People of both, in token of their first Extraction, speak a corrupt Latin or Italian Language; but in Matters of Religion follow the Dictates of the Greek Church, and obey the Patriarch of Constantinople, under whom all Ecclesiastical Affairs are governed by one Archbishop, and two Bishops. In other things they partake generally of the Rudeness and Barbarity of those Nations, which have since subdued them, being a rough-hewn people, hardly civilized, ignorant for the most part of Letters and all Liberal Sciences, not weaned perfectly (in so long time of their profession of Christianity) from the Superstitions of the Gentiles, swearing by Jupiter and Venus, marrying and unmarried at their pleasures, much given to Magical Charms and Incantations, and burying with their Dead both Cloaths and Vintages, for their Relief in that long Journey to the other World.

It is in length 500, in breadth 120 miles. The Country is for the most part plain and very fertile, affording store of Cattel, a breed of excellent Horses, Iron-mines, Saltpetre, and all Provisions necessary to the life of man. Some Vines they also have, and not few Mines of Gold and Silver, more than for fear of the Turks, and other ill Neighbours they dare discover. They are begirt about with woody Mountains, which afford them Fewel; and very well watered with the Rivers of 1. Pruth, called anciently Hierafus. 2. Sterius. 3. Fulmina. 4. Telz. 5. Aluta, all of them falling into 6. the Danov, which in this Province, at the Influx of Fulmina, takes the name of Ister. Yet it is not (at the present) very populous, the Spaciousness and Fertility hereof considered, by reason of the ill neighbourhood of the Tartars, Turks, and Polonian Cossacks: their late long Wars against those Nations and the Dutch having much decreased their former numbers, with which they so abounded in the times foregoing, that the Vaivod of this Country, in the year 1473, was able upon little warning to bring 70000 men into the Field for present Service.

Places of most note herein are, 1. Galatz, on the Influx of the River Pruth, or Hierafus, into the Danubius; the water of which River is so unwholesome, that it causeth the Body to swell. 2. Treicortum, not far from which they dig a Bituminous earth, so refined and pure, that usually they make Candles of it instead of Wax. 3. Prailah, by some called Brailovia, the Town of most Trade in all this Country, situate on the Danov, and defended with a very strong Cattle, fortified by Art and Nature, and furnished with a strong Garrison of Turks, as the Key of this Province, opening the Door unto the rest. The Town was most cruelly destroyed and rased to the ground, with an incredible Slaughter of the Inhabitants of all Sexes and Ages, for the space of four days together, by John the Vaivod of Moldavia, spoken of before, at his first revolting from the Turks: but the Cattle, in regard of the great strength of it, was scarce attempted by him. 4. Teima, a Fortrefs of great strength, but in the hands of the Turks also. 5. Zorza, corruptly for San-Georgio, seated on the Danov, with an Arm whereof the Cattle of it is uncompallidly garrisoned by the Turks, and by them held to be so strong and so safe a place, that at the taking of it by Sigismund the Prince of Transylvania, Anno 1596, there were found in it 39 great pieces of Ordnance, with such store of Arms and Ammunition as might well have served for a whole Kingdom. 6. Tercevisia, or Terevis, sometimes the chief City of the Province, and the ordinary Residence of the Vaivod, till the taking of it by the Turks: once beautified with a fair and famous Monastery, by the Turks converted into a Fortrefs, environed with deep Trenches, strong Bulwarks upon every quarter, and great store of Ordnance, but many times lost and got again, according to the changes and chance of War. 7. Bucuregia, about a days journey from Tercevisia, seated on the Danov, remarkable for two Bridges built near unto it. The one was of Boats, (the laying whereof took up no less than a whole months time) for the transporting of the Army of Sinan Bessa, against Sigismund Prince of Transylvania before mentioned, and broken down by the said Bessa, in his Flight, having been worsted in all places by the Transylvanian. The other was the work of the Emperor Trajan, in his War against Decabalus King of Dacia, built all of Stone, and laid on Piles and Arches of a wonderful greatness; 24 Piles or Pillars whereof are yet remaining, to the great admiration of all beholders. 8. Cebrium, of old called Leystomus, in vain besieged by the Forces of Mahomet the Great, coming in person to subdue this petty Province. 9. Zarnighehusa, the Seat-Royal of Decabalus King of Dacia, taken and destroyed by Trajan in his War against him; who, causing it to be repaired and more beautified than formerly, gave it the Privileges of Rome, and the name of Ulpia Trajana, which it retained as long as Dacia was a Province of the Roman Empire, now a small Village called Vetzer. Some stones have been dug up thereabouts with this Inscription, COLONIA ULPIA TRAJANA AUG. DACIAE ZARMIS, which clearly shows as well the Dignity and esteem as the Antiquity of the place, before Trajan's times.

This Province, as the rest of Dacia on that side of the Danov, after the coming in of the Seleuces and Rosses was under Princes of their own, whom they called (as those of Transylvania and Moldavia did) by the name of Vaivods. Protected by the Hungarian Kings they lived long in Peace; till, sensible of the approaching Danger which the Conquest of most part of Servia and Bulgaria by the Turks was like to bring them, the Vaivod of it in the time of Bajazet the First passed over the Danov with his Forces, and having done great Spoil to the Turkish Territories, returned again unto his Country. Rather provoked than weakened with which Invasion, Bajazet comes into Valachia, overcomes the Vaivod in a pitched Field, compelling him to sue for Peace, and to pay him Tribute. But Bajazet being not long after taken Prisoner by Tamerlane, and the Succession controverted amongst his Sons, the imposed Tribute was with-held, till Mahomet, the fifth King of the Turks, having settled the Affairs of that tottering State, Ann 1417 enforced them to a new Composition, and the payment of all former Reckonings. The fortunate Successes of Chingides in several Battles, induced them once more to change their Masters, and to put themselves under the Protection of the Hungarians, as they had done formerly: but they paid dear for it, their Country being made the Thoroughfare of the Turkish Forces in their Attempts upon that Kingdom. But the Hungarians being vanquished at the Battle of Cassova by Amirab the second, the accustomed Tribute was brought in, and the Turks satisfied for the present, being then hardly put to it by the famous Scanderberg. Not long after, in the year 1462, Mahomet, the Great undertook the Conquest of this Country, upon advertisement that Wladus the then Vaivod of it, intended to join with the Hungarians in some War against him: finding how unprofitable he had spent his Forces in fighting against Woods, Mountains, and a walled Country, he set up Dracula, the younger Brother of Wladus, to claim the Government, who making a Party amongst the people, and having the Turk for his Assistance and support, possessed himself of the Estate, to be holden of him as a Vassal to the Turkish Empire. And it continued in this state, the Vaivods being after this at the Turks appointment, and paying all Exactions imposed upon them, till the Revolt of Sigismund the Prince of Transylvania, Ann 1595, at what time Michael, the then Vaivod hereof, taking that opportunity to shake off this Yoke, confederated with him and the Moldavian for their common Safety. And though he held out longer against Turk and German than either of the other did, discomfited the Turks by his own proper Forces at the Battle of Nicopolis, vanquished the Poles, and added that Province for a while unto the Estate: yet, being at last outed of his Country by the Poles, and another put into his place, he was shamefully slain in his own Tent, by the privy and consent of Buffa, Lieutenant of Rodolphus, Emperor, and King of Hungary. After whose death the Country miserably distracted betwixt two Vaivods, the one placed by the Emperor Rodolph, and the other by Mahomet the Grand Seigneur, endured all the Spoil and Wreck which so calamitous a Competition could bring upon it: till in the end, the fortune of the Turks prevailing, the Valachians were constrained to submit unto their Disposall, and receive their Vaivods from that Court, as they had done formerly; performing their accustomed Duties, and paying fish yearly Tribute as is laid upon them. Which notwithstanding, partly by their own natural Unquietness, and partly by the ambition of such persons as contend for that Dignity, they have since been many times embroiled in Wars; never so quietly composed, but that a new Hope, or the Artifices of the Turkish Ministers, starts them into Action. By means whereof, when they have tired and spent themselves in their own Combustions, they may in fine be fully conquered, and made the next addition to the Turkish Monarchy.

Of what Revenue these Provinces severally were to their natural Lords, and of what severally to the Turks, I am not able to determine. But look upon them as conjunct, and as they stood at the time of the Revolt so often mentioned, and they yielded one way with another into the Treasury of the Grand Seigneur no less than a million of Ducats yearly. Knolles in his Turkish History doth report it so. And his Continuator doth affirm that Moldavia only, before the said Revolt, did yearly yield unto the Turk a whole Tun of Gold, 2000 Horles for service, 10000 great Measures of Wheat, with as much Barley, and a wonderful proportion of Butter, Honey and other Victuals; adding, withal, that the other two Provinces paid as much, or more, for their yearly Tribute. After which rare, the Estimate made by Knolles may hold very good. But since the Reduction of these Countries to their former Obedience, the Turks having been more moderate in their Exactions than they were before, for fear of startling them to some new Engagement, whom they have brought to this Obedience and Conformity with such a vast expense both of Blood and Treasure as would have purchased the best Kingdom of Christendom in the open Market. Inasmuch that the ordinary Tribute of Moldavia is now but 40000 Chequins, that of Valachia but 24000 of the same Coin; besides 1000 Horles yearly sent from both. Such Bribes and Presents as are given by the Vaivods hereof, either to get or hold their places, being Merchandisable Ware, and wholly at the Turks disposing, not being part of this Account.

4. RASCIA.

RASCIA is bounded on the East with Valachia, on the West with Hungary, on the North with Transylvania, and on the South with the River Danube, encompassed on three sides with that River, and another now called Temer, by the Latins Samus; and on the East divided from Valachia by the River Aluta. Called Rascia from the Rascians, a Slavonian People, whom Orduin placeth in this Tract, and from him Magnus. But heret it is to be observed, that besides this Country, the Rascians held some Towns and Territories on the other side of the Danube, and amongst other the strong Town of Chrysumum, whereof more anon.

The Country is poor enough, but the people poorer, oppressed in former times by the Servians, and of late by the Turks; which makes them valiant and adventurous upon all occasions, as commonly these people are who give themselves the hope of bettering those Fortunes which they cannot make worse. Places of most note here are, 1. Bedon, a Town of Trade on the Danube, memorable for the Marts or Fairs which are here held annually. 2. Zarnovia. 3. Covin. 4. Nouvebarde. 5. Severin, not far from which, betwixt it and Bucaresta, a Town of Valachia, are the remains of Trajan's Bridge before mentioned. 6. Colambes, and 7. Columbella; of which little memorable.

These Rascians, as before is said, were a Tribe of Slaves, settled in this Country, at the time of their first spreading in the East, and here continuing ever since in possession of it. Governed at first by their own Princes, whom, by a name borrowed from the Grecians, they called their Despots; that being once the Title of the Heir apparent or designed Successor of the Eastern Empire, as Cesar had been formerly in the Empire of Rome, and Dauphin in the same sense in the Realm of France, to signify the eldest Brother (if Heir apparent to the Crown) of the King in being. But as the following Emperors did affect new Titles, so that of Despot fell from one step to another, till given at last unto the Governors of Provinces, as the Despot of Epirus, Peloponnesus, &c. and in the end was assumed by the several Princes of Rascia, Servia, and Bulgaria. How this Estate became united unto Servia, I am yet to seek: but sure I am, it was united in the person of George Despot of Servia, and as a part of his Estate surprised by Amirab the second, who boasted his Success therein. (In a Speech made unto his Soldiers at the Siege of Belgrade) notwithstanding that he had to strive with Hunger, Thirst, Labour, and Desperation. Nor have have I found at what time or under whose Conduct they passed over Danubius, and there possessed themselves of Chrysumum, and some other Towns and Territories on that side of the River, which they still retain, either furnished by the Servians, or at least intermingled with them; which makes some Writers of opinion that the Rascians and the Servians are but one and the same People under divers names: to which conjecture their being subject to the same Prince gave some farther ground. But whenever they passed over, most probable it is, that, proving either troublesome Neighbours, or unwelcome Guests, they gave occasion to the Despots of Servia to make War upon them, and having vanquished them on that side of the River, to carry the War over unto this; till in the end the whole Country was made subject to them. Added to Servia, they fell together with it into the power of the Turks, as was said before. But being more impatient of the Yoke than the Servians were, they did the Turks much mischief many times, as they came in their way: never so much nor so effectually, as when Mahomet the III was against the Hungarians; at what time they frequently distressed his Armies, by cutting off his men, and intercepting the provisions of Arms and Victuals intended for the great Army of Sinan Bassa. After which at the time when Sigismund Prince of Transylvania had won so many noble Victories against the Turks, 10000 of these Rascians, casting off that Yoke, offered themselves unto his Service. These are the only memorable Actions which are told us of them, though this last was only the attempt of some private Adventures, the whole Nation still continuing in Obedience, as before they did. But following (as they did) the Fortunes of Servia, and having a Concernment on that side of the Water, we shall there say something farther of them.

Thus have we seen when and by what means the whole Province of Old Dacia became in part subject, and in part tributary to the Turks. It is now time to pass over the Danube, and look upon the other part of this Province, called Dacia Nova, or New Dacia, containing after our account four Provinces of the Roman Empire, that is to say, both Mysia, Scythia, and Dardania, besides the two Dacias, Mediterranea and Ripensis, interjected betwixt the two Mysias, as before is said: all now reduced only unto two of the Turkish Provinces, namely the Countries of Servia, and Bulgaria.

5. SERVIA.

SERVIA is bounded on the East with Bulgaria, on the West with Bosnia, and some part of the Lower Hungary, on the North with the Danubius, by which it is parted from Rascia and some part of Valachia, on the South with Albania and part of Macedon. It containeth all Mysia Superior and a great part of Dardania; and took this new name from the Serbi, or Sorabi, a Slavonian People, of whom more hereafter.

This Country, with the neighbouring Rascia and the modern Slavonia, was first converted to the Faith by the preaching of Cyril and Methodius, formerly remembered, between the years 860 and 890, of both which there is reserved some special Monuments. For Methodius, having obtained both of the Patriarch of Constantinople and the Pope of Rome, that the Nations by them converted might celebrate all Divine Offices in their natural Languages, translated the whole Bible into the Slavonian Tongue, which still they have among them in high esteem. And Cyril is said to have devised the Servian Character, not used in this Country only, (though here originally but also in Rascia, Bulgaria, Bosnia, Moldavia, and most parts of Russia: which Character, from this Cyril, (or Chiruril, as they pronounce it) is still called Chirullice.

The Country was very rich and fruitful before the Conquest of it by the Turks, well stored with Mines of Gold and Silver, especially about Zerbina, a strong Town hereof. The People are rude and gross, and much given to Wine; false of their Promises, and that upon slight occasions, so that there is but little trust to be laid upon them.

Chief Rivers of this Country, are, 1. Colubra, and 2. Lina, falling into the Savus. 3. Ikar, falling into the Morava; as that into the Danube at Chrysumum, or Chrysovestia, a strong Town of the Rascians. Principal Towns hereof, 1. Nissa, the Nassim, as I take it of Prochy, by whom it is said to be a City of the Dardanians; now the Metropolis of this Country, and the Key thereof: besieged and taken by Amirab, the third King of the Turks. Ann 1367. 2. Vidua by the Turks called Kiravon, taken by Ferisbeg, in the beginning of Bajazet the first, and ever since the Seat of a Turkish Sanjak, under the Beglerbeg or Bassa of Temeswar. 3. Crutova, and 4. Zerbine, rich in Silver Mines; a great temptation to the Turks to invade this Country. 5. Sinadaria, or Sunderavia, by some called Spendrobo, by the Hungarian Zendezen, by the Turk Semender; situate on the Danube not far from Belgrade, and taken by Amirab the II, Ann 1438, since governed by a Turkish Sanjak, under the Beglerbeg of Buda. 6. Novograd, in the Border hereof, fortified with an impregnable Castle. 7. Stoniburg (in Latine Stoniburgum) the ordinary Seat of the Dipots. 8. Prizden, said by Mercator to be the Birth-place of the Emperor Justinian; most like to be Trajan's City of the Dardanians, mentioned by Procopius, who maketh it the Birth-place of that Emperor, by whom it was repaired and fortified with four great Towers, thence called Tetrappylon. But others (more probably) make him to be born at Lochrida, a Town of Bulgaria; of which more hereafter. 9. Scupi, by Ptolemy called Scupi. And 10. Ulpianum, first built by Trajan, whose forename was Ulpian; afterwards re-edified by the said Justinian, and called Secunda Justiniana, (Justiniana Prima, being in Bulgaria;) now a poor Village called Pyrathi, as Lazius, or Cezanade, as Marius Niger is of opinion. 11. Rhetaria, by Ptolemy, for distinction sake, called Rhetaria Mysorum, then the chief City of the Masians, of which now no Ruines are remaining. 12. Ravennizen, the Pendens of Ptolemy, but not else observable.

Besides these Towns and many other of less note which properly belong to this Province of Servia, the Rascians also hold some Towns on this side of Danubius, the chief whereof is Chrysumum, or Chrysovestia, an old Town, almost wholly ruined, till repaired and fortified by the Turks, Ann 1449, who marking the convenient situation of it on the Banks of Danubius, near to the Fall or Influx of the River Morava, and how commodiously it stood both to command and to annoy the rest of this Country, and for transporting of their Forces to the other side of that great River, made it their first work to possess themselves of it, and have held it ever since with a very strong Garrison. Such other Towns as the Rascians have on this side of the River, or of less note, are looked on by our Author but as Towns of Servia, (by the Despots whereof they were long since conquered) where before we had them.

The old Inhabitants of this Country, such as are most considerable in the story of it, were the Bastarnae, the Dardani, and the Masi: the Tricornis and Picenis, spoken of by Ptolemy, being either Branches of the Masi, or else an obscure People not worth the looking after. Of these the Dardanians were most ancient inhabitants.

inhabiting near Mount Hemus, on the Borders of Macedon, a barbarous People, and perpetual Enemies of that Crown, most mischievous in their Attempts and Designs against it in the declining state thereof, making great and frequent inroads into that wealthy Country, with the spoils whereof they enriched themselves. Infomuch that Philip the Father of Persius, finding no other likely means to be rid of that Trouble, negotiated with the Balkanians, a strong and hardy Nation that dwelt beyond the Danubius, to abandon their own Dwellings, and come to him with their Wives and Children; promising to assist them in rooting out the Dardanians, and give them possession of their Country. But Philip dying as the Balkanians were in their March through Thrace, and no care taken by his Son to pursue the Business, they returned all home again, except 30000, which pierced into Dardania, and made their own Fortunes as they could. This practice, as it gave matter of Quarrel to the Romans against the Macedonians, so it occasioned Persius, the Son of Philip, to make use of these Balkanians against the Romans, at whose request 10000 Horse and as many foot passed over the Danubius, under the Conduct of Claudius, a King amongst them. But finding that Persius was too ill-trusted to part with Money for their pay, they returned again, foraging the Country as they passed. But whether they passed over that River, or mingled themselves with the rest of their Nation, who upon Philip's invitation had before come over, that I do not find. However, coming by this means acquainted with the sweets of this Country, divers of them came over hither in the following times, incorporating with the Dardanians, or bordering near them, infomuch as Tacitus for the most part joins them both together, either as the same, or neighbouring Nations, first vanquished and added to the Roman Empire by C. Curius Scribonius, immediately upon the end of the Civil Wars raised by Spartacus and the Fencers, or Gladiators, the Myrians, or the Maesi, being broken at the same time also. Anno V. C. 681. As for the Maesi, being the last and greatest of these Nations, they were most probably a Colony of the Myrians of the lesser Asia, anciently called Myfi, and the Country Myfia, as those Asians were, and as those Europeans are by the Greek Writers generally, and by Florus and some others amongst the Latines; though after, for distinction sake, Tacitus, Pliny, Virgil, and generally most Latine Authors, give them the name of Maesi. A fierce and savage People they were held to be, Barbari barbarorum, as my Author calleth them; more barbarous than commonly the Barbarians were: but, for all that, subdued by M. Licinius Crassus in the time of Augustus Caesar, who overcame them in two Battels, and after vanquished the Balkanians, and their King Delas, whom he killed in fight; the Country being reckoned after that as a Roman Province. It continued in this estate till the Fall of the Eastern Empire, when it was subjected by the Sclavi or Sarmatians of Europe; and in the division of the Spoil fell unto the Sorabi, a Sclavonian People, contractedly called Sorbi; and at last Serbi, Servii, and the Country Servia. It was reduced again to the Obedience of the Eastern Emperours by Basilius Porphyrogenetus, Anno Ch. 1000. or thereabouts; but more absolutely conquered by John and Mannuel Comnenus, two of his Successors: but so as they were suffered to live under their own Princes, whom they called Despots, Homagers to the Empire, and depending on it. Enriched with the Conquest and addition of Raficia, (the certain time whereof I have no where found) they were first set on by the Turks in the time of Lazarus the Despot, from whom Amurath the first took the Town of Nissa, being the chief of all this Country; provoked thereto by the great Forces which the Servian and Balkanian Despots had raised against him for the Siege of Adrianople. And though Lazarus, terrified with this Loss, made his Peace with Amurath: yet after he brake out again into open War, in which he was overcome and slain in the Plains of Cassova, whereof more anon. To Lazarus succeeded Stephen, who quietly enjoyed his Dominions here; the Turks being in the mean time embroiled in War amongst themselves by the Sons of Bajazet. But that difference being once composed, and Mahomet absolutely settled on his Father's Throne, the Turks began again to pursue this Quarrel, which George the Son of Stephen compounded with Amurath the second, Son of Mahomet, paying the Turks a yearly Tribute, and giving him his Daughter Mary for a Wife or Concubine. But this Alliance did not so well unite their Affections, (though George did many ill Offices in regard thereof to his Christian Neighbours) nor so well settled his Estate, but that Amurath in fine dispossessed him first of Raficia, and afterwards of Servia also, for letting Himedes escape, whom he had in his power. And though Amurath was necessitated to restore Servia again, upon the Peace made with Vladislaus the King of Hungary; yet Mahomet the Great, on the death of George, soon possessed himself of it. For Lazarus, the youngest of George's Sons, having deprived Stephen of George's elder Brethren (whose eyes Amurath had before put out, to make them incapable of the Government) of the Principality, compelled them to seek to Mahomet for Aid. But dying whilest these matters were in agitation, his Widow put her self and her three Sons, Peter, John and Martin, under the Protection of the Hungarians; and by that means, but with much trouble and many difficulties (the blind Brethren still soliciting the Turks against her) held the State a while, till the people, finding no assurance in that kind of Government, and weary of the daily Harms they received from the Turks, yielded themselves absolutely to the power of Mahomet, about the year 1460, continuing ever since a Province of the Turkish Empire.

BULGARIA is bounded on the East with the Euxine Sea, on the West with Servia, on the North with the River Danubius, which is here in the East part called Ister, on the South with Thrace, called formerly by the name of Myfia Inferior, as lying lower than the other; the course of that River; as Servia, lying up the Water, was called Myfia Superior. Afterwards it was reckoned as a part of Dacia, and in that notion was the Birth-place of Galerius, one of the Caesars in the Empire of Diocletian, born in this Country near the Borders of Thrace, not far from the City Sardica, who therefore, in the Martyrologies of the middle Times, was called by the name of Dacianus. Finally, it took this name from the Bulgars, a Scythian People, who in the year 566. possessed themselves of it.

The Country for the most part is full of sharp and rugged Hills, Branches of the great Mountain Hemus, which divide it from Thrace, and spread themselves over all this Province, infomuch that even the Mid-lands of it are rough and stony; and though the lower parts have some Plains and Valleys, yet are they generally full of Woods and Defarts; the most unpleasant and least peopled part of both the Dacia's. The Inhabitants hereof, in some conformity to the Country, are patient of all Toil and Labour, and not easily tired; but nothing is more troublesome from their Conversion: more full of Courage than of Valour; their Courage not proceeding by the rules of Reason, but issuing only out of Brutishness, or a natural Firebrands.

They first received the Christian Faith towards the latter end of Justinian the 2. who died in the year 713, Trobellius being then their Prince; afterwards by the persuasion of Leo the 4. surnamed Porphyrogenetus, about the year 789. But those Conversations being but partial and for private ends, they relapsed shortly after to their former Gentilism; not totally gained unto the Gospel till the Empire of Michael and Theodora, in the year of Grace 860. Subject since that unto the Jurisdiction of the Patriarch of Constantinople, but not without great opposition of the Popes of Rome, who laid a Claim unto them.

Places of most note in it are, 1. Axiom, or Axiopolis, on the Banks of Danubius, which from this Town begins to take the name of Ister. It is now called Colomanich, of no great fame otherwise. 2. Dinogetia, by Antonine called Dinagria, now Drinagius, situate also on the Ister, opposite to the Influx of Hierafus, and the Town of Galatz. 3. Melenbria, situate on the Euxine, and still retaining the old name in Strabo, by some error of the Transcribers, called Menebria. 4. Marciannopolis, on the Ister or Danubius also, built by Trajan in honour of Marcia his Sister, whence it had the name: in vain besieged by the Goths at their first Irruptions on this Country; and afterwards much mentioned in the Stories of that warlike People, for many Bickerings and some great Battels they had near it with the Emperor Claudius, in one of which they were overthrown by him with a mighty Slaughter. 5. Nicopolis, (by the Turks called Nigebol) built by the same Trajan on the Danubius, at the Fall of the River Sares, at his return from the Conquest of Dacia, whence was the occasion of the Name; the word Nicopolis signifying the City of Victory, sufficiently memorable for the Founder of it, more for the many great Battels fought near unto it; whereof two were principal. The first, that of Sigismund the Emperor; and King of Hungary, besieging it with an Army of 130000 Christians in the time of Bajazet the first, (whose Father Amurath had taken it from the King of Bulgaria) the issue of which Siege was this, that Bajazet coming to raise the Siege obtained the Victory, with the loss of 60000 Turks; the Army of the Christians being wholly routed, 20000 slain, all the rest almost taken Prisoners, and the young Emperor forced to fly by Sea to Thrace, thence unto Constantinople, afterwards to Rhodes; and at last, after 18 months absence, to his Realm of Hungary. The other (as it were in revenge of this) was fought betwixt Michael Vaivod of Valachia, and the Forces of Mahomet the third, over whom the Vaivod got a remarkable Victory, and, as the Fruits thereof, took the City itself, carrying thence great Spoil and Booty, and infinite multitudes of People; with some whereof he made up his Army, sending the rest to inhabit and manure the void and desert places of his own Dominions. 6. Sophia, called Tibiscum in the time of Prolety, repaired by the Emperor Justinian, who gave it this name, from a famous and magnificent Temple founded and dedicated by him unto S. Sophia. The ordinary Residence in these late times of a Turkish Beglerbeg, who hath the chief Command of Europe under the Grand Seignior. Once taken by Himedes, and by him at the command of Vladislaus King of Hungary, burnt to the ground; but afterwards repaired, and more strongly fortified than it had been formerly. 7. Varna, anciently called Dionysopolis, situate on the Euxine Sea, near the Borders of Thrace; remarkable for the great Defeat there given the Christians, the first Flight of Himedes from the face of the Turks, and the death of Vladislaus King of Hungary, spoken of before. 8. Sumium,

9. Pezecehim, 10. Gulacrium, 11. Galates, &c. 12. Macropolis, all taken by the Hungarians in their way to Arma, and lost again upon the issue of that Battel. 13. Silifria, at this time the chief City thereof, and the ordinary Abode of a Turkish Beglar: delivered to Amurath the first by Sajmeus, Prince or King of Bulgaria, out of a vain hope to save thereby the rest of his Country. 14. Parastibis, or Perflabius, the ancient Seat of the Kings of Bulgaria, till the taking of it by John Zimisjes Emperor of Constantinople, who caused it to be called Johannopolis: but it soon lost that new Name, and is now an ordinary Village called Peristabul. 15. Ternova, the usual Seat or Residence of the later Princes of this Country at the Conquest of it by the Turks. 16. Budina, once of great importance, and the chief of this Country; but being taken by Himedes in the course of his Victories, it was by him burnt down to the ground, as having been the cause of much War to the Christians there: supposed to be built in or near the place where once stood the old City of Oescus, the principal Town of the Triballs; called therefore Oescus Triballorum; though some will have that City to be now called Elida. 17. Pemuzina, a Town of great Strength, and one of the first places taken by the Turks, 18. Cassova, fatal to the Christians, who in the Plains hereof had two main Defeats. The first by Amurath the first, who here discomfited Lazarus the Despot of Servia, and the greatest Army that the Christians ever raised against the Turks: Lazarus himself being slain in the Fight, and Amurath himself shortly after the Battel stabbed in the Belly by one Miles Cobelinus, a wounded and half-dead Soldier, as he was taking a view of the dead Bodies which lay there in heaps. The last by Amurath the second to the famous Himedes, whom he here discomfited after a cruel Fight continuing three days together, in which were slain 17000 Christians, and amongst them the greatest part of the Hungarian Nobility; Himedes put again to flight, and forced to some Extremities to preserve his life: the Turks buying this great Victory with the loss of 40000 men, as themselves confessed. The place in which these Fights were fought, called the Plains of Cassova, extendeth 20 miles in length and 5 miles in breadth, encompassed round with pleasant Mountains, in the form of an Amphitheatre; as if they were designed by Nature for a Stage of Agon, or Darogorum, by some of the Ancients called Rhodogolon, the Seat in Prolety's time of the first Legion called Italica; afterwards one of the chief Towns which the Rosses or Russians had in this Country: from whom it was taken by John Zimisjes the Eastern Emperor, decaying after that time by little and little, and now wholly ruinant. 20. Abdrada, the Birth place of Justinian, by whom it was beautified and enlarged, and called Justiniana Prima: who, raising the Diocese of Dacia into a Prefecture, placed here a Primate for the Affairs of the Church, which honour it doth still retain, the Bishop hereof being the Primate of all Dacia, and a Presulum Pratorio for Affairs of State. But he being dead, the Town returned to its old name, now called P. Ochrada, contracted by William of Tyre to Aere, by the Turks called Giusfandil: a distinct Principality of it self in the time of Amurath the first, and by him made tributary at his first War with this Country.

And here it is to be observed, that those parts of this Country which lie next to the Euxine Sea had anciently the name of Pontus, as had also some parts of Asia minor which bordered on the same Sea also; and that the City of Tomi, as Prolety, or Tomos, as Pliny calleth it, to which Ovid was banished by Augustus Caesar, was a City of this European Pontus, and not of the Asian, as hath been commonly conceived. For Tomi is by Prolety placed amongst the Cities of Maeis in ferior, and by Ovid on the West or left side of the Euxine, and not upon the South thereof, as appeareth by these Lines of his.

Cum Maris Euxini postis ad lava Tomitis Quarere me last Principis ira iubet.

That is to say;

*My wronged Prince's Wrath commands me 'bide
At Tomos, on the Euxine's Western side.*

The place is at this day called Tomiswar, according to Celium Calcepinum; but others would have it to be the same which is now named Kiovia, in the same Tract also; not far from which is said to be a Lake called to this day Ovidow Jezecoor, the Lake of Ovid. For what cause he was hither banished is not yet agreed on. Some say it was for the unlawful Pleasures which he enjoyed with Julia the Emperours Daughter, whom he celebrates in his Amorium under the borrowed name of Corinna. Others imagine that he had seen Augustus himself unnaturally using the company of the same Julia, his Daughter; for which the offended Prince exiled him: and that he alludeth hereunto in his Book de Trifibus, saying, Cur aliquid vixi? cur noxia lumina feci? &c. A Crime of which I dare not think that Noble Emperour to be any way guilty. But certain it is, that whatsover was the true reason of it, that which was openly pretended was the writing of those lascivious and inflammatory Books de Arte amandi, tending to the Debauchment of Youth and Corruption of Manners, which he in divers places of his Works acknowledgeth for the cause thereof.

But to return unto the business of this Country. The ancient Inhabitants herof were towards the East the Trogodytae, dwelling near the Mouth or Fall of the River Pence into the Euxine or Black Sea; the Pencini, inhabiting on the very Mouth of it, and in a little Island opposite thereto, called also Pence, now Picina, the Cribizi, Piarsini and Dineysii, the Western parts being wholly taken up by the Triballi, the most potent Nation of them all, who alone had the happiness to vanquish Phillip King of the Macedonians. For Phillip having, or pretending a Quarrel against Antas a King of the Sarmatians, entred his Country, overthrew him in a set Fight, carried with him great Booties, and among other things 20000 Mares for Breed, which he took in the Battel; it being the Custom of the Scythians and Sarmatians to use Mares only in their Wars, because their not stopping in the midst of a Race to piss could be no impediment to them in their Flight. In his return homeward these Triballi deny him passage through their Country, unless they might partake of the Spoils. This being denied, they fall from words to blows, and next to a pitched Field. In which Fight Phillip was wounded with an Arrow, which passing through his thigh, nailed him to his Saddle; his Horse being galled with the Wound, falling down to the ground. Which the frightened Macedonians seeing, and supposing him dead, fled out of the Field, leaving all their spoils to the Triballi; as if they had been sent out only to be their Receivers. So true an Observation is it, that the very Life-blood of an Army runs chiefly in the veins of the General or Supreme Commander. Over-topped at this by the Macedons, or mingled with them they were first broken by the Romans under the Conduct of C. Curio Scribonius, spoken of before; the absolute Conquest of them and the rest of the Masians being reserved for the times of Augustus Caesar. By him, or his Successors, the whole Country of the Masians being cast into two Provinces, this part of it had the name of Masia inferior, that, lying Westward up the Water, being called Masia superior, for distinction sake. By the Emperour Aurelianus, the Dacians being forced from the other side of the Danubius by the Barbarous Nations, or by him prudently removed to avoid their Fury, were planted here betwixt both the Masia's, divided afterwards into two Provinces taken out of the other; Mediterranea, and Ripensis, which, with the help of the higher Masia, Dardania, Pravalliana, and part of Macedonia Salaria, made up the whole Diocese of Dacia, as before was said. The residue hereof, now falling under the name of Bulgaria, was afterwards divided into two Provinces also; another Province being taken out of the East parts of the lower Masia, lying betwixt the River Phenisus and the most Northern Branch of the Ister, which they called Scythia, because the Araxes, a Scythian People, did once possess it; the Romans ambitiously affecting to be thought the Conquerors of that unconquerable Nation. Successively by the Goths and Huns was this Country taken from the Romans: recovered again in or before the time of Justinian, who had here his Officers which were subordinate to the Vicar or Lieutenant of Thrace, to which Diocese they properly and of right belonged.

But long they held not in that State; the Sclavonians first and after the Bulgarians, being Masters of them. Of the first of these enough hath been said elsewhere. These latter being a Scythian People, inhabiting on the Banks of the River Volga, were at first called Volgari, afterwards Bulgari: though some conceive they had the name of Bulgarians from Bulgar, the chief Town of their Nation: but both uncertain. In the time of the Emperour Anastasinus they made their first Sally into the Provinces of the Empire, foraging Illyrium and Thrace; afterward, in the Reign of Heraclius, they were hired by Cosphores the Persian (with many other Barbarous Nations) to besiege Constantinople. In the Reign of Constantine surnamed Pogonatus, conquering or calling out the Sclaves, they planted themselves in these Countries; compelling the Emperour to compound with them for a sum of money, from making any farther Inroad into his Dominions. From this time forward we find their Princes called by the name of Kings of the Bulgarians: the first of which after their settling in these parts was Trebellius, or Trebelli, as some call him, the first Christian Prince of the Bulgarians, by whom Justinian the Second was first restored unto the Empire, of which he had been ousted by Asinarius; and afterwards well beaten by them, and forced to fly unto Constantinople, on some Breach between them. Growing into good terms with the Eastern Emperours, they aided them against the Saracens, then besieging the Imperial City; of whom they flew 22000 as they were foraging the Country: and in the time of Leo the fourth, called Porphyrogenetus, they became Homagers to the Empire, by whose perswasion Ishodius King of the Bulgarians received the Sacrament of Baptism; and thereupon was honoured by him with a Wife of the Imperial Family, and the honourable Title of a Patrician. After this time the Kings hereof had many Privileges indulged them by the Constantinopolitans, not usually communicated unto other Princes. viz. their Crown of Gold, their Tiar or Cap of Silk, and their red Shoes, for their Regal (which were also the Imperial) Ornaments. To these Kings also, and to these only, did the Greek Emperours allow the Title of Basileus, as being merely Imperial. Other Kings they called Pais, from the Latine word Rege. Inasmuch that when Basilius Macedo had received Letters from Pope Adrian the second, wherein Lewis the Second the Western Emperour was called Basilius, he raised out that Imperial Attribute, and dispatched an Embassage to Lewis, wherein he challenged it at his own peculiar Epiteth. Some Quarrels after falling out, Crimus the Bulgarian King, in the time of Nicephorus, Successor to the Emperour Irene, invaded Thrace, and, taking the City of Sardica, killeth that Emperour in his Tent, and worsteth Michael (who

(who succeeded) in the open Field; Mesembria, a principal City of this Country, being taken and ransacked by him. But Begor, of another temper, not only did receive the Sacrament of Baptism, which many of his Predecessors had intermitted, but brought his Subjects (who rebelled on the Change of Religion, and thereupon were fought with and vanquished by him) to the same Faith also: gratified for that cause by Theodore the Emperour with some large Accession unto his Estate. After long Wars betwixt the Bulgarians and the following Emperours, the fortune of the Constantinopolitans did at last prevail: Samuel King of the Bulgarians being overthrown, 15000 of his Soldiers taken and deprived of fight, and the Country conquered by Basilius the second, surnamed Porphyrogenetus, Anno 1015, from that time Tributary to the Empire; to which they did good service in the time of Constantinus Duca, using their Help against the Uzi, a new Swarm of Scythians, passing over the Ister with an Army of 60000 fighting men, and wasting Macedonia and Greece. The like did John, another of the Kings thereof, aiding the Greeks against the Latines, whom they overthrew with a great Slaughter, Baldwin the Emperour of the Latines in Constantinople being taken Prisoner, sent in Bonds to Ternova, and there cruelly murdered, Anno 1206. Nor were they wanting to assist them against the Turks, when they grew dangerous to that Empire by the taking of Adrianople: for the Recovery whereof they raised a great and puissant Army, unfortunately discom-fitted by the Forces of Amurath the first, Anno 1369. Provoked with which Invasion, Amurath, having settled his Affairs in Asia, with an army of 30000 fallen into Bulgaria, takes divers Places of importance, and prevailed so far, that Sajmus the last Prince hereof, wrapping his Winding-sheet about him, to shew that he had deserved Death, prostrates himself most abjectly at the Tyrant's feet, offering to put Silifria (his strongest City) into his possession. For not performance of which Offer, his Country is again invaded, and most part of it taken from him; he being permitted to enjoy the rest upon hard Conditions, as Vallad and Tributary to the Turks; But Bajazet, Amurath's Successor, not content herewith, picked a Quarrel with him, and made an absolute Conquest of Bulgaria; converting it into a Province of the Turkish Empire, Anno 1396. In which state it hath ever since continued, governed by three Turkish Sanzacks under the Beglerbeg of Greece: the Sanzacks residing at Nikopolis, Silifria, and Sophia, in which last the Beglerbeg himself doth sometimes reside.

Mount Hæmus.

Before we enter into Greece, we must cross MOUNT HÆMUS, a Ridge of Hills extending from the Euxine Sea to the Adriatic, and thereby separating Greece both from Dacia and Sclavonia. They are so high and Subject to the Weather, that Stratoniceus, an old Grecian, did use to say, that eight months of the Year it was always cold, for the other four, Winter. It was affirmed by some of the ancient Writers, that from one of the highest Heads hereof as well the Adriatic as the Euxine might have been discerned: the truth of which report, upon very good reason, hath been called in question. But out of doubt, from some one Top or Summit of it there is so full a Prospect into Thrace and Macedon, that from hence Pericles taking a survey of the Site of these Countries, pulsit per abrupta Castra, &c. as the Story hath it, was able to make choice of the fittest places for Forts and Castles, whereby to lock upon all the passages against his enemies the Romans. In the parts bordering upon Thrace it is so rough and craggy, that it is not to be passed but at two places only. Whereof one was made by the Emperour Trajan, where is yet to be seen a mighty strong Gate built of great square Stone, by which the Passage that way was either opened or shut at the pleasure of them who had the keeping of the same, with a small Force exceeding easily defended against puissant Armies. The other, being situate near a little River by the Bulgarians called Saltiza, not altogether so freight and narrow as the other, but rising high, and full of broken Rocks and dangerous Precipices, is alike impassable; defensible at ease, and without any great danger; as was experimentally found by the famous Hunides; when he attempted (but in vain) to have led his Forces this way for the Siege of Adrianople. Those parts hereof which border upon Macedonia, though somewhat opener, are not much easier of ascent; the Passages through the broken Rocks and Precipices being very difficult, and not easily mastered: inasmuch that when Pericles, the last King of Macedon, had fortified the Streights hereof against the Romans, non reliquisse aditum nisi à Calo vententibus vallabatur; it was conceived (faith Flor) that there was no passage left for any Forces, unless they fell immediately from the Heavens themselves.

This great and rookie Chain of Hills, as they were vehemently expost to Wind and Weather, so were they destitute of those Commodities which were either comfortable, or indeed merely necessary to the Life of man; which made the Passage over them in a manner impossible unto any Armies, but what were very patient both of Cold and Hunger. Yet were they not left desolate and void of People, especially in these sides hereof which lay next to Greece; but most especially in those parts which bordered or confined on Thrace: where the Spurs and Branches of the Hills spreading far and wide and taking up a great part of the Country, occasioned the Romans, in the Division of the Diocese of Thrace into several Provinces, to call that part or Province of it which lay next to Masia by the name of Haminumum, or Haminotum. The principal Towns whereof were Adrianople, Udenna, and Archidius: the principal Gouverneur thereof being a Roman President. Where, by the way, we may take notice of an Error in this common Impression of the Code, Lib. VII. Tit. 62. Leg. 23. where we find Hami montem, for Haminomium; the first being the name only of the Mountain, and the later (which is there meant) of the Roman Province.

But to return unto the Mountain. There is another of this name in Thessaly, mentioned (or mistook for this) by Servius in his Notes on the first Book of the Georgicks; on the Top whereof was said to be the Habitation of Mars; at the Bottom the most pleasant Valley of Tempe: so called from Hemus, the Son of Boreas and Oribyia, amongst the Poets. And possibly, to distinguish this from that of Thessaly, Proteny and others call it Aemus, without the Aspiration: though it may as well be that there are others of this name, as that this is called in divers places or in divers Authors by other Names; one part hereof being called Scombrus by Aristotle, another Scombrus by Thucydides, and by Laonicus the whole called Prasfobus. The like may be observed at the present also, Pistus calling it by the name of Catena Mundi, a great part whereof it links together; Cuspinianus Costegnazza, Lazius Krivizius, the Italians Mont Argentario, the French Mont de Castigno, the Slavonians Cumonica, and the Turks Balgan. Which I have therefore here observed for the Reader's sake, that, meeting any of these names in the Stories either of the ancient or modern Times, he may know what Hills or Mountains are intended by them. Which said, I now pass on to Greece, the way being thus prepared and laid open to me.

GREECE, in the present Latitude and Extent thereof, is bounded on the East with the Propontick, Hellspont; and Aegæan Seas; on the West with the Adriatick; on the North with Mount Hemus; which parteth it from Bulgaria, Serovia, and some part of Illyricum; and on the South with the Sea Ionian. So that it is in a manner a Peninsula or Demi-Island, environed on three sides by the Sea, on the fourth only united to the rest of Europe.

But this is only in relation to the present Extent hereof, the name being anciently restrained within narrower Bounds. Confined at first to Attica and the parts adjoining; ab Isthmi angustis Hellas incipit, as it is in Plinius; and it took the name of Hellus from Hellen, the Son of Ducalion, as that of Greece, or Græcia, from Græcus the Son of Cærops, the first King of Athens. Communicated afterwards to Peloponnesus, then to Thessalia also; and finally, when the Macedonian Empire had enlarged it self over the petit Commonwealths and Estates hereof, it came to be communicated to that Country also. The People for this cause are known by divers names, by some called Achivis, by others Myrionides, sometimes Pelagi, Danaï, Argivis, &c. But the name whereby they are best known in Sacred Writers is that of Ελληνες, so called from Hellas, the more proper and genuine name of Greece in the strictest notion and acceptance. A name used frequently and familiarly in the Book of God, both absolutely, to denote this Nation, as where it is said οἱ Ἕλληνες ἔγερται, as in opposition to the Jews, the Barbarians, and Hellenis or Græcizing Jews. First with relation to the Jews, and then it signifieth the whole Body of the Gentiles generally, of which the Græcians were the most eminent and famous people as Ἰσραὴλ vs αἰσώρη vs Ἰσραὴλ the Jew first, & also to the Gentiles, Rom. 2. 9. 10. Give none offence, vs Ἰσραὴλ vs Ἰσραὴλ neither to the Jews nor to the Gentiles, 1 Cor. 10. 32. and elsewhere frequently. In which, and all other places of that kind, where the Antichrist lieth between the Jews and other Nations, we are to understand the Gentiles, the whole Body of them; and though many times our Translators, know not why, render it literally the Greeks, as Rom. 1. 16. and 10. 12. &c. 2dly. with reference to all other Nations not so well versed in the Learning and Civilities of that Age as the Græcians were, whom by a common name of scorn they called Barbarians; according unto that of Sirabo, Barbara sunt omnes Nationes præter Græcos; the Romans themselves, though then the great Lords of the World, being included in the reckoning. And for the word is taken; Rom. 1. 14. I am a Debtor, saith S. Paul, ἔδωκα vs Βαρβάρους, both to the Greeks & the Barbarians, to the wise and unwise, in which as well the Romans, as those of other Nations, have the name of Barbarians. Last of all for the Græcizing Jews whom the Vulgar Latine called Græcos and our English Græcians; they were such of the Jews, who, living dispersed amongst the Gentiles, used the Translation of the Septuagint, making that the Canon both for Life and Doctrine. Which difference betwixt them and the Jews inhabiting in Judea, who kept themselves unto the Scriptures in their Mothers-tongue, and used the Hebrew only in all Sacred Actions, occasioned many Jars amongst them, which sometimes broke out into open Violence; insumuch as R. Eliezer brake into the Synagogue of the Alexandrines at Hiersusalem, and therein committed many Outrages. Of this Unfriendliness between them mention is made Act. 6. 1. where it is said, that there arose a murmuring of the Græcians against the Hebrews, &c. In which place, though the English and Vulgar Latine use the name of Græcians, yet ought they more properly to be rendered Hellenis, or Græcizing Jews, as in all other places, viz. Acts 9. 29. and 11. 26. &c. where they are called Ελληνιστάς and not Ελληνες, in the Greek Originals.

But to proceed to our Description of the Country; we find it situate on the Northern Temperate Zone, under the fifth and sixth Climates, the longest Day being 15 hours inhabited by a People which were once brave men of War, found Scholars, addicted to the love of Vertue and civil Behaviour; a Nation once so excellent, that their Precepts and Examples do still remain as approved Rules and Tutors, to instruct and direct the man that endeavoureth to be virtuous: famous for Government, affectors of Freedom, every-way noble. For which Vertues in themselves, and want of them in others, all their Neighbours and remote Nations were by them scornfully called Barbarians.

barians: a name now most fit for the Græcians themselves, being an unconstant People, destitute of all Learning, and the means to obtain it, Universities: uncivil, riotous, and so lazie, that for the most part they endeavour their Profit no further than their Belly compels them and so peridious withal in all their Dealings, especially towards the Western Christians, that it is grown into a Proverb amongst the Italians, Chi fida in Greco, fara intrigo, i. e. He that trusts to a Greek is sure to be couzened. When they meet at Feasts or Banquets, they drink small Draughts at the beginning; which by degrees they increase, till they come to the height of Intemperancy: at which point when they are arrived, they keep no rule or Order, where-as before to drink out of one's turn was accounted a point of Incivility. Hence as I believe, sprung our By-word, As merry as a Greek, and the Latine word Gracius.

The Women for the most part are brown-complexioned, exceedingly well-favoured, and excessively amorous. Painting they use very much, to keep themselves in grace with their Husbands, for when they once grow wrinkled, they are put to all the Drudgeries of the House. Both Sexes generally in their Habit and outward Garb apply themselves to the State under which they live, such as are subject to the Turk conforming unto the Drefs and Fashions of the Turks, as those who live under the Venetians do to that of Venice.

The Christian Faith was first here planted by S. Paul, invited by the Spirit to come over into Macedonia, Act. 16. 9. 12. passing from thence to Thessalonica, the chief City of Mydonia, ch. 17. 1. from thence to Athens in Achidia, v. 15, 16. then unto Corinth, the Metropolis of Peloponnesus, ch. 18. 1. watering the greatest part of Greece with the Dew of Heaven, and planting Bishops in most Churches where he preached the Gospel, as Diognisus (the Acropagite) at Athens, Aristarchus at Thessalonica, Epaphroditus at Philippi, Silas at Corinth, and Titus in the Isle of Crete. The like he did in many other Countries also accounted Members of the Greek Church, though not of Greece, the name of the Greek Church extending over all the Provinces of the Eastern Empire, governed by the 4 Patriarchs, 1. of Alexandria, who presided over Agypt and Arabia; 2. of Hiersusalem, whose Patriarchate erected only in regard of our Saviour's Passion in that City, and the great opinion which by that means accrued unto it confined within the Bounds of Palestine; 3. of Antioch, whose Jurisdiction contained all Syria, Armenia, Cilicia, and the Isle of Cyprus, and whatsoever else was within the Diocese of the Orient; and 4. of Constantinople, to whose charge were committed all the other Provinces of the Greek Church, as Greece, Russia, Dacia, Scythiana, part of Poland, and all the Islands in the Adriatick, Ionian and Aegæan Seas, together with all Asia minor and the Islands thereof, (except only the Provinces of Cilicia and Isauria and the Countries lying on both sides of Pontus Euxinus and Palmus Mositi. The regions of the large increase of whose Jurisdiction, continued at first within the Diocese of Thrace, were, 1. the reputation of being Seated in the Imperial City, which drew after it (by a Decree of the Council of Chalcedon) all the Provinces of Asia minor, Cilicia and Isauria excepted only; 2. the voluntary submission of the Græcians upon their Separation from the Church of Rome, by which all Greece, Macedon, Epirus, the Isle of Crete, and all the Islands in the Aegæan and Ionian Seas, which formerly had no Superior but their own Primate, the Archbishop of Thessalonica, became subject unto them; 3. the diligence of the Patriarch hereof in converting by his Suffragan Bishops and other Ministers the Russians, Bulgarians and Slavonians, to the Faith of Christ, which made those people to look upon Constantinople as their Mother-Church; and 4. the Piety and Care of the later Patriarchs, in supplying with new Pastors and Ministers those parts and Provinces of the West, which being conquered by the Turks, had been forfaken by their old Clergy and left like Sheep without a Shepherd.

And yet this Church, though thus extended and enlarged in the outward Members, is very much freighted and impaired at home; the Country being thinly peopled, and many of those people trained up from their infancy in the Mahometan Law. So that it is a greater wonder that there should be any remainders of Christianity left amongst them, than that the open Professors of it should be so few; the Tyranny of the Turks on the one side, and the Temptations of Pre-ferment upon the other, being rightly pondered. For who could look to find twenty Churches of Christians in Constantinople the Seat and ordinary Residence of the Turkish Emperors? or that in Salonica or Thessalonica, there should be 30 Christian Churches, and but three Turkish Mosquits? that the Primate of this Salonica, should have under him 10 Suffragan Bishops, whereof he of Philippi hath no fewer than 150 Churches under his Jurisdiction? or, finally, that under the Metropolitans of Athens and Corinth there should be as many? So mercifully hath God dealt with his luxurious and peridious People, as not to take away their Candlick, though he hath darkened and obscured the Light thereof.

As for the Fathers of this Church, anciently and at this present lieth in most esteem, they were no other then such as had been Bishops of the greater Seas. That is to say, 1. S. Chrysostome, first a Reader of Antioch, afterwards Patriarch of Constantinople; 2. Basil, and the two Gregories, 3. Nysien, and 4. Nazianzen; all in Asia minor; this last of Constantinople also; 5. 6. the two Cyrills; the one Patriarch of Alexandria, the other of Hiersusalem: 7. Epiphanius, Bishop of Salamis in the Isle of Cyprus; 8. Theodorus, Bishop of Cyprus, &c. Men of renown and precious memory amongst them to this very day. From whose Writings if they deviate in any material Point of Doctrine, it is in that of the Procession of the Holy Ghost, which they grant to beper Filius, but not a Filio. And though Clichovius, Lombard, and other moderate men of the Church of Rome, do grant the difference to be rather in modo explicandi, quam in ipsa re; and that the clause in modo explicandi was added by the Romanists to the ancient Creeds, the Græcians not being privy nor consenting to it: yet so uncharitable is that Church towards these poor men, laughing under Tyranny of Turkish Thraldom, as to persecute them with Keoach and Scorn, brand them for Schismatics and Apostates, and solemnly to anathematize them in Bulla Cæne every Maunday-Thursday. And it is a very hard measure to add, and anathematize roo; as is right well observed by the late Lord Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, in his notable Discourse against the Jesuits. Other particular Tenets in which the Greek Church differeth from the Romish and Reformed (as in some Points it doth from both) have been already specified in our Description of Russia: the Churches of the Greeks and Moscovites differing in no material Points, but, 1. the manner of distributing the Sacrament; 2. the exaching of Marriage by the Moscovite in the party admitted unto Orders; 3. the frequent admitting of Divorces upon light occasions; and 4. and finally, in being less strict in observing the Lent before Easter than in any of the other three. For whereas the Græcians account it a damnable sin to eat Flesh or Fish which hath blood in it, in any of their other Lent or times of Abstinence, (they have in both Churches four in all) viz. that before Ensur, which of all reason ought to be kept most moft punctually, the Laity eat all forts of Filh without any exception, the Blood of fome of which, as the Cattle byname, is held to be a delicate Food, and in great requeit.

The Language they fpake was of their own, of which there were four Dialects, viz. 1. the Attick, 2. the Doric, 3. the Æolic, 4. the Ionick; besides the common phrafe of speech moft in ufe among them. A Language of great fame for the Liberal Arts, but more for its great a part of the Holy Scripture first delivered in it: and for the lofty Sound, significant Expreflions, genuine Suavity, and happy compofition of words, fo excelling all others, that even in the flourishing of the Roman Empire it fo much overtopped the Latine, that the Hiftories of Rome it felf (as by Polybius, Appian, Dion and Cassius) were written in it. It was once alfo the general Language of Anatolia, fome parts of Italy, Provence in France, and almoft all the Ilands of the Mediterranean. But now, partly by the mutilation of fome words and contraction of others, partly by confufion of the true found of Vowels, Diphthongs and Confonants, and the tranflating of the Accents, and finally, by the admixture of foreign Nations it is not only fallen from its natural Elegancy, but from its largeness of extent. For it is now shut up within the Limits of Greece, and the Sea-coaft of the left Asia opposite unto it; and there not only much corrupted, but almoft quite devoured by the Turkish and Sclavonian Tongues, but especially by that which they call Frango, a mongrel Language, compofed of Italian, French, and fome Spanifh words, ufed as the ordinary Speech for Commerce & intercourfe betwixt Chriftians, Jews, Turks, and the Greeks themfelves, who do not understand, and much lefs fpeak, the true genuine Greek. So that although they still retain for ordinary days Schryftom's Liturgie, and that of S. Bafil for the Feftivals: yet being both written in the ancient and learned Greek, they are no more understood by the Vulgar Grecian, then the Latine Service by the common and illiterate Papit.

The Soil questionlefs is very fruitful, and would yield great profit to the Husbandman, if they would take pains in the tilling; but they, knowing nothing certainly to be their own, but all things fubject to the Grand Seigneur and his Soldiers, neglect the Tillage of their Lands, on the fame grounds with thofe who laid in the Poet's Eclogues, Impius hac tam culta novellia Miles habebit?

Barbarus has fegetes? En quis confosum Arva!

Shall mifchiving Turks thefe Acres fpoil,
Which I manur'd with fo much Coft and Toil?
Shall they enjoy my care? See, neighbours, fee
For whom thefe goodly Corn-fields tilled be!

The more natural and certain Commodities which they tranfport into other parts are Wines, in memory of the Water which our Saviour turned into Wine, and on the fifth day of January, being that day wherein this Miracle was wrought, they use to baptize: for which caufe the Jews will drink none of them. They fend alfo into other parts of the World Oils, Copper, Vitriol, fome Gold and Silver, Velvet, Damasks, Turkey-Grograms, &c.

This Country hath formerly been famous for the brave Commanders, Miltiades, Aristides and Themistocles of Athens, Lysander and Agessian of Sparta, Pelopidas, and Epaminondas of Thebes, Aratus and Philopomen of Æolia, Pyrrhus of Epirus, Philip of Macedonia, the Subverter of the Grecian Liberty, and Alexander his Son, (to omit infinite others) the Subverter of the Perfian Monarchy; for the divine Philofophers, Plato, Socrates, Aristotle and Theophrastus, for the moft eminent Law-givers, Solon and Lycargus; for the moft exquisite Poets, Hefiodus, Homer, Sophocles and Aristophanes; for the famous Hiftorographers, Xenophon the Confidant of Plato, Thucydides, Plutarch and Hierodotus; for the eloquent Orators, Æschines, Demosthenes and Ifoocrates; and, laftly, for the Authors and Establishers of all humane Learning whatsoever, only the Mathematicks excepted.

The chief Rivers are, 1. Cephifus, which, arifing in the Frontiers of Epirus, difburtheth it felf into the Ægean Sea. 2. Erigon, and 3. Aliacon; which, beginning their courfe in the more Northern parts of Macedonia, end it in Thermacis Sinus. 4. Strymon in Ægdonia. 5. Atthyrus, and 6. Nefus, in Thrace. 7. Stryphalus, where Hercules killed the Stryphalian Birds. 8. Ladon, in Acadida. 9. Inachus, whole Daughter Io, turned into a Heifer, was worfhipped by the Ægyptians under the name of Ifis. 10. Achelous, in Epirus, much celebrated by the ancient Poets, especially by Ovid in his Metamorphofis. As is alfo 11. Peneus, the chief River of Thessaly, and there arifing from Mount Pindus, and increafed with the waters of many Rivers. Daphne the Nymph, whom Atollo is faid to have loved, and turned into a Bay-tree, lived near or on the Banks of this River Peneus, and is therefore faid to be his Daughter: as Io above mentioned was the Daughter of Inachus. Of lefs note, Populifor 11. Sperchius, & irreguius 12. Enipeus, 13. Apidanus & senex, lenique 14. Amphrysus, & 15. Æas.

That is to fay,

Cool Sperchius, Enipeus that troubled ran,
Smooth Amphrysus, Æas, and old Apidan,

The reft of lefs note, and the moft eminent Mountains in each part hereof, fhall be remembered in their places, as we fece occafion.

Thus much of the whole Country in grofs. And as for the Divifion of it with reference to the State of the Roman Empire, it contained in a manner two whole Diocefes, viz. Thrace and Macedon: the firft under the Præfatus Prætorio Orientis, the latter (together with that of Dacia) under the Præfatus Prætorio for Illyricum. Of thefe the Diocefe of Macedon, lying wholly within the Bounds of the modern Greece contained the Provinces of Macedonia Prima, 2. Macedonia Secunda, or Salutaris, (now, as in former times, called Albania) 3. Epirus Nova, taking up the Countries of Phocis, Locris, and fo much of the Old Epirus as was on that fide of the River Acidolus, 4. Old Epirus, comprehending all the reft of that Country, 5. Thessaly, 6. Æolia, containing all Æolia, and Peloponessus, the Countries of Locris and Phocis excepted only, and 7. Crete or Candia, with the Iland adjoining. And for the Diocefe of Thrace, it was divided into the Provinces of, 1. Thrace fpecially fo called, 2. Europa, 3. Rhodore, 4. Hæminuntum, 5. Mæfia Inferior, and 6. Seythia: of which the four firft make up the Body of Thrace, and fhall there be fpoken of; the two laft, being comprehended in the modern Dacia, have been defcribed already in their proper places. But not to bind my felf precifely unto this Divifion, (though I fhall look on this as occafion ferveth) I fhall confider Greece in the feveral Provinces of, 1. Peloponessus, 2. Æolia, 3. Epirus, 4. Albania, 5. Macedon, 6. Thrace, 7. the Ilands of the Propontick, 8. Ægean, and 9. the Ionian Seas, and 10. finally the Ile of Crete.

1. PE-

1. PELOPONNESUS.

PELOPONNESUS is bounded on the Eaft with the Cretean, on the Weft with the Adriatic, or Ionian Seas, on the North-eaft with Sinus Saronicus, now Golfo di Engia, on the North-weft with Sinus Corinthiacus, now Golfo di Patrus or Lepanto, and on the South with the Mæditerrenean. So that it is almoft an Ile, properly called a Peninfula, bounded with the Sea, except where it is tied to the main Land of Greece by an Isthmus fix miles in breadth, which the Grecians and Venetians fortified with a great Wall and five Caftles. This Wall was called anciently Hexamilium, and was overthrown by A-murath the Second, who harraffed & fpoiled all the Country. It was afterwards in the year 1453, upon the rumour of a War, built up again by the Venetians (who then had the greateft part of this Country) in 15 days, there being for that time 30000 men employed in the work. This wall extended from one Sea unto the other; which, had it been as gallantly guarded as it was haftily made up, or as it was well fortified had it been as well manned, might eafily have refifted the Turks, until more means had been thought on to defend it. Not lefs observable, but more fruitlefs, was the Defign of fome in the elder times, to cut through this Isthmus, and make a perfect Iland of it. It was attempted by Demetrius King of Macedon, Julius Cæfar, and Cælius Caligula; by none more eagerly purfued then by the Emperor Nero, who, to hearten his Soldiers, loth to attempt fo fruitlefs an Enterprife, took a Spade in hand, and buily began the work. Yet at laft the Soldiers, being frightened with the Blood which abundantly broke forth, with the Groans and Roarings which they continually heard, and with the Hobgoblins and Furies which were always in their fight, perfwaded the Emperor, now half out of the humour, to leave this, and enjoy them fome more profitable Service. It was alfo given over by the former Princes on the like Difcouragements. But of this Isthmus we fhall add no more then thefe words of Ovid, and fo pafs forwards to the Defcription of the Country; that is to fay, Æquora bina fuis oppugnant fluctibus Isthmum.

Et tenuis Tellus adest utrumque Mare.

Which may be thus Englifhed;

Two Seas affault the Isthmus with their Waves,

And that thin Neck of Land both Seas out-braves.

As for this Country of Peloponessus, it is in compafs 600 miles, and was called at the firft Ægialia, from Ægialis the firft King of Sicyon; next Apia, from Apis the fourth King; after that Sycionia, from Sicyon the 19 King thereof; and finally Peloponessus, from Pelops the Son of Tantalus King of Phrygia, and Nio of Phylia, the word fignifying as much as the Ile of Pelops. But it is now of late called Morea; and that a Mædiorum Incensibilibus, from the Incursions of the Moors, as Mercurius thinketh; but by the Moors he means the Saracenis, as fome others alfo do.

It is conceived to be the moft pleafant Country in all Greece, abounding in all things neceffary for the Life of man; and in fuch alfo as do ferve for Delicacy and Contentment only: adorned with many goodly Plains, fweetened with fruitful Hills, well ftoied with Ports and Havens on all fides thereof. And though no Country in the World, for the bignefs of it, hath fuffered in the Ruine of fo many brave and ftately Cities; yet is it fill the moft populous and belt inhabited of all the Continent of Greece. Near the middle of it, in Laconia, is the Mount Taygetus, from the top whereof there was no City of note in all this Peninfula but might eafily be feen. A moft gallant Prospect. The whole was divided commonly into thefe feven Provinces; 1. Æolia propria, 2. Ælia, 3. Mæfene, 4. Acadida, 5. Laconia, 6. Argolis, and 7. Corinthia.

1. ÆCHIA propria is bounded on the Eaft with Argolis and Corinthia, on the Weft with the Ionian Sea, on the North with Sinus Corinthiacus or the Gulf of Lepanto, on the South with Ælia. So called from the Æchia, the Inhabitants of it; the Adjunct propria being added to difference it from Æchia in the Continent or Main-land of Greece.

Places of moft confideration in it are, 1. Dyme, fiteuate in the moft Western point of it, in or near the Promontory called Araxus. The Town is now called Chiarenza, which is another Promontory or Head-land, of old called Rhimus, oppofite to another in Ætolia that was called Antirhimus, divided by a very narrow Stright or Frænum, which openeth into the Bay of Corinth; fortified on each fide with a Caftle for defence thereof, commonly called Caftelli di Lepanto: both built and fortified by Bayezes the fecond, when he had finifhed the Conquest of Peloponessus, to fecure the entrance of this Bay; both taken and demolished by Andrew Doria, Lord Admiral to Charles the V. to lay the Bay open to the Chriftians: and finally, both within few years recovered and repaired by Solyman the Magnificent, as they fill continue. 2. Ægium, where Jupiter is faid to have been nurfed by a Goat, whence it had the name; Ægæ in Greek fignifying a She-Goat: once a ftrong Town, now ruined and destroyed by the Turks; called at this day Pofitica, or Bofitica. 3. Ægira, once the chief City of all this Tract, fiteuate on a fteep and inaccessible Hill; now a fmall Village, called Xylacastro. 4. Olenus, now named from Olenus the Son of Jupiter and Anaxibia, now called Cheminia. 5. Patrus, fiteuate at the very Mouth of the Gulf, oppofite to Lepanto. Firft called Æroa, but being by one Patrus enlarged and walled, took the name of Patrus, which name it holdeth to this day, being fill called Patrus the Town of moft note on the bay of Corinth, which is called from hence Golfo di Patrus. A Town of good Trade, and much frequented not long fince by the Englifh Merchants, who had here their Conful, called the Conful of Morea: but formerly more memorable for the death of S. Andrew the Apottle, who here fuffered Martyrdom. 6. Pellene, diftant from the Sea about 60 Furlongs: the people whereof being conflant to their old Fafhions of Apparel, occafioned the Proverb of Pelleneicæ vestis, applied to old Cloths out of Fafhion. Here were once alfo the two Cities of 7. Ælize, and 8. Burje, funk by the violence of a Tempeft into the bottom of the Sea, about the time of the Battel of Leultra. Not to lay any thing of 9. Trizana, and 10. Phæra, two other Towns hereof, of note in the former times; fo little now remaining of them, as if they had been funk at the fame time alfo.

But the chief Town of all this Province (if not a Province of it felf) is Sicyon, fiteuate not far from the Isthmus: in the moft Eaftern parts hereof, and giving to the Territory or adjoining Country) as once unto the whole Peninfula the name of Sicyonia. The Territory is rich, efpecially in Olives, and Works of Iron; the City the moft ancient of all Greece, built within little time of the general Flood and reftauration of mankind. Firft called Æginalia, after Sicyon, by the name of the firft and nineteenth King hereof; by whom and their Succelfors it was much adorned and beautified with Temples, Altars, Statues and Images of their feveral Gods: the ancient Kingdom in the World, the Assyrian and Egyptian excepted only, only, and perhaps not those. It took beginning in the person of Agideus, within 150 years after the Deluge, and 200 years before the death of Nabab; continuing in a Race of Princes who swayed the Affairs of Peloponnesus, till overtopped by the growth and good fortune of the Kings of Argos. The names of whom, by reason of the undoubted Antiquity of this Kingdom, I shall here subjoin in the ensuing Catalogue of the last King of Sicyon. After whose death, A. M. 2812, the Estate thereof was governed by the Priests of Apollo, seven of them successively one after another: the first five, only years apiece; Amphytion, who was the sixth, continuing 9 years in the Regency, and Charidemus, the last of them, ruling 18 years. After whose death or departure, I know not which, A. M. 2844, the Heracleids, who about that time returned into Peloponnesus, made themselves Masters of this Country; there being no Kings of Sicyon from this time forwards.

Of these Kings the most memorable were Agideus and Apis, the first and fourth, from whom this Peninsula had the names of Apia and Agiala; Agirius, the 6 giving name and being to the City Agira spoken of before; Marathon, the 13, of whom perhaps the famous Fields of Marathon (in the other Achaia) took denomination; Eppesus, the 17, who founded a Temple to Minerva and therein placed his own Monument or Trophies; Sicyon, the 19, the Founder of the City Sicyon, or at the least their repairer and Enlarger of it; Pelafgus, the 25, from whom perhaps the Gracians might be called Pelafgi, if not known formerly by that name. After this time I find no man of note who bare sway in Sicyon, till the time of Aratus, the special Ornament of this Town, (of which a Native) and one of the principal Establishers of the Achaean Commonwealth against the Spartans and Macedonians; of which more hereafter in the general History of Peloponnesus.

2. The Country of ELIS hath on the East Arcadia, on the West the Ionian Sea, on the North Achaia propria, on the South Messenia. The chief Cities are, 1. Elis, which gives name to the whole Province. So called from Elisba the Son of Javan, and Grandchild of Japhet, who fixt himself in these parts of this Country, where he built this City, calling it by his own name, as his posterity in honour of him did the Isles adjoining, mentioned in the Prophet Ezekiel by the name of the Isles of Elisba, ch. 27. v. 7. Nigh to this City runneth the River Alpheus, of which we have spoken in Sicilia: and in this City reigned the King Agaveus, the cleansing of whose Stable is accounted one of the Wonders or twelve Labours performed by Hercules. 2. Olympia, famous for the Statue of Jupiter Olympius, one of the seven Wonders, being in height 60 Cubits, composed by that excellent Workman Phidias, of Gold and Ivory. In honour of this Jupiter were the Olympick Games instituted by Hercules, and celebrated on the Plains of this City, A. M. 2757. The Exercises in them were for the most part bodily, as running in Chariots, Running on Foot, Wrestling, Fighting with the Whorlbat, and the like. But so that there repaired thither also Orators, Poets, and Musicians, and all that thought themselves excellent in any laudable quality, to make trial of their several Abilities: the very Criers, who proclaimed the Victories, contending which should cry loudest, and best play his part. The rewards given to the Victors were only Garlands of Palm, or such slight remembrances; and yet the Greeks no less esteemed that small Sign of Conquest and Honour, than the Romans did their most magnificent Triumphs: those which were Conquerors herein being met by all the principal men in the City in or under which they lived, and a passage broken in the main Walls thereof for their reception; as if ordinary Gates were not capable of so high an Honour, or able to afford them entrance. Insumuch that when Diagoras had seen his three Sons crowned for their several Victories, a Friend of his came to him with this Gratulation, Morre, Diagora, numquam enim in Caelum ascensurus es, that is to say, Diagora, for thou shalt never go to Heaven: as if no greater Happiness could befall the man either in this life or that to come, than that which he enjoyed already. The Judges and Presidents of these Games were some of the Citizens of Elis, deputated to it; highly commended for their Justice and integrity in pronouncing who best deserved without Partiality. Of these thus Horace in his Odes:

Collegisse juvat; Metaque fervidis
Evitata Rotis, Palmaque nobilis

Quos Eliza dominos reducit Palma caelestes.

That is to say,
Some in Olympick Dust take pride
Their Chariots and themselves to hide;
Whom the flum'd Mark, and Palm for priz'd,
Like to the Gods hath eterniz'd.

Such as like Heav'nly Wights do come
With an Elan Garland home.

But to proceed, after the death of Hercules these Games were discontinued for 430 years: at which time one Iphitus, warned so to do by the Oracle of Apollo, renewed them, causing them to be solemnly exercised every fourth year: from which Custom Olympus is sometimes taken for the space of 4 years; as quingus annorum Olympiades for 20 years. Varro reckoneth the times before the Flood to be Obscure; those before the Olympiads, and after the Flood, to be Fabulous; but those that followed these Olympiads to be Historical. These Olympiads were of long time, even from the reitaurated of Theodosius, by Iphitus until the Reign of the Emperor Theodosius, the Gracian Epoch, by which they reckoned their Account: the first of them being placed in the year of the World 3174, before the building of Rome 40 years; the last in the 440, year after Christ's Nativity. According to which reckoning this Account continued for the space of 1214 years; the memory of which remains, though the name of Olympia be not found in Peloponnesus; the Town at

at this day being called by the name of Scorpi. 3. Pisa whose people followed Nestor to the Wars of Troy; and in their return were by Tempest driven to the Coasts of Italy, where they built the City Pisa in Tuscany. 4. Tornefe, a new Town, or the new name of some ancient City; from whence the adjoining Promontory, of old called Chelonice, is now called Cabo di Tornefe.

3. MESSENI A hath on the East Arcadia, on the North Elis, on the South and West the Sea. It takes its name from the Metropolis Messene, situate on Sinus Messenicus, now called Golfo di Corone. 2. Pylus, where Nestor was King, now called Navarino; a desolate and poor Village not worth the noting. Of which thus Ovid speaking in the name of Penelope.

Nos Pylon, antiqui Noleia Nestoris arva, Messimus; incerta est reddita fama Pylon.

To Pylon, aged Nestor's Seat, we went,
But could not hear from thence how matters went.

3. Modon, or Methone, seated in the most Southern part of this Peninsula, from whence unto the Isthmus which joyneth it to the rest of Greece are reckoned 175 Italian miles. The Town is commodiously seated in a Demi-Island, washed on the one side with the Sea, and so well fortified toward the Land, that in the opinion of most men it is thought impregnable; adorned on the South-side with a large and capacious Bay, about 3 miles wide, secure from all winds except the North, and shut up with a little Island called anciently Oenusa, but now Sapienza, which makes it one of the safest Harbours in all these Seas. It was possessed once by the State of Venice, but conquered by the Turk, after many sharp and fierce Assaults, Anno 1500, both Pylus and Corone yielding on the noise thereof. The best Retreat since that time of the Turkish Navies, and the ordinary Residence of the Turk's Sanzaks, who hath the Government of this whole Province of Mores under the Begher of Greece. 4. Corone or Coron, the chief Town on the Bay of Messene, called from hence Golfo di Corone, and the last which held out against the Turks for the State of Venice, once Lords of all the Sea Coasts of Peloponnesus. 5. Cyparissus, now called Arcadia, from whence the Bay adjoining hath the name of Golfo di Arcadia. Here is also the Promontory called of old Coryphasium, now Cabo Zanchi.

The people of this small Province had once a great sway in the whole Peninsula. At first they were confederate with the Spartans in so strict a League, that they mutually sent young Virgins to one another for their publick Sacrifice: but afterwards Corrivals with them for the supreme power. The Spartans, at the last getting the upper hand of them, oppressed them with a miserable Servitude. The occasion this: In the confines of this Country stood a Temple of Diana, common alike to the Messianians, Spartans, and Dores. It happened that some Spartan Virgins were by the Messianians here ravished: which abuse the true reason indeed being their Covetousness of the sole Empire. This War broke out three several times. The first continued twenty years: in which space the Lacedaemonians, fearing their Absence would hinder the supply of Children in the City, sent a Company of their ablest young men home to accompany their Wives. Their Offspring were called Parthenis, who, coming to full growth, abandoned Sparta, sailed into Italy, and there built Tarentum. The second being of 23 years continuance, was raised and maintained by Arifonnes, one of the chief men of the Messianians; in which they prospered till Arifonnes, side with Lacedaemon. Then began they to decline, and Arifonnes was thrice taken Prisoner, still miraculously escaping. His last Imprisonment was in a Dungeon, where by chance eflpying a Fox devouring a dead body, he caught hold of her Tail. The Fox running away, guided Arifonnes after; till the streightness of the Hole by which he went out made him leave his hold, and fall to scraping made the Hole passible, and he escaped; and having a while upheld his falling Country, died in Rhodes. The third War was like drops after a Tempest; in which the Messianians being finally subdued, were forced to abandon their Country, or become Slaves unto the Spartans, who put them to all Drudgeries and servile Works; as they did the Helots, whom they counted as their Bondmen. And to this life some of them did apply themselves with so much Obsequiousness, that at last it grew into a Proverb, Messin's servitium, that such a one was more servile, or more slavishly used, than these poor Messianians. But the greatest part of them not brooking that heavy Yoke, passed into Sicily, and there built the City of Messina. Others were planted in Naupactium, by the State of Athens; the rest dispersed up and down in all parts of Greece: few of them left in their own Country, till Epaminondas having vanquished the Lacedaemonians at the Battel of Leuttra reitored them to their ancient Possessions.

4. ARCADIA hath on the East Laconia, on the West Elis and Messene, on the North Achaia propria, and on the South the Sea. This Country took its name from Arcas, the Son of Jupiter and Callisto; but was formerly called Pelafgia: the people whereof thought themselves more ancient than the Moons.

*Orta prius Lania, de se foveredit ipsi,
A magno, tellus Arcade nomen habet.*

The Land which of great Arcas took its name
Was e're the Moon, if we will credit Fame.

The chief Cities are, 1. Mantineia, nigh unto which the Theban Army, consisting of 30000 Foot and 3000 Horse, routed the Army of the Spartans and Athenians, consisting of 25000 Foot and 2000 Horse. In this Battel Epaminondas, that famous Leader, received his death's wound, and not long after died. At his last Gaspe, one of his Friends bemoaning his untimely death, Alas, said he; thou diest, Epaminondas, and leavest behind thee no Children. Nay replied he, two Daughters will I leave behind me, the victory of Leuttra, and this other at Mantineia. It was afterward called Antigona, in honour of Antigonus, Tutor or Protector of Phillip the Father of Perseus, King of Macedon; but by command of the Emperor Adrian reitored to its old name again, and is now called Mantegna. 2. Megalopolis the Birth-place of Polybius, that excellent Historian. The one half of it had sometimes the name of Orestia, from the lodging of Orestes in it: the whole is now called Leontario, on what cause I know not. 3. Phidalia, towards the Sea. 4. Pisipio, so called from Pisipio, one of the Sons of Lycan, once King of this Country, slain by Jupiter. 5. Symphthalis, situate near a Lake and River of the same name, where Hercules slew the Symphthalis Birds; so great in number and in Body; that they darkened the Sun-beams, and terribly infested this little Province, till driven thence by Hercules. Here was also in this Town a Temple dedicated to Minerva, from hence called Symphthalida. 6. Tegae, famous for the Temple of Pan, here worshipped; and from hence called Tegae: more for the War made upon the Tegaeans, or people hereof, by the Lacedaemonians; who, thinking themselves assured of Victory, brought with them store of Chains and Fetters wherewith to lead Captive their conquered Enemies; but, being overcome in Battel, were themselves bound with them, and forced as Slaves to till the Grounds of these Tegaeans. Here is also in this Country the famous River Stryx, whose water, for the poisonous taste, was called the water of Hell; by which Poets feign that the Gods use to swear, as may be every where observed; and that what God swore before by Syr fallily, he was banished from Heaven, and prohibited Nectar for 1000 years.

This Country, for the fitness of it for Pasturage and Grazing, hath made it the Subject of many worthy and witty Discourses, especially that of Sir Phillip Sidney, of whom I cannot but make honorable mention: a Book which besides its excellent Language, rare Contrivances, and delectable Stories, hath in it all the Strains of Poësie, comprehendeth the universal Art of speaking, and to them which can discern and will observe affordeth notable Rules for Demeanor, both private and publick. Which notable Gentleman, as he may worthily be called the English Heliodore, so the ingenious Author of the History of Melinus and Ariana may deservedly be called the French Sidney.

5. LACONIA is bounded on the West with Arcadia, on the East and South with the Sea, on the North with Argolis. Called first Lelegia, from the Leleges, by Strabo said to be the first Inhabitants of it; afterwards Oebalia, from Oebalus a King of Lacedæmon; and finally Laconia, of the Lacones who succeeded the Leleges in the possession hereof, on their removal into the Islands of the lesser Asia. It is by some Writers also called Hecatonopolis, from the number of an hundred Cities which it once had in it.

The Soil hereof is exceeding rich, and the Fields very spacious; yet for the most part not well tilled, in regard of the many Hills and Mountains which overthwart it. Well watered with the River Eurotas, and memorable for many fair Bays and Promontories: of which the principal are the Promontories of Malea, and Tenaria, now called Cabo Malio and Cabo Matapan; and of the Bays, that called Golfo di Colobina, the Sinus Laconicus of the Ancients, into which the River Eurotas (now better known by the name of Vassilopano, or the Kingly River) pours his gentle Streams. The nature of the People we shall find in Sparta.

Places of most observation in it are, 1. Lendrea, situate on the Sea-side, near the Bay of Messene: of which name were two others in Greece, the one in Arcadia, the other in Achaia; but this last most memorable. 2. Amicyla, so called from Amicyla, the third King of Sparta, by whom it was first founded: renowned afterwards for the Birth of Castor and Pollux, the Sons of Tyndarus; and of good note for being the Foundress of the City of Amicyla in Calabria Superior; at first a Colony of this: distant from Lacedæmon about 20 Furlongs. 3. Thalama, nigh to which is the Lake of Lerna, where Hercules slew the Monster Hydra, and not far off Mount Tanarus, near the Promontory Tenaria, in which the Natives threw a Cave, (believed in former times to be a Descent into Hell) out of which the Poets feign that Cerberus was dragged by Hercules. 4. Salafissa, where Antigonus vanquished Cleomenes, the last King of Sparta. 5. Epidaurus, (seat on the Bay named Golfo di Napoli) now called Malvasia: a Town well built, and very well peopled; remarkable for the sweet Wines called Malvesey or Malmsey, sent from hence into all other parts in great abundance. 6. Sparta, so called from Sparta, the Son or Brother of Phoroneus, the second King of Argos, the Founder of it, but afterwards beautified and enlarged by Lacedæmon, the second King of this Country, it took that name also; promiscuously known by both in the best Authors. One of the Eyes of Greece, and a famous Common-wealth; but at first governed by Kings, as most of the Greek Cities in ancient times. Tyndarus, the Father of Castor and Pollux, was once King hereof. After whose death, and the death of the said famous Brethren, Menelaus was admitted King of Sparta, or Lacedæmon, in right of Helena his Wife, their Sister. And though Nicophratus and Megapenthes, Sons of Menelaus by another Vener, succeeded after his decease; yet the Spartans soon rejected them, and received Orestes the Son of Agamemnon to be their King, marrying him to Hermione, the daughter of Menelaus and Helena, and consequently the Niece of Tyndarus. Tisamenus, the Son of Orestes and Hermione, succeeded next; in whose time the Heracleids, or posterity of Hercules, returned into Greece, under the conduct of Temenus, Cleophon, and Arifodemus, Sons of Aristonachus: whereof the first possessed himself by force of Arms of the City Argos, the second of Messene, and the third conquered the City and State of Sparta; which dying very shortly after, he left unto his two Sons, Eurifides and Procles, the Roots of the two Royal Families which jointly and in common governed the affairs of Sparta, first absolutely as Sovereign Princes, without any controul, afterwards at the direction of the Senate, and finally under the Command and Check of those popular Officers whom they called the Ephori. But because these Spartan Kings in each several period were for the most part men of Action, and often mentioned in the Histories of the elder time, I will first make a Catalogue of them, and then subjoin such Observations and Remembrances as I think most pertinent.

The Kings of SPARTA of the first Family.

A.M.

1. Eurotas, the first King of Sparta, who gave name to the River Eurotas.
2. Lacedæmon, Brother of Eurotas, from whom the City of Sparta was called Lacedæmon.
3. Amicyla, Son of Lacedæmon, the Founder of Amicyla, a Laconian City.
4. Argalus, Son of Amicyla.
5. Cynarta, Son of Argalus.
6. Oebalus, Son of Cynarta, from whom a part of this Country had the name of Oebalia.
7. Hippocoon, Son of Oebalus.
- 2700 8. Tyndarus, Brother of Hippocoon, in whose life he was King of Oebalia only.
9. Castor and Pollux, Sons of Tyndarus, famous amongst the Argonauts.
- 2740 10. Menelaus, Son of Agamemnon and Brother of Agamemnon Kings of Mycenæ, together with Helena his Wife, the Daughter of Tyndarus, whose Rape occasioned the Destruction of Troy.
- 2770 11. Nicophratus and Megapenthes, Sons of Menelaus by a former Wife.
12. Orestes, Son of Agamemnon, and Hermione his Wife, Daughter of Helena and Menelaus.
13. Tisamenus, Son of Orestes and Hermione, who, being ousted of Sparta by the Heracleids, reigned in Achaia, and left his Kingdom there unto his Posterity.

The Kings of SPARTA of the Race of the HERACLIDÆ.

1. Arifodemus, The first King of the Race of Heracles, left the Kingdom jointly to his two Sons, Eurydamidas, the Son of Agis the third, substituted his Brother Epicles in his place. But being himself shortly after vanquished by Antigonus of Macedonia, and forced to fly his Country with his Wife and Children, the Government of the Heracleids ended, after it had continued here for the space of 900 years, or thereabouts.

Under the Kings the Government at first was by 20 Morax as Plutarch termeth it, sufficiently Monarchical; if it were not more. Under Eumoni, the fourth King of the second House, the people, finding the Reins of Government let loose, began to mutiny and grow too headstrong. To bridle whom, and to restrain the Kings withally, (should they prove exorbitant) Lycurgus, the Protector of Charilaus, the sixth King of that House, did ordain the Senate, committing to them the supreme Power in matters Civil, and leaving to the Kings the ordering all this Senate, who quickly found their own strength, Theopompus, the eighth King of that House, with the consent of the Senate, the tenth King of the other, instituted a new they called the Ephori; which grew in fine to such an height of Pride and Tyranny, as not only to control the Senators, but to censure, fine, imprison, depose, and mutually to kill their Kings, as the Spirit of Sedition moved them. So that the State of Lacedæmon was at first a Monarchy under Kings, then an Aristocracy under the command of the Senate, next a Democracy under the Ephori, and finally, by those popular Officers made to plain a Tyranny, that Aristotle and Plato, two great Common-wealths-men, who died before they had embred their hands in the blood of their Kings, call it in plain terms tyrannical & tyrannical a most absolute Tyranny. What think you these men would have called it, had they lived to see Leonidas the third deposed, and Agis the third of that name also most barbarously murdered by these popular Villains?

But being the Foundation of this Common-wealth was first laid, and the good Laws and Politick Constitutions by which it did so long flourish in great Power and Splendour established, by the Wit and Power of Lycurgus, as before we said; we are to know concerning him, that he was the Son of Eumoni, the fourth King of the second House, slain in a popular Tumult by the Common people. Who, finding by this Essay, that the People were become too headstrong for the Kings to govern, unless reduced to extreme Bondage by their Kings, which he would not neither, took the advantage of the Minority of Charilaus, though his Nephew, when he came to age, to file for Sanctuary to the Temple of Juno. Having ordained what Laws he pleased, and settled such a Form of Government as himself well fancied, the better to decline the Envy of so great a Change, he got leave to travel, binding the People by an Oath to observe all his Laws until his return; and, being gone, commanded at his death, that his Ashes should be cast into the Sea, lest, being carried back to Sparta, the people might conceive themselves released from their Oath. By means whereof his Laws continued in force near 700 years, during which time that Common-wealth did flourish in all Prosperity. The particulars of which Institutions he that lists to see may find them specified at large by Plutarch in the Life of Lycurgus. Suffice it that the Discipline was so sharp and strict, that many went into the Wars for no other reason than on a hope to rid themselves from so hard a life; and that Diogenes, returning hence to the City of Athens, gave out that he returned from Men to Women, in the Andromeda & his Andromeda and being asked in what part of Greece he had been with the compleat men, made answer that he could no where meet with Morax; but that he had found some Boys amongst the Spartans. A Cynical and rugged answer, but such as carried a great deal of Judgment in it; the Spartans being more stout and resolute in all their Actions, and less effeminate in their Lives, than the rest of the Grecians. But besides the strictness of the Discipline under which they lived, there was another thing which made them with for Wars abroad; namely, the little or no power which either the Kings or People had in Civil matters, or Affairs of State, entirely left to the disposing of the Senate and the Power of the Ephori. So that the Kings, having by the Laws the Command of their Armies, were willing to engage in War upon all occasions, and the Common people as desirous to attend them in such Employments as the Kings could with. Upon these grounds War was made a Trade amongst them; beginning with the Helots, a neighbouring People, then with the rest of the Laconians, afterwards quarrelling the Messenians, their old Confederates: all which they severally subdued, and made subject to them. In the War which Xerxes made against the City of Athens, their King Leonidas the first, of the elder House, went forth to aid them; slain at the Straights of Thermopylae, courageously fighting for the Liberty of Greece: and when it was thought fit to set upon the Persian Fleet, Eurybiades the Spartan Admiral did command in chief. In pursuit of this War against the Persians, Panfanias and Aegeians were of most renown: the first in helping the Athenians to drive them out of Greece; the other in making War upon them in their own Dominions. Freed from the Perfians, they grow jealous of the State of Athens, whom they looked on as their Rivals in point of Sovereignty and Glory. Hence the long War betwixt these Cities, called Belium Peloponnesiacum, managed for the most part in Peloponnesus, from thence transferred into Sicily, and at last ended in the taking of Athens: the Government whereof they changed into an Aristocracy under thirty Magistrates of their own appointment, commonly called the Thirty Tyrants. Proud of this fortunate Success their next Quarrel was with the Bacotians, the conquered Athenians covertly, and the Perfians openly, assisting the Enemy. Here their Prosperity began to leave them. For besides many small Defeats, Epaninondas the Theban so discomfited them at the Overthrows of Leutira and Mantineia, that Sparta it self was in danger of utter Ruine. Not long after happened the Holy War, chiefly undertook against the Phocians, wherein also they made a party: but this War being ended by King Phillip, they scarce breathed more Freedom than he gave air to. But when Alexander's Captains fought for the Empire of their Master, all these flourishing Republics were either totally swallowed into, or much defaced by the Kingdom of Macedon. The Lacedaemonians held the chief strength of a Town to consist in the Valour of the people; and therefore would never suffer Sparta to be walled, till the times immediately following the death of Alexander the Great: yet could not those Fortifications then defend them from Antigonus Dofon, King of Macedon, who, having vanquished Cleomenes King of Sparta, entered the Town, and was the first man that ever was received into it as Conqueror. So much different were the present Spartans from the Valour and Courage of their Ancestors. Cleomenes being forced to forsake his Country, and the Race of the Heracleidae failing in him, they became a Prey to Machanidas and Nabis two wicked Tyrants; from whom they were no sooner freed, but they were made subject (in a manner) to the Power of Rome: and in the end the Town was so weak and inconsiderable, that it was not able to resist the poorest enemy; now a small Burrough called Misthra. And so I leave them to the thoughts of their former Glories; having now nothing else to boast of but the same and memory of their Actions in former times.

6. ARGOLIS, so called from the chief City Argos, is bounded on the South with Laconia, on the West with Corinthia and Achaia propria, on the East and North with the Sea. A Territory remarkable for a most excellent breed of Horses, and from thence called Hippium.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Argos, founded by Argos, the fourth King of this Country; the chief of this Kingdom. Memorable as for other things, so 1. for the Death of Pyrrhus King of Epirus, who having forced his Entry into it, was here ignobly slain, after all his Victories, by the hands of an old Woman, throwing a Tile at him from the top of an House: 2. for the long Race of the Kings hereof, from Inachus the contemporary of our Father Abraham. Anno 2003, unto Arifius their last King: whose Daughter Danae, being shut up in a Tower of Brass, was delivered by Jupiter; to whom she bare the renowned Perseus, so memorialized in ancient Poets. But Perseus, having by misfortune slain his Grand-father, the old King Arifius quitted the City of Argos as unlucky to him, and transferred the Kingdom to Myceia, a City of his own Foundation, and so better fancied, which was by means hereof the second City of esteem in this little Province, growing in small time unto so great Riches, that it got the name of dires Myceia, as appeareth by Horace, in whom the Horfes of Argos and the Wealth of Myceia are placed in one Verse together:

Apium dicit equis Argos, ditius Mycenae.

For Horfes of Argos is of dane,

For Wealth Myceia hath the name.

3. Traczen, situate on the Sinnu Saronicum, (now called Golfo di Engia) the Royal Seat of Pittheus, the Grand-father of Theseus by the Mothers side, who was born herein: from whence the Town in Ovid hath sometime the name of Pittheia Traczen, and Theseus, many times is called Traczenus Heros; as Hercules had the name of Tyrinthus Heros from 4. Tyrinthus, another City of this Province, in which he was nursed; 5. Nemea, where Hercules slew the dreadful Lion which annoyed this Country. In honour of which noble Act were instituted in time following the Nemean Games, which continued of great fame in Greece for many Ages. The Exercises were, Running with swift Horses; Whorlboats, Running on foot, Quoting, Wrestling, Darting, Shooting. Some have referred the Original of these Games to one Opheletus, a Lacedaemonian, in whose Honour they conceive them instituted, and others fetch it higher, from the War of Thebes. But this I take to be the more allowable Opinion. 6. Epidaurus, on the Sea-side, famous for the Temple of Aesculapius, and the Cure of all sorts of diseases there; so called from Epidaurum, the Son of Argus, the Founder of it. Of the same name, but of a different situation from that before mentioned in Laconia; that being seated on the Bay called Golfo di Napoli, this on that of Engia. Once called Melissa and Aemera, at that time an Island, but by an Earthquake laid unto the Continent; now called Pigadia. 7. Nauplia, so called of Nauplius King of Esolia, and Father of Palamedes, to whom it anciently belonged. A Station thence as now, for Shipping; in that regard called Nauplia Navale, now Napoli, or Neapolis, the richest and best traded in all this Tract, giving name unto large and capacious Bay, now called Golfo di Napoli, of old Sinnu Argolicum, into which the famous River Inachus, having passed through the City of Argos, doth discharge it self; so called from Inachus the Father of Io, and the Original and Progenitor of

The Kings of ARGOS and MYCENAE.

1. Inachus, the supposed Father of Io, from whom the Gracians are sometimes called by the name of Inachii.

2. Phoroneus, the Son of Inachus and Melissa, from whom the said Io hath the name of Phoronis in the Poet.

3. Apis, the Son of Jupiter and Niobe the Daughter of Phoroneus, who, leaving Greece, went into Egypt, where he taught the People Tillage, and was there worshipped afterwards in the form of an Ox.

4. Argus the Son of Apis, and the Founder of Argos; in whose time Agriculture was taken up amongst the Gracians, from him called Argivus.

2308

5. Crispius, by some Piræus, the Son of Argus.

2363

6. Phorbas, the Son of Crispius; in whose time Atlas and Prometheus are said to flourish.

2397

7. Triopas, the Son of Phorbas, and the Brother of another Phorbas, who planted himself in the Isle of Rhodes.

2442

8. Crotopus.

2464

9. Sthenelus, outed of the Kingdom by 2475

10. Danaus, the Brother of Argivus, by whom being driven out of Egypt, he was made King

King of Argos by consent of the people: to the Father of those many Daughters got with child by Hercules. From him the Gracians are called often by the name of Danai.

11. Lyneus, Son of Argivus, the Brother of Danaus.

2556

12. Abas, the Son of Lyneus and Ephyra, the Daughter of Danaus.

2566

2606

14. Arifius, the Brother of Prætus, and the Father of Danae; who being foretold by the Oracle that he should be slain by a Son of that Daughter, shut her up in a brazen Tower. But Jupiter, having corrupted the Guards with Gold, got the Ladie's consent, by whom he had Perseus, so renowned amongst the Poets and Historians of those elder times.

2637

15. Perseus, the Son of Jupiter and Danae, exposed by his Grandfather to the Seas, miraculously preserved, and grown into great fame by his brave Exploits. He restored Arifius to his Throne from which he had been deposed by his Brother Prætus. But after having ignorantly and unfortunately slain the said Arifius, he removed his Seat unto Myceia; where he reigned together with his Son Sthenelus.

16. Eurystheus, the Son of Sthenelus, much spoken of for the difficult Tasks which, at the instigation of Junio, he imposed on Hercules his Foster-child, and the supposed Son of Amphitryon his Cousin-german.

17. Aræus and Theseus, Sons of Pelops, on the falling of the Line of Perseus, succeeded in Argos and Myceia; infamous for their Murders and Adultery; Theseus abusing the Bed of Aræus, and Aræus feasting him with the Body of his own Son, whence Ovidius & Seneca in the Proverb.

2733

18. Agamemnon, the Son of Aræus, Commander of the Greeks at the War of Troy, in which action there engaged 69 Kings of the Gracians, wasted over with a Navy of 1224 Ships; killed at his coming home by Agisthus, his Cousin-german.

2768

19. Ægisthus, the Son of Theseus, having defiled Clytemnestra the Wife of Agamemnon in the time of his absence, by her procurement murdered him at his coming home, and usurped the Kingdom.

2775

20. Orestes, Son of Agamemnon, revenged his Father's death on Ægisthus and Clytemnestra his own Mother. After which falling mad, and restored again unto his Wits, he married Hermione, Daughter of Menelaus and Helena, by whom he had the Kingdom of Sparta also.

21. Penibulus, the Son of Orestes, and the last King of this Line, outed of his Estate by the Dores and Heracleidae, who made themselves Masters of all Peloponnesus, which they possessed until the Conquest of it by the Macedonians.

7. CORINTHIA is a little Region, lying towards the Isthmus or Neck of Land which joineeth Peloponnesus to the rest of Greece, betwixt Argolis and Achaia propria. It containeth only the Territory of the City of Corinth, not large, nor very fruitful of those Commodities which the rest of this Peninsula doth abound with;

as being mountainous and hilly, and, by reason of the nearness of the Sea, full of craggy Rocks. The chief, and the naval Road or Station of Ships for Corinth, mentioned Acts 18. 18. and Rom. 16. 1. in both Texts reckoned a distinct Town from Corinth, as indeed it was: situate on that Bay which openeth into the Cretan Sea, called anciently Sinnu Saronicum, now Golfo di Engia; and consequently opposite to 2. Lechæum, the other Naval Road for Corinth, situate on the Western Bay, called of old Sinnu Corinthiacus, now the Gulf of Lepanto. 3. Corinth it self, commodiously situate for the Command of all Greece, (had not the Inhabitants been more given to Merchandise than unto the Wars) as being seated on the bottom of the Neck or Isthmus, the Ionian Sea upon the West, and the Aegean on the East, walling the Walls thereof, and giving it on each side a Capacious Haven; in which regard it is called by Horace bimaris Corinthus. It is in compass about Eleven miles, for Strength impregnable, for Command as powerful, Maturing both Seas on which it stood, and cutting off all passage from one half of Greece to the other: to which last end the Castle called Acrocorinthus, looking into both Seas, served exceeding fully; and was therefore called one of the Fetters of Greece. The City is rich, very well Traded, and neatly built, most Houses beautified with handfom Pillars, from thence called Corinthian: more memorable for the Wealth of the People, and the convenience of the Situation, than for any notable Exploits had on the States of Greece. But in regard of the Wealth, Greatness, and Situation, accounted by the Romans one of the three Cities which they held capable of the Empire; Carthage and Capua being the other two. In this City lived the famous (or infamous) Whore Thais, who exacted 10000 Drachma's for a single night's Lodging; which made Demoisthenes cry out, Non enim tanti parere, and occasioned the old By-word.

Non cuius homini contingit adire Corinthum.

'Tis not for every man's avail

Unto Corinth for to Sail.

Near hereunto stood the Acrocorinthus Mountains, at the foot whereof the City, and on the top whereof the Castle called hence Acrocorinthus, were seated: out of which flowed the famous Fountain named Pyrene, of old consecrated to the Muses; by Perseus called Fons Caballinus, because feigned by the ancient Poets to have been made by the Horse Pegasus dashing his foot against the Rock. And on the other side hereof in the Isthmus were celebrated yearly the Isthmian Games; ordained by Theseus in honour of Neptune; in imitation of the Olympick devised by Hercules in honour of Jupiter. The Exercises were much the same, and the reward no other than a Garland of Oaken Boughs: yet they drew yearly a great resort of people to them; partly to exercise themselves and behold the Sports; and partly to sacrifice to Neptune, who had hard by a famous Temple.

As for the Fortunes of this City, it was at first called Ephyra, at that time a small and obscure place; but beautified and repaired by Corinthus, the Son of Pelops, it took the name of Corinth, governed by him and his posterity, till the coming of the Heracleidae into Peloponnesus: at what time one Alæus of the Race of Hercules possessed himself hereof, with the name of King, A. M. 2849. Twelve Princes of his Line enjoyed it for the space of 220 years and upwards: when the House failing in the person of Autonoeus, they were governed by temporary Officers, like the Archontes of Athen. Continuing under this Government 124 years, the City was seized on by one Cypselus, A. M. 3294, who left it to his Son Periander, one of the Seven wise men of Greece, counted a Tyrant in those those times, for no other reason than that he had suppressed the Popular Government. After whose death, Anno 3364, the City did recover its former Liberty. In the Bustle between Athens and Lacedæmon, and other the Estates of Greece, for the Superiority, he did little meddle; the aim of this people being Wealth, not Honour; not interested in any Action of renown in all those times, but in the sending of Timoleon to the aid of the Syracusans against the Tyrant Dionisius, who did Lord it over them. It was subdued, together with the rest, by the Kings of Macedon, and with the rest restored to Liberty by the Power of Rome: under whom growing still more rich, and withal more insolent, they abused certain Roman Embassadors. But triste populo Romano nemo sapienter potest, as is said in Lucius, which the Corinthians found too true; the City being besieged, sacked, and burnt unto the Ground by Lucius Mummius, a Roman Consul, Anno U. C. 670. In the burning whereof, there were consumed so many goodly Statues of Gold, Silver, Brass, and other Metals, that, being melted into a Lump, they made up of that fatal chance the so much estimated Metal called Æt Corinthium, more highly prized in Rome than Gold or Silver. Repaired again, it was of great esteem in the time of the Emperours, converted by St. Paul to the Christian Faith; and having flourished a long time in Pride and Pleasures, decayed by little and little, till it came to nothing, and is now a small Burrough called Crato.

Having thus spoken of the several Estates of Peloponnesus, it resteth that we speak somewhat of the Estates of the whole, varied according to the Fortunes of those particular, which had most Influence on the same. The Affairs hereof were a long while swayed by the Kings of Sicyon, whence it had the name of Sicyonia, restrained afterwards to the Territories of that City only. But when the Kings of Argos came in place and power, it depended much upon their pleasures; from Apis the third King whereof, (if not rather from Apis the fourth King of Sicyon) in the opinion of some Writers, it was named Apis. But Pelops the Son of Tantalus King of Phrygia, coming into Greece, and marrying Hippodamia, Daughter of Oenomaus King of Elis, became the most powerful Prince of all this Peninsula, taking from him the name of Peloponnesus. The Kingdom of Mycene, growing into Power and Credit, had the next turn in swaying the affairs hereof for a certain season; as after that the Dores and Heracleids, possessed at once of Argos, Sparta, Corinth, and Messene. The Spartans, getting the Preeminence over all the rest, were the next who governed the Affairs of it, and they held it long, having first conquered Laconia, and subverted the Estate of Messene; by means whereof, and by their fortunate Success against the Perians, they became almost absolute in their Commands, without any Competitor. But their Power being broken by Pelopidas and Epanimondas in the Theban War, the petty States hereof began to take heart again, and stand upon their own Legs; as they did a while, till the Kings of Macedon succeeding Alexander the Great brought them once more under, and made them Fellow-servants with their Spartan Masters. In the Confusions which ensued in Macedon amongst the Competitors for that Kingdom, Perseus and Dyme, two Cities of Achaia propria, first united them in a strong League of Amity, at such time as Phylarchus first went into Italy: into which Confederacy the Cities of Tricaria and Phere shortly after came; and not long after that of Argira, and the rest of Achaia propria. Their Affairs were first governed by two Prætors with Advice of the Senate, as afterwards by one alone with the like Advice, of which Marcus Ciceronius was the first, and Aratus of Sicyonia the second. The ground thus laid, and the reputation of this new Commonwealth increasing by the Vertue of Aratus, the Epidaurians, Træzenians, Argives and Megarians became Members of it, maintaining gallantly the Liberties of Peloponnesus, till finally mastered by the Romans. In the Division of whose Empire it fell, with all the rest of Greece to the Constantinopolitans, and in the declining of their Fortunes, when the Latins got possession of the Imperial City, most of the Sea-Coasts of it were allotted to the State of Venice; the Inland parts formerly parcelled out amongst many Princes whom they called Despots, continuing as before they were. By Isabel, a Daughter of one of those Despots, (and as it seems the chief amongst them) married to Ferdinand, Son of James the first, and Father of James the second King of Majorca, the Title of Prince of Majorca came into that House; used by them and the rest of these Petit Princes, till all together were made a Prey to the Turkish Tyrants, Mahomet the Great, and Bajazet the second, by whom they were wholly conquered. For howsoever Thomas and Demetrius, Brethren of that unfortunate Prince Constantinus Palæologus, had fled hither at the taking of Constantinople, were received and obeyed by those petty Princes: yet being unable to hold out against the Conquerour, they became his Tributaries. But their falling out amongst themselves, and neglecting then to send in the Tribute agreed upon, gave Mahomet the Great occasion to invade the Country, and under colour of aiding one Brother against the other, to destroy them both, as he did accordingly: Demetrius being carried Prisoner to Constantinople, and Thomas forced to abandon Peloponnesus, and fly to Italy, An. 1457. Such Turns hereof as belonged to the State of Venice followed the same Fortune also in the time of Bajazet, by whom they were all taken at the last, and the whole Country brought under his obedience, Anno 1500, or thereabouts. Governed ever since that time by a Turkish Sancak, under the Beglarbey of Greece, who hath his Residence at Modon, a Regiment of 1000 Horse to secure the Country, and 700000 Aspers (that is to say, 140000 Crowns) a year for his Entertainment.

2. ACHÆIA.

ACHÆIA is bounded on the East with the Ægean Sea, on the West with Epirus, on the North with Thessaly, on the South with Peloponnesus and the Seas thereof. Called anciently Hellas from Hellas the Son of Dædonia, but whence it had the name of Achaia, is not yet agreed on: though I am that from hence the inhabitants of it were called Achæoi, (a name communicated afterwards to all the Grecians) to differentiate them from the Achæi of Achaia propria.

The Country is famous in the Authors of the elder times, more for the Gallantry of the Men, than any great goodness of the Soil and place: yet that is sufficiently memorable for the Hill Hymettus, (swarming with Bees, plentiful of the sweetest Honey, and rich in Mines of excellent Marble; as also for the River Cephissus, which runneth almost through the whole length hereof; divided into two main Streams, of which the one is called Alopus, the other retaineth its first name. Upon the Banks hereof stood the Temple of Themis, to which Dædonia did repair to be directed in the Restauration of Mankind, as the Poets Fable.

It was divided anciently into these seven Parts; viz. 1. Attica, 2. Megaris, 3. Bœotia, 4. Phocis, 5. Locris, 6. Doris, and 7. Ætolia. A Division now as much diffused as the name of Achaia, changed by the Timki into that of Lebodia, of which more anon.

1. ATTICA hath on the West Megaris and some part part of Bœotia, on all other parts compassed with the Sea: so called from Athens, the chief City. The Soil for the most part is very barren and craggy; yet by the Arms and Industry of the People made both rich and famous; inasmuch as the yearly Revenues of the State of Athens were 1200 Talents. The Money current in this Country was commonly stamped with an Ox, whence came the By-word Bos in lingua, applied to such Lawyers as were bribed to lay nothing in their Client's Cause. Not much unlike to which was the Proverb rising from the Coin of Ægina (an Isle adjoining) stamped with the figure of a Snail, viz. Virtutum et Spentiam vincunt Tarditas.

Places of most observation in it were, 1. Phylæa, a strong Fortrefs on the Borders of Bœotia, surprised by Thraibulus and others of the banished Athenians, during the Government of the thirty Tyrants: the taking whereof was the first step towards their own and their Country's Liberty, which soon after followed. 2. Eleusis, on the Borders of Megaris, almost impregnable fortified by the thirty Tyrants when they had the command of Athens, by whom it was designed for their Retreat in all times of Danger. But having withdrawn hither on the taking of Phylæa and Piræus by the Thraibulians, they found strong Walls a weak defence for so much Wickedness; being trained out as to a Parley, and so deprived of the Place and their Power together. It was first built by one Eleusius, who entertained Ceres as he was in Quest of her Daughter Proserpina; who, to reward him, taught him the use of Agriculture; and he in honour of her built here a Temple. Hence Ceres in the Poets is called Eleusina, and her Sacrifices Sacra Eleusinia; and sometimes the City also his Metamorphosis. 3. Rhamnus, upon the River Alphus, famous for the Temple of Amphiarus, and the Statue of the Goddess Nemesis, hence called Rhamnusia in the Poets: This Nemesis, or Rhamnusia, being the Goddess of Indignation, punished those who made themselves unworthy of their present Fortunes. 4. Tricorinthus, of more Antiquity than fame. 5. Marathon, on the South-side of the River Alphus, opposite to Rhamnus; of great note for the Discomfiture given by Miltiades the Athenian to the numerous Army of Darius, consisting of 200000 and 100000 Horse: the Emulation of which noble Victory started such brave Resolves in the breast of Themistocles. As memorable in the Poets of those elder times for the Marathonian Bull there slain by Theseus. 6. Megara, the ordinary Dwelling-place of Theseus, before he rested his Seat at Athens, it being at this Town that he restored Helen (whom he had before stolen from her own Country) to her two Brethren Castor and Pollux; of which both Rape and Restitution we find mention in Ovid, the one in the Epistle of Oenone to Paris, the other in that of Hermione to Orestes; in which last it is said expressly, Reddita Megarâ Tyndaris urbe Soror, that is to say, that she was delivered to her two Brethren (who had taken much pains in seeking for her) in the Town of Megara. 7. Piræus, the Port town to Athens, and the ordinary Station for their Shipping, the Haven hereof being capable of 400 Sail; distant from the City about two miles, but joined unto it by two long Walls reaching from the one to the other; for securing the conveyance of their Merchandise to and from the Sea. The Port it self was impregnable fortified by the Advice of Themistocles: But as these long Walls were broken down by the command of the Spartans, when the City of Athens was taken by them, so were the Fortifications of Piræus it self demolished by the command of Sylla, in his War against Archimedes King of Pontus, the better to keep under the Athenians. 8. Panormus, a Sea-town also, and of very good Trade, but not of such importance as the other was. 9. Athens, one of the Eyes of Greece, and the chief of Attica, situate from the Sea two miles, as before was said; the Haven of Piræus serving it with all Commodities which came from other parts by shipping. First built by Cecrops the first King of it, by whom it was called Cecropia, A.M. 2409; repaired afterwards by Theseus, and furnished with good Laws by Solon; and finally thus named from Athena, (whom the Greeks called Athene) to whom they dedicated, and in whose Honour there were yearly kept some solemn Games, called Panathenæa. A City heretofore adorned with all those excellencies of Strength and Beauty which Art or Cost could add unto it. Renowned, as for many things, so for three especially: 1. For the inviolable Faith of the Citizens in all their Leagues, and most firm Affection to their Friends: so that Fides Attica grew in the end unto an Adage. 2. For the famous Scholars which here taught and flourished; this being so happy a Nursery of the choicest Wits, and so fitly seated for the Muses, that the very Native Wits, being in other Countries, could sensibly perceive some want of that natural Vigour which at home was resident in their Spirits. Iâ ut corpora istius Gentis separata sint in alias Regionis, Ingenia vero solis Athenionum muris clausa esse existimes, as Valerius hath it. Yea and, to say the truth, it was a most famous University, from whose great Cistern the Conduits-pipes of Learning were dispersed over all the World. Yet did not Learning so effeminate or soften the hearts of the People, but that 3. This one City yielded more famous Captains than any in the World besides, not excepting Rome; Miltiades, Aristides, Themistocles, Cimon, Pericles, Alcibiades, Phocion, and divers others of great name. Who though they were the men that both defended and enlarged this Commonwealth, yet were the people so ungrateful to them, or they so unfortunate in the end, that they either died abroad in Banishment, or by some violent death at home. Themistocles, the Champion of Greece, died an Exile in Persia, Phocion was slain by the people, Demosthenes made himself away by Poison, Pericles was many times endangered, Theseus their Founder first deposed, and then despitefully imprisoned, Aristides, Alcibiades, Nicias, &c. banished for ten years by the Ostracism; a form of Punishment, so called, because the name of the party banished was written on a Oyster-shell; and only used towards such who either began to grow too popular, or potent among the men of service. Which Device, allowable in a Democratic, where the over-much powerableness of one might hazard the Liberty of all, was exercised in spite often than for desert. A Country-fellow meeting by chance with Aristides, desired him to write Aristides in his shell: and fired had ever wronged him? he replied, No, he was only sorry to hear folk call him a good man. We find the like unfortunate end to most of the Romans so redoubted in War. Corvulus was exiled, Camillus confined to Ardea, Scipio murdered, with divers others; only because their Virtue had lifted them above the pitch of ordinary men. Ventidius was disgraced by Antony; Agrippa poisoned, with the privacy of Dominian; Corbulo murdered by the command of Nero: all able men, yet living in an Age wherein it was not lawful to be valiant. In latter times it so happened to Gonfalo the great Captain, who having conquered the Kingdom of Naples, driven the French beyond the Mountains, and brought all the Italian Potentates to stand at the Spaniards devotion, was by his Master called home, where he lived obscurely; though honoured after his decease with a solemn Funeral. Worse fared the Gaels and Biron in France; worse Essex, and Dudley of Northumberland, with us in England. Neither will I omit William Duke of Suffolk, who having served 34 years in our Wars with France, and for 17 years together never coming home, at his return was quarrelled, and basely murdered. It were almost impious to be silent of Job, the bravest Soldier and most fortunate Leader that ever fought the Lord's Battels, and yet was killed at the horns of the Altar. Whether it be that such men be born under an unhappy Planet, or that Courtiers, and such as have best opportunity to endear men of War unto their Sovereigns, know not the way of commanding their great Delects; or that Envy, the common Foe to Virtue, be a hindrance to it; I am not able to determine. And yet it may be that Princes naturally are distrustful of men of action, and are not willing to make them greater whose name is great enough already. And it may be the fault is in the Soldiers themselves, by an unseasonable over-valuing of their own Performances, as if the Prince or State were not able to reward or prize them: which was the cause of the death of Silius in the time of Tiberius. Concerning which Tacitus giveth us this good note, That over-merit in great Subjects is exceeding dangerous, and begets Hate in stead of Favours. Beneficia ob usque lata sunt, dum videntur exsolvi posse; ubi multum antecederent, pro gratia Odium redditur, saith that wise Historian.

But to look back again on Athen: it was first built by Cecrops the first King thereof; governed by him and his Posterity with no lower Title for 400 years, as is apparent by this following Catalogue of

The Kings of ATHENS.

- A.M.*
2394 1. Cecrops, who first made Jupiter a God, and ordained Sacrifices to be offered to him, as Pausanias writeth.
2444 2. Cranus, oured of his Kingdom by 2453 3. Amphizyon, the Son of Dendalion and Uncle to that Amphizyon who first instituted the supreme Court of the Amphizyones, or Common-Council of all Greece.
2463 4. Erichthonius, the Son of Vulcan.
2513 5. Pandion, the Father of Progne and Philomela, so famous in the old Poets; of whom more hereafter.
2553 6. Erichthonius, whose Daughter Oriechia was ravished by Borcas King of Thrace.
2603 7. Cecrops II. Brother of Erichthonius.
2643 8. Pandion II. Son of Erichthonius.
2668 9. Agess, Son of Pandion the second, of whom the Agess Sea took name.
2706 10. Theseus, the Son of Agess, and Companion of Hercules, vanquished the Minotaur in Crete, collected the People of Attica into a body, and incorporated them into the City of Athen, which he had beautified and enlarged.
2746 11. Admetheus, the Son of Petew, Grand-child of Erichthonius, served with the other Greek Princes at the War of Troy.
2769 12. Demophon, the Son of Theseus, restored unto his Father's Throne on the death of Admetheus.
2802 13. Oxyntes, Son or Brother of Demophon.
2814 14. Aphydas Son of Oxyntes, slain by his Brother.
2815 15. Thymades the last of the Line of Erichthonius.
2823 16. Melampus of Messene, driven out of his own Kingdom by the Heracleids, obtained that of Athen.
2860 17. Codrus, the Son of Melampus, the last King of Athen, who, in the Wars against the Peloponnesians, having Intelligence by an Oracle that his Enemies should have the Victory, if they did not kill the Athenian King, attired himself like a common Beggar, entered the Peloponnesian Camp, and there played Jack Pranks, that at the last they were faine to kill him. When which the Enemy understood, they thought themselves by this means deprived of all hopes of Success, and so broke up their Army, and departed homewards. For this the People of Athen, did so honour his memory, that they thought no man worthy to succeed as King, and therefore committed the managing of the Estate to Governors for term of Life, whom they called Archontes: the first Archon being Medon, the Son of Codrus. They differed not from the former Kings in point of Power, but only in the manner of their Admission: the former Kings claiming the Government by Succession in right of Blood; and these Archontes holding by Election only; whose names here follow in this List of

The perpetual Archontes in the State of ATHENS.

- A.M.*
2882 1. Medon, the Son of Codrus.
2902 2. Acastus, the Son of Medon.
2938 3. Archippus, the Son of Acastus.
2957 4. Thersippus, the Son of Archippus.
2993 5. Phorbas, the Son of Thersippus.
3029 6. Megacles, the Son of Phorbas.
3059 7. Diogenetus, the Son of Megacles.
3087 8. Pherculus, the Son of Diogenetus.
3106 9. Aritihon, the Son of Pherculus.
3126 10. Thespius; in whose time began the Kingdom of Macedon.
3153 11. Agamemnor.
3173 12. Achylus, the Son of Agamemnor. After whose death, Anno Mundi 3195, the Athenians, weary of these Governors for term of Life, as being less obnoxious to the Check and Censure of the People, chose themselves Officers or Archontes for ten years only: at the end of which time they were to yield up their places, and make room for others. But being a People greedy of Novelty and desirous of Change, they had only seven of those Decennial Archontes; their Officers from that time forwards being chosen annually: which Officers, being nine in number, we may call most properly the Provost, the chief Bishop, the Marshal, and the six chief Justices, all chosen out of the Nobility. And so it held for the space of 170 years, till the time of Solon; who was the first which put the Supreme Authority into the hands of the People; and gave the first hint unto that Democracy which afterwards prevailed in Athen by the help of Pericles, who, being one of the great Council of the Areopagites, took from them a great part of their Power in deciding Controversies and Suits in Law, putting them over to the Judgment of the Common people. A Government so dearly loved by the Athenians, that in all the Cities which they conquered, or restored to Liberty, or won to their Party from the Spartans, they caused it to be admitted: as on the other side the Spartans introduced and confirmed an Aristocracy (their own beloved Government) in all the places where they prospered. As for the Court of the Areopagites, of much fame in Athen, it consisted from the first beginning in the last branch of Agamemnor, of such as had born some of the nine chief Offices; who, being once admitted, held for term of Life. First instituted in the time of Demophon, the Son of Theseus, and called by the name of Areopagites, either for that they held their Court in the Street of Mars, in Athen, mentioned Act 17. 22. or because Mars being being accused for a Murder, did first plead before them. A Court which held in estimation under all these Changes, and so continued till the time of the Roman Empire.

But to return again to the Story of Athen. In or about the latter end of the life of Solon, Pisistratus altered the Free State and made himself the absolute Master of the City: but he once dead, the People regained their Liberty, driving thence Hippias the Son of Pisistratus; who hereupon fled for Succour to Darius the Perfian Monarch, occasioning by that means the first coming of the Perfians into Greece. What success the Perfians had in Greece the Histories of those Times abundantly inform us: Darius being vanquished by Miltiades at Marathon, and Xerxes by Themistocles at Salamis. Yet did not Athen escape so clear but that it was taken by Xerxes, though indeed first abandoned and voluntarily dismantled by the Athenians. When the Perfians were retired homewards, the People of Athen re-edified their Town, and strongly fortified it with high and defensible Walls: which done they put their Fleet to Sea, and spoiled the Coasts of Perfia in all quarters, enriching their City with the Spoils, and enlarging their Power and Dominion by the addition of many Islands and Sea-Towns. Hereby they grew unto that Wealth and Potency, that they were suspected by their weaker Neighbours, and envied by their stronger, the Lacedaemonians especially; who, fearing to lose their ancient Priority over Greece, but pretending the Surprisal of Potidea, a City of Thrace, from the Corinthians, and some hard measure by them shewed upon the Megarenses, made War upon them. In the beginning of this War the Athenians not only resisted the whole Power of all Greece confederate against them, but so exceedingly prospered, that the Spartans fled for Peace, and could not get it. But the Scales of Fortune turned. For after they had held out 28 years, they were compelled to pluck down the Walls of their City, and submit themselves to the will and pleasure of the Spartans, now by the puillance and good fortune of Lysander become their Masters: by whom the Government was changed, and an Aristocracy (or rather Oligarchy) established under 30 Magistrates, known commonly by the name of the 30 Tyrants; expelled not long after by the Valour of Thrasybulus and his Associates, as hath been touched upon before. Not long after the end of this War, which the Historians call Bellum Peloponnesiacum, the Perfians, seeing how the Spartans not having now the State of Athen to oppose them, began to work upon their Empire furnished Comon, a noble Athenian Gentleman with a Navy so well provided, that he overcame the Lacedaemonians in a Fight at Sea, and thereby put his Country-men into good heart, that they made a party in the War called Bellum Sacrum; composed at the last by Philip of Macedon, who brought not only the Thebans, whom he came to aid, but the Athenians, Spartans, and the rest of the adverse party, under his Command. A Servitude from which they were never freed, till as well Macedon as the rest became Fellow-Servants unto Rome. But though this brave City had then lost her power in point of Arms, yet she still kept her credit as an University in point of Arts, Origen, Chrysostom, Basil, and Gregory Nyssa, men of Renown and Eminence in the Primitive times, are said to have studied at Athen: the like is affirmed of Pope Joan, if the Tale be true, for the middle Ages. And so it held, as I conjecture, though not so eminently as before, till the year 1440, when taken by Mahomet the Great, who wondered much (as my Author telleth) at the Extrem Beauty of the Castle, and the strength of the Walls, not having lost in so long time their former Excellencies. Since that it is sensibly de-cayed, and is now an ordinary Burrough, (by the Turks called Serius) but still preserveth the Reputation of an Episcopall See, the Bishop of it holding up the Title of Atheniensis.

2. MEGARIS is bounded on the East with Attica, on the West with the Bay of Corinth on the North with Boeotia, and on the South with the Isthmus and the Gulf of Engia: So called from Megara, the chief City.

This is the least Province of all Greece, and not very fruitful (the Country for the most part being hard and rocky) not beautified with many Cities. The principal Bay of those which were are, 1. Pegae, or Pagae, situate on the Bay of Corinth and spoken of both by Pliny and Strabo; but not otherwise memorable. 2. Megara, (now Megara) first built by Megareus, the Son of Apollo, and from him thus named. Remarkable in former times for a Sect of Philosophers, called from hence Secta Megarica, founded by one Eucleide, a Disciple of Socrates; of whom see Laertius. More memorable in the Poets for Nisus, once the King of this little Territory on whose Head there is said to have grown a purple Hair, on which the preservation of his Life and Kingdom did depend: Which Jewell his Daughter Scylla is said to have delivered unto King Minos, her Father's Enemy, of whom, then belising this City, upon the sight of him from an high Tower, he became enamoured; But he rejecting her and her Present both, after the taking of the City returned into Crete: which the unhappy Woman seeing, she threw her self after him into the Sea, and was turned into the Bird called Ciris. I leave the moralizing of the Fable unto the of that politic practice, to love the Treason, and hate the Traitor. For the glory of this City did not end with Nisus. For, shaking off the Cretan Yoke, it became Nisus once again, and being conveniently seated on the very Isthmus, amounted to that height of Prosperity, that they contended with the Athenians for the Island of Salamis. And in this War they so crushed the power and spirit of Athen by one fatal Overthrow, that the Athenians, to prevent all the like Disasters, did ordain by Law, that whosoever mentioned the Recovery of Salamis was to lose his Life: so that Solon was compelled to feign himself frantic, the better, to propound the Enterprize. In which although the State of Athen got the life of Salamis, yet did the Megarenses continue a Free people, till brought under (with the rest) by the Macedonians, and with them made Subject unto Rome.

3. BOEOTIA is bounded on the South with Agariss and the Bay of Corinth, on the North with the River Cephissus, on the East with Attica and a Branch of the Agass Sea, and on the West with Phocis. Thus named from Boe, which in Greek signifieth an Ox; because when Cadmus, weary of seeking his Sister Europa, (whom Jupiter had stolen out of Phoenicia) came to the Oracle of Delphos, he was commanded to follow the first Ox he saw, and where the Ox did rest it self there to build a City.

In the Country is nothing singular, but an ancient Custom of burning before the Door of an House in which a new-married Wife was designed to dwell, the Axle-tree of the Coach which brought her thither; giving her by that Ceremony to understand, (as Plutarch telleth us in his Morals) that she must frame her self to live and abide with him, without hope of departure. In this Country also are the Streights of the Mountain Oeta, from the neighbouring Baths called Thermopylae, not above 25 foot in breadth; which in the War that Xerxes made against the Greeks were valiantly defended by Leonidas King of Sparta with no more than 300 of his men, who, having valiantly resisted that Army which in his passage out of Perfus had drank Rivers dry, and slain at least 30000 of them, died every man upon the place. To hide the greatness of which loss, left it should terrify the rest of his Army which were coming on, Xerxes commanded all the slain men to be buried in several Pits, except a thousand; as if no more than they had been lost in that passage.

Places of most observation in it are, 1. Thespiæ, on a River of the same name, at the Fall wherof into the Bay it is pleasantly seated, shadowed on the North with a Branch of the Mountain Helicon, and consecrated, as that was, unto the Muses, hence called Tespiades in the Poets. 2. Platææ; nigh to which Mardonius, General to the Perfians, was overcome by the Greeks, with the loss of Mardonius himself and 160000 men on the Perfian side; and on the other no more than 31 Spartans, 16 Arceadians, 52 Athenians, and about 600 of the Megarenses. In memory of which brave exploit, and to preserve the names and honour of those Worthies who there laid down their Lives for the Liberty of Greece, there was a Festival kept annually by the Platæans in the month of September, with solemn Sacrifices, and a kind of divine acknowledgment unto the deceased, continued from the time of Aristides the Athenian, who first ordained them, to the days of Plutarch, who records it; but how long after I am not able to say. In this great Fight the commander in chief was a noble Spartan, called Pausanias, who, afterwards having a Design to make himself Sovereign of all Greece, and being discovered in the Practice, fled for Sanctuary to the Temple of Pallas. From whence because it was counted Sacrilegious to constrain him by violence, it was unanimously resolved to wall up the Entrance his own Mother laying the first Stone. It is recorded that before the fighting of this Battle, the Athenians had been told by the Oracle that they should be Conquerors, if they fought upon their own ground: whereupon the Platæans, within whose Territories the Perfians had prepared to fight, bestowed that Field on the State of Athens. In requital of which noble act, Alexander the Great re-edified and enlarged their City, having been first burnt and sacked by the Perfians, and after levelled with the ground by the Lacedæmonians, because confederate with Athens in the War against them. 3. Leuctra; remarkable for the great Overthrow which the Thebans, under the Conduct of Epaninondas, gave unto the Spartans and their King Cleombrotus, who was there slain: by which Victory they did not only preserve their own Liberty, but brought their Enemies to that fall of Courage and Reputation, that they could never rise again: the divine Vengeance overtaking them in that very place where some of their Nation had deliv'ed the Daughters of Scædæus, who had given them courteous Entertainment. For which when no Reparation could be had from the State of Sparta, the unfortunate Damocles slew themselves, to avoid the infamy of consenting to their own Dishonour, and were buried in those very Fields where this Battle was fought. 4. Alivæa, the Birth-place of Hesiod, a man (according to Paterculus) elegantis ingenii, & carminum dulcedine memorabilis: though it hath pleased that proud Critick, Julius Scaliger, intending to deifie Virgil, to prefer the worst Verse in the Georgicks of the one before the whole Works of the other. 5. Labadaia, near the River Cephissus, the Inhabitants whereof were counted the most superstitious of all the Grecians: memorable for the Trochian Den or Cave, and the Oracle there given by Jupiter, hence called Trochianus: into which Cave none were permitted to enter and receive the Oracle, but after many Ointings, Wallings, and the like Superstitious preparations, too long and many to be specified in this place and time. A Town which still preserves so much of its ancient Estimation, that from hence (as I conjecture) the whole Country of Acchia hath the name of Liavidia, by which the Turks call it at this present. 6. Cheronæ, or Cheronia, the Birth-place of Plutarch; near unto which was fought that memorable Battle between L. Sylla and the Romans against Archelaus, one of the Lieutenants of Mithridates King of Pontus, leading an Army of 120000 Soldiers, of which 10000 only escaped with Life, the Romans losing but 14. 7. Orchomenus, no less memorable for another Victory, obtained by the same L. Sylla against Dorilaus, another of that King's Commanders, having an Army of 80000 men, of which 20000 lost their lives that day. After which Victories, when Sylla might easily have destroyed that King, he suddenly patched a Peace up with him, that he might hasten unto Rome, where Marius and Cinna had trodden his Faction under foot; preferring by that act the pursuit of his own private Quarrels before that of his Country, endangered more by Mithridates after his return, than it had been formerly. 8. Aulis, a Port-Town on the Shores of the Ægean Sea, where the Grecians took shipping when they went to the War of Troy; here making Oath never to give over the Enterprize until they had destroyed that City. Concerning which thus lies in Virgil.

Aulide juravi.

That is to say,

I took no Oath at Aulis, to destroy,

As did the Greeks the Town and State of Troy.

But the chief of this Country, and such as had a special Influence over all the rest, was the City of Thebes, situate on the Banks of the River Cephissus, where it was built by Cadmus the Phœnician, after all his wanderings. Famous in old times for the Wars between Eteocles and Polynices, the Sons of the unfortunate Prince Oedipus, and of his Mother and Wife Jocasta. The History of which War is the most ancient piece of Story that we find of all Greece; the former times and Writings containing nothing but Fables, little favouring of Humanity, and less of Truth; as of men changed into Monsters, the Adventures of the Gods, and the like. In this Town lived Pelopidas and Epaninondas, who so crushed the Lacedæmonians at the Battels of Leuctria and Mantineæ, that they could never after re-obtain their former Puffiance. This Commonwealth long flourished, and at last, being over-burthened in the Phœbian War, was glad to submit it self to the Protection of the Macedonians, under the leading of King Philip; who by this means first got footing in Greece, into which afterwards he thrust his whole body.

Upon the death of Philip, Thebes revolted from the Macedonians, but Alexander his Successor quickly recovered it: and to dishearten the Thebes in the like Attempts, he raised the City, selling all the Inhabitants of age and strength; only Tindarus's house he commanded to be left standing in honour of that learned Poet. At the Sack of this Town, one of the Macedonian Soldiers entered the house of a principal Woman, named Timochea, ravished her, and rifled her Coffers, but still demanding more Treasure, he shewed him a deep Well, saying that there all her Money was hidden. The credulous Villain then stooping down to behold his Prey, he tumbled him into the Well, and overwhelmed him with Stones. For which noble act the generous Prince not only dismissed her unharmed, but most highly commended her. It was after re-edified by Cassander, and followed for the most part, as the rest of the Boeotians did, the Fortunes of Macedon.

is reduced at this time to the state of an ordinary Burrough, and called Stibes by the Turks.

4. PHOCIS is bounded on the East with Boeotia, on the West with Doris and Locris, on the North with River Cephissus, and on the South with the Bay of Corinth. A Country somewhat swelled with Mountains, but those of eminent note in the elder times. The chief whereof are 1. Helicon, 2. Citharon both consecrated height and bigness. 3. Parnassus, of so great an height, that in that great Deluge in which most of these parts of Greece were overwhelmed with the Waters, Dædalus and Pyrhus saved themselves and many others on the Top hereof: for which, and for its two Summits reaching to the Clouds, it is of great renown amongst the Poets; as in Ovid,

Mons ibi verticibus petis arduus Astra duobus,
Nomine Parnallus, superbaque cacumine Nubes.
Parnassus there with his two Tops extends

To the touch Stars, and all the Clouds transcends. Places of most observation in it are, 1. Anticyra, situate near the Sea, and famous for the Hellesborum there growing, an Herb very medicinal for the Phrenesies, whence the Proverb, Naviget Anticyram, applied to mad-men. 2. Pytho, or Pythia, laid to be seated not only in the middle of Greece, but of all the World: Strabo relating how Pythia, desirous to know the exact middle of the Earth, let loose two Eagles, one from the East, and the other from the West, which flying with an equal Wing, (so we must conceive) and meeting at this very place, shewed it apparently to be the Navel of the World. By reason of which convenient situation in the Heart of Greece, it was made a Sessions-Town for all the Grecians and honoured with the Court and general Assembly of the Amphibolians; men chosen out of the prime Cities of Greece, who had power to decide all Controversies, and to make Laws for the common good. A Court first instituted by Aerilus, as Strabo telleth us: or, as Halicarneassus more probably, by Amphibolus the Son of Hætes, from whom they seem to have their name. The Commissioners from the several Cities, with reference to the places for which they served, had the name of Phylagoras; when assembled, they were called the Amphibolians: their Meetings were stances concerning their Authority will not be amiss. In the time of Cimon, the Cirrhæans, having by Piracy wronged the Thebians, were fined by this Council; and after that the Lacedæmonians, for surprizing Acadæa. And the Phocians, for plunging up the Land of Cirra, which belonged to the Temple of Delphos, were by them amerced: and because they continued obdurate, and paid not their Amercements, their Dominions were adjudged to Decree also, to that Temple. But they, disobeying this being proclaimed against them by the rest of the Grecians, who by the Assistance of Philip King of Macedon brought them to Obedience, the Council was again assembled; in which it was decreed that the Phocians should raze the Walls of their Cities, that they should no more keep Horse and Arms, till they had satisfied the Treasury of the Temple, nor any longer have a vote in the loose Conventions. It was also then enacted, King Philip and his Successors, Kings of Macedon, in whom they also did confer the perpetual Friendship, and made them Princes of that Senate. A Court to which the Sanhedrin of the seventy Elders amongst the Jews, and, in our times, the Diets of the Empire, and the Af-fembles of the Switzers, carry most resemblance. 3. Cirrhæa, on the Sea-side, the Port-town to Delphos. 4. Crisis, or Æneus, situate on the edge of the Bay of Corinth, called sometimes from hence Crisseus Sinus. 5. Scarpia, memorable for the Defeat of Critolaus, Captain of the Achaean Army, by Metellus one of the Roman Prætors: the Loss of which Battle drew after it the Destruction of Corinth. It was observed in the success of this great Fight, that a Band of Arceadians, elcaping out of the Battle, came unto 6. Elateæ, another City of this Province, and were there kindly entertained on memory of some former Alliances, till news came of the Overthrow of Critolaus; when they were ordered by the State of Phocis to relinquish the Town, (for Adversity seldom meeteth with returns of Friendship.) They were first set upon and all slain by the Romans in the self-same place in which their Ancestors had unworthily forsaken the rest of the Grecians in their War against Philip King of Macedon, for the publick Liberty. 7. Daulis, a City appertaining to Tercus King of Thrace, who, having married Progne, the Daughter of Pandion King of Athens, ravished her sister Philomela, and cut out her Tongue, the better to keep his Villany undiscovered. But Progne being made acquainted with the double injury, first made him ignorantly kill his own Son Itys, whom she had baked in a Pie; and after killed him with the help of her ravished Sister. 8. Delphos, renowned in old times for the famous Temple of Apollo, in which, with that of Jupiter Hamon in Marmarica, (now reckoned as a part of Egypt) were the most famous Oracles of the ancient Gentiles; dark Riddles of the Devil, couched and contrived with so much Cunning, that the meaning of them was most hidden, when it was thought most ealie to be discerned. An Instance of which is that given to Cresus, in the War by him projected against the Perfians, which was thus delivered;

Cresus Haly penetrans magnam subvertet opem ius.
When Cresus over Helys goes.

A mighty Nation he o'erthrowes.

Which he interpreting according to his own hopes, crossed the River, was vanquished by Cyrus King of Perfus and his Kingdom conquered. The like we find of Pyrhus King of Epirus, who, before he made War against the Romans, consulted with the Oracle, and received this Answer;

Aio re, Æacida, Romanos vincere posse.

Which doubtful Prediction he thus construed, Te posse vincere Romanos, That he should overcome the Romans; but found it unto his cost that the meaning was, Romanibus posse vincere re, That the Romans should overcome the same Falacy. By another kind of the same Falacy, the Logicians call Amphibolia, did this great Enemy of mankind overthrow another, who, demanding of the Oracle what Success he should have in an Expedition which he was in hand with, received his Answer in these words,

His redibis nunquam per bella peribis.

Which he thus pointing, his redibis, nunquam per, &c. engaged himself in the War, and was therein slain. Whereupon his Followers, canvassing the Oracle, found the meaning of it to be this, His redibis nunquam per, &c. The like Juggling he also used in those supernatural Dreams which Philosophers call ſomnoscopia. For Cæsar, dreaming that he carnally knew his own Mother the night before he passed over the Rubicon, became Lord of Rome, the common Mother of the Romans: and Hippias, the Son of Pisistratus the Tyrant of Athens, having upon the same projects the same Dream, was killed and buried in the Bowels of his Mother the Earth. So that had Cæsar miscarried in his action, and Hippias thrived, yet still had the Devil been reputed his Crafts-master, and the Father of Truths. But as the Ecclesiastical History telleth us, that Julian the Apostate, consulting with the Devil, was told that he could receive no Answer: because that the Body of Babylon the Martyr was entombed nigh his Altar: so neither could the Devils deceive the World, as formerly they had done, after Christ, the Truth it self, was manifested in the Flesh, and tormented these unclean Spirits, though, as they alleged, before their time. Augustinus, as Suidas telleth us, in whose time our Saviour was born, consulting with the Oracle about his Successor, received this not satisfying Answer:

Πῶς
Ἐρεῖς ὁ κληρὸς μὲν, δεξιὲς μαντεύσων ἀνέσται,
Τὸν δὲ θυμὸν περὶ τῶν, ὅς ἐστιν αὐτοῖς ἰσχυρὸς.
Λογὸν ἀπὸ τοῦ ἐν αὐτῷ θεοῦ ἔσται.
 An Hebrew Child, whom the blest Gods adore;
 Hath bid me leave these Shrines, and pack to Hell;
 So that of Oracles I can no more.
 In silence leave our Altar and farewell.

Whereupon Augustus, coming home, in the Capitol erected an Altar, and thereupon in Capital Letters caused this Inscription to be engraven, HÆC EST ARA PRIMOGENITI DEI. Now as the Devils had by Christ's Birth lost much of their wonted Virtue, so after his Passion they lost it almost together. Concerning which Plutarch, in a Tract of his Morals called τὸ ἀκατακτάμενον γενέσθαι, Why Oracles cease to give Answers, telleth us a notable Story, which was this. Some Company, going out of Greece into Italy, were about the Echinades be calmed, when on a sudden there was heard a voice loudly calling on one Thamus, an Egyptian then in the Ship. At the two first calls he made no answer, but to the third he replied, saying, Here I am. And the Voice again spake unto him, bidding him, when he came to the Palodes, to make it known that the great God Pan was dead. When they came unto the Palodes, which are certain Shelves and Rocks in the Ionian Sea, Thamus, standing on the Poop of the Ship, did as the Voice directed him: whereupon was heard a mighty Noise of many together, who all seemed to groan and lament with terrible and hideous shriekings. News hereof coming to Tiberius, he caused the learned men in his Empire to enquire out of their Books who that Pan should be: by whom it was answered, that he was the Son of Mercury and Penelope, with Ignorance enough, and little satis faction to the business propounded to them. Such therefore as more narrowly observed the Circumstances of this accident found it to happen at the time when our Saviour suffered on the Cross; who was indeed the true God Pan, the chief Shepherd and Bishop of our Souls, as the Scripture calleth him: and that, upon this divulging of his Death and Passion, the Devils, who used to speak in Oracles, did with great Grief and Lamentation forsake that Office, which had been so gainful to them in seducing Mankind. That all Oracles at that instant ceased, I dare not say; though it be certain that about that time they began to fail: it being said by Juvenal, who lived in the Reign of Domitian, Dolphis Oracula cessant, that the Oracle of Delphos was then silent; the rest decaying sensibly in a short time after.

But to proceed. The Temple of Apollo being spoiled by the Phocians, as before was noted, caused the War betwixt them and the Thebans, called the Holy War: in which the Thebans, being likely to have the worst, sent for Philip of Macedon, who made an end of the Quarrel by subduing both. The Treasure which the Phocians found in the Temple was reckoned at 60 Talents of Gold; but it proved Aurum Toluatum, and brought a sudden Ruine on their State and Nation: Sacrilege being so unpardonable a Crime, even amongst the Heathen, that the fault of some few, countenanced by the rest of a people, hath brought Destruction on them all. It was afterwards with the like ill fortune ransacked by Brennus and his Gauls, in the wain of the Macedonian Empire all of them miserably perishing who had any hand in it.

5. LOCRI is bounded on the West with Phocis and a Branch of the Aegean Sea, on the West with Ætolia, on the North with the long Ridge of Hills which part it from Thessaly, and on the South with parts of Acchaia, Boeotia, Phocis, the Bay of Corinth, the Straights of Antirrhium, and a part of the Ionian Sea. So that for largeness of Extent, and the commodiousness of the Seas, it yieldeth to no Province in Acchaia, though not so fruitful as some others. Divided into the three Nations, of the Loeri Ozolæ, lying towards the South, on both sides of the Straights, so called from some ill Smells of the Country or people; 2. the Epimenidiæ, inhabiting the middle parts, so named from Mount Cnemis, not far from Paranassus; and 3. the Opuntii, so called from Opus their chief City, lying on the North-side of the River Cephissus, on the Coasts of the Aegean or Eubæan Seas.

Chief Cities of the whole, 1. Opus, the Head-City of the Opuntians, situate on the River Asopius, being one of the main Branches of Cephissus. 2. Cynus, the Port-Town to Opus. 3. Thronium, the prime Town of the Epimenidiæ, mentioned by Polybius, Leontis, Ptolemy, 4. Cymide, at the foot of Mount Cnemis, whence they had their name. 5. Amphissa, the chief City of the Ozolæ, situate in the inland parts of it: the People whereof, refusing to yield to the Sentence of the Amphityeons against their Confederates the Phocians, were the cause that Philip of Macedon returned into Greece. Against whom, grievously insulting the Boeotians, and manifestly aspiring to the Command of Greece, the Athenians desperately opposed, not so much with possibility of prevailing, as being urged on by the sharp and biting Orations of Demosthenes made against his Proceedings; which being by him called Philippicæ, occasioned Tully to call his bitter invectives against M. Antonius by the same name also. But the Success hereof was such as commonly attendeth a broken Fortune: The Athenians being vanquished at Chæronea, and Philip declared Captain of Greece against the Persians, obtained under that Title the Command he fought. 6. Eumantia, as Ptolemy, Oeantia, as Pliny and Paulinus call it; opposite to Ægira in Acchaia Propria. 7. Molyeria, by Ptolemy placed here, and by others reckoned in Ætolia: not far from whence is the Promontory of Amirrhium, so called because just opposite to that of Rhium in Acchaia propria, between which runneth a narrow Straight, (not so wide as the Hellefoss) which openeth into the Bay of Corinth: each Promontory being for that cause fortified by Bajazet the second with a very strong Castle; that on this side being gallantly defended by the Turks, when besieged by Doria, Anno 1532; for being forced with great Slaughter into a strong Tower which commanded the Castle, they rather chose to blow it up, together with the Ammunition, Victuals, and themselves to boot, than that the Fort should come entire into the hands of the Enemy. Some place this Promontory in Ætolia also; but, following the authority of Ptolemy, I have placed it here. 8. Nauclitus, so called from the building of Ships there by the Heracleidæ; situate on the Corinthian Bay, near the Mouth thereof. Given by the Citizens of Athens to the poor Messenians, when, after the end of the third War, the Lacedæmonians, unwilling to have them trouble some Neighbours, (and they scorned to be quiet Slaves) compelled them to seek new Habitations. It hath of late been called Lepanto, giving the name of the Gulf of Lepanto to the Bay of Corinth; by that that name subject for a while to the Venetians, and from them taken by the Turks, Anno 1499. Of these Loerians those of Italy were a branch or Colony, whose Law-giver was Zaleucus, spoken of elsewhere.

6. DORIS is bounded on the East with Phocis, on the West with Ætolia, on the North with the Hill Oeta, and other Mountains which divide it from Thessaly, and on the South with Ætolia and part of Loeris. The Air here is very healthy, and the Soil sufficiently fruitful, if well manured; but now the greatest part lieth waste for want of Tillage. First peopled by the Dæres or Dorians, descended from Dorus the Son of Heleus, and Grandchild of Demolion, by whom they were placed in Thessaly, afterwards spreading into this Country, which they left their name to, as their proper Dwelling: though many of them, following the Heracleidæ into Peloponnesus, possessed themselves of the greatest part of Laconia also; imprinting on the same their Dialect or form of Speech, from which they called the Doric.

Chief Cities hereof are, 1. Doris, so called in memory of Dorus, the first Progenitor of this People. 2. Erimus, seated at the Foot of Paranassus, mentioned by Thucydides, Sirabo, Mela, Ptolemy, and the rest of the Ancients. 3. Bium, as Ptolemy; or Bolion, as Sirabo and Pliny call it. 4. Cyminum, near Paranassus also, in the common Impressions of Didorus Siculus the Historian fallily called Cymbinium. 5. Lilæa, situate not far from the Spring or Fountain of the River Cephissus; which, rising hereabouts, passeth through the whole length of Acchaia, and falls into the Aegean or Eubæan Sea.

7. ÆTOLIA hath on the East Loeris, on the West Epirus, on the North Doris, on the South the Ionian Sea, said to be so called from Ætolus, the Son of Mars, who, being by Salmones cast out of Elis, fixed himself in this Country.

Here is the Forest of Calydon, where Melæager and the Flower of the Greek Nobility slew the wild Boar. Here is the River Euenus, over which the Centaur Nessus having carried Dejanira, Wife of Hercules, and intending to have ravished her, was slain by an Arrow which Hercules on the other side of the River shot at him. Here also is the River of Æchelous, of whom the Poets fable many things: as that being Rival with Hercules in the love of Dejanira, he encountered him in the shape of a Bull; and that when Hercules had pluck'd off one of his Horns, the Nymphs made of it their so-much-celebrated Corneia.

The people of this Country were the most turbulent and unruly people of all Greece, never at Peace with their Neighbours, and seldom with themselves. The Macedonians could never tame them, by reason of the Craginess of the Country: yet they brought them to such terms, that they were compelled to let the Romans into Greece, who quickly made an end of all.

Principal Towns hereof were, 1. Chalcis, situate near the Spring-head of Æchelous before mentioned. 2. Ærachthus, near the River so called; which, arising hereabouts, passeth into Epirus, and falleth into the Bay of Ambracia, not far from Nicopolis. 3. Olenus, not far from the Forest of Calydon. 4. Pleurome, giving name to the adjoining Country, called hence Pleuromia, the People whereof had the name of Curetes and Ægeades from their dancing, it being their custom to shave the fore-parts of their Heads, and let the Hair grow on the hinder-parts only: sed Hofes eos casare apprehenderent, because their Enemies should not lay hold on them by the Fore-tops, and so pull them down. 5. Thermis the Parliament-City, or place of general Assembly, for all the States of Ætolia: which Meeting was called Panætolium. It was chosen for those Meetings in regard of the situation and strength thereof, as being situate well-near in the midst of the Country, environed with rocky Mountains, of steep and difficult ascent. For that cause it was made also the receptacle of their Wealth and Treasure in all times of danger: but taken at the last by Philip of Macedon, with all the Spoil in it, in his War against them. 6. Calydon, near the Forest so called, giving name unto it: the royal Seat of Oeneus, Father of Melæager, divided into two parts by the River Euenus, which runneth through it, according unto that of Ovid,

Et Melæger eam maculatus sanguine Nelli
Euenus Calydonæa secat.

That is to say,
Calydon, Atlicæ's Town, the Floud
Euen divides, deli'd with Nessus bloud.

Adjoining hereto were the Abamænes, whom Pliny makes a People of it, who gave name unto a little Province called Abamania; but such (as little as it was) as gave it the Title of a Kingdom to Amintæus; a Prince whom the Ætolians made special use of in their Wars against Philip King of Macedon, the Father of Persus, suggesting to him and his Children, that they were descended of the House of Alexander the Great, and so engaging them, in hope of that Kingdom, to hazard the quiet of their own. The places of most note, are 1. Dium, 2. Abænum; both of them taken by Philip in that War.

These, as they were the last Actors on the Stage of Acchaia, so had they the most desperate part in all the Tragedy of that Country. The Affairs whereof, governed successively by that State which was most powerful, were for a long time managed by the Athenians; whose Councils and Conclusions went for Law amongst them. But that Estate being broken, if not subverted, by the Power of Sparta, the Thebans and Boeotians, who came next in play, had the chief Command; uniting almost all the rest in design with them against the Spartans, who now grew terrible to all. Becoming insolent by the course of two much Prosperity, and the many great Victories which they had against the Spartans, and thereupon quarrelling with the Phocians, they were the cause of Philip's coming into Greece; who, as he had learned among them the use of Arms, so made he use thereof at last, and of their Difficulties, to unite all the States of Greece under his Command; Thebes it self being taken and sacked by Alexander the Son of Philip, as before is said. The Macedonians thus prevailing, partly by Force, but especially by Art and Practice, there was no People in Acchaia that durst oppose them; till these Ætolians, a restless and impatient People, took the Cause in hand. Who thrived so well under Antigonus and Philip, two of the last Kings of Macedon, that they took from them many Towns, invaded Thessaly, attempted Macedon it self, and when they could not otherwise obtain their purpose in the Destruction of that Kingdom, opened a passage for the Romans to effect it for them. But finding no such favour at the Romans hands as they did expect, they began to murmur, and afterwards to excite Antiochus and the Greeks against them, drawing thereby those Forces against themselves which they had invited into Greece, and were the first People of all the Grecians that were conquered by them; though, by the Mediation of the Rhodiens and some other Friends, their Country was restored unto them, with the loss only of Cephallenia, Zante, and some other Islands; which the Romans were resolved to keep as the fruits of the War. This was about the 564 year of the building of Rome, Fulvius Nobilior being then Consul, and chief Com-mand mander in this War. After which time the several Estates hereof enjoyed so much Liberty as the Romans, their new Masters, thought fit to give them: till they were finally made absolutely subject in the time of Vespasian, by whom Achaia was reduced into the form of a Province, Peloponnesus being reckoned as a part thereof. In the Division of the Empire by Constantine the Great, the West parts hereof being divided from the rest were called New Epirus; but both of them made Provinces of the Diocese of Macedon, under the Præfatus Prætorio for Illyricum; the principal Officer of this part being called the Proconsul of Achaia: continuing under him and his Successors, Emperours of Constantinople, till the Destruction of that Empire by the power of the Turks; but so that it remained not always under the Command of one sole Officer, the Politie of that State being altered, and this Country parcelled out into many Governments, especially after the taking of Constantinople by the Latines, or Western Christians. At that time Theodoros Angelus, a noble Græcian, and one of the (then) Imperial Family, seized on Ætolia and Epirus; part of which last, and also the first, he left to Michael his Son, who held them, though with some dispute betwixt him and Michael Palæologus, the first Emperour of Constantinople after the Expulsion of the Latines. Charles, the last Prince of that Family, dying without Issue about the year 1430, bequeathed Ætolia to another Charles, the Son of his Brother, and Acarnania (being that part of Epirus which the Princes of Ætolia held) to his base Sons, Amemon, Turmus, and Hercules. But many Quarrels happening upon this Division, Amemon the second having then newly conquered Thesphaly, composed the Differences by taking all unto himself, Anno 1432. There were at that time other Princes of like Authority, as of Athens, Phocis, and Beotia; but the first the chiefest, as honoured not only with the Title of Dukes of Athens, but of Princes of Achaia also; such being the Fortune of that City, as to have the first and last great Sway in the affairs of Achaia. For at the Translation of the Empire upon the Latines, Godfrey of Troyes, a French-man, was made Duke of Athens and Prince of Achaia, of whom Paulus Amelinus speaketh, Anno 1220: which Honour afterwards was conferred on Walter de Bren, a Kinsman of John de Bren, the last King of Jerusalem, a Protector of Baldwin the second the last Emperour of the Latines, mentioned by the said Amelinus, Anno 1288. And though on the Defeat and death of this Walter by the Catalanians, then ravishing those parts of Greece, the Title of Duke of Athens was assumed by Frederick Alphonso, the Son of Frederick King of Sicily, and by other Princes of that House: yet, upon better ground, by the Heir general of this Walter it was conveyed in Marriage to Isidorus di Accio, a Nobleman of the Realm of Naples; whose Son Walter (commonly called the Duke of Athens) for a time obtained the Sovereignty of the State of Florence, Anno 1342, but lost it suddenly again by his too much Cruelty Francis de Acciavoli, the last Prince of this House, having been brought up in the Court of Mahomet the Great, as one of his Favourites, surrendered his Estate herein, at the perswasion of that Tyrant, in change for the Country of Baetia and the Dukedom of Thebes: which he no sooner had received, but he was sent by Mahomet to Zogamus his Lieutenant in Morea, by whom at first he was courteously received, at last cruelly murdered. And so the whole Country of Achaia fell into the possession of the Turks, Anno 1454, or thereabouts.

3. EPIRUS.

EPIRUS is bounded on the East with Ætolia, on the West with the Adriatick, on the North with Thesphaly, Macedon, and some part of Albania, and on the South with the Ionian Seas. So called from the Solidity and Firmness of it; the word Epiros in the Greek Tongue signifying as much as Terra firma, or the firm Land. But by the Turks at this day it is called Albania, which name they give to all the Lands and Countries in their possession lying upon the Adriatick and Ionian Seas.

In this Country was born Olympias, Mother of Alexander the Great; and Pyrrhus, who conquered the Realm of Macedon, and was the first Foreigner who made trial (though to his own Loss) of the Power and Puissance of Rome; accounted by Hannibal, next to Alexander, the second great Soldier of the world. Here is also Mount Pindus, sacred to Apollo and the Muses, dividing this Country from Thesphaly, and therefore common unto both: as also the Acrocætanian Hills, so called, because they are so much subject unto Thunder and Lightning, eminent for their height, and most feared by Mariners; who, when they see a little Cloud rising on the top hereof, are sure of a Tempest. Finally, here are the famous Rivers Acheron and Cocytus, which, for their black waters and unfavourable taste, are said to be the Rivers of Hell: from which last the Sacrifices and Solemnities made in honour of Proserpine, whom Pluto ravished and brought hither, had this name of Cocytia. Whence, by a Metonymy, these Rivers are taken sometime for Hell it self; as in that of the Poet, Flūtere si nequeo Superos, Acheronta movebo.

Since those in Heaven I cannot move,

The Powers of Hell I mean to prove.

The Soil hereof is very barren, and in many places full of Forests, and thin of people; but towards the Sea reasonably fruitful: plentiful of Oxen, Dogs, and Sheep of more than ordinary bigness, and yielding the best breed of Horses. The people use a distinct Language from the Græcians, though of the Greek Tongue not utterly ignorant; and by reason of the Barrenness of their own Country, become great Wanderers, especially in Summer-time, when they Travel into Thrace, Macedon, and Asia-Minor, hiring themselves to work in Harvest under the Turks, as also to thresh, winnow, and make clean their Corn; and in the Winter-time return to their Wives and Children. They are able of body, swift of foot, apt to undergo any Toil and Labour, having withal good Courages and high Projections; which makes flux of them as delight not in works of Drudgery to look for action in the Wars, and otherwise to rob and spoil the neighbouring Mountains of Albania. Till their Subjection to the Turks, they were much used both by the Kings of Hungary and the State of Venice in their several Wars, serving on Horse or Foot, as occasion was: as Mercenary as the Switzers in the Western parts, but not so faithful to the party entertaining them.

Anciently it was divided into Chaonia (which was the proper Epirus) lying on the West, and Acarnania, bordering on Ætolia, from which it is parted by the River Achelous: the middle parts hereof being Amphilochia, Thesphaly, and Alone: all very populous in former times, and so continued till Paulus Amelinus, on the Conquest of Macedon, overthrow seventy of their Cities. Few of which being since re-edified, and the Country for a long time languishing under the Turks, here are not any very fair Towns or well-peopled Cities at the present to be spoken of; and therefore we must look on such as flourished in the times fore-going. The principal whereof were, 1. Dodona, one of the Cities of Chaonia, memorable for the Temple and Oracle of Jupiter, hence called Dodonæus, situate in a fair Grove, the Trees whereof are said to be Vocal, and to give the Oracle: though others say, It was delivered first by a pair of Pigeons, whereof the one afterwards fled to Delphos, the other to the Temple of Jupiter Hammon in Ægypt. It was the ancientest Oracle of all Greece, and so perhaps was the Town the ancientest Town also. Said to be first built by Dodon, the Son of Jupiter and Europa: more probably to be called from Dodanim, the Son of Javan, and Grand-child of Japhet, who first inhabited this Region; the whole Country (Greece I mean) being called Javan from the Father, (by which name commonly it occurreth in the Hebrew Text) this Town Dodona from the Son. 2. Cassope, a Port-Town, with a fair Promontory of the same name adjoining to it. 3. Onchesimus, by Strabo called Onchimus, and by Pliny Echinus, a Port-Town also, now called Santi Quaranta. 4. Panormus, on the Sea-side, now called Antigonis, more within the Land, founded or repaired by Antigonis a King of Macedon, now called Argio Castro, as Niger thinketh. 6. Phanice, once the chief Town hereof; which being sacked by the Illyrians, under Tenta their Queen, gave the Romans an occasion of Quarrel with them, upon Complaint made to them by the Epirots. 7. Pelodis, a Port-Town, the Principal in that part which was called Thesphaly; as 8. Tarone, on the River Thymis, and 9. Sybona, an ancient Haven-Town, (now called Syrtis) was in that part whereof which was called Alone. 10. Argos, the chief City of the Amphilochians. This part hereof was first named Molossia, from Molossus the Son of Pyrrhus, and Andronache, remarkable for the best breed of Maltives, hence called Molossia; and afterwards Cholida, by Helenu the Son of Præmum, whom Pyrrhus the Son of Achilles settled in this Country; who having unfortunately slain his Brother Chæon, caused it in memory of him to be called Chæonia; Chæoniamque omnem Illyriam, Pluto, the third Son of Saturnus, was sometimes King, called from the flat and hollow situation of this Country, consisting much of deep Valleys, the King of Hell.

Towns of special note in Acarnania were. 1. Ambracium, on the Bay of Ambracia, now called Fanizza. 2. Ambracia, the Regal Seat or Court of Pyrrhus, giving name unto a fair and capacious Bay, now called Golfo di Larta, from Larta an adjoining Town, situate in or near unto the place where Ambracia stood. It was once subject to the Periander, King or Tyrant of Corinth, who being slain by a Woman named Leomæ, whom he kept as his Concubine, occasioned the inhabitants from that time forward, in memory of their Deliverance, to worship a Pyrrhus. Afterwards being taken from the Children of the Ætolians by the Macedonians, and from them won by being seized by Eubœus, a Roman Consul spoken of before. Who, seeing that he could not force it, was willing, at the mediation of the Athenians, Rhodians, and other Friends of both parties, to conclude a Peace; but so that he spoiled this City at his going hence of much excellent Imagery, carrying away with him unto Rome the Pictures of the nine Muses; most admirably well done by the hand of Zexis, the chief Painter of his times. 3. Buthrotum, a Roman Colony, by Pliny called Colonia simply; now a point of a Promontory of the same name also, anciently memorable for the Temple of Apollo. But leaping into the Sea from the top of this Promontory, such as unfortunately loved were cured of that malady: the first trial of that kind being made by Supho that famous Poetress.

At that time it was joined unto the Land; but since by the violence of the Sea or the hand of man, it is made into an Island; according unto that of Ovid,

Leucada continum veteres habuere Coloni;

Nunc Frea circumstant.

That is to say,

Leucas, in former times joyn'd to the Land,

Environ'd round with Waters now doth stand. It was called Leucas, from the Whiteness of the Rock or Promontory, having before the Separation or disjunction of it been called Verisio; the chief Town of it varying with the name of the Isle and Promontory. Both Town and Island at this time is called S. Maure, taken by Bajazet the II. from the State of Venice, and by him given unto the Genus, (who do still inhabit it) at their expulsion out of Spain. 5. Nicopolis, a Colony of the Romans; of great both Wealth and Beauty in the time of S. Paul, who from hence dated his Epistle to Titus: called in that time was part of the Province of Macedon, though afterwards a distinct Province of it self. It was first built by Augustus Cæsar on a Promontory opposite unto Actium, on the other side of the Bay: that being the place where his Land Soldiers were incamped before the Naval Battle betwixt him and Mark Anthony; and was thus called either in memory of his Victory, or from a poor man and his Als whom he met here the day before. For asking the man his name, he told him that his name was Eutychus, i. e. Fortunate; and that the name of his Als was Nicor, i. e. Conquerour: which happy Omen made his Soldiers courageous and hopeful of Victory: and he in memory thereof erected here two brazen Images, the one of the Als, the other of his Master. It is now a small Village called Preveza. 6. Actium, on the Sea-shore, high unto which Augustus and Anthony fought for the Empire of the World. The Navy of the latter consisted of 500 Gallies; the former had 250 only, but those crowned with Victory: Antonius shamefully deserting his Soldiers to follow after Cleopatra, who on the very first Charge fled away for Ægypt. The Town being now ruined, the Promontory upon which it stood is called Caba di Figalo.

The Country was first peopled by Dodanim the Son of Javan, or at least by some of his Posterity coming hither from the Isle of Rhodes; whose Memory was preferred a long time in the Town of Dodona, by him, or from him, so denominated. Afterwards being parted into several Nations, and those Nations united in the common name of Epirots, it became a great and powerful Kingdom; governed by a Race of Kings descending from Pyrrhus the Son of Achilles, and continuing till the time of Pyrrhus Æchides. A man of such Courage and Magnanimity, that he did not only recover his own Kingdom, of which Cassander, had deprived his Father; but got the Kingdom of Macedon from Cassander's Children; out of which, he tried his Fortune with the Romans. Anno Mundi 3683, V. C. 471. After his death this Kingdom was shrewdly shaken by the Macedonians, and shortly after subdued by Paulus Amelinus, who, as we now said, destroyed 70 Cities hereof in one day. For desirous to satisfy his Soldiers after his Victory in Macedon, he sent unto the Epirots for ten of the principal men of every City. These he commanded to deliver up all the Gold and Silver which they had; and to that end, as he gave out, he sent certain Companies of Soldiers along with them; unto whom he gave secret Instructions, that on a day by him appointed they should fall to sack every one of the Town whereunto they were sent. A barbarous and bloody Decree, 70 Cities confederate with the Romans ruined in one day, and no fewer than 150000 Epirots made and old for Slaves. But the chief motive which induced him to so great a Cruelty was, by dispoiling this Country, lying with a long and fair Sea-coast over against Italy, to give the Romans opportunity to land their Armies without any Resistance for the farther Progress of their Forces into Macedonia, Thrace, Asia, or where else they pleased. Which ungodly Policy was afterwards imitated by William the Conqueror, who laid wait all that part of Hampshire, since called New Forest, and therein 36 Parishes Churches, that he might have a safe Landing-place for his Norman Forces, if the English should at any time endeavour to make head against him. Being made subject to the Romans, it was a while part of the Province of Macedonia; but afterwards, when Macedonia was made a Diocese, it became a distinct Province of its self, called by the name of Old Epirus, to difference it from the Province of New Epirus, which lay Eastwards of it. At the Division of the Empire it belonged to the Constantinopolitans, and so continued till the taking of Constantinople by the Western Christians: at what time Theodoros Angelus, a Prince of the Imperial Family, seized on Aetolia and Epirus, as before was said, and sped so well in his Designs, that he took the strong City of Durazzo from the State of Venice, (to whom it fell in the division of that Spoil) and cunningly (if not treacherously) intercepted Peter the third Emperour of the Latins, whom, as some say, he caused to be Murdered at a Banquet. After his death, his whole Estate being divided into two parts, Aetolia with that part hereof which is called Chaonia, continued in his House till the time of Charles Prince of Aetolia and Epirus spoken of before, after whose death it was subdued by Amurath the Second, as before was said. The residue hereof, together with that part of Macedonia which is called Albania, fell to the Family of the Castriots: the last of which, named John, (the Father of Scanderbeg) seeing himself unable to resist that Tyrant, who had already swallowed up all his Neighbour-princes, submitted his Estate unto him, and gave unto him all his Sons for Hostages. No sooner was the old Prince dead, but Amurath seized on his Estate, murdered his three Eldest Sons, and caused George, the youngest to be traid up in the Law of Mahomet: who afterwards, escaping out of his Power and recovering all his Father's Countries, assumed also the Style or Title of Prince of Epirus. After whose death, his Children, not being able to make good their Game, lost it to Mahomet the Great; as shall be shewn more fully in the Story and Description of Albania, which is next to follow.

4. ALBANIA.

ALBANIA is bounded on the East with Macedonia on the West with the Adriatick, on the North with Sclavonia, on the South with Epirus. The Country is mountainous and barren; watered with few Rivers, and those of no great note amongst the Ancients; as 1. Lous, 2. Alpis, 2. Panyasus, 4. Colydum: all of them falling into the Adriatick.

It took this name from the Albani, once the Inhabitants of this Tract, from whom the chief City hereof was called Albanopolis. Other Towns of most consideration are, 1. Sferigrade, or Vesfigard, (called by some the Holy City) situate in the Borders of Epirus, on the top of an Hill, where it is fenced about like an Eagle's Nest: one of the last Towns in all this Country which was taken by Scanderbeg at his recovery of his Birthright and Estate herein, but being once taken by him, held good courageously against the Turk, the Soldiers neither fainting in their Oppositions, nor corrupted by Money, till at the last subdued by a Superstition. There was in the Town one only Well, into which a treacherous Christian cast a dead Dog, at the sight of which, being the next day drawn up, the Soldiers gave up the Town; being so unseasonably superstitious, that no perfusion, nor the example of the Captain or the Burgo-masters, could make them drink those (as they thought) defiled waters. 3. Durazzo, a Town of great strength, first called Epidamnus, and afterwards Dyrrhacium. Under the Walls of which Town was the first bickering between the Soldiers of Caesar and Pompey, not only to the present Loss, but also the utter Discomiture of Caesar, as he himself confessed, if the Eneine Captain had known how to have overcome. I must not omit the Valour of Scava at this Siege, who alone so long resisted Pompey's Army, that he had 220 Darts sticking in his Shield, and lost one of his Eyes; and yet gave not over till Caesar came to his Relief.

Parque moum Fortuna videt concurrere, Bellum Aque Virum— desjausque ferens in Pectore Sydonem. Fortune beholds an unaccommod'd Sight, An Army and a man together fight, Whole breast a Wood of Arrows covered quite, In the Division of the Eastern Empire amongst the Latines it fell into the power of Venice; taken at last after a long and tedious Siege, by Amurath the second, Anno 1474. 4. Dibra, in the Hill-Countries, near Epirus; the first Town which submitted to the Valiant Scanderbeg at his revolting from the Turks; supposed to be the Debris of Ptolemy. 5. Croia, conceived to be the Epicuria of Ptolemy, the chief Town of all this Country feared amongst inaccessible Mountains, and made impregnable by Art: not got by Scanderbeg, but by a Wiley, who, having got into his power, the Secretary of the principal Bajis, forced him to write Letters in his Master's name unto the Governour hereof, to deliver it unto him, which was done accordingly. Afterwards it was in vain besieged by Amurath the second, who under the Walls hereof gave up his wretched Soul to the Devil; and thrice besieged by Mahomet his Son and Successor, before he could again possess it, but taken at the last after Scanderbeg's death, as if the genius or Tutelar Deity of the place had departed with him. 6. Petrela, a Town of great strength, seated on the Top of an Hill (as almost all the Towns of Albania are) about 25 miles from Croia delivered unto Scanderbeg at his first sitting down before it: as also was 7. Pera Alba, three miles from Petrela, near the Borders of Macedonia, and situate like the other on the top of a Mountain, the River Emathus running under the bottom of it. 8. Strelusa, fifty miles from Croia, built on the top of an high Hill in the middle of a pleasant and fruitful Valley, with great and spacious Plains about it. 9. Dagna or Dama, a place of great importance in the Hill-Country towards Sclavonia, for the possession whereof rose a War betwixt Scanderbeg and the State of Venice, but the Venetians, being worsted at the Battel of Drino, relinquished their Pretensions to it. 10. Aulon, a Port-Town, now called Valona, situate over gainst Hydruntum or Otranto in Italy, distant from it about 60 miles. The Town is unwalled but fortified with a very strong Castle: Town unfortunately fit for the invasion of Italy, and was accordingly made use by Achmetes the chief Bajis under Mahomet the Great, who from hence passed his Army over into Apulia, took the Town of Otranto, and had not the death of Mahomet, and the Combinations, thereon following amongst the Turks, altered the design, might have opened them a very fair way for the adding of Rome unto Constantinople. 11. Apollonia, a Town of great note in the time of the Romans; a Sea-Town, furnished with a commodious Haven, which they held as their Entrance into Greece; to that purpose serving them as conveniently as Calais did the English in their Wars with France.

This

This Country anciently was a part of Macedonia, inhabited by the Talauri, Alfrai and Albania, from which last (but not till their latter times) it had the name of Albania but whether these Albani were a Colony of the Albanians of Asia, (though it be very probable) I determine not. When it was made a Province of the Empire it contained all Prevalitana and some part of Macedonia Salutaris; being under the Diocese of Dacia in the time of Justinian, but at first of Macedonia. Dismembered from the main Body of it when the Latines had subdued Constantinople, it fell unto the noble Family of the Castriots, who, though they took unto themselves the Title of Kings or Princes of Epirus, (most of which they held) as the Country of more Note and Eminence, yet was Albania the greatest Strength, and Croia the chief City thereof, the Seat of their Residences: they being called in that respect by some of the Writers the Kings of Albania. John Castriot, the Father of Scanderbeg, seeing himself unable to resist the Turks, became their Homager, and delivered four Sons for Hostages; whom Amurath the second in their Father's life time caused to be circumcised, and turn Mahometans: and after his decease murdered the three eldest, and seized upon Croia the chief City, with the rest of the Country. But George, the youngest of those Sons, being reserved for better Fortunes, was carefully brought up by Amurath (who somewhat passionately affected him) in the Stratagems of War, though some of his Courtiers then told him that he nourished a Serpent in his Bosom, which would one day sting him. Amurath, to make trial of his Disposition, offered him on a time the Crown of Albania: to which he prudently replied, that he preferred the honour of his Service before all the Kingdoms of the World; and that he held his hand fitter for a Sword, than his Head for a Crown. Satisfied with which Answer, the Tyrant preferred him to the place of a Sanczak, or Provincial Governour, and gave him some office of Command in all those Armies which he set out against the Christians, Escaping out of the Battel wherein Caranben, the great Bajis, was overthrown and taken Prisoner by Humides, he got the Town of Croia by a piece of wit, as before was said; and in a very short time after made himself Master of Petrela, Pera, Alba, Strelusa, and all the rest of the Country, by the reputation and terror of his first Success. Having recovered his Inheritance out of the hands of the Turks, he reconciled himself to the Church of Christ, flying himself the Soldier of CHRIST JESUS from that time forwards. Invaded by a vast Army of Turks, he overcame Aly Basha, and kills 20000 of his men, with no more than 20 Horse and 50 foot he assaileth Mustapha in his Camp; in which 5000 Turks were slain, and 300 taken. With whom encountering not long after in the open Field, he slew 10000 of his men, took many prisoners, and Mustapha himself amongst the rest, whom he ransomed for 25000 Ducats. Falling upon the Host of Amurath, then besieging Croia, he killed Feris Basha home, who succeeded Amurath, vanquished Idia the great Took 20 of his fairest Ensigns, and slew 30000 of his Soldiers. Not to instance in the rest of his noble Actions, it is reported that in the course of his War against the hands; using a Turkish Scimitar in all his Fights, of great weight and bigness. Which when Mahomet on a Peace between them had desired to see, and afterwards returned again with this Censure of it, that he saw nothing in it sweeter, than the Virtue of the Weapon depended on the Strength of his Arm, which he could not send him, for that he did reserve it for the death of his Enemies. Finally, having held his Cards against Amurath and Mahomet, two most fortunate Gamblers, for the space of 24 years, he set upon his Rest at last a Winner, dying in Peace at Lissa, then was there honourably interred. At the taking of which aged up by them, not in spite, but honour; that man accounting himself happy who could get any of his Bones to pre-him a Relick, supposing that as long as he had it about him he should be invincible. But with him died the Liberty of his Country also, not long after subdued by the Turks, and made a Province of that Empire, as it still continueth: the name of Albania being by them extended over all Epirus, and so much of Dalmatia also as is under their power. The Arms of this Kingdom (or rather of the Kings thereof) were Gules, an Eagle Sable.

5. MACEDONIA.

MACEDONIA is bounded on the East with the Agæan Sea, on the West with Albania, on the North with Mæsia Superior and a part of Thracia, and on the South with Epirus and Achaia.

It was first called Amonia, from Mount Hæmus, which fluteth up that side hereof which is towards Mæsia; after Emathia, or Enathia, from a King of it called Emathus; Macedonia, from Macedo, the Son of Dendacion, and the Father of Caranus, the first King of the Line of Alexander; and finally Kittion, or the Land of Kehim, whereof see 1. Maccab 1. 1. and 8. 5. from Kittim the Son of Javan; and Grandchild of Japhet; who was planted here. Anciently it was of more large extent than it is at the present, extending from the Agæan Sea unto the Adriatick, till the taking of Albania out of it, which hath straitened it upon that side, but the rest is as formerly.

The Country taking it together, is very fruitful and pleasant, though on the outward parts thereof begin with rough Mountains and thick forests: in former times much celebrated for its Mines of Gold and Silver, which are long since exhausted. It contained formerly the Provinces of Emathia, Pieria, Pelagonia, Hyccaria, Phibiotia, Thestalie, Mysdonia, Amphaxitia, Paraxia, Edonia, and many others of less note, inhabited by 152 several Nations: now principally divided (besides Albania) into, 1. Thestalie, 2. Macedonia specially so called, and 3. Mysdonia, which the Turks call Jambuli.

1. THESSALIE hath on the East the Agæan Sea, on the West Albania, on the North Macedonia, and Mysdonia, on the South Achaia. A sweet and delectable Country it is, the Pleasures and Delights whereof inclined the People to be very effeminate and dissolute in their course of life, made them in love with Luxury and Ease, and much like the Persians in Behaviour, whose Entrance into Greece they did therefore favour. Yet notwithstanding this Debauchedness, they were esteemed the best Horfemen of all the Grecians: by their excellent managing of which creature, (as if they had been one piece with it, and either lent the Horse their Minds, or borrowed his Body) they gave occasion unto the fiction of the Centaurs, half Men, half Beasts.

It is now called Comelitaris, and of old was very famous for many things, especially 1. for the Hill Olympus of so great height, that it seemeth to transcend the Clouds and is therefore frequently by the Poets used for Heaven itself. 2. For the Hill Othrys, inhabited by the Lapithæ, Pelion and Ossa, the Dwelling-places of the Centaurs, who, intending to ravish Hippodamia, the new Bride of Pirithous, on her Wedding-day, were slain by Hercules and and the Lapithe. 4. For the delectable Valley of Tempe situate betwixt Offa and Olympus, extending in length six miles, and five in breadth; so beautified with Nature's Gifts, that it was supposed to be the Garden of the Muses. 5. and lastly, For the Dolopes and Myrmidones, (who did here inhabit) over whom Achilles had Command at the Siege of Troy; the last, by reason that they were a laborious and thrifty People, being eulogized by the Poets to have first been Emmets, transformed into men at the Prayer of Æacum, when, he wanted Soldiers.

— Mores quos ante tenebant

Nunc quos; habent; parvum genus est, patiensq; laborum Quæstique tenax, & quod quæsitæ reserret.

The custom they of Emmets still retain,
A sipping Folk, and unto Labour set,
Strangely addicted to all kind of Gain,
And wary Keepers of what e're they get.

Places of most observation in it are, 1. Tricca, the Epitaphial See of Heliodorus, the Author of that ingenious Piece called the Æthiopick History; which he so prized, that he chose rather to loose his Bishoprick than consent to the burning of his Book; which a Provincial Synod had adjudged to the Fire. A Piece indeed of rare Contexture and neat Contrivances, without any touch of loose or lascivious Language; honest and chaste Affection being the Subject of it, not such as old or modern Poets threw us in their Comedies or other Poems. For here we have no Incestuous mixture of Fathers and Daughters, no Pandarism of old Nurses, no unseemly Action specified where heat of Blood and Opportunity do meet; nor indeed any one passage unworthy of the chastest Ear. 2. Lamia, where the Athenians, after the death of Alexander, hoping to recover their Freedoms, besieged Antipater; which was the last honorable Enterprize undertaken by that great and renowned City, known in old Histories by the name of Bellum Laniacum. 3. Larissa, situate on the South of Demetrius, but on the same Bay memorable for the Birth of Achilles, from hence called frequently in the Poets Larissæum Achilles, which Birth of his is ascribed by others to the Town of Phibia, (from whence the Region called Phibiatis takes the nomination) frequently mentioned in the Poets upon that account: and possibly, being neighbouring Cities, the one might be the place of his Birth, and the other of his Habitation. 4. Demetrias, situate on the Bay called Sinus Pelasgicus, (now Golfo dell' Armiro) of very great strength by Art and Nature. Which being held by the Macedonians, together with Chalcis in the life of Eubœa, and the City of Corinth, kept all Greece in aw, and were therefore commonly called the Fetters of Greece; the Græcians never thinking themselves at liberty till those Towns were dismantled by the Romans. 5. Pharbalum, nigh to which was fought the great Battle betwixt Cæsar and Pompey for the Sovereignty of the Roman Empire. A Battle more famous than bloody, 6000 only of 30000 which were in the Field on both sides, being therein slain. A Battle before which the Pompeians were in such a miserable Security, that some of them contended for the chief Priesthood, which was Cæsar's Office: others disposed of the Consulship and Preferrments in the City of Rome; Pompey himself being so wretched, that he neither considered into what place it were best to fly if he lost the day, or by what means he might provide for his own Safety, and end the Wars as if the War had been made against some ignoble Enemy, and not against that Cæsar who had taken 1000 Towns, conquered 300 Nations, took prisoners one million of men, and slain as many. 6. Philippi, so named from Philip the Macedonian, the first Founder of it, situate in the farther part of the same Plains of Pharbalia, and famous for as memorable a Battle as that before, and of no less consequence:

that namely betwixt Augustus and M. Antonius on the one side, against Brutus and Cassius on the other; these latter being rather overcome by Chance than Valour. For either of them (thinking the other vanquished) flew himself in the Fields; being the two last that ever openly stood out for the common Liberty, and are therefore called by Cremutius Cordus Ultimi Romanorum, or the last of the true Roman Spirits. 7. Gomphi, a very ancient City bordering on Epirus. 8. Thera, in which City Alexander the Tyrant reigned, against whom that noble Captain Pelidas the Theban fighting was slain in Battle: the Tyrant being not long after murdered by his Wife's Brother, and by that means all Theffaly recovering liberty. 9. Pegafa, or Pagafa, situate on the Bay called Sinus Pelasgicus which from hence is sometimes named Pelasgicus; in which the Ship called Argo was said to be built, so famous for the renowned Voyage of the Argonauts. The Hill Pelion spoken of before is not far from hence. 10. Pythion, or Pitheum, of great note (according to some) for the Thybian Games there celebrated in the honour of Apollo, who hereabouts killed the Serpent Python: the Conquerors in which Games were crowned at the first only with an Oaken Garland, but afterwards with one of Lawrlor. Of which thus the Poet.

Instituit sacros celebri certamine ludos,*

Pythia de domiti Sæpientis nomine dictus, &c.

Thus made to speak English by G. Sandys;

Then left the well-derived memory

Of such an Act in future time should die,

He instituted the so-famous Games

Of free Contention, which the Pythias names,

Who Ran, who Wreathed best, or rak'd the ground

With swift Wheelless, the Oaken Garland crown'd.

These Games, together with the Olympick, Isthmian and Nemean, spoken of before, made the four annual Meetings amongst the Græcians, renowned for the universal Concourse of the noblest spirits. 11. Doliche, which, together with Pythium, and 12. Azorum, another City of this Tract, standing near together, are called in Livius the Historian by the name of Triopolis. 13. Hypata, the Metropolis of Theffaly, so called by Heliodorus in his Æthiopick History before mentioned, who placeth it near the Bay called Sinus Maliacus, now Golfo di Zium and not far from Mount Oeta, bordering on the Province of Doris: upon which Mountain Hercules, being tortured with a poisoned Shirt sent by his innocent Wife Dejanira, is said to have burned himself; thence called Hercules Gateus. Of all which Towns, Lamia, Pagafa and Ormetrinus, are in the Region called Phibiatis; Larissa, Doliche, Pythium and Azorum, in that called Pelasgia; Gomphi and Tricca in Isthiotis; the rest in Theffaly properly and specially so named.

This Country, at first called Æmonia afterwards Pelagias, then Pyrhaea, from Pyrha the Wife of Demetrius, and finally Theffalia, from Theffalus one of the Companions of Hercules; by Pliny is called Dryopis, Ephiat by Strabo, Pelagias by Diadotus, and by Homæ Argos; being name of some chief City or particular Province being figuratively used for the whole. It was divided commonly into four parts, 1. Theffaliotis, 2. Isthiotis, 3. Pelagiotis, and 4. Phibiotis, the name of Theffalia, or Theffalotis in the end prevailing; and accordingly distributed into several Governments, united finally in the person of Philip, the Father of Alexander, who partly by Force, but specially by Art and Practice, made himself Master of the whole. Continuing in a mixt condition betwixt free and subject under the Macedonian Kings of the 2. Race, it became subject with that Kingdom to the state of Rome; first reckoned as a part of the Province of Macedon; after a Province of it self, when Macedon was made a Diocese, part of which it was. But from a Province of that Diocese, and a Member of the Eastern Empire, it was made a Kingdom; given with that Title to Eusebius Marquis of Montserrat in exchange for Caesarea, together with the City of Theffalonica, and some part of Peloponnesus, at the Division of that Empire amongst the Latines; which Title he affected, in regard that Reiner, the Brother of Boniface his Grandfather, had formerly been whose Daughter Cyri-Maria (or the Lady Mary) he had took to Wife: In him as it began, so this Title ended; Theffalonica falling to the State of Venice, Theffaly reverting to the Empire when the Greeks recovered it: from whom it was subdued, and added to the Turkish Empire, in the Reign of Amurath the second, Anno 1432.

2. MACEDON specially so called is bounded on the East with Mygdonia, on the West with Albania, on the North with Mount Hæmus, on the South with Theffaly. The Country is for the most part fruitful as before was said, but not surfeiting with Delights as to make the people wanton or effeminate in their course of life; they being naturally good Soldiers, exact observers of military Discipline, and inured to Hardness, which their many signal Victories do most clearly evidence both in Greece and Asia.

The Greeks in the pride of their own wits reckoned them amongst the barbarous Nations; and yet, by a strange kind of contradiction, ascribe unto their Country the Seats of the Muses. For in this Country was Mount Pimpla, with a Fountain of the same name at the Foot thereof, both consecrated to the Muses, from hence called Pimplides. Here also was the Hill Lubastrus, and the Province of Pieria; from whence the Muses had the names of Libethriades and Pierides; by this last called more frequently than by any other name whatever, especially by the Greeks themselves. But the Birth of Aristotle in this Country doth more convince the Græcians of this foolish Arrogance than all the Muses in the world. A man so admirable in the general course of Learning, so universally comprehensive of all Arts and Sciences, that the best witted Græcians might have been his Scholars, and thought it Children to be tutored by him.

The principal Rivers hereof (besides Erigon and Alacmon spoken of before) are, 1. Asius, at present called Vardari, rising out of the Hills Scardus, a Branch of Mount Hæmus, and passing through the whole extent of this Country into Sinus Thermaicus; or the Gulf of Theffalonica as it is now named: the fairest River of these parts; and of sweetest water; but such as maketh all the Cattle black which drink of it. 2. Chabrus, 3. Echedorus; both rising out of the mid-land Countries, and both falling into the same Bay also. Besides which there are other three fair and capacious Bays ascribed to Macedon, though two of them belonging properly to Mygdonia; that is to say, Sigeticus, now Golfo di monte santo, and Toronacis, now the Gulf or Bay of Aioniana, and the third common to Thrace also, which is Sinus Strymonicus, now the Bay of Comela.

Towns of most observation in it, according to the several Regions and parts hereof, were for the Alonops; 1. Horna, called afterwards Selenia; 2. Europus, of which name there were four in Macedon; 3. Aspladus, Of Simica, 4. Trifolus, 5. Paracopolis, 6. Garijura, there being many others of that name in Greece. In Edonis, bordering toward Thrace, 8. Sotijia, 9. Berga, 10. Am- phipolis, on the River Strymon, with which it is encompassed, whence it had the name; seated so close on the edge of Thrace, that it is questionable to which of them it belongs of right; once garrisoned by the Athenians, and from them taken by Philip the Macedonian, in the first and rise of his Fortunes. 11. Crenides, bordering on Thrace also, and by some Writers laid unto it; but I think erroneously: repaired and beautified by Philip before mentioned; by whom it was called Philippi; and situate in a Country so rich in mines of Gold, that the said Philip drew hence yearly 10000 Talents, which make 600000 French Crowns or 140000 l. of our English money. Afterwards made a Roman Colony, and accounted the chief City of Macedonia, as appeareth Act. 16. 12. to the People of which S. Paul wrote one of his Epistles. Next in Æmethia we have 12. Tyrissa in the Mid-lands, bordering upon Theffalia; now called Ceresi, 13. Adipsa, called afterwards Jegæa, and now Vodena; the first Town of all this Country taken by Caranus, the Founder of the first Race of the Kings of Macedon. 14. Berea, on Sinus Thermaicus, honoured with the preaching of Paul and Silas; the Citizens whereof by S. Luke commended for their readiness in receiving the Gospel. 15. Pella, on the same Bay also; the Birth-place of Alexander the Great, from hence called Juvænis Pellæus. 16. Pydna, upon the same Bay, at the Influx of the River Alacmon; in which Cassander besieged and took the Olympian the Mother, Roxane the Wife, and Alexander the Heir apparent of Alexander, all whom he barbarously murdered. This Cruelty he committed, partly to revenge himself of Alexander, who had once knocked his head and the Wall together, and partly to cry quit with Olympus, who had before as cruelly murdered Aridæus the base Son of Philip and Eurydice his Wife, with whom Cassander was supposed to be over-familiar. Memorable also is this Town for the great Battle fought near it betwixt Perseus the last King of Macedon and P. Æmilius the Consul, in which Perseus having humbly deserted his Army, lost both the Battle and his Kingdom, with no less than 20000 of his foot, which were therein slain; the Romans having so cheap a Victory, that it cost them not above an hundred or sixscore men. 17. Dium, not far from the Hill Olympus, and about a mile from the Sea, of which mile the River Helicon, becoming there a Lake, and called Bæphyrus, taketh up one half. It is situate in the Borders towards Theffalia; the way unto it out of Tempe being straight and narrow, and almost impassable, by reason of the Spurs of the Mountains running overthwart it; which, had it been well defended by the Macedonians, would have kept their Country from the Romans, who that way attempted. But Perseus hearing that the Enemy had got into Tempe, only took care to get his treasure out of Dium, and so abandoned both the Passage and the Town together. 18. Phylace, more within the Land; as is 19. Eribæa. But these four last are in that part hereof which is called Pieria.

3. MYGDONIA hath on the East the Ægean Sea, on the West Macedon properly and especially so called, on the North Edonis and Sinus Strymonicus, on the South Sinus Thermaicus, or the Gulf of Theffalonica; so that it is almost a Peninsula, environed on three sides with Water.

Here is in this Country the Hill Actos, standing in a Peninsula, (the Isthmus being once cut through by Xerxes but since closed again) laid to be 70 miles in circuit, 3 days journey long, half a day's in breadth, resembling the shape of a Man lying with his Face upwards: the highest point whereof, covered perpetually with Snow, is said to cast a Shadow as far as Lemnos. It is exceeding fruitful both in Grains, Fruit, Oil, and Wine, and wondrous plentiful in Hares, according to that of Ovid.

Quot Lepores Atho, quot Apres palantur in Hybla.
How many Hares on Athos feed,
What swarms of Bees on Hybla breed?

It is inhabited only by Greek Monks, whom they call Caliores, of the order of S. Basil, to whom the Hill commonly called the Holy Mountain, hath been long since dedicated: the place being so privileged by the Grand Seigneur, that neither Turk, nor Gracian may inhabit in it, except such Gracians only as profess this life. Of these there are about 6000, dispersed in 42 Monasteries, built after a military manner, for fear of Thieves and Pirates, wherewith they were much infested in times past: frequented with great Concourse of People coming thither to behold and adore some Reliques, (for which they are of much esteem;) the free Oblations of those Pilgrims, and some Benevolence from the Turks, which do much respect them, being the chief means of their Subsistence. The manner of their life is like that of the ancient Eremites: poorly clad, their Shirts of Woollen, which they both spin and weave themselves; none of them idle at any time, doing fill somewhat for their Livelihood, and the advancement of the House of which they are, as dressing fynes, felling Timber, yea and building Ships. Few of them give themselves to Study, and some of them are of too gross an Ignorance, that they can neither write nor read. They are bound by their Order to lodge and entertain such Strangers as have occasion to pass that way, according to their rank and calling; and that of free cost too, if he be desired.

Towns of most note, according to the several Regions and parts hereof, are, for Argydenia specially and properly so called, 1. Antigonia, so called from Antigonus a King of Macedon, the first Founder of it. 2. Xylopolis. 3. Terpilius. 4. Phlyco. 5. Afforus; all mentioned by Ptolemy, but not else observable. 6. Apollonia, for distinction sake called Apollonia Mygdonia, to difference it from Apollonia in Albania, then a part of Macedon: famous for the Studies of Angustus Cesar, who here learned the Greek Tongue. For Amphaxitris, there was 7. Aretusfa; 8. Sagaria, now called Nicalidi, renowned for the Birth of Aristotle, hence named Stagiritis. 9. Thessalonica, situate on the bottom of Sinus Thermaicus, now called the Bay of Salomichi, by the name of the Town. Anciently the Metropolis or Head-City of Macedon; the Seat of the Præfatus Prætorio for Ilyricum, after the removal thereof from Sirmium; as also of the Primate of the Greek Church, who resided here. To the people of this City did S. Paul write two of his Epistles. It continued in great power and credit till the Fall of the Constantinopolitan Empire into the hands of the Latines: at which time it was bestowed first on Boniface Marquis of Montferrat, the new King of Thessaly; after whose death it fell upon the State of Venice, who held it till the year 1432, when it was forced by Amurat the 2 to become Turkish. Which notwithstanding, it still preserves the reputation of a beautiful and wealthy City, inhabited by rich Merchants, who drive here a great Trade, especially for the commodities of the Indies, for beauty, Riches and Magnificence, little inferior unto Naples: and though the Turks and Jews make the greatest number of Inhabitants, yet here are reckoned 30 Churches for the use of Christians. As for the Jews, they swarm here in such great abundance, that in this City and that of Constantinople only there are reckoned 160000 of them; but generally hated and contemned by all sorts of People. 10. Siderocapla, of old called Chryseis, remarkable for its Mines of Gold and Silver: so beneficial to the Turks, that he received hence monthly 18000, and sometimes 30000 Crowns of clara. Next for Chalcidie, there was 11. Panormus, a Port-

Town. 12. Stratonica, in the Peninsula of Mount Athos. 13. Abho or Abosfa, in the same Peninsula, with a Promontory of the same name, high which it stood. 14. Acambus, now called Erifso, on the Bay of the Holy Mountain. And finally in Paræcia we have 15. Amphipolis, 16. Torona, giving name to the Bay adjoining called anciently Sinus Toronicus, now Golfo di Afonana. 17. Cassandria, on the Sea-side, so called from Cassander King of Macedon, who repaired and beautified it; being before named Potidea. 18. Derris, 19. Merville. 20. Pallene, situate in the Cherfonese or Demil-Iland called Palæne, and by some Paladia: formerly consecrated to the Muses, but before that infamous for the War which the Giants are said to have made here against the Gods; at what time it was called Phlegra, the Fields adjoining Campi Phlegrei, in which this great Battle is supposed to be fought. The occasion of the Fable was (as both Theogenes and Endoxus do expound the fable) that the Inhabitants hereof in those elder times, being men of a most impious and insolent Life, got the name of Giants; whom when Hercules endeavoured to subdue and reduce to Reason, it happened that there fell a great Tempest of Thunder and Lightning, by which they were constrained to flee and submit themselves. Hence the Report that those Giants made War against the Gods. Others have placed these Phlegrean Fields in Thessaly, and perhaps more probably. Certain I am, that some place nearer to the Hills of Fethion, Offa and Olympus, both agree best with it: if at least Ovid were not out in his narration, who makes those Mountains to be heaped upon one another, for their better reaching to the Skies, and fighting upon even ground, as the saying is. For thus that Poet;

Afflatæ ferunt regnum caeleste Gigantes,
Altaque congestos fronsæ ad sidera Montes.
At pater omnipotens missi persequi Olympum
Fulmine, et excussis subjecerunt Pelion Olie.

Which may be Englished in these words;

The Giants once the throne of Heaven affected,
And Hills on Hills unto the Stars erected:
Till Jove with Thunder high Olympus brake,
And Pelion did from under Offa take.

But from those Fables to proceed to more real Stories. This Country was first peopled by Citium, the Son of Javan, passing over out of Asia minor; in memory whereof there was not only a Town called Citium, spoken of by Livie l. 42. but the whole Land of Macedon is in the Book of Maccabees called the Land of Cethium, i. Maccab. 1. 1. and the Inhabitants hereof called Citians in the 8. Chapter of the same Book, v. 5. Spreading in tract of time from one Sea to other, from the Ægean to the Adriatick, some Colonies of them passed from hence to Italy, and first inhabited that Country, as hath there been said. Such as continued in those parts, divided into several Tribes, as in all parts else, became in time to be united in the name of Macedons. A People not much taken notice of in former times, living a poor and painful life, Goatherds and Shepherds for the most part, scarce able to defend their own Mountains from the next invader, much less to dream of conquering either Greece or Perfia: And therefore Alexander told them, and not much unfitly, (though by him spoken in passion, and to their Disgrace) that his Father Philip had first made them Gentlemen. For Philip having learned the Rudiments of War under Epanimondas, (being then an Hostage with the Thebans) and by that means becoming acquainted with the Temper and State of Greece, not only freed his own Kingdom from the Ilyrians, Thracians, and other barbarous Nations, who had gained upon it; but taking advantage of the Factions raised amongst the Gracians, (whence he knew how to feed and cherish for his own improvement)

ment) brought them at first wholly to rely upon him, and after to be subject to him. Inasmuch that never any Monarchy had a swifter Growth, nor a more speedy Dissolution: there passing not full 40 years from the first of Philip to the last of Alexander, in which space it was both begun, perfected, and broken to pieces. For the Foundation being laid in Murder, Perjury, and Treason, as at first it was, was never likely to be blessed with a long Continuance.

Of these 24 Kings only 6 are famous viz. 1. Caranus, the first King, originally of Argos, of the Race of Hercules, and by an Oracle commanded to lead a Colony into this Country, and to follow the first Flock of Cattel he saw before him. Being here arrived in a tempestuous stormy day, he espied a Herd of Goats flying the fury of the Weather: These Goats he followed unto Aedæa, into which, by reason of the darkness of the Air, he entered undiscovered, won the Town, and in short space became Lord of all the Country. On which occasion as the Goat afterwards became the Arms and Ensign of the Kings of Macedon, so by that Beast those Kings were figuratively designed in the Holy Scripture: of which see Dan. 8. 5. 21. 2. Perdiccas, the fourth King, who at Æga built a Burial-place for all his Successors, assuring his People, that as long as their Kings were there buried his Race should never fail; and so it happened. For the Kingdom of Macedon, after the death of Alexander the Great, who was buried at Babylon, was translated to the Sons of Demetrius. 3. Europus, who in his infancy was carried in a Cradle against the Ilyrians his Enemies, and returned victorious: This the Macedons did, either because they thought they could not be beaten, their King being preserved from perishing himself, that there was none so void of Honour and Compassion as to abandon an Infant, no way able to save himself from Destruction but by the Valour and fidelity of his Servants. 4. Alexander, the Son of Amyntas, famous for a notable Exploit on the Perfian Embassadors, who, being sent from Megabyrus, requested a view of the Macedonian Ladies. No sooner were they entred, but perdiccas en Perfis conterehantibus, as Justine relateth the Story, they were called back by this Alexander, sending in their steads young Springalls maidly attired; who, upon the like Indignities offered flew these effeminate Assaus. After which he behaved himself so discreetly, that the Perfian Monarch gave him all Greece between Hæmus and Olympus. 5. Philip, Father to Alexander, who governed first as a Guardian to Amyntas, the Son of Perdiccas his elder Brother; but afterwards took unto himself both the Kingdom and Title of King; which he continued in the Deposition of his Nephew and natural Sovereign, the Murderer of the rest of his Brethren, and the Destruction of all such as opposed his practice. But, being otherwise a man of approved Abilities, he cleared his own Country of the Ilyrians, subdued Achaia, Thrace, and a great part of Peloponnesus, and was chosen general of the Greeks against the Perfians. But as soon as he had made all things ready for this expedition, he was slain by one Pausanias, a young Gentleman whom he had formerly aided in the heat of his unnatural Lust. 6. Alexander, the Son of Philip, who recovered such parts of Greece as on the death of his Father had befooled themselves with a hope of Liberty. He subdued Darius the great King of Perfia, Taxiles and Porys Kings of India founded the Monarchy of the Gracians, and in the height of his Successes was poisoned at Babylon (as it is conceived) by Cassander, one of his great Captains: his Revenue at the time of his death amounting to 300000 Talents yearly. After his death his new-got Empire was much controverted in the point of Succession, he himself dying without lawful Issue, and having at his death bequeathed it to him who was thought most worthy by his Army: and his Soldiers, according to their several affections and Relations, thought their own Leaders most deserving. At last the Title of King (and in effect nothing but the Title) was by consent of the Commanders cast on Arideus, a Bastard of Philip, to whom Perdiccas was appointed to be Protector, (for Arideus was a little crazed in his Brain) and to be General of the Army: by whose design he was also married to Eurydice, Daughter to Amyntas, whom Philip had before disposed of that Kingdom. As for the Provinces, they were assigned unto the Government of the chief Commanders, viz. Egypt to Ptolemy, Syria, to Laomedon, Cilicia to Phloras, Media, to Pytho, Cappadocia to Eumenes, Pamphylia, Lycia and Phrygia major to Antigonus, Caria to Cassander, Lydia to Menander, Pontus and Phrygia minor to Leonatus, Affria to Selenus, Perfis to Pausanias, Thrace to Lysimachus, and Macedon it self unto Antipater: the other parts of the Perfian Empire being left to them to whom whose hands they were committed in the time of Alexander. But this Division held not long: for Perdiccas being once slain by Ptolemy, and Eumenes made away by Antigonus, these two became quickly too great for the rest; Ptolemy adding Syria and Cyprus to the Kingdom of Egypt, and Antigonus bringing under his Command not only all Asia minor, but Affria, Media, and almost all the Eastern parts of the Perfian Empire. Antipater in the mean time, succeeding in the Protectorship, banished Olympias the Mother of Alexander out of Macedonia, as bearing but a Step-dame's love unto Arideus. But he being dead she returned out of Epirus, (the place of her banishment) into Macedonia, where raising a strong Party amongst the People, he put Arideus and his Wife Eurydice to death, proclaiming Alexander the Son of Alexander by Roxane, both slain not long after by Cassander the Son of Antipater, who, to make sure work, murdered also with the like Cruelty Hercules, the Son of Alexander by Bastine, (another Perfian Lady, as Roxane was) the last Survivor of that House. And so the Royal Family being rooted out, Antigonus took unto himself the Title of King: as did Selenus, who had now recovered all the Perfian Provinces beyond Euphrates. The like did Ptolemy in Egypt; and Cassander in Macedon.

The second Race of the MACEDON Kings.

- A. M.
3643 1. Cassander Son of Antipater supposed to have been the Poisoner of Alexander, rooted out the Blood-royal of Macedon. His Reign was full of Troubles and Difficulties. 19.
3667 2. Alexander and Antipater, Sons to Cassander, but.

but not well agreeing, called unto their Aid Lyfimachus and Demetrius, by whom they were both in short time murdered. 4.

3671 3. Demetrius, Son to Antigonus, the powerful King of Asia, after he had in one Battle against Selenus lost both his Father and all his Asian Dominions, settled himself in Macedon: but being there outed by Pyrrius, he fled to Selenus, and with him died. 6.

3677 4. Pyrrius, King of Epirus, was by his Soldiers, voluntarily forsaking Demetrius, made King of Macedon: but after 7 months the Soldiers revolted to Lyfimachus, as being a Macedonian born. 1.

3678 5. Lyfimachus King of Thrace, being thus made King of Macedon, was in the end vanquished and slain by Selenus, the last Survivor of Alexander's Captains. 7.

3685 6. Ceraunus, or Ptolemy Ceraunus Son to Ptolemy of Egypt, having traiterously slain his Friend and Patron Selenus, seized on Macedon: but lost it, together with his Life, unto the Gauls, who then plagued these Countreys. After whose death this Kingdom, being distracted amongst many Competitors, settled at last upon 3687 7. Antigonus Gonatus, the Son of Demetrius, who, for his Valour shewn in expelling the Gauls, was made King of Macedon. And though for a while he gave way to Pyrrius, then returning from Italy, yet after the death of Pyrrius he again recovered his Estate, but was outed once again by Alexander the Son of Pyrrius. 36.

3723 8. Demetrius II. Son of Antigonus, recovered Macedon from the power of Alexander the Son of Pyrrius. 10.

3733 9. Antigonus II. surnamed Dofon, left by Demetrius as Protector to his young Son Philip, usurped the Kingdom. He diverse times vanquished and crueld the Gracians, beginning then to cast off the Yoke of Macedon. 12.

3745 10. Philip, the Son of Demetrius. 42.

3787 11. Perseus, the Son of Philip, the last King of Macedon.

The Subversion of which Estate was first begun in the time of his Father, who had not only warred upon the Ætolians and other of the Greeks whom the Romans had taken into their Protection, but sided with Hannibal against them. Upon which grounds they sent first Titus Qu. Flaminius, on of their Consuls, by whom Philip was vanquished at the Battle of Cunefephalos, and his Kingdom made Tributary unto Rome. After which picking a Quarrel against Perseus also, managed with variable Success by Licinius, Martius, and others of their Commanders, they dispatched Paulus Æmilius with an Army into Macedon, to bring him to absolute Subjection. Who sped so well, that Macedon was made a Province of the Roman Empire, and Perseus led captive unto Rome, Anno 3789. In which Triumph, besides the Pomp of leading a Captive King in Bonds, Æmilius caused the ready Money which he brought out of Greece to be carried in 750 Vessels, every Vessel containing three Talents; which made so infinite a Sum, that the Roman people were free for many years after from all Taxes and Impositions. A. M. 3789.

Macedon, thus made a Province of the Roman Empire, and afterwards divided into three parts or Provinces, that is to say, Macedonia Prima, Macedonia Secunda or Salutaris, and Prævalitana, in the new Modell of Constantine became a Diocefe, the Diocefe hereof containing the Provinces of Crete, Asiatic, Old and New Epirus, Macedonia Prima, and the greatest part of Salutaris; the residue of Salutaris and Prævalitana (which makes up the Country now called Albania) being laid to the Diocefe of Dacia. It continued part of the Eastern Empire till towards the last fatal dissolution of it; though many times harraied and depopulated by the Salavarians, Bulgarians, Rosses, and other of the barbarous People, at their several Invasions of it. Finally, it was conquered by the Turks, first, under the Conduct of Bajazet, their fourth King, taking Nicopolis, a Town hereof bordering on Thrace, and lying North of Sinus Strimonius now the Bay of Contesa; and after under Amurath the second their sixth King, making themselves masters of Thessalonica, the chief City of it, and therewith of all the Country. By reason of which many Invasions and last Decolation by the Turks, there is scarce one of all those many Cities before mentioned now of any eminence, except Thessalonica only; the rest being miserably destroyed. And for the Country itself, it is governed by a Turkish Sanzack, under the Beglerbeg of Greece; his annual Revenue being but 8000 Crowns, nor any thing else required of him then to maintain 100 Horse in ordinary pay for defence of his Province, and to find 400 Horse on extraordinary occasions, as the Grand Seigneur shall command him.

6. T H R A C E.

THRACE hath on the East Pontus Euxinus, Propontis, and the Hælefont, on the West Mædon, on the North the Hill Hæmus, on the South the Ægean Sea and part of Mædon. It is a very large and goodly Province, extending 20 days journey in length, and 7 days journey in breadth, and in relation to the Heavens, reaching unto the 44. Degree of the Northern Latitude; so that the longest Day in Summer is about 15 hours, three quarters.

By several men, according to the times they lived in, it hath been called by divers names: by Sithaphan Asia, by Suidas Odrisia, by Lycophron Cretosmia, by some Writers, Scythia by Josephus the Hebrew Thyras. But generally it is called Thrace, or Thracia, and that, as some from Thras the Son of Mars, as others, from Thracian, an Inchantress: more probably from the Ferity and barbarous condition of the first Inhabitants, the name in the Original Greek bearing that construction: most likely from Thyras, the Son of Japhet, who first planted here, in memory of whom it did retain the name of Thyras in the time of Josephus; besides many other footsteps and remembrances of him in the names of many of their Towns, and some of their Princes; of which we have already spoken in our general Preface. Finally, by the Turks it is called Romania; either from the many Roman Colonies which were planted here, or because Constantinople, the chief City of it, was anciently called Novæ Roma: and by that name it is now called in most modern Writers.

The Country generally is neither of a rich Soil nor a pleasant Air: the Corn and other Fruits, by reason of the coldness of the Climate, leisurely ripening; the Vines yielding more Shade than Juice, and the Trees for the most part more Leaves than Fruit: yet in some parts there be many large and goodly Plains, where they reap good floor of Corn, but of Pulse especially; and towards the Sea-side they have plenty of Wine, which Pliny much commended both for strength and goodness.

The People anciently were very bold and valiant, and called by some Avoripus, because every man was a Law to himself. So that it was truly said by Herodotus, that if they had either been all of one mind, or under one King, they they had been invincible: Of Manners they were rude and savage somewhat near to Brutishness; buying their Wives, and selling both their Sons and Daughters, as in open Market: in that since imitated by the Turks, who possess their Country. The men were more courageous than comely, wearing Cloaths according to their Conditions ragged and unfeemly. The Married-woman were in love to their Husbands so constant, that they willingly sacrificed themselves at their Funerals. The Virgins were bestowed not by their own Parents, but the common Fathers of their Cities. Such as brought neither Beauty nor Virtue for their Dowry, were put off according to their Money; most times sold as other Cattel in the Markets. In matters of Religion they worship Mars, Bacchus, Diana, Mercury, as did other Gentiles: swearing especially by the first, from whom they bragged themselves to have been descended. But their chief national Deity was one Zanoxes, sometimes a Native of this Country, who, having been brought up under Pythagoras, and returning home, prescribed them good and wholesome Laws; assuring them that, if they did observe the same, they should go unto a place when they left this World in which they should enjoy all manner of Pleasure and contentment. By this means having gotten some opinion of a Divinity amongst them, he abetted himself; and after was worshipped as their God. Upon these Principles, when any one was born amongst them, his Parents and other Friends, sitting round about him, lamented bitterly his coming into the World, ripping up all the Miseries and Afflictions whereto he was to be exposed in this present Life, and deplored his condition as absolutely miserable and unhappy. But, on the contrary, when any one chanced to die, they buried him with all Joy and Alacrity, highly rejoicing that by this means he was freed from the Crocicks and Disasters of this wretched world. Which is expressed thus bricly (after his wonted manner) by my Author, Lugentur Pierperia; natique defensor; Emera contra Festis sors; et cunctis Sacra canu iugis celebrantur. A Piece of such fond and orthodox Divinity, that I wonder how they hit upon it in those times of Darkness; and favouring very much of the Primitive Pity, by which the Obits of the Saints were kept as Festivals, no notice being taken of the day of their Births. According to that of the good old Writer, Non Nativitatem sed Mortem, Sanctorum Ecclesiæ pretiosam & sanctam judicant.

Here lived the Tyrant Polymestor, who villanously murdered Polydorus, a young son of Præmians: for which fact Hecuba, the young Prince's Mother, scratched him to death. Here also lived the Tyrant Tereus, of whom before in Phœcia: and Diomedes, who, using to feed his Horses with Man's flesh, was slain by Hercules, and cast unto his Horses. And, finally, here reigned King Corys, of rare Temper both in maitering and preventing Passion. For when a Neighbour Prince had sent him a Present of Glasse of the purest Metal, and no less accurate in the Workmanship or Fashion of them, (having dispatched the Messenger with all the due Complements of Majesty and Gratitude) he broke them all to pieces; left if by mishap any of his Servants should do the like, he might be stirred to an intemperate Choler.

Chief Mountains in this Country, besides Hæmus spoken of already, are 1. Rhodge, the highest next Mount Hæmus in those parts of the World; craggy and rough, and the Top thereof continually white with Snow: memorable for the Fate and Fable of Orpheus, who in a melancholic humour (having lost his Wife) betook himself to these Mountains, where with his Music he affected both Woods and Beasts, who are said to have danced unto his Music: from this place of his Abode called Rhodopis, from his Country Thracian, Non me carminibus vincit nec Thracius Orpheus, &c. as the Shepherd boasteth in the Poet. The truth is that he was a man of an heavenly Muse, and by his Dictates and good Council, laid down in Verse, first of all civilized this People, and weaned them by degrees from their Betaility. Hence the occasion of the Fable. But for Mount Rhodge it self, it is in the middle of this Country, thwarting it from Mount Hæmus towards the West; which, with the Spurs and Branches of it, and the Plains adjoining, lying betwixt the River Nessus on the West, and Alas or Niger on the East, made up that Province of the Empire called Rhodge, by the name of the Mountain. 2. Pangæus, rich in Mines of Silver. 3. Melapus, shooting towards the Sea, full of Rocks and Cliffs. And 4. Orbelus, lying towards Macedon, where there is a little Region from hence called Orbelia.

Principal Rivers hereof, besides Strymon (spoken of before), the Boundary in some places betwixt this and Mædon, are, 1. Nessus, by the Gracians now called Æstro, by the Turks Charafon, which rising out of Mount Hæmus, falleth into the Sea near the Isle of Thessia. 2. Athyra, in which name the memory of Thyras the Son of Japhet seems to be preserved; which, rising in Mount Hæmus also, loseth it self in the Propontis; as doth 3. Bathynius, another River rising from the same Mount Hæmus. 4. Hebrus, the most noted River of all this Country, rising out of Rhodge, and falling into the Ægean near the Isle of Samos: whence a River of so slow a Course, that it is not easy to discern which way it goeth; but memorable in the Poets for the Fate of Orpheus, who, being thrown into it by the Thracian Women, had his Limbs thrown into it by those Furies. 5. Thermod good against the Scab both in man and beast, issuing out of 30 Fountains, some hot, some cold; with the pleasantness of whole Waters. Darius the King of Perfia was so delighted; that he erected a Pillar in honour of it.

The chief Towns were, 1. Abdera, now called Prosylo, situate not far from the Fall of the River Nessus into the Ægean; the Birth-place of Democritus, who spent his whole Life in laughing at the Follies of others. 2. Perrida, of old a Colony of Abdera, from whom it revolted, and submitted to the State of Corinth. But the Abderians, not enduring the Altrant, beleaguered it, and after two years Siege, and the expence of 2000 Talent, could not recover it again but on Composition: 3. Ænos, on the Ægean Sea; a Town of great Strength and Safety; and therefore used by the latter Constantinopolitan Emperours for the securing of great persons. For hitler Michael Palæologus sent Jambates, the Turkish Sultan, flying to him for Aid; and hitler Mahomet the Great, Demetrius, Prince of Poloponnesus, when he yielded up his Country to him: both under colour of providing for their ease and Safety; but in plain terms to keep them in honourable Prisons. 3. Lyfimachia, on the Sea-shore; once of great importance, built by Lyfimachus, who after Alexander's death laid hands on this Country: afterwards garisoned by Philip the Father of Perseus, on the withdrawing of whose Forces, for some other Service it was taken and raised to the ground by the barbarous Thracians, and all the People of it carried into Captivity; but by Antiochus the Great re-edified and new-peopled again, moved thereunto by the convenient situation and former glories of the place. 5. Philippopolis, so called from Philip King of Macedon, the Father of Alexander, who built and fortified it as Abride to hold in the Thracians; called also Trimonium, from three Hills on which it was situate: beautified in the time of the Romans, with a goodly Amphitheatre, continuing entire and whole till this these latter days, and might have lasted longer by many Ages did not the Turks daily take away the Stones thereof, which are all of Marble, to make money of them. Here are also many other ancient Monuments, though the Town be much wasted and destroyed, the Seylions at one time killing in it above 100000 persons: which notwithstanding it is populous and well-frequented by reason of the convenient situation of it on the River Hæbrus, which they now call Mariza. 6. Trajanopolis, so called from the Emperor Trajan, by whom it was either founded or repaired; indifferently well-peopled, and still preserving its old name. 7. Selymbria, on the Coast of the Propontic Sea; beautified with a commodious Port for recit of small Vessels, and many Bays adjoining capable of greater: by Ptolemy called Selybria, and Olybria by Strabo: 8. Asopolonia, upon Pontus Euxinus or the Black Sea, now Sissopolis. 9. Phinopolis, on the same Sea also. 10. Nicopolis at the foot of the Mount Hæmus, there being another of that name near the River Nessus. 11. Perinthus on the Propontic Sea, near the influx of the River Asius. A Town of great note in the ancient Builings of Greece; of great strength, and peopled formerly with men of such resolutions, that they maintained their Liberty against Philip of Macedon, after almost all the rest of Thrace had submitted to him. 12. Hærulea, at first a Colony of the Thebans; and afterwards of much request in the time of the Romans, as being beautified with the Palaces of Vespasian, Domitian, and Antoninus, Emperours of Rome, as also with an Amphitheatre cut out of one entire Marble, and accounted one of the World's seven Wonders; and, finally, made the Metropolitan City of the Province of Europe, one of the Provinces of the Diocese of Thrace, whereof more anon. 13. Olynthus, called by Xenophon the greatest City of Thrace, as possibly enough it was in Power and Riches, though not in greatness of Extent. A Colony of the Athenians, rich in Trade, and Mistress of a fair and goodly Territory adjoining to it: the People whereof had been malicious Enemies to the Kings of Macedon, which principally induced Philip spoken of before, to set upon them. In which Attempt he sped so well, that what he could not get by Force he obtained by Money, bribing some of the principal Officers to betray it to him. For the recovery whereof Demothens oft moved the People of Athens, in those elaborate Orations called the Olynthiaks. 14. Sefus, in the Thracian Chersonese, which, being a Peninsula abutting over against Troas on the Asian side, is now called Saint George's Arm. Opposite wherunto on the other side of the Water, is the Town of Abydus, remarkable for the Tragical Loves of Hero and Leander, celebrated by Musæus, an old Greek Poet. 16. Callipolis, on the Northern Promontory of this Chersonese, the first City of note that ever the Turks possessed in Europe; taken by Solyman, the Son of Orchan, the second King of the Ottoman Race, Anno 1358; from whence they calify and in little time spread themselves all over the rest of Thrace: the ordinary passage of late times between Europe and Asia, by reason of the convenient Harbour and safe Anchorage. 16. Cardia, seated on the Western side of it, opposite to the Isle of Lemnos; the Birth place of Emmetus, who, being a poor Carrier's Son, attained to such an ability in the Art of War, that after the death of Alexander the Great, under whom he served, he seized on the Provinces of Cappadocia and Paphlagonia, and siding (though a stranger to Macedon) with Olympias and the Blood Royal against the Greek Captains, vanquished and slew Crimæus, and divers times drove Antigonus (afterwards Lord of Asia) out of the Field. But being by his own Soldiers betrayed, he was by them delivered to Antigonus, and by him slain. 17. Sardica, situate towards Mount Hæmus, memorable for the Council there held against the Arians, Anno 351. 18. Adrianople, seated near the midst of Thrace, called anciently Uladama; but got this name from Adrian the Emperour, who repaired and beautified it: made subject to the Turks by Bajazet, Anno 1362: from the first taking of it made the Seat of the Turkish Kings, till the taking of Constantinople by Mahomet the Great; by whom it was removed unto that City. 19. Pera, opposite to Constantinople, on the farther side of the Water, (as the word doth signify in the Greek;) by some called Galata; once peopled by a Colony of Genoese, as the Mart and Factory of that State, taken by Mahomet the Great, An. 1453, but still replenished, for the most part, with Christian Merchants and Artificers.

But the chief glory of this Country, and of all the East, is the renowned City of 20. Constantinople, seated in so commodious a place for Empire, that it overlooks both Europe and Asia, and commands not only the Propontic and Bosporus but the Euxine Sea. First founded by one Byzas, and from him named Byzantium; but being taken by the Persians and from them recovered by the Spartans, (unwilling that the Persians should grow strong in Europe) it was repaired and fortified by Paulinias, one of their Commanders, 663 years before the Birth of our Saviour. In vain it was besieged by Philip of Macedon, and of great strength in the Flourish of the Roman Empire. The Walls were of a just height, every Stone whereof was so joined with Couplets of Bricks, that the whole seemed but one entire Piece; adorned besides with Towers, Bulwarks, and other Arts of Fortification. Siding with Niger in his War against Severus the Emperour, it endured a Siege of three years against all the Forces of the Romans: during which time the people were so distressed by Famine, that men meeting in the Streets would draw and fight, the Conquerour feeding on the Vanquished. For want of Constantinople, seated in the Allaislands, they cast down upon them whose Statues made of Bricks, and the like curious Imagery Houses they pulled down to get Timber for Shipping; the Women cutting off their Hair to inch out their Tackle: and having thus patched up a Navy of 500 Sail, it was lost all by one Tempest. Compelled to yield by this Misfortune, the principal of the Nobility were put to the Sword, the Wealth of the Inhabitants given for a Prey to the Soldiers, the Walls thereof dismantled, and the Town left in rubbish. Yet there appeared so much of Majesty and Beauty in the very Ruins, Ut miraris virtutem eorum qui primi destruxerant, vel eorum qui deinceps sunt demoliti, vires sine potiores, as Herodian hath it. Re-edified afterwards by the Emperour Constantine, he honoured it with his own name, and made it the chief Seat of the Roman Empire. The City was finished May 11. Anno 325; and, being so finished, was endowed with all the Privileges of Rome, an equal number of Senators, one of the Annual Consuls, and all other Officers of State, chosen out of both; the Citizens of the one being free of the other, and capable of all places of most Trust and Power. For that cause it was called NOVA ROMA, in some following times. This City he adorned also with magnificent Buildings, curious Statues, and such like Ornaments, transported hither from Old Rome: which City he spoiled of more costly Pieces than any twenty of his Predecessors had brought unto it. At this day the chief Buildings are the Turk's Seraglio and the Temple of Saint Sophia; which as they differ not much in place and situation, so as little in Magnificence and State. The Temple of Saint Sophia was, if not built, yet re-edified, by the Emperour Justinian. It is built of an Oval form, surrounded with Pillars of admirable workmanship, adorned with spacious and beautiful Galleries, roofed all over with with Mosaic work, and vaulted underneath; very strong for the Fabrick, and pleasing for the Eye. The Doors are very curiously wrought and plated; one of which by the Superstitious people is thought to have been made of the planks of Noah's Ark. And yet this Temple is little more than the Chancel of the Ancient Church, which contained in length 260 foot, and 180 in breadth; and yet to our Saint Paul's in London may seem for the bigness to have been but a Chappel of Ease. But what it wants in Greatness, it hath gained in Beauty, and in the Elegancy of the Building, wherein it is thought to exceed all the Fabricks in the whole World. The Sides and Floor are all flagged with excellent Marble; and before the Entrance is a goodly Portico, or Porch, in which as well the Christians, who visit it out of Curiosity, as the Turks, who repair thither for Devotion, are to leave their Shoes. By Mahomet the Great, after the taking of the City, it was converted to a Turkish Mosque, as it still continueth; frequented by the Grand Seigneur almost every Friday, which is the Sabbath of that People. Near hereunto standeth the Palace or Seraglio of the Ottoman Emperours, on the North-East Angle of the City, where formerly stood the ancient Byzantium, divided from the rest of the City by a Wall containing three miles in Circuit, and comprehending goodly Groves of Cypress trees intermixed with Plains, delicate Gardens, artificial Fountains, and all variety of Pleasures which Luxury can affect or treasure compass. The Palace it self, enjoying a goodly prospect in the Sea, was first built by Justinian the Emperour, afterwards much enlarged by the Ottoman Race, containing three great Courts one within another: the Buildings yielding unto those of France and Italy, for the neat contrivances, but far surpassing them for Cost and Curiousness.

As for the City it self, it is said to be 18 miles in compass, and to contain 700000 living souls; yet would be more populous then it is, if the Plague, like a cruel Terminus fortified towards the Land with three strong and high Walls, the one higher than the other, the outermost highest of them all towards the Sea with one Wall only, built after the old Fashion with many Towers, which both the Town and Chersonese in which it standeth were defended from the Incursions of the barbarous people by a strong Wall built on the very Isthmus of it, some ten miles from the City, reaching from one side to the other: the work of Andronicus who succeeded Zeno, Anno 494. A City which a far off gives to the Eye a most pleasing object, so it seems a City with Gardens and beset with Trees, that it intercepts a City in a Wood, but being entered, it much deceiveth the expectation which it promised, the Builders of it being mean, if not contemptible. The Streets for the most part are exceeding narrow, but raised on each side for the greater Cleanliness: the Houses but of two Stories high, some of rough Stone, & some of Timber, without any outward Grace or exterior Garnishings; in many places nothing but low Sheds or rows of Shops; and in some places long dead Walls belonging unto great stone Houses. The principal Beauty of the whole, next to the Tombs or Sepulchres of some of the Ottoman Kings, which are very sumptuous, are the Mosques or Temples of the Turks, about eight thousand in number; and the Port or Haven, so conveniently profound, that Ships of great Burthen may safely lay their Sides Liding; and so commodiously seated on the Thracian Bosporus, that there is no Wind, whatsoever it be, which brings not in some Shipping to it. But that which gives the greatest Pleasure to the sight from the Hills adjoining is the Situation of it on seven Mountains, most of them crowned with Magnificent Mosques, built all of white Marble, round in form, and finished on the top with gilded Spires, reflecting the Sun-beams with a marvellous Splendour. On the first whereof standeth the Ruines of Constantine's Palace, exceeding itately to behold. On the second, a fair Turkish Mosque, built on the Palace anciently belonging to the Greek Patriarch. On the third stands a stately Mosque, the Sepulchre of Mahomet the second; and a very large Hospital, for entertainment of Pilgrims and relief of the poor: the Annual Reus whereof are valued at 200000 Chequens. On the fourth and fifth the Sepulchres of Selim the first, and Bajazet the second. On the sixth the Mosque and Sepulchre of Solyman the Magnificent, numbered amongst the present wonders of the World. And on the seventh the Temple of Saint Sophia, and the Turk's Seraglio, spoken of by Nicetas, Urbs typicall by Paulus Diaconus; and so acknowledged to be by Ysaïus Doulos, Phinias Morison, G. Sandys, and other of our modern Travellers, the Eye-witnesses of it. So that if there be any Mystery in the number of Seven, or that the sitting of the great Whore on a seven-headed Beast, be an affixed direction to find out the Antichrist; we may as well look for him in Constantinople, or Nova Roma, where the Great Turk, the professed Enemy of Christ and the Christian Faith, hath his Seat and Residence, as amongst the seven Hills of Old Rome, where the Pope resideth. Or, if his sitting in the Temple of God shews us where to find him; we may as well look for him in the Temple of Saint Sophia, now a Turkish Mosque, as in Saint Peter's Church at Rome, still a Christian Temple.

But to return again unto Constantinople. As it was made by Constantine the Imperial City, and consequently the chief City of the East in all Civil matters; so it came in little time to have a great sway in Affairs of Religion. The Christian Faith is said to be first prebided in Byzantium by Saint Andrew the Apostle, the first Bishop of Churches thereof being regulated by many Bishops, the chief Preeminence in matters which concerned those Churches was given unto the Bishops of Heraclea, Thrace being at that time the Metropolis or principal City of the Province. But after that Constantinople was built by Constantine; and made the Imperial City, as before was said, it did not only over-top Heraclea, and draw unto it self the Metropolitan Dignity, but stood in Competition with the other Patriarchal Churches for the supreme Power; inasmuch as at the second General Council holden in this City it was unanimously decreed, that the Patriarch thereof should in degree of Honour be next unto the Bishop of Rome, and above those of Antioch and Alexandria; the same Decree being confirmed in the Council of Chalcedon also. By which not only all the Churches in the Diocese of Thrace, but also of Nesia, or Asia minor, (except Cilicia and Iauria, which remained to the Patriarch of Antioch) containing no less than 28 of the Roman Provinces, were made subject to him. And though Pope Leo the first, pretending only the preservation of the Privileges of those two great Churches, but indeed fasting left New Rome might in the end get the Precedency of the Old, did oppose this Act; and yet they were forced in the end to give way unto it, especially after the Emperour Justinian had by his Imperial Edict confirmed the same; by whom it was finally ordained, Seniores Romæ Papæ primum esse omnium Sacerdotum, beatissimum autem Archiepiscopum Constantinopolitano.

nopolens, Novæ Romæ, secundum habere locum, that is to say, That the Pope of Rome should have the first place in all General Councils, and the Bishop of Constantinople, or New Rome, should have the second. Encouraged wherewith, and with the countenance and favour of the Emperor Mauritius, John Patriarch of Constantinople, in the time of Gregory the Great, took to himself the Title of Universal or Oecumenical Bishop, the Pastor-General (as it were) of the Church of Christ. And though Pope Boniface, by the Grant of that bloody Tyrant Phocas, got that Title from him: yet the Patriarchs of Constantinople made good their ground; never submitting either themselves or their Churches to the Pope's Authority; being for that cause specially accounted by the Church of Rome for Schismatics, and accordingly reviled and persecuted with all kind of Indignities. How it succeeded with these Patriarchs in the times ensuing, and by what means their Jurisdiction was extended over all Greece, Moscovia, part of Poland, and many other Churches in the North and East, hath been said already. Certain it is, the constant Residence of the Emperours from the time of Constantine gave great ground unto it: of whom I should here add the names, but that I must first sum up the affairs of Thrace before the Building of this mighty and predominant City, and take a brief view of the rest of those Provinces which we have comprehended under the name of Greece.

Concerning which we are to know, that the ancient Inhabitants of it had the names of Strymonis, Bardis, Doloni, Sapais, Sai, and some others, united by most Writers in the name of Thracians. They were governed at first by the Kings or Princes of their several Tribes, as most Nations else; distinguished from the common People, as in other Pomps, so most especially by their Gods, which their Kings had to themselves apart, and were not to be worshipped by the best of their Subjects. These notwithstanding well together for the common good, it gave the Athenians, Spartans, Thebans, and other Nations of the Greek, a good opportunity to invade their Country, to seize on the Sea-Towns thereof, and plant Colonies in them: the Country in those times being meanly peopled, and consequently giving that advantage unto the Gracians, as the Indies in these latter times have to the Spaniards, Portuguezes, English, Hollanders, and all other Adventurers. Such of them as lay next to Macedon, proving bad Neighbours thereunto upon all occasions, at last provoked Philip the Father of Alexander, to put in for a share, who being chosen Arbitrator betwixt two Competitors for that Kingdom, (drawn at last into fewer hands) came not unto the Council with such poor Attendants as Justice and Piety, but with a great and puissant Army, wherewith having vanquished and slain the two Pretenders, he pronounced Sentence for himself, and made Thrace his own, compelling the Inhabitants to pay him the tenth part of their Revenue for his yearly Tribute. After the death of Alexander this Country was seized on by Lysimachus, as his part of the Spoil, who here built the City Lysimachia; from hence invading Dacia, Macedon, and the neighbouring Regions: and he being dead, the Thracians, now accustomed to a foreign Yoke, were either Subjects, or at least Tributaries, to the Macedonians. Aiding then in their Wars against the Romans, they incurred the displeasure of that People; who, having settled their Affairs in other places and repulsed the Cimbri, thought it fit time to call the Thracians to account for their former Actions: but sped so ill in the Attempt, that Porcius Camo lost his whole Army in the On-set, cunningly intercepted in their Woods and Fastnesses. Didius the Prætor, coming in whilst the Thracians were buile in the Chafe, gave them such a stop, that he deferred a Triumph for it, and made the Victory more calce to Mædellus, who succeeded Cato in that Charge, and triumphed also over them; as also did Lucullus on another Victory A. U. C. 680. Broken with so many ill Successes, they were finally subdued by Piso in the time of Augustus, and became so obsequious to that fortunate Prince, that Rhemenacles, a great and puissant King hereof, aided him with a strength of Horie against the Pannonians and Ilyrians, who had then rebelled. Afterwards being made a Province of the Roman Empire, in Constantine's new Model it became a Diocese under the Præfectus Prætorio Orientis; Thrace it self being callt into four Provinces, that is to say, Thrace specially so called, Hæmimontum, Rhodope, and Europa; Scythia and the Lower Mædis, spoken of before, being added to it: of which the Presidents of Rhodope and Hæmimontum were not to be appealed from to the Præfectus Prætorio, as the others were, but only to the Præfect of Constantinople, the Imperial City. But as Alfonso King of Castile, furnished the Wife, was once heard to say, (never the wiser for so saying) That had he stood at the elbow of Almighty God when he made the World, he would have shewed him how some things might have been better ordered: to give leave to play the fool, and to say this here, that had I stood at Constantine's Elbow, I would have Counseled him to lay the Diocese of Thrace to the Præfect of Ilyricum, who had originally only the Dioceses of Macedon and Ilyricum under his Command; and not have placed it under the Præfect of the East, who had both Asia's and all Aegypt under his Authority. For being that there lay Appeals from the Vickers and Lieutenants of the several Dioceses to their several and respective Præfects, how great a trouble must it be to the Subjects of Thrace on every occasion of Appeal to go to Antioch, there to complain unto the Præfect of the Orient, when Serminum and Thephalonica, the ordinary Residences of the Præfectus Prætorio for Ilyricum, were so hard at hand? But Constantin was an absolute Prince, and might do what he listed. He had not else removed his Seat so far towards the East, and left the Western parts of the Empire open to the Barbarous people, out of a Fancy only to preserve the Eastern. For that it was a Fancy only the event did shew: the Persians for all this prevailing more than ever formerly; and Thrace it self, though honoured with the Imperial City, and planted with so many Roman Colonies, so ill inhabited, that a great part thereof lay wast and desart many Ages after. Infomuch as the Goths, being by the Huns driven over the Danow, were by the Emperours Aurelianus planted in this Country, (the Emperour having a content to use them in his following Wars; where not designed with the Portion allotted to them, they did fair for all, waiting the whole Province, taking divers Towns, and endangering Constantinople it self, from whence they were not driven (Valens himself being killed in the War against them) but by the coming of some Saracens to the Aid of the Citizens. Nor could the Residence of the Emperours so protect this Country, but that it was continually harried and depopulated by the Slavens, Bulgarians, Rosses, Saracens, and other Barbarous people falling in upon it; nor hinder one Byronius, in the time of Michael Ducas and Nicophorus Bryennius, from assuming to himself the Title of King of Thrace; nor finally prevent the Turks of the Ottoman Race from getting ground every day on the lesser Asia, incroaching upon Thrace it self, and in the end obtaining the Imperial City.

And here perhaps it is expected, considering the Turks are now possessed of Thrace and the rest of Greece, that we should make relation of the Nature of that People, their Customs, Forces, Policies, Original, and Proceedings. But

But the discourse thereof we will defer till we come to Tricomina, a Province of Asia from whence they made their first Inundations, like to some unrefillible Torrent, into Pessia, and after into the other parts of the World now subject to them. And therefore leaving that alone till another time, we will proceed to our Description of the rest of Greece, confining of the Islands scattered in the Pontick, Propontick, Ægean, Cæcan, and Ionian Seas; leaving out such as properly belong to Asia, till our Description of that Country, though otherwise Greek Islands, and so accounted both for their Language and Original.

7. The Islands of the PONTICK and PROPONTICK Seas.

Before we come to the Descriptions of these Islands, we must first look upon the Seas in which they lie; beginning with the PONTICK first, because the Waters unto all the rest. A Sea made up originally of the Confluence of those mighty Rivers (the greatest in those parts of the world) which do fall into it, that is to say, the Danow, Boristhenes and Tanais, filling out of Europ, besides many other fair and large Rivers, (though of lesser note) to the number of at least an hundred, which pay Tribute to it: the whole compass of it being 2700 miles, in form by some resembled to a Scythian Bow when it is bended. A Sea not so salt as many others, and therefore much annoyed with Ice in Winter; seldom remitted in the Spring on the Northern Shore. The Traffick of it is wholly in a manner engroffed by the Turk, who is Master of all the Sea-coast of it, save what belongs to the Polonian and Crim-Tartar, at first it was called Ægæus from the Insipiditableness of the neighbouring People, which being brought to some Conformity caused the Sea to be called Ægæus. By Florus it is called Mare Sinistrum, because in the way from Rome to Asia minor it lay upon the left hand, as the Mediterranean did upon the right. It is commonly called at this time Mare Maggiore, Mists thence arising. Others not unprobably affirm that it is called the Black Sea, from the dangerous and black Shipwrecks here happening; for it is a very dangerous ison the top of an high Tower a Lantern, in which there is a great Pan full of Pitch, Rosin, Tallow, and the like, in dark nights continually burning, to give warning to Mariners how near they approach unto the Shore. This Sea, being the biggest of all those parts, gave occasion to them which knew no bigger to call all Seas by the name of Pontus; as Ovid, Omnia pontus erant, deinde quoque litora pontus; and in another place of the doublets of the name, than that of the Etymologists are Pontus, quæ pontus caret. Of this Sea the chief Illes are Thymaria, and Eubœia, little famous.

From thence the Sea binding Southwards is brought into narrower Bounds, not being fully a mile broad, and is called the Thracian Bosporus; Thracian, for its Site nigh Thrace; and Bosporus is, for that Oxen have swam over it with a very strong Calf. That on the Asian side, being the elder and the lesser, is by the Greeks called Asiæcapus, by the Turks named Acchibis; the other, just opposite to it, is by the Turks called Genuibis, by the Greek named Necæstron, or New castle. This last was the name of Mahomet furnished the Great, in the beginning of his Reign; in bigness not inferior to a little City, built by him in or near the place of the ancient Dynamis, environed with a Wall 22. foot broad, and containing three great Towers, their Wall exceeding 10. yards in thickness; exceedingly well stored with all sorts of Ordnance and Ammunition. By the English they are commonly called the Black Towers; partly because seated at the Entrance of the Euxine or Black Sea, and partly because they seldom are discharged thence till released by death.

This Straight, having continued 200 miles in length, openeth it self into the Propontis, 300 miles in compass; confined with Thrace on the one side, and with Bithynia on the other; so as they which fall in the middle may descry the Land on all parts. Now called Mar di Marmora, from the Island Marmora, which, formerly called Proconnesus, hath for its abundance of Marble purchased this new name. The Soil is apt for Vines, and not destitute of Corn; yielding also Good Pasturage for Goats, wherof there is plenty, with an incredible number of Partridges amongst the Rocks: the Country of Asiæ, Anciently it had in it two Cities of the same name with the Island, called the Old and New Proconnesus; the former first built by the Misians, an Asian People; the latter by the Natives of this Island. But both these being long since decayed, it hath now only a small Village towards the North, with an Haven to it, inhabited by the Greeks, as is all the rest of the Island: such Christian Slaves as are in great numbers employed here by the Turks in digging Marble for their Mosques and other Buildings being only Sojourners, not House-keepers, and therefore not accounted amongst the Inhabitants. Here is also in this Propontick Sea the Life of Cyclops: but being it is on Asia side, we shall there speak of it.

The Sea having gathered her waters into a lesser Channel is called Hellepont, from Helle, Daughter of Atthæus King of Tiber, who was here drowned. Over this famous Straight did Xerxes according to Herodotus, make a Bridge of Boats to pass into Greece: which when a sudden Tempest had shrewdly battered, he caused the Sea to be beaten with 300 Stripes, and cast a pair of Fetters into it, to make it know to whom it was subject. Xerxes in this Expedition wasted over an Army consisting of two millions and 164.710 fighting men, in no less then 2208 Bottoms of all sorts. When all the Persians forthed the King in the unconquerableness of his Forces, Artabanus told him that he feared no Enemies but the Sea and the Earth; ther not yielding sufficient subsistence for so multitudinous an Army, but his return over this Hellepont was as dejected as his passage magnificent; his Fleet being so broken by the Valour of the Greek and the fury of the Sea, that, for his more speedy Flight he was compelled to make use of a poor Filher-boat. Neither yet was his Passage secure: for the Boat, being overbattered, had not saved the Life of their King. The loss of which noble Spirits so vexed him, that having given the Steermain a golden Coronet for preserving his own Life, he commanded him to Execution as a Co-author of the death of his servants. It is now called the Castles, or the Sea of the two Castles; which two Castles stand one on Europe, the other on Asia side, in the Towns of Sefos and Ayudus. These Castles, commonly by the Turks called Dardanellis, are exceedingly well built, and abundantly furnished with Munition. They search and examine all Ships that pass that way; they receive the Grand Seignior's Customs, and are in effect the principal Strength of Constantinople. At these Castles all Ships must stay three days; to the end that if any Slave be run away from his Master, or Thieves have stolen any thing, they may be in that place purged and apprehended. So that these Castles are as it were the Out-works of Constantinople, to defend it from all Invasions, and from any Forces which may come unto it by Sea out of the Mediterranean; as for the Safety thereof from such as may find passage out of the Euxine, there are situate at the very entrance of the Thracian Bosphorus two strong Castles, the one above Constantinople on Europe side, the other on the Asian Shore, which before we speak of. No European Isle of note is in either of the Straights. And therefore we pass on unto

8. The Islands of the Ægean Sea.

Hellspont, after a forty miles course, expatiateth its waters in the Ægean Sea: so called either from Ægeus, the Father of Theseus, who, misdoubting his Son's life return from the Minotaur of Crete, here drowned himself; or, secondly, from Ægæa, once a principal City in the prime Island Eubœa; or, thirdly, because that the Islands lie scattered up and down like the Leaps of a wanton Goat, from the Greek αἶγες.

The chief Islands of it are, 1. Samos, 2. Thasos, 3. Imbros, 4. Lemnos, 5. Eubœa, 6. Salamis, 7. Ægina, 8. the Cyclades, 9. the Sporades, and 10. Cybara: all which especially from Eubœa Southwards, are called the Islands of the Arches; the Sea being by the Greeks called the Archipelago, in regard of its greatness compared unto the narrow Seas which lie about it.

1. SAMOTHRACE is a small Island opposite to the Coasts of Thrace, where the Hebrus falls into the Sea; so called quasi Samos Thracie, to difference it from the Asian Samos, bordering on Jonia. Formerly it was called Dardanis, from Dardanus the Trojan, who fled hither when he carried the Palladium thence. But Aristotle, writing of the Commonweal of these Samothracians, telleth us that it was first called Leucospia, and afterwards Samus, from Sus the Son of Mercury and Rheny, the letter M being interposed. It is now called Samandraci, and is plentiful in Honey and Wild Deer, and better stored with commodious Harbours than any other in these Seas. It hath a Town of the same name with the Island, situate on an high Hill on the North part thereof overlooking a capacious Haven; of late, by the Pirates frequent infesting of these Seas, wholly in a manner, desolate.

2. THASSUS, another little Island on the same Coast, opposite to the Influx of the River Nessus, lying betwixt that and Athos in Macedonia, at the Mouth of the Strymonian Bay: by Pliny called Æria and Æthria, by Ptolemy Thalassia, at the present Tasso. It is in compass betwixt forty and fifty miles, sufficiently fruitful, well replenished with Woods, and yielding good store of the best Wines; mountainous in some places, but those Mountains fraught with Quarries of excellent Marble, which the Romans called Thasian, from the Island, and in the times of Philip and Alexander the Great so rich in Mines of useful Metals, that those Kings received yearly 80 Talents for their Customs of them. It hath one Town of the same name with the Island, situate on a large Plain in the North part of it, bordering on a goodly Bay, which serves for an Haven to the Town: and on the South parts where the Country is more mountainous and hilly, there are two Towns more, each of them situate on an Hill, but the names thereof occur not amongst my Authors.

3. Imbros, another small Island, now named Lembo, is situate betwixt Samothrace and the Thracian Cherfone, in compass about thirty miles, but more long than broad, stretching North and South, and distant from Samothrace about ten miles. The Island is mountainous for the most part, except towards the West; where it hath some pleasant and well-watered Plains: in it is a Town of the same name, situate at the foot of the Mountains once sacred unto Mercury, but not else observable.

4. LEMNOS, an Island of more note, lieth betwixt Thrace and Macedon, not far from Imbros; memorable amongst the Poets for the fabulous Fall of Vulcan, who, being but an homely Brat, hardly worth the owning, was by Juno in great Passion thrown out of Heaven, and, falling on this Island, came to get his Healing. Howsoever, he was anciently worshipped by the People hereof, and from hence called Lemnius. It is in compass about an hundred miles, but more long than broad, extended from the East to the West; on every side well furnished with convenient Creeks and some pretty Havens, by which the want of Rivers is in some sort recompened.

The Country is for the most part plain, if compared unto the adjacent Islands, but otherwise fiewled with rising Mountains; the interposed Vallies being very fruitful of Wheat, Pulse, Wine, Flesh, Cheek, Wool, Flax, Linnen, and all other necessities; only Wine is wanting. And though here be no Rivers, as before was said, yet have they good Fishing on the Sea-coast for their use and sustenance; and in some parts hot Baths for Health and Medicines. But the chief Riches of this Island is in a mineral Earth here digged, of excellent virtue for curing of Wounds, stopping of Fluxes, expelling Poisons, a Preservative against Infections, and the like; called Terra Lemnia, from the place, and Terra Sigillata, from the Seal or Character imprinted on it. For being made up into small Pellets, and sealed with the Turk's Character or Signet, it is then (not before) sold unto the Merchants; by whom it is dispersed over most parts of the Christian World. Upon the sixth of August yearly they go to gather it; but not without much Ceremony; and many religious Preparations, brought in by the Venetians, when they were Lords of this Island, and still continued by the Greek Monks or Caloires, who are the principal in the work. There is one Hill only where it groweth, the Top whereof being opened, they discover the Vein, resembling the calling up of Worms; and having gathered as much of it that day as the Priests think fit, it is cloied again; certain Bags of it being sent to the Grand Signior yearly, the residue sealed up, and sold to the Foreign Merchant.

But to return to the Topography of the place. The Eastern parts hereof are said to be fat and fruitful, the Western very dry and barren: in both containing 7 Towns and Villages, all of them inhabited by the Greeks, except only three, and those three garrisoned by the Turks, who, being Lords of the whole Island, have new named it Stalimene. In former times, from two prime Cities in it, it was called Dipolis. Of which the first was called Lemnos, by the name of the Island, as large and well-peopled now as ever formerly, but of no great estimation when it was at the best, seated upon an high Hill looking over the Sea, with a handsome Market place, on which Mount Athos casts a Shadow, though distant 87 miles from it. It was formerly by another name called Myrina; but that held not long, the name of Lemnos still remaining. 2. The second of the two Cities was then called Hephæstias, memorable for the Temple of Vulcan, hence called Hephæstides; since desolate and destroyed, stroyed, and a new Town built in the place of it, being called Cochino. This Town is not great, but of a reasonable strength, memorable for the stout Resistance that a notable Pirago, named Marmala, made against the Turks in the time of Mahomet the Great, the Venetians then being Lords of the Island. For suddenly landing, when they were not looked for, with a purpose to surprize this Town, they found more Resistance at the Gates than they did expect: none being more commended than this Maiden, who, seeing her Father slain, took up such Weapons as lay by him, and manfully made good the place, until the rest of the Citizens, awakened with the Alarm, came unto her Rescue, and forced the Enemy to retire. Near herunto is the Hill on which Vulcan is said to have fell, more eminent for the Mineral carth here only gathered. And not far hence Pliny reports a Labyrinth to have stood in the days of old, little inferior unto those of Crete or Ægypt; the Ruines of it being so decayed, that Bellonius, who took great pains in it, was not able to trace them. 3. The third place of note is Scira, though an ordinary Village, yet memorable for the Chappel in which the Greek Caloires begin their Orisons on the sixth day of August, before their gathering of the Earth so often mentioned. In this Country anciently reigned Thoen, the Son of Bacchus and Ariadne, during whose time the Women of the Island upon some displeasure murdered all the men, the King only excepted, preserved by Hyppolyte his Daughter, whom they made their Queen, and by whom Jafon with the Argonauts were so kindly entertained for two years together, that they had almost forgot their intended Expedition for the Golden Fleece; she her self being got with Child by Jafon at his being there, the other Women probably following her Example. Following the Fortune of the other parts of Greece, it came at last under the power of the Constantinopolitans or Eastern Emperours. In the Substitions (of which more hereafter) it fell to the share of the Venetians, who held it till the year, 1463, or thereabouts.

Besides these on the Coast of Thrace, there are also some of less note on the Shores of Macedon. The principal whereof are, 1. Peparethus, as Ptolemy, Euromus, as called Saragino, as Cassiodorus, or Lemene, as Niger hath it; fortified on the Eastern part with a Castle built upon a Rock. Others of less note are, 2. Scyathor, now Sciathos, 3. Scopelos, 4. Halonissus, 5. Cyrenethus, now Pontico, and 6. Draconus: of which little memorable. All which, together with those formerly described on the Coast of Thrace, being but the Accessories of the several Continents upon which they border; followed the Fortune of the principal, and were conquered in them.

5. EUBOEÆA, known to the Ancients by the names of Maecia and Abantia, to the Moderns by that of Negropont, frontiereth all along the Coast of Achaia, parallel to which it is in Fertility; one part hereof being torn away from it by an Earthquake, and lying still so near unto it, that between the Island and the Continent is only a little Eurippus, which ebbs and flows seven times in one day. The reason of which when Aristotle with these words, Quia ego non capio te, tu capies me. In this Island is the Promontory Caphereus, where Nauplius, the Father of Palamedes, placed his false Fires, to the Destruction of so many Greeks. For understanding how his Son Palamedes, whom he deemed to have been slain by the hand of Paris, was treacherously circumvented by the Policy of Ulysses and Diomedes, he conceived such a Displeasure against the whole Host of the Grecians, that he intended their general Destruction. To this end he caused Fires to be made on the tops of the most dangerous and unaccessible Rocks in this whole Island: which the Greeks taking (according to the Custom of the time) to have been the Marks of some safe Haven, made thitherward, and were there most miserably cast away, there perishing 200 Ships, and many thousand men. But when Nauplius understood how Diomedes and Ulysses, whose Ruine he principally intended, were escaped, he drowned himself for very Vexation in this very same place. Palamedes, that of his Son's Soit, is said to have invented four of the Greek Letters, viz. β, γ, ε, φ, to have first instituted Centinels in an Army, and to be the first Inventor of the Watch-word.

It is in length 150 miles, stretched out from the North-west to the South-east; in breadth not above twenty, where it is broadest; the whole compass 365 Italian miles. It is the Queen of the Ægean Sea, not only for Greatness, but for Fertility and Strength; plentiful in Corn, Wine, Oyl, Fruit and Wood fit for Shipping; enriched with many fair Harbours and capacious Bays, and those well fortified; watered also with the Rivers of Cireus and Melae, two Rivers of so strange a nature, that if a Sheep drink of the former, his Wool turneth white, but coal-black, if he drink of the latter. For the credit whereof I refer the Reader unto Syrabo. Here is also found to be a Stone called Asiaticus, which is drawn into thread like Hemp, and good Cloth made of it; which, when it is stained, in stead of being sent unto the Fullers, is thrown unto the Fire and so cleaned. But whether this be so or not, (for I put it only upon hearsay) certain it is that it was once enriched with Mines both of Brals and Iron, though those now decayed; and likewise with Quarries of pure Marble, which continue still.

The Island, before it was conquered by the Turks, was very populous, but the people most delighted to live in Villages; the Cities and walled Towns being only three. 1. Carystos, anciently Caryssus, with little or no variation, but by Pliny called Ægea and Chironia; memorable for its marble Quarries, of which were made the Pillars called Columnæ Caryssie. 2. Chalcis, now Negropont, by the Turks named Erivus, seated on a Plain near the Water's side, there growing into a fair and goodly Bay called the Gulf of Negropont; a populous, strong and wealthy City, so fortified with Walls and Bulwarks, that in the judgment of most men it was held invincible when the Turks first fate down before it. Nor was it purchased by the Turks (though Mahomet, who had took Constantinople, undertook the business) at a lower price than the loss of forty thousand men, who were sent upon it; but taken at the last, and the people put unto the Sword, without consideration of Sex or Age. A Town in former times of so great Wealth and Power, capital Region of the which was hence called Chalcidica; a strong Influence on the Affairs of Achaia also, as being situate so near the Continent, that it was joined to it by a Bridge. When it was in the hands of the Kings of Macedon, this Town, together with Demirius in Thessaly, and the Castle of Acerocimbis, were called the Fasters of Greece: inasmuch that when the Roman Senate commanded Philip, the Father of Perseus, to let the Grecians at liberty; the Grecians made answer, that their vains was their Liberty restored them, unless these three Towns were first dismantled. Permitted by the Romans to live according to their own Laws, in memory of that Benefit they refused to declare against them.

in behalf of Antiochus, who thereupon made himself Master of the Town, and consequently of the Island. But forced to leave the place upon the loss of the Battle at Therapolya, it became free again; till finally made subject unto Rome with the rest of Greece, and with it made a part of the Eastern Empire. In the Division whereof amongst the Latines it fell to the share of the Venetians; who from hence used with their Gallies to infest the Shores of Turkey, and disturb their Trade. Provoked wherewith especially with their taking of Amus, a City of Thrace, under the Conduct of Nicolas Canalis, the Venetian Admiral, who in that Enterprize had taken 2000 Turks, which he carried with him into this Island, Mahomet the Great resolves upon the Conquest of it, and with a puissant Army sets before the Town. And though it cost him dear, yet at last he got it, and therewith all the Island also, which depended on the Fortunes of it, An. 1471.

6. SALAMIS, is high unto Megaris, one of the Provinces of Achaia; famous for the Overthrow of the populous Navy of Xerxes by the Athenians and their Confederates. What was the number of the Soldiers and Gallies of the Perfian side hath been already declared. The whole Græcian Fleet consisted of no more than 270 Vessels, whereof 127 were rigged and set forth at the charge of the Athenians only, the rest by the Associates. Yet was the Admiralty committed to Emybiades a Lacedæmonian; the Athenians preferring the main care of the common Safety before an unreasonable contention for Priority. The Spartans, seeing the inequality of Forces, intended not to have hazarded the Battle, but with full sail to have retired to Peloponnesus, into which Country the Perfians had made Incursions; respecting more the Welfare of their own Country yet defensible, than the desperate estate of Attica. This Design was by Themistocles (as careful for the estate of Athens as they for Sparta) signified to Xerxes; who, getting between them and home, compelled them to a necessity of fighting, but to his own Ruine. For in the Conflict more than 200 of his Ships were sunk, and most of the rest taken; the Confederates having lost of their Navy forty only. Between the Athenians and the Megarenses were many Contentions for this Island; the Fortune of the Athenians in the end prevailing. It hath in it a City of the same name, the Royal Seat of Telamon, the Father of Ajax, so famous in the War of Troy; more memorable for giving Birth to Solon the Legislator of Athens, one of the seven Wise men of Greece.

7. EGINA, now called Engia, an Island situate over against Sium Saronicus, being that Bay of Corinth which openeth into the Ægean, hence called Golfo di Engia; the Realm of Æacus, made for his Justice and Integrity one of the three Judges of Hell, the other two being his Brother Rhadamanthus, and Minos the King of Crete. It had formerly been called Oreone, and Oenge; but took this name from Ægina, the Daughter of Alopus a King of Boeotia, on whom Jupiter is said to have begot both Æacus and Rhadamanthus. The people heretofore were properly called Æeginenses and Æeginæ, much spoken of in the Wars of Athens, from which they are distant about 12 miles. The ground hereof is very stony, but good for Barley, of which it is very plentiful: inhabited in former times by a laborious and thriving People, to whom they gave in those days the name of Myrmidones, (the Island being also called Myrmidonia) quod Formicarum more Terram foverent, because Emmet-like they digged up and under the Earth, to make it the more fit for Tillage; who dwelt at first in Caves without any Houses. Hence the occasion of the Fable of turning Emmets into Men at the prayer of Æacus. Both Tale and People after

(I know not how) were carried into Theffaly, where before we found them.

8. The CYCLADES, so called because they lie in a Circle round about Delos, are in number 53. They are also called the Islands of the Arches, because they are in the Sea called Archipelago. They stand so close together, that in a clear day a man may see 20 of them at a time; for which cause it is with good reason accounted to be a dangerous place for Sailors in a Storm. The chief of these Cyclades are, 1. DELOS, quasi Δῖος signifying apertum; because when all the Earth had abjured the receipt of Latona at the request of Juno, this Island, then under water, was by Jupiter erected aloft, and fit to receive her; and in it was the delivered of Apollo and Diana: of which thus Ovid;

Erratica Delos

*Errantem accipit, tunc cum levis Insula nava.
Illic incumbens sub Palladis arboræ, Palmæ,
Eddidit invicta geminis Latona novæ.
Unsettled Delos floating on the Wave,
A little Land entertainment gave
To wandering Laton, spight of Juno's Head, Under Minerva's Palm-tree brought to Bed.*

Notable also is this Island for the Temple of Apollo, and a Custom, neither permitting men to die, or Children to be born in it; but sending sick Men and great bellicose Women to Rhene, a small Island, and not much distant. By a more ancient name it is called Orygia; and by that name mentioned in many of the Poets, both Greek and Latin. The chief Town of it, called also Delos, is situate on a Plain environed with Rocks, near the Hill called Cynthus, whence Apollo had the name of Cynthus, and Diana of Cynthia; as of Delius, and Delia, from the Island. In this Town had Apollo both his Temple and Oracle, delivered here more plainly than in other places, whence (as some say) it was called Delos; the word in Greek signifying manifest or apparent: made famous by the resort of people from all places thither, especially from the neighbouring Islands, who sent yearly multitudes of men and troupes of Virgins to celebrate his Solemnities with Herds of Sacrifices. More wealthy afterwards by the removing of the Trade of Corinth thither; that Town being utterly destroyed by the Romans, and this made choice of by the Merchant; partly by reason of the Immunities of the place, but principally in regard of the convenient situation between Europe and Asia. It continued in great Wealth and Power till Mithridates laid it waste; and at last, on the ceasing of the Oracles, was utterly forsaken, both Town and Island are now called Solies. By which name also Rhene, an adjoining Island, (before mentioned) is at this day known; chained to the other by Polyrates the Tyrant of Samos, and now united to it, at the least in name.

2. TENOS, by Aristotle called Hydruntia, by some Ophiusa, by the Moderns Tina. The chief Town of it is of the same name, so called from one Tenes the Builder of it, and giving name to the Island: memorable for a Fountain called Dipnosus, of which Aristotle and Athenæus do both affirm, that the Waters will not mix with Wine: the only Island of this Sea which remaineth under the power of the State of Venice, the rest being subject to the Turks; deserving therefore the first place in our Description of those Islands that encompass Delos, though anciently.

3. ANDROS, (prima inter Cyclades), was reckoned the chief amongst the Cyclades, or first at least in order, because next to Delos: originally called Cænus, afterwards Antandros, and at last Andros; from Andrus the Son of Eurimachus, who founded the chief Town of it, of the same name.

same name also. Memorable for a pleasant Fountain mentioned by Pliny, the waters whereof on the Nones of January yearly had the taste of Wine. It still retains the name of Andro, or Andri.

4. NAXOS, now Niesia, one of the biggest of the Pack, as being about 80 miles in compass. In ancient times it was called Veneris Insula, or the Island of Venus; afterwards Dionysia, by reason of its abundance of Wine, and the goodnefs of those Wines together, consecrated to Bacchus, whom the Greeks call Dionysius. From its wonderful plenty of Wheat called by some Sicilia minor, or the Lesser Sicily; but at last Naxos, from one Naxus, who had the Conduct of a Colony of Carians thither. But notwithstanding this new name, Bacchus did still retain the honour to be worshipped in it, in regard of his love unto the place; marrying here Ariadne, (as the Poets fable) whom Theſeus had left upon the Rocks: whose Coronet or Chaplet, being by his means made one of the heavenly Constellations, is by Columella called Ardor Naxius, by the name of the Island; though commonly by Astronomers Corona Ariades, from the name of the Lady. The Women of this Island are said by Pliny to be delivered generally in the eighth month, as Bacchus was born within that term. But it is most certainly famous in true Story for the Beauty and Fertility of it, and for a kind of excellent Marble called Ophites or Serpentinus; the ground whereof is green, diapered with blew or purple Spots, in much esteem amongst the Romans. When these Islands fell to the Venetians, they conferred this on one John Quirino, a Patrician or Gentleman of that City, (as they did divers of the rest on other undertakers) from whom it came to the Noble Family of the Crispi, who held it till the year 1572, when James the last of that House sold it to Selymus the second.

5. GTAROS, a little Island, into which the Romans used to banish Delinquents. Hence that of Juvenal, cited by G. Sandys.

*Ande aliquid brevibus Gyariis vel carcere dignum, Si vis esse aliquid: Probitas laudatur, & auge.
If thou intend'st to thrive, do what deserves Short Gyares or Gyves: praise'd Virtue starves.*

6. PAROS, now Pario, by some of the Ancients, called Patiya, by others Minoa; but it obtained this new name from Parus, a Son of Jesafon: memorable for Quarries of the whitest Marble, of which commonly the Statues of the Gods were made, called from hence Marmor Parium by the Latines. It is in compass about 50 miles, running in a long Plain from East to West, having once a Town of the same name seated in the North, once famous, but now utterly ruined. The Inhabitants heretofore were noted to be very careless of keeping their Promises, and Contracts: whence Æschylus grew into a Byword, applied to those who made no reckning of their Promises. There is now a Town in it called Cephala, but it is of no great note.

7. SCYROS, opposite to Magnesia in Asia Minor, famous for the Birth of Neoptolemus or Pyrrhus, and that it was the Lurking-place of Achilles. For his Mother Thetis, being forewarned by an Oracle that he should be slain in the Trojan War, sent him to Lycomedes King of this Island, where he was brought up in Woman's Attire amongst the King's Daughters, and deemed a Virgin till by getting Pyrrhus on Deidamia the King's Daughter it was proved to be otherwise. Others relate that Ulysses discovered him by a Wife, who, coming thither like a Pedler or Peti-merchant with Arms and other Ware, to avoid distrust, exposed his Merchandise to the view of the Damsels when the other Ladies falling on the Tires and Laces, Achilles took into his hand the Spear and Shield. Which when Ulysses had observed, he made him leave that Company, and away for Troy. The handiwork of the fraud take from Ovid, thus:

*Conscia venturi Genitrix Nereia Fati
Disimulat Cæcum Natum; & deceptæ omnes
(In quibus Ajax) sumptæ fallacia P'p'itis.
Arma ego feminis animam motura virilem
Mæcibus infero, &c.*

Thus Engliſhed by G. Sandys in his Translation of the Metamorphoses.

The whole Design in order to relate:

Thetis, force-knowing great Achilles Fate;
Disguis'd her Son, so like a Virgin drest,
That all milktook, and Ætas with the rest.
When Arms with Womens Trifles, which might blind Suspect, I brought to tempt a manly Mind.
Yet was the Heros Virgin-like array'd;
Who taking up the Shield and Spear, I said,
O Goddeſs-born, for thee the Fate of Troy
Her Fall reserves: why doubtst thou to destroy.
Great Pergamus? then made him d'off these Weeds,
And sent the Mighty unto mighty Deeds.

There is another of this name betwixt Neopatria and Lafbor, which Ortelius conceives to be the Scene of this Action: but the general opinion is for this, (though that be the greater life) to which the situation of it amongst the rest of those Islands where reigned so many of the Greek Kings interreſt in the War of Troy seems to give good countenance; the name and power of Greece not reaching in those days so much towards the North.

8. MELOS, situate betwixt Creta and Peloponnesus, and equally distant from them both. The Promontories of Seyllene in the one, and that of Dalymnium in the other, shooting out against it. Inhabited in former times by a Colony of Phœnicians, who coming out of Byblus, a Town of that Country, gave that name unto it: being called Melos afterwards by the Greeks, from its abundance of Honey. The Birth-place of Diagoras the Philosopher, hence famous Melites, but more properly Asæth or the Albist, the first who in those dark times of Ignorance absolutely denied that there was a God. Protagoras Deos in dubium vocavit, Diagoras excelsit, faith Lactantius of him. It is now called Milo, round in form, and containing 30 miles in compass. The Soil is sufficiently fruitful in Corn and Oyl, but defective in Wine. Here is great plenty of Marble, curiously bespotted, and no small store of Milstones; as also great quantities of Pitch and Brimstone, and some Sulphury or hot Springs good for many Diseases. The chief Town of it is called Milo also.

9. SERIPHUS, 20 miles from Delos, memorable of old for the Education of Perfius the Son of Danae. It is reported of this Island, that the Frogs bred there are naturally mute; but such as are brought from other places keep their natural tone: from whence, Proverbially, silent and stillen persons were called Rane Seriphe. It is now called Serphus or Serphone, a stony and rocky Island, and hath a Town of the same name.

10. CIA, by some called CEOS, and now Zea, opposite to the Promontory of Achaia called Sunium, in compass about 50 miles; made towards the West, in fashion of a Crescent or half-Moon; mountainous and hilly, except towards the North; by Pliny said to have been torn from Eubœa, by a sudden violence of the Sea, many men perishing in the waters. Of old times it was beset with three fair Towns; 1. Julis, 2. Carthæa, and 3. Careſtus: of which there is nothing now remaining.

Others there are whose names occur amongst the Ancients: as 11. Miconus, now called Mitoe; 12. Cylinus, now Cavro; 13. Siphnus, now Siphano; 14. Theraſia, now Santorini; 15. Cimolia, called formerly Echinusa, but now Pelino; 16. Oliarus, now Quinimio, 17. Sicætes.

cetus, now Sicino; 18. Polyeros, now Falconara; 19. Amorgos, now Morgo, one of the biggest of them all, but not else observable.

9. The SPORADES are so called from σπάρσας, spargo, ex quod in Mari ipse sunt, & non in Circulo circulo, because they lie dispersed and scattered, not formed into a Circle, as the Cyclades are. They are in number twelve. viz. 1. Anaphe, so called by the Argonauts, and the Argonauts Argonauts, because the Moon did suddenly, and beyond her natural course, appear unto them, then grievously distressed by Tempest. Apollo worshipped here is hence called Anapheus. It is now usually called Namfo. 2. Atypalea, now Stam-palia, in compass 88 miles, by some of the Ancients called Thou Trapeza, or the Table of the Gods. In Atypalea, the chief Town of it, was Apollo worshipped, from hence sometimes called Atypalea. 3. Helene, so called from that fair Greek Dame, whom Paris is here said to have first deflowered; now called Macronisi. 4. Los, fifteen miles from Naxos, where Homer is said to have been buried: But others find his Grave at Naxos, and some at Chios; the difference being almost as great about the place of his Burial as the place of his Birth. Then are 5. Lagusa, 6. Phocusa, 7. Phacusa, 8. Phloeandros, 9. Schinia, 10. Strybia; of little note either in Poetry or Story. And finally, 11. Thera, not far from Agina, before mentioned, formerly called Calistis, but named thus by Thera a Theban Gentleman, the Son of Ariston, conducting thither a Colony of Spartans and Mycians, (these last of Thessaly) cast out of Lemnos by Peleus in memory of whom, as the Founder of their Name and Nation, the Islanders used to celebrate an annual Feast. A Sedition after happening amongst this People, the weaker party, under the Conduct of one Battus, admonished so to do by the Oracle of Apollo, passed over into Africa, and there built Cyrene. The Birth-place of the Poet Callimachus, who ascribes his Original to this Island, as himself thus witnesseth,

Καλίδος ἀπογενέσθαι, τὸ δ' ὕψος ἔστω ὅσον
Μήτρον δ' ἴσθαι πατρὸς ἐκ ἡμετέρου.

That is to say,

Caliste, which men Thera now do call,
Of my dear Country the Original.

10. CTTHERA, now called Cerigo, lieth in the bottom of the Sea, not above five miles distant from Capo Madio in Polopemus; formerly called Porphyria, from the abundance of Marble, wherof the Island yields good plenty. It is in compass about 60 miles, enriched with a delightful Soil, and having many Heavens; but those small and unsafe, and very difficult of entrance. It is environed on all sides with Rocks, of themselves inaccessible, by which it is defended from the Turks, who hitherto have suffered the Venetians to enjoy it, to whom it fell in the division of the Spoil amongst the Latines, so often spoken of before. It had a Town of the same name: some two furlongs from the Haven stood the Temple of Venus, (the ancientest dedicated to that Goddess which the Grecians had) and therein her Statua in complete Armour, like another Pallas. Out of this Temple (the Ruines wherof are still to be seen) was Helen, the Wife of Menelaus, willingly ravished by Paris, the Son of Priam, but not enjoyed by him, till he had brought her to a small Island of the Sporades by her name called Helene, as before is said. From the Devotions of this People paid so duly to her, did Venus get the Adjunct of Cythera, by which she is often called in the Poets. Thus, for one, in Virgil,

Parce metu, Cytheraea, matrem immota iuvam
Fata tibi.

That is to say,

Drive Fear, fair Cythera, from thy mind;
Thou thy Son's Fate immovable shalt find.

And so I pass from the Aegean to the Cretan Sea, observing this only by the way, that most of the 69 Kings which accompanied Aegaeon in the War of Troy were Kings only of these small Islands; or else of other places as inconsiderable for wealth and Potency: every small Town and Territory having in those early times amongst the Grecians (when Ambition had not taught the Great ones to devour the less) a peculiar King.

9. The Islands of the CRETAN Sea.

THE CRETAN Sea is properly that part of the Aegean or Ionian Sea which lieth about the Shores of Crete, and formerly was under the Command and power thereof: as in those times, the Sea about Carpathus, another Isle of the Aegean had the name of Carpathian; and that about Icaria, the name of Iarian; though situate in the Aegean also. The Isles herof are, 1. Crete, 2. Claude, 3. Dia, and 4. Letoo; for Milio and Cimolia, named by Ptolemy against the Islands which adjoin on Crete, having been already spoken of amongst the Cyclades, in the account wherof they pass by consent of Writers.

1. CRETA, now Candie, hath on the East the Carpathian Sea, on the West the Ionian, on the North the Aegean, on the South the African or Libyck. In form it extendeth East and West with three Points or Promontories: wherof that towards the East, called anciently Santonium, is now called Capo di Salomone; that on the South-west, looking towards Africa, formerly named Hermæa, is now Capo Gabrassa; and finally, that on the North-West, towards Polopemus of old called Cimaris, is now called Capo Chelfin. This last is directly opposite to Malea, a Promontory of Laconia; the Sea betwixt them being so troublesome & tempestuous especially on Laconia side, that at last it grew into an ordinary Caveat, Maleam praterire vis obviscatum que sunt domi, viz. that he which was to sail by the point of Malea, should lay aside the care of all other matters, and attend his present Safety only.

It hath in several Ages and in several Authors obtained several names. By Homer and Aeschylus it is called Hecatomplis, from the number of an hundred Cities then contained in it: by Pliny and Solinus, Macaros, and Macaronia; that is to say, the happy Island from the goodness of the Soil and Temper of the Air: by Stephanus, Ida, from Ida a famous Mountain of it: by Giraldus, Telchinni, from the Telchinni, the Priests of Cybele, who was here had in great request. At the present it is called Candia, either Candore, from the Whiteness of the Rocks wherewith it is environed; or from Candia the Metropolis or chief Town thereof. But the general name which hath prevailed most in all sorts of Writers is that of Crete, so called quæ Curæ, by a Syncope or Abbreviation, from the Cureti, the first Inhabitants herof, who, together with the Corymbæes and Telchinni, where the Priests of Cybele the principal Goddess of this Island: and they so called in his nuptiis from their Tonsure or Shaving of the Head. A Custom much in use amongst the Priests of some of the Pagan Deities, and possibly enough from their transmittal to the Church of Rome: And to this Etymology I do rather incline, than either to derive the name from Crete, the Son of Jupiter, or the Nymph Ida, or from Crete the Daughter of Hesperus, though both these have their Authors also. Nor dare I to reject the Conceit of Baccharius, who, who, fetching the Etymons of most people from the Panck Language or Original, will have the Cretans to be descended from the Cerebites, a Nation of the Philistines, well known in Scripture; the word Cereb being abbreviated into Cretb, from which into Crete and Cretans is no difficult passage. But in my mind his Conjecture is better than his Proof. For though it may be granted without inconvenience that the chief Arms of the Philistines that the Cretans anciently were experts at those Weapons 1. Sun. 3. 1. 3. and also: yet this concludes no more that the Cretans are of the Race of the Philistines, than that almost all Nations the ordinary Weapons of most People formerly, till Custom and Experience trained them up to others of a later date; as he himself acknowledgeth in many places of his excellent and elaborate Tractates.

In reference to the Heavenly Bodies it is situate under the beginning of the fourth Climate, so that the longest Day in Summer is no more than 14 hours and a quarter: and in relation to the Earth, set in the middle of the Sea, at so even a distance from Europe, Asia, and Africa, as if it naturally designed to be what Aristotle hath pleased to call it, Lady and Mistress of the Sea. For it is distant from Polopemus an hundred miles, as many from Africa the less, and not above 150 from the Shores of Africa: so verifying that of Virgil, Creta Jovis magni medio iacet Insula Ponto.

Jove's Birth-place Crete, a fruitful Land,
In the middle of the Sea doth stand.

It is in length 270, in breadth 50 miles, in compass about 590. The Soil is very fruitful, especially of Wines which we call Muscadels, of which they transport yearly 12000 Butts, together with Sugar-Candy, Gums, Honey, Sugar, Olives, Dates, Apples, Oranges, Limons, Raisins, Melons, Citrons, Pomegranates. Yet, as other Countries of the like hot nature, it is not a little deficient in Corn; the most or greatest part of which is yearly brought thither from Polopemus.

The Island is very populous, inasmuch that it is thought that upon any sudden occasion the Signioury of Venice can raise in it 60000 men able to bear Arms. The people have formerly been good Sea-faring men, a Vertue commulated with many Vices, which they yet retain, as Envy, Malice, and Lying: to which last they are so infinitely addicted, that an horrible Lie was called proverbially Cretensis mendacium. This fault was aimed at by the Poet Epi-venides, a Native of this Island, whose words are thus cited by S. Paul to Titus, Chap. 1. v. 12.

Νήπιος δ' Ἀφρτάς, καὶ δόκλει, γότρους ἀέσει.
The Cretans always Liers are,
Unruly Beasts of Labour spare.

To which this Proverb may be added, viz. Tela kátrou nó-ten, that is to say, There are three Nations whose names begin with the letter K worse than any other, viz. Kátrou, Kátrou, Kátrou, the Cappadocians, Cretans, and Cilicians: though some, I know, apply this Proverb to the Cities of Corinth, Capua, and Carthage, beginning all with the same Letter, and all conceived to be very dangerous to the State of Rome. At this day they are hick of their old Difficacies, as great Liers and as Idle as ever formerly; Covetous withal, and very subtle, impatient of Labour, and not caring to learn any Science perfectly: only well practised in Shooting, to which they are accustomed from their youth, and therein thought more expert than the Turks themselves.

The Language generally spoken is the Greek Tongue; though the Gentlemen and Merchant, by reason of their Dependence on the State of Venice, speak Italian also. Both Languages are used also in Divine Offices: the people being generally of the Communion of the Church of Greece; but the Latin Service is used also in many places, since the Subjection of this Island to the Venetians. They were converted first into the Faith by S. Paul the Apostle, who, having planted the Gospel of Life amongst them, left the watering of it unto Titus, whom he made Bishop of this Isle; recommending unto him the Care of the Churches there: with power of Ordination and Ecclesiastical Censure: as appears clearly by the Text. Which power that it belonged to Titus as Bishop, and not as their Evangelist only, is affirmed expressly not only by the Subscription of the said Epistle, where he is plainly called ὁ Κρητικὸς ἐπίσκοπος, ἐπίσκοπος, the first Bishop of the Church of the Cretans; but by the concurrent Testimonies of Enseb. Eccl. Hist. 1. 3. c. 4. S. Amb. in Prefat. ad Tit. S. Hieron. in Tit. c. 1. v. 5. and in his Tract de Script. Ecclesiasticis, Theodoros, cited by Oecumen. in Prefat. ad Ep. Tit. Oecumenius himself in Tit. 1. and finally by Theophylact in his Preface to the same Epistle. All which in plain terms call him Bishop, and the Bishop of Crete; according to that sense and meaning of the word ἐπίσκοπος, as it was used in their times, distant from Presbiteriarches, which whilst wholly under the Greek State of Venice, there is but one Archbishop, which is he of Candia, the chief City; and eight Bishops only, besides the titular Patriarch of Constantinople, who hath there been always honoured with that empty Title ever since the Recovery of that City from the Western Christians.

Famous was this Island amongst the Ancients for many things memorized both by the Poets and old Historians. For here reigned Saturn in the first Ages of the World, Father of Jupiter, who was born here, and secretly nursed in the Hill called Ida. For seeing that, by the Compact betwixt Saturn and his Brother Titan, Saturn was to enjoy the Kingdom for his own Life only, but all his Male-children to be murdered as soon as born; Jupiter, by the care of his Mother Cybele, was conveyed away, and secretly nursed in Mount Ida, as before was said: the Crying of the Infant being drowned by the noise of loud-sounding Cymbals, purposely used by his Rockers to avoid Discovery. Whence afterwards by his Rockers to avoid of Cybele, used in her Sacrifices the like musical Instruments, continually sounding, and withal flaking of their Heads, (like Fiddlers) in an antick and ridiculous manner. Alluding whereunto thus the Poet Claudian;

Non te progenium Cybeleus Aure canoro
Lustravit Corybas.

That is to say,

No Cybelian Corymb that day
That thou was born did on his Cymbal play.

Here also lived Minos and Rhadamantus, whose Law were after imitated in the prime Cities of Greece, and who, for their Equity on Earth, are feigned by the Poets to be (together with Aeneas) the Judges in Hell. In this Island also lived the lewdly-lustful Pasiphae, Wife of Minos, who is fabled by the Poets (if it be a Fable) to have doated on a white Bull, who, they say, begat on her the Minotaur. Dadalus having framed for her an artificial Cow, into which the conveyed her self, and by that means obtained her desire. The Fable is thus expounded, that Pasiphae was in love with Taurus, one of Minos's Secretaries: whose company by the Pandarism of Dadalus the enjoining, was delivered of two Sons, one called Minos, the other Taurus, and whereas it is said that the Minos

Taur was slain by Theseus; like enough that the annual Tribute of 7 Children, which the Athenians paid to Minos, was laid up in some Prison, Minos and Taurus being the Keepers or Gaolers. As for the action of Pasiphaë, I think it not altogether impossible to be true, considering how Dionysius, to verify the old relation, exhibited the like beastly Spectacle in his Amphitheatre at Rome: for thus faith Marialis.

Justulus Pasiphaen Dictæo, credite Taurō
Jedimus; accipit Fabula prisca fidem.
Nec se miratur Cæsar longæva Vestustas:
Quicquid Fama canit, donat Arena tibi.
The Fable's prov'd a truth, our eyes did see
The Cretan Bull port with Pasiphaë.

What cause hath then Antiquity to glory?
We saw it done, the only heard the Story.

Finally, here was the so-much-celebrated Labyrinth, made by Dædalus for the including and safe-keeping of the Minotaurus; so full of various Windings and turnings, that when any one was got to the end thereof, it was impossible for him to come out but by the help of a Clew of thread. By his Minotaur (half a Man, half a Bull) the Children of the Athenians, paid yearly to Minos in way of Tribute, are said to be murdered, till he was killed by Theseus, Son of Aegæus King of Athens, with whom Ariadne the Daughter of Minos falling in love, taught him a means to kill the Monster, and gave him the Clew of thread, before spoken of, to conduct him out again: the Moral or History whereof hath been shewn before. Nor must it be forgotten, that Sirabo the Geographer, who flourished in the time of Tiberius Cæsar, was of Cretan Parents, (though born in the City of Anafira in the Realm of Pontus;) which adds unto this Island as much true Renown as any of the Fictions or Stories (be which they will) of former times.

Things most observable at the present are these that follow. 1. That it breeds no serpents, no venomous Worm, or ravenous or hurtful creature; so that their Speech grew very securely without any Shepherd. 2. If a Woman bite a Man any thing hard, he will hardly be cured of it: which if true, then the last part of the Priviledge foregoing (of breeding no hurtful creature) must needs be false. 3. They have an Herb called Alimos, which if one chew in his mouth he shall feel no Hunger for that day, if Quade may be believed, who speaks it. 4. Here is (besides many other medicinal Herbs) that called Diklammum, or Diklamum, of special virtue against Poison, either by way of Prevention or present Cure, peculiar only to this Island: it affordeth great store of Laudanum, a Juice or Gum forced with incredible labour out of a certain Tree called Cissus, of which the Mountains yield abundance; good to cause Sleep, if moderately or carefully taken; but if not very well prepared and taken with moderation, it brings the last Sleep upon a man, out of which he is not to be awakened till the Sound of the last Trumpet raise him.

Chief Mountains of it are, 1. Ida, now Pyloritis, situate in the midst of the Island, begirt about with many fair and pleasant Villages, sheltered by it from the violence of Wind and Sun; the Hill being so high, that from the Top hereof both sides of the Island may be easily seen. Here Jupiter is said to have been secretly nursed, from hence called Idæa. And at the bottom of it the Cretans use to shew some tracts of the ancient Labyrinth, being indeed no other then the Ruines of some larger Quarry: the Labyrinth made by Dædalus being so decayed in the time of Pliny, that he knew not where to find any Ruines of it. 2. Dictæ, now called Selvia, in some places Luffs, so high, that all the Winter long it is covered with Snow; yet all the sides thereof are garnished with Cypress-trees: a Mountain of such fame, that the whole Island sometimes had the name of Diklæa, the City Diklæa, the Promontory Diklæum, and the Herb Diklammus, all seeming to take name from hence. 3. Lenæi, a long Chain of Hills, so named from the Whiteness of them, now called di Madara, and by some La Spachia.

Rivers of any eminence here are few or none. The principal of those that be, are, 1. Nilopotamus, 2. Scaphius, 3. Epicedmus, and, 4. Divoiro, towards the North; 5. Populinar, towards the East; and 6. Limen, towards the West: none of them navigable; or capable of Ships of Burthen, scarce of little Barks. But that defect is supplied by the neighbouring Sea, which affordeth many Creeks and Bays, some capacious Havens, and great force of Fish, among which a kind of bearded Mullet, reckoned among the Delicacies of the ancient Romans. By the convenience of which Harbours, their Fish-trade, and the situation of it in the midst of the Sea, the People anciently were esteemed so good Sea-faring men, that when the people of those times did tax a man with any incredible report, they used to say, Cretensis nefcis Pelagus, meaning thereby the matter to be as improbable as for one of Crete to be no Sailor.

In former times there were reckoned in this Island a hundred Cities, whence it was called Hecatropolis; of which about 40 were remaining in the time of Ptolemy, for so many of their names he gives us. Those of most note were, 1. Gnosus, the Seat-royal or Court of Minos, whence Ariadne the Daughter of Minos had the name of Gnosia, in former times called Ceratus, from a little River or creek there running not far off. 2. Cydon or Cydonia, a rich City, (as the former) memorable for an excellent kind of Apples, which the Latines called Poma Cydonia, amongst them they were in great request, as they are at this day (though by the name of Adam's Apples) amongst the Turks: the most ancient of all the Cities of Crete, many of which were at first Colonies of this; for which reason it was called commonly Mater urbium. 3. Eleuthera, as Ptolemy, Erythræa, as the printed Copies of Florus corruptly call it; one of the first Cities taken here by the Romans. 4. Miletum, mentioned by Strabo, though omitted by Ptolemy; the place in which S. Paul left Timotheus sick, as it is mentioned 2 Tim. 4. 20, which happened when the Apostle hovered over that Coast, as is said Act. 27. 7, 8, &c. For that it could not be that Miletum to which he congregated the Elders of Ephesus, appears by his being at Hierusalem, Act. 21. 17. and other circumstances of the Story. 5. Gorynia, nigh to which stood the Labyrinth made by Dædalus: memorable also for a Reed, growing on the River Lenæus, (near to which it stood) of which they made their strongest Arrows, by Virgil Aeneid. 11. called Spicula Gorynia; as for a light Garment much used by Hunters, which Claudian calls Gorynia vestem, apprelling Diana the great Huntress with it. 6. Diklammum, as Ptolemy, or Diklæa, as Pliny calls it; so named from the Hill Diklæa, near to which it is situate: one of the chief Cities of the North part of this Island; as 7. Ampeles, so named from its plenty of Vines, was upon the South. 8. Minoa, a Port-town, (now Ameria) so named from Minos, in the East; and 9. Corymbæ, on a Promontory of the same name, in the West side of it.

But these, and almost all the rest spoken of by Ptolemy, being so destroyed by Time and Wars that the ruins of them are hardly visible, we must behold it in the present condition and estate thereof; divided into four parts or Provinces, according to the names and number of the four chief Cities; that is to say, 1. Sittia, 2. Candis, 3. Retimio, and 4. Canea.

In the first part, called SITTIA, lying towards the East, are 74 Villages, and but 17 Parishes, of which fix only are of the Church of Rome, the residue: hold-ding the Communion of the Church of Greece. The principal whereof are, 1. Sittia, or Cytia, conceived by some to be the Cyrene of Ptolemy, a small Town but populous, and very well fortified. 2. Gierapetra, betwixt Sittia and Candia, situate on the Sea-side, on a lofty Rock, at the bottom whereof is said to be a dangerous Whirl-pool, supposed to be the Panorua of Ptolemy. 3. S. Alacra, the dwelling-place of one of the Bishops of the Latines. 4. The second part hereof, called the Territory of CANDIA, lying directly West of Sittia, are reckoned 465 Towns and Villages, making up amongst them 99 Parish Churches, whereof 77 are of the Communion of the Church of Greece, the other 22 only of the Church of Rome. Of these the principal are, 1. Candia, an Archbishop's See, the Metropolis or Head City of the Island, which takes name from hence. It is situate on the North-coast hereof towards the Aegean, beautified with a safe and commodious Haven, and fortified so strongly, that it seems impregnable, affirmed by some to be the Mætinum of the Ancients; but I find no such place in Ptolemy, or in Orelinus his Thesaurus. The City is fair and large, built for the most part of Free-stone, with low Roofs, after the manner of Italy, the Streets broad and spacious from whence a fair and pleasant plain leadeth to a place called the Cave of Minos, reported by the common people to be the Sepulchre of Jupiter. 2. Malsifin, 3. Themene, 4. Cafel novo, 5. Bonifacio, 6. Belvedere, 7. Mirabello; of which little memorable.

3. In the third part, being the Territory of RETI-MO, formerly Rhibymina, lying North-west of the Territory of Candia, are accounted 265 Towns and Villages, making up 44 Parishes, whereof 36 are Grecians, and but 8 of the Latines. The chief of which are, 1. Retimo, on the Shore of the Northern Sea, as Candia is, well fortified, and a Bishop's See; but not else observable. 2. Milopotamus, an Episcopal See also, so called of the River Milopotamus, on which it is seated. 3. Agistiman, 4. Mandrus, 5. Lap-pa; hardly worth the naming.

4. In the fourth and last part hereof, being the Territory of CANEA, taking up all the West of the Island, are contained 240 Towns and Villages, distributed into 47 Parishes; of which 33 are of the Greek Church and the 14 remaining of the Church of Rome. Those of most note are, 1. Canea, built by a Colony or Plantation of Venetian Gentlemen, on the North coast also, supposed to stand in the same place where once Cydon did; second to none but Candia for Wealth and Beauty, but far before it for the commodiousness of the Port, commonly called Porto della Suda, capable of more than a thousand good Gallies at a time; and therefore strongly fortified with two Cittadels or Castles, on each side of the Haven one, as the Door and Entrance of the Country. 2. Chiflano, in Latine called Cissano, old and decayed, the Walls thereof only holding good against the Ruines of time; situate in a low Moorish place towards the Aegean. 3. Selino, built upon a Hill on the Sea-side, opposite to Chiflano. 4. Spachia, or Spachia, situate at the foot of the Mountains of old called Lenæi, now della Spachia, from this Town: unvalled, but fortified with a Castle; built for a place of Refuge against the Incursions of such Pirates as annoyed the Coasts, in which the Governour for this part hath his chief Abode. By which account it will appear that in the whole Island there are no more than 1044 Towns and Villages, and 207 Parish Churches of which there be but 48 which are accounted Members of the Church of Rome, the residue, 159 in number, retaining their Communion with the Church of Greece.

As for the Story of this Island, we can ascend as high as the times of Saurus, for his Antiquity affirmed to be the Son of Uranus and Phæa, or of Heaven and Earth; who, better favoured by his Mother obtained the Kingdom of Crete, his elder Brother Titan being quite excluded. Hereupon Wars arising betwixt the Brethren, it was ordered thus, That Saurus for his own Life should enjoy the Kingdom, which after his decease should return to the Titans; and for the performance of this Contract, the Sons of Saurus were to be strangled as soon as born. But Cybele the Wife of Saurus unawares to her Husband, preserved first Jupiter, and after other of her Sons, which coming to the knowledge of Titan and his Sons, they made War against Saurus, but in conclusion were subdued by the Aid of Jupiter: whence grew the Fable of the Titans warring against the Gods, Saurus and Jupiter his Son being after reckoned in that number. The Titans being vanquished, a new War arose betwixt Saurus and Jupiter, occasioned only (as many unnatural Wars since these times have been) by Envy and Jealousies: which ending at the last in the Flight of Saurus, Jupiter became sole King of Crete, reigning there in great power and honour till the time of his death; and dying was interred at Gnosus, with this Inscription or Epitaph in old Greek, Saurus. After his death he was worshipped by the blind Gentiles as the chief of their Gods, and honoured frequently with the Title of Idæus διδώτης τῶν δούτων the Father both of Gods and Men: though most incongruously and absurdly, as Lactantius noteth, there being many thousands living in and before the times of Saurus, when Jupiter was yet unborn. But to proceed; he being dead, Minos, begotten by him on Europa, succeeded here; who, wisely taking the advantage which the convenience situation of the Island gave him, made himself Master of the Seas, and afterwards enlarged his Dominions by the Conquest of the Ægean and Athenians, upon which last he imposed, amongst other hard Conditions, a Tribute of seven Male Children yearly to be kept as Hostages, which determined after three years by the Valour and good Fortune of Theseus. But Minos being slain in Sicily and his Posterity extinct, the Cretans would no longer of a Commonwealth or Free State: The Laws and Ordinances whereof, first devised by Minos, were of such esteem that they were much imitated by Lycurgus, and are at large described by Aristotle in the 2. Book of his Politics, ch. 8. Under the Government it continued till the Romans, having taken in all the rest of Greece, picked a Quarrel with them. For though it was pretended that they had been aiding unto Mithridates in his War against Rome; yet Florus states the matter rightly, affirming that the War was undertaken on no other ground, but sola nobilitas Insularum vicendi cupiditate, out of a covetous desire only of subduing such a wealthy Island. And to this War they went with so proud a Confidence, that M. Anthony, who commanded in it, carried more Chains with him to bring home his Prisoners then Arms to conquer them. An Infolence which he paid right dear for, his Navy being vanquished by the Cretans, the bodies of his slain Souldiers hanged upon the Masts, and himself perishing in the Action by a fit of Sickness. Antyllus, who succeeded him in that charge, went on more successfully, first taking Gnosus, Eleuthera, or (Erythræa, as Florus calls it) and Cydon, their principal Cities, and not long after all the Island; using the vanquished Islanders with such Inhumanity, that most of them poisoned themselves to avoid his Cruelty: rewarded with no other Honour for so great a Victory, than that he got the surname of Creticus; his Triumph being denied by the Faction of Pompey, against which he had put himself upon that Service. This being added by the Roman Empire, it was after united unto Cyrenica by Augustus Cæsar.

both making up one Province only, governed by a Proconsul till the death of Nero; afterwards separated from it, but the time I find not. During the Reign of Constantine, in 36 years between there fell no Rain, so that this Island was in a manner wholly defoliated. But Helena, the Mother of Constantine, having obtained Rain for it by her prayers to God, it was again new peopled by several Colonies brought out of Egypt, Syria, Greece, and the parts adjoining. By Constantine made a Province of the Diocese of Macedonia, it continued a Member of the Eastern Empire till the time of Michael Palaeologus, when it was subdued by the Saracens; from them recovered by the more fortunate conduct of Nicephorus Phocas, who came unto the Empire, Anno 963. In the division of the Spoil amongst the Latines, it was first given to Boniface Marquis of Monferrat; by him surrendered willingly to the State of Venice, who had a mind to be possessed of all the Islands of that Empire: he being recompensed with the Kingdom of Thessaly, the fair and wealthy City of Thessalonica, and many Towns and Territories in Peloponnesus. Under that State it still continueth, in vain attempted by Selinus the second in the year, 1571, at what time he invaded and conquered Cyprus and gallantly defended for this year last past against all the Forces of Turkey the late Grand Scignior. What the Success of this War will be, we shall see hereafter.

For the Defence hereof against the Injurments of the Inhabitants, who did at first ill brook the Venician Government, there are some standing Forces kept in constant pay; besides such as are maintained in several Garrisons, the City of Canea having in it no fewer than six Companies of Soldiers, Candia 2000 Soldiers, and the lesser Cities proportionably: over which there is set forth a Guard, that a Natural Cretan is not permitted to enter weaponed into any of them. And for the preservation of their Interest in it from foreign Power, they have furnished the Island with 70 or 80 Gallies for the defence of the Shores; and have exceedingly fortified the Haven of Suda with two strong Castles, this Haven being capable of more than 100 Vessels, and therefore meritoriously reputed the Door and entry into the Country. It is reported that the King of Spain, Phillip the second, did offer unto the Venicians for this Haven money more than enough; but it could not be accepted. For though the Spaniards seemed only to intend the Retreat and relief of his own Navy when he should undertake any Expedition against the Turk; yet the Venicians saw, that by this Haven he might at all times awe, and when he listed surprize, the whole Country.

II. The other Islands of this Sea; as of lesser note, will be pass'd over in few words. The first of which is called CLAUDE, mentioned Ald. 27. 16. situate on the South-west of Crete, by Mela called Gaulos; wherein in Pliny's time was a Town or City named Gaudos, now called Gozo, with the Island. 2. DIA, now Standa, a very small Island, and of little note. 3. LETOA, on the South-east of Crete, now called Christina. And 4. AGILIA, or Regidia, by Pliny Agilia, mer: in the Sea towards Peloponnesus; now called Ceceri; so by Sophianus. Of which and others of less note (if less may be) there is no more to be said, but that they have always followed the Fortunes of Crete, on which they seem to have their principal Dependence.

10. The Islands of the IONIAN Sea.

THE IONIAN Sea is so called either from Ionia, the Son of Dryobachius, whom Heracles having ignorantly killed threw into this Sea, giving that name unto it to preserve his memory, as Diodorus is of opinion, or from Ionia a Region in the Extremity of Calabria, as Solinus; or from Io, the Daughter of Jacchus, as Lycophron the Poet hath it. It containeth all the part of the Mediterranean which lyeth from the Argolis or Cretan Seas unto the Adriatick, from which it is parted about Epidamnus, (otherwise called Dyrrhachium): as is said by Protemy; or rather at the footing out of the Alpevranian Hills, as is affirmed by Pliny and other Writers; and so along the shores of the two Calabria's to the Isle of Sicily. Chief Isles whereof which pertain in the account of Greece (for the thereof lying on the Coast of Italy we have spoken elsewhere) are, 1. the Strophades, 2. Zacynthus, 3. the Echinades, 4. Cephalenia, 5. Corcyra, and 6. Ithaca.

1. THE STROPHADES are two small Islands, now called Strivadi, lying against Misene in Peloponnesus, famous for nothing but the Harpyes, ravenous Birds, affirmed to have the faces of Women, but the Talons of Vultures, sent by the offended Gods (as the Fable goes) for the punishment of Phineas King of Arctia, who had put out the Eyes of his Sons by a former Wife at the instigation of their Stepdame: For which he was so plagued by these Harpyes, that he could sit no Meat on his Table wherefore he was, but these ravenous creatures first devoured it, and then bewrayed the Dishless which it was. Much pitted by the Argonauts, when he had courteously entertained, they sent Zethus and Cadmus, the winged Illite of Boreas and Oribylis, who drove them thence, and having pursued them to those Islands, turned back again: whence the name of Strophades. Under which Fable was conveyed the sad condition of ignorant or unhappy Princes, devoured by Flatterers, Informers, and false Accusers, by whom their name and Government was made distastful, till by good Council they had purged their Courts of such ugly Monsters: concerning which Alphonsus King of Naples was used to say, that these Harpyes had left the Strophades and dwelt at Rome. They are inhabited only by some few Greek Fishers: and in one of them there is a Spring of Fresh Water, which hath his Fountain in Peloponnesus, and passing under the Sea riseth here. The Greek Priests are called Caloires, quasi καλοὶ ἱερεῖς boni Sacerdotes; about 30 in number. They wear long Hair, never cut Filch, and but seldom Filch, feeding usually on Herbs, Olives, Oyl, and the like. They never go out of the Islands, neither do they on any occasion permit Women to come amongst them. They all labour for their Sustainance, some in Tillage, some in Vineyards, some in Fishing; so that among very many of them, three or four only can read. But of these somewhat hath been said elsewhere already.

2. ZACYNTHUS, or Zant, is 60 miles in compass, and distant from Peloponnesus 20 miles, so called of Zacynthus, Son to Dardanius. The Country is wonderfully stored with Oyl, Wines and Currants: of which last they made yearly 150000 Zecechins for their own Coffers, and 48000 Dollars which they pay for Customs to the Seigniorship of Venice. They were a very poor people when the English used to traffick there first; but now they grow rich and proud. At our Merchants first frequenting the Country, they much marvelled to what end they bought so many Currants: and demanded whether they used to dye Cloaths or fat Hogs with them, for so they themselves did: but now they have learned a more profitable use of them. Here are also very good Salt-pyres, Fresh water plenty, but little or no Wood, and less Corn: their ground being husbanded, as the case stands with them, to their better advantage; but to that many times they are ready to starve, if either the Wind or the Sea prove crofts unto them, and hinder them from fetching their Provisions both of Flesh and Corn out of Peloponnesus, in which respect they are fain to hold fair Quarter with the Turks, considering how easie it is for him to distress them for want of Victual. The Island is much troubled with Earthquakes, commonly once a week, in regard whereof they build their Houses very low; and when they perceive them coming, the Priests are to ring the Bells, to stir the people to Prayers. They have a Custom here at Weddings to invite many young men, whom they call Compeers, of which every one giveth the Bride a Ring: which done, it is accounted as detestable a Sin as Incest for them to accompany her in any carnal kind: and therefore they chuse such to be their Compeers who have formerly been suspected of too much Familiarity with her.

The Island is very populous and well inhabited, but the people of a spiteful and vindictive nature, not to be reconciled, if angered. It containeth in it 48 Towns and Villages, the chief whereof, which passeth by the name of a City, is called also Zant, stretched out about the length of a mile on the foot of a mountain, but in breadth not answerable; beautified with a fair and convenient Haven opening towards Greece, safe from the danger of Pirates, though not of Winds, capable of great Fleets of shipping both for bulk and number, and so frequented from all parts, that he who hath a mind to go out of it need not stay for a passage. Yet, notwithstanding this great Concurrence and resort of Strangers, the Town is rather rich than well-built or beautiful; the Streets hereof being uneven and rugged, and the Buildings by reason of the often Earthquakes, very low. On the East side of it, on a round steep Mountain, standeth a very strong Castle, a little City of it self, well garrisoned, impregnable fortified, and of a very difficult Entrance: which commandeth not the City and Harbour only, but a great part of the Sea adjoining. Upon the Wall thereof continually stands a Watchman, to descry what Shipping is at hand, and hangeth out as many Flags as he discovereth Vessels. And over the Door of the Town-Hall (the better to instruct the Magistrates in their publick Duty) it is said these Verses are inscribed:

His locus 1. odii, 2. amari, 3. punis, 4. conservati, 5. honorati, 1. Nequitiam, 2. Pæcem, 3. Crimina, 4. Jura, 5. Probos.
Thus Enlightened by George Sandys, whence I had the Latine. This place doth 1. hate, 2. love, 3. punish, 4. keep, 5. requite, 1. Voluptuous Riot, 2. Peace, 3. Crimes, 4. Laws, 5. the Upright.

In matter of Religion, the people, being generally Greek both in Birth and Language, are for the most part of that Church also; but some adhere unto the Latine, each party having their own Bishop: of which the Greek Bishop hath his Cathedral in the Church of S. Nicholas, near unto the Haven which it gives name to, and therein a Monastery of Caloires, or Monks of Basil; the Latine Bishop hath his Residence and Cathedral within the Castle, and therein a Convent of Franjiscans. The Jews have in this Town their Synagogue also; but there are not many of them, if not lately increased. In Civil matters they are subject to the State of Venice, the Governour hereof (whom they call the Providore) having his Residence in the Castle, assisted by a Chanceller and two Counsellors (all Gentlemen of Venice) whom they change every third year. The Fortunes of this Island in former times, and by what means it fell to the Venicians, we shall shew anon.

3. The ECHINADES are certain little Islands, or rather great Rocks, now called Cmzolari, famous for nothing but the great Battel of Lepanto, fought nigh them betwixt the Venicians and the Turks; the Turks having in their Navy 207 fail of Ships, the Venicians and their Confederates but 145 of all sorts. But it pleased God to give the Victory to the weak: the Issue of it being such, that the Turks lost 29000 men who were killed in the Fight, 29000 more which were taken prisoners 140 of their Gallies, 400 pieces of Ordnance, and 200 Christian Captives which were then redeemed: the Christians buying abouts; too great a price, could it have been purchased with a less. A Victory obtained not far from the point of Allium, wherein Augustus overcame the Navy of Marcus Antonius, and thereby got the Empire to himself alone, of which before he was but Joint-tenant with his Adversary. So that this place seems to be marked out for a Stage of eminent Actions; and that this latter Naval fight was but the second part of the first.

But to return unto these Islands. They stand just against the Mouth of the River Achelous, of which stands the Poet, Tibulds object at Achelous Echinas exuv.

Fierce Achelous with the Sea is mixt

Where the Echinades (great Rocks) are fixt: These Islands are in number five, feigned by the Poets to be fo by many Naiades or Sea Nymphs, whom Achelous the River-God upon some displeasure metamorphosed into these Rocky Islands. But the truth is; that they were caused by the Dirt and Mud which this River carried with it into the Sea, where at last is settled to firm Grounds. Of which himself faith thus in Ovid,

Fluctus nostrigque marique

Continuum deducti humum, pariterque revelis
In totidem mediis quo cernis Echinas undas.
The fury of the Sea-waves and mine own Continual heaps of Mud and Earth drew down; Which, parted by the inter-running Seas, Made, as thou seest, these five Echinades.

5. CEPHALENTIA, the most populous Island of this Sea, is situate over against Acarnania, part of the Province of Epirus; having on the South-east Zant, on the North-west Corcyra or Corfu; in length containing 80 miles, 40 in breadth, the whole compass being reckoned at 160. Once called Tetrapolis, from the number of four Cities in it; but three of them were decayed in the time of Protemy, who takes notice of no more but one, and that of the same name with the Island. It is woody and mountainous in most places, but the Mountains intermix with Valleys and the Woods with Campain: plentiful in Wheat, Honey, Currans, Manne, Oyl, incomparable, though not long-lasting, Muskadeles; as also in Cheefe, Wool, Turkeys, and Powder for the dying of Scarlets. So deftitute of Water, as having no River; and not many Fountains, that when their Cattel would drink, they gape both morning and evening to receive the Dew distilling insensibly from the Clouds.

The People are for the most part Greek; some few Italians, naturals of the Seigniorship of Venice, being intermixt: the whole number of the Inhabitants computed at 6000 Families, the number of the Towns and Villages to 200 or thereabouts. The principal whereof are, 1. Cephalenia, now Cefalonia, fortified with good Works, and a very strong Castle. 2. Argosoli, a Haven-town, distant six miles from Cefalonia: the Port whereof is capable of a sufficient Navy. 3. Sidra, another Port-town also, lying towards the South.

As for the Fortunes of this Island, it was first called Melana, after Telebo; and being known by that name was made subject to Thebes, by the Valour and good Conduct of Amphitryo, the Theban General, by whom Pteridates, the King thereof, was slain in Battell. During which War, and the Stay of Ambrosius in this Island, it happened that Cephalus, a noble Athenian, having by misadventure killed his Wife Procris with an Arrow which he shot at a Deer, not daring to abide in his own Country, fled unto Ambrosius his old Friend, then newly victorious over the Teleboans; who, pitying his case, made him the Governour of this Island, since, from his name, called Cephalonia. Having continued for some time in the power of the Teleboans, it passed, together with Zant and some other Islands, into the hands of the Macedonians; from whom, in the declining of their Affairs, the Athenians got the Isle of Zant, and the Ætolians Cephalonia. But long they had not held them when the Romans began to look towards Greece, who under colour of setting the Continent at liberty, made themselves Masters of both the Islands, that so they might at leisure possess the whole, as in fine they did. In the Division of the Empire they fell, as parts of Greece, to the Constantinopolitans: and on the taking of that City by the Western Christians, they fell, with almost all the rest of the Islands, to the State of Venice, the Governours whereof, retaining Corfu and some other of most Importance in the hands of the Seignior, permitted these (as many other of less note) unto private Adventurers. At the conclusion of the Peace between Mahomet the Great and the State of Venice, these two, with Neritos, or Leucas, (spoken of in Epirus) were seized on by that Tyrant in despite of that Treaty or Conclusion, as belonging unto private persons, not to the Republick: but were recovered afterwards by the Venetians in the Reign of Bajazet the second, in the name of the State; and as parts thereof are still governed and defended by them.

5. CORCYRA, (now CORFU) more anciently was called Phœcia; but took this latter name from a Nymph so called, whom Neptune is reported to have here deflowered. It is situate over against Epirus, from thence 12 miles distant, stretched out from East to West in the form of a Bow, the length thereof being 54 miles, 24 the breadth; and so it is the biggest of the 7e Seas. Communionly seated for the Trade and Estate of Venice, as the Centre of their Dominion and Command by Sea.

The Southern parts hereof are mountainous and defective in Water, much subject to be blown with Southernly Winds; and therefore they grow little Corn, and plant less Fruits. The Northern parts are level and delightful, adorned with whole Groves of Limons, Oranges, Fig-trees, Olives, and Pomegranates; enriched with plenty of Grain, abundance of Wines, great store of Oyl and Olives, and much excellent Honey; blest with a very temperate and healthful Air, made odoriferous by most pleasant and sweet-smelling fruits, which grow most plentifully in each part hereof. Alcinous, who to court-cousily entertained Ulysses after his Shipwreck, was once King of this Iland; whose Gardens, answerable to the natural Delights and Sweetness of it, are so much celebrated by the Poets. One of which thus

Which may be Englisht in these words,

Why should I name Alcinous fertile Ground,
 A Tree which never without Fruit are found?

And Trees which never without Fruit are found?
Towns of most note and strength herein are, 1. Pa

gipoli, 2. Castello S. Angelo, of good esteem in respect of many others, but far short of 3. Corfu, the chief and strongest of the Island, which the Turks have found by their frequent Repulses to be impregnable. For it is situated at the foot of a Mountain, on the top of which are built two inaccessible Fortresses, as being strongly fenced with a natural Rock; the one called the old Forts, and the other the New: justly effected the chief Bulwarks of Venice, whose Trade and Power would soon decay should their Forts be lost. For which cause the two Governors (for each Fort hath one) are sworn before the State of Venice, never to hold Intelligence with one another by word or writing; lest by the Treachery of the one, the other might be wrought also from his Faith and Duty. Neither is their Command here for more than two years; their Commission then terminating, and new Successors being sent them. The Town is inhabited for the most part by Gracians, as is all the remainder of the Island; united with one of the most commodious Havens in all the Adriatick, and the Residence of an Archbishop. A Town of free publick Consequence, in regard of the Strength and Situation, that it is accounted of as the Key of Europe, and one of the strongest Bulwarks of Christianity, against the Encroachment of the Turks. The Story of it since dismembered from the Eastern Empire, at the taking of Constantinople by the Latines, we have said before.

6. ITHACA, now called Val de Comps, lieth on the North-east of Cephalonia, being in compass 50 miles: most famous for the Birth of Ulysses, the Son of Laertes, of which thus the Poet ;

Effugimus scopulos Ithacæ Laertia Regni,
Et terram alticem savi exscramur Ulyssis.
 From th' Ithacan Rocks Laertes Realm, we fled,
 And curs'd the Land which dire Ulysses bred.

It was also called Dulichium, or else there was some other Island of that name, not far from Ithaca whereof Ulysses was also King, who is hence called Dulichium Heros among the Poets : and in this Taunt of Ajax to him, Dulichium signifies the Head of Ulysses.

Sed neque Dulichius sub Achillis casside, Vertex

Pondera tanta ferat.
 Achilles Helm's too great a weight, I trow.

*Achilles Helm's too great a weight, I trow,
For weak Ulysses' Head to undergo.*

But as weak a man as Achilles thought him, he was the Master-Wit of Greece for the times he lived in, and one that did as good Service in the War of Troy as the best Sword-man of them all. A War to which he went foremost unwillingly, as fearing the bad Consequences and evils thereof; inasmuch that he feigned himself mad, ploughed the Shore, and sowing Salt instead of Corn. But Protesilaus, to make trial whether this was real, or but counterfeited only, cast young Telemaclus, the Son of Odysseus, before the Plough, which he observing, either drove the Plough besides him, or lifted it over him. Discovered by this means, and engaging with the rest in the Trojan War, he found out the Design of Thetis, and brought Achilles to it also: in the course whereof by his Wit and Courage, he did very good Service; associated with Dionides in the action against Rhesus King of Thrace; and with Palamides in foraging the Country for Provisions. By his Policy was the Palladium stoln out of Troy, and consequently the City taken and destroyed, whose Fate depended on the preservation of that fatal Relick. After the ending of the War, which held out ten years, he was withheld from Iliaca ten years longer by Winds and Tempests and the Displeasure of the Gods which favoured Troy; in which he lived himself from the Incantments of the Sirens, the Allurements of Circe, the Cruelty of Phryxiphenes, and after many Dangers came home in safety. A man of so compleat a Virtue, that Homer maketh him the Pattern of a Temperate and Prudent man in the Books called Odyssey, (by his name, as the Greeks pronounce it;) as he doth Achilles, in his Iliads, of a courage and perfect Soldier.

The Country is generally very rocky and barren, exceeding plentiful of Goats, but no Hares live in it; inhabited for the most part by Pirates and Exiles, men banished out of civil Society, and willingly acknowledging no Superior over them; but subject, if to any, to the State of Venice, which hitherto hath maintained these Islands against the Turks, though many times attempted by them in the most prosperous times of their Arms and Victories. For the Venetians being gratified, at the taking of Constantinople by the *Latin*es, with almost all the Islands of the Ægean and Ionian Seas, (as being a People strong in Shipping, and so most able to preserve the Possession of them) some of the greatest and most considerable, either for their Riches or commodiousness of Situation, were furnished with convenient Garrisons in the name of the State. The rest they left below on the better sort of Citizens, to be defended and made good at their own Cost and Charges; who accordingly possessed themselves of one, two, or more of them, as they were of ability to fet out their Gallies for the keeping of them: the Seigniority having nevertheless a Care of all, and to that end keeping a Fleet at Sea continually under one of their Admirals; whereby they did not only preserve those Seas from the Genoa Pirates, but for a long time defended all their Islands also, as well against the Greeks as the Turkish Emperours. But all the Isles of the Ægean being lost to the Turks, except Cythera and Tenos on the European, and Carpobos or Scarpanto on the Asian side; they have now only Crete with the Isles adjoining, and those of the Ionian Sea under their Command, and these (but specially the Isle Crete) endangered at the present by the Turkish Tyrant.

Thus having taken a view of the several Provinces and Isles which belong to Greece, according to the ancient and present state of each particular : let us next take a view of the Græciæ Emperours, who have had their principal Residence, and possessed the whole (though for a while their Empire was extended over all the East) as they here follow in this ensuing Catalogue of

The CONSTANTINOPOLITAN,
GRÆCIAN, or Eastern Emperours.

331 1. Constantine, surnamed the Great, having reigned 12 years in Rome, translated his Imperial Seat to Constantinople, which himself had founded.

241 2. Constantinus, the second Son of Constantine, in the Division of the Empire, had for his Partage Thrace, Constantinople, and all the Provinces of the East. After the death of his two Brethren he remained sole Emperour, but refused for the most part in the East; a great Patron of the Arians, and as great a Persecutor of the Orthodox Christians.

366 3. Julian, surnamed the Apostate, Son of Constantinus the Brother of Constantine the Great; at first a Christian, afterwards a professed Enemy of the Gospel: fortunate in his Wars against the Almans, Franks, and other Transalpine Nations, whilst he was a Christian; prodigiously slain in the Persian War, When become a Persecutor.

368 4. Jovian, or Jovinnian, chosen by the Army, a Religious Prince, made Peace with the Persians, and settled the Affairs of the Christian Church: who being dead, Valentinian, one of mean Birth, but great Abilities in War, 369 5. Valens, the Brother of Valentinian, made Partner in the Empire with him, ruled in Constantinople and the East; Valentinian taking more delight in Rome and the Western parts. A great Patron of the Arian Faction, and the first who brought in the Goths on this side of the Danube, whom he placed in the desert parts of Thrace; to the Destruction of the Empire, and himself to boot.

382 6. Gratian, the eldest Son of Valentinian, succeeded his Father in the West, and his Uncle Valens in the East, after whose death he left Italy and the Wetito Valentinian his younger Brother. Disfellowed by the Goths, he made Theodosius Partner in the Empire with him, and was treacherously murdered by Andragathus, at the appointment and command of the Tyrant Maximus.

383 7. Theodosius, a Spaniard born, revenged the death of Gratian on the Tyrant Maximus, and of Valentinian the 2. on the Traitor Engenius. He vanquished the Goths, utterly suppress the Pagan Superstitions, which till his time continued even in Rome it self, and strengthened the Church of Christ with good Laws and Ordinances.

399 8. Arcadius, the eldest Son of Theodosius, succeeded his Father in the East, as his Brother Honorius did in the West: the Roman Empire after this last Division of it being so distracted and torn in pieces, that it was never since united.

412 9. Theodosius II. Son of Arcadius, made Peace with the Goths, whom he employed against the Huns and Persians; his more dangerous Enemies, and caused the Ephesine Council to be called against Nestorius.

454 10. Mariannus, Lieutenant to Theodosius, succeeded his Master, and married with Pulcheria his Master's Sister. He called the Council of Chalcedon against Dioscorus.

461 11. Leo, a Thracian born, elected by the joint consent of the Senate and Soldiery, sitting in the Council of Chalcedon; the Acts whereof he approved and ratified.

478 12. Zeno, the Son-in-law and Lieutenant of Leo, sent Theodorick and the Goths into Italy against Odoacer. A Tyrant and a great Drinker; in one of his Drunken Fits buried quick by his Emperors. In his time Constantinople was almost wholly destroyed by Fire; in which perished, amongst other things, 120000 Volumes of good Manuscripts.

497 13. Anastafius, a mean Officer of the Court, by the power and favour of the Emperors created Emperor: a great Patron of Euseyche, yet fortunate in his Wars against the Persians and Arabians. In his time Constantinople, besieged by the Scythians, was likely to have fallen into great Diftress, if Proclus, a Famous Mathematician, like another Archimedes, had not fired their Gallies.

514 14. Justin, the Son of a Thracian Shepherd, and Captain of the Guard unto Anastafius; a Catholic Prince, and Patron of the Orthodox Clergy, whom he called from Banishment.

528 15. Justinian, the Sister's Son of Justinus, with whom he was at first Consort in the Empire, recovered Africa from the Vandals by his

- rius, and Italy from the Goths by Narjes; and finally reduced the Laws of Rome into form and method.
- 566 16. Justin II. Nephew of Justinian, intreated the Exarchate of Ravenna, and lost a great part of Italy to the Lombards. Unable of himself to oppose the Persian, he chose
- 577 17. Tiberius, one of his chief Commanders, to be Confort with him, who afterwards succeeded in the sole Command.
- 584 18. Maurice, a Cappadocian born, fortunate in his Wars against the Persians, from whom he recovered Mesopotamia in the time of Tiberius, by whom at his return he was married to Constantina his Daughter, and declared his Successor. Refusing to ransom some of his Soldiers, taken Prisoners by Caganus King of the Avars, he lost the Affections of his Army.
- 604 19. Phocas, a common Soldier, in a military Tumult chosen Emperor, murdered the Emperor Mauritius, with his Wife and Children, and made Pope Boniface Supreme Bishop or Head of the Church: slain in a popular Tumult by the Common people for his Lufts and Cruelties.
- 611 20. Heraclius, a Nobleman of Constantinople, chosen by the general consent, repaired the Ruines of the Empire, vanquished the Persians, recovered Hierusalem out of their hands: and brought home the Cross unto Constantinople in triumphant manner; whence the Feast called Exaltatio Crucis, September 14. In his time Mahomet began to disperse his Dorages.
- 641 21. Constant, or Constantine II. Son of Heraclius, unfortunate in his Wars against the Saracens, who prevailed in all places. Picking a Quarrel with the Romans, he defaced Rome, robbing it of all the choicest Ornaments which the Goths and other barbarous people had left; and ransacking the Isle of Sicily, was there slain by the Women.
- 670 22. Constantinus III. Son of the former Constantine, from his long or early Beard surnamed Pogonatus, repulsed the Saracens from Constantinople, but could not hinder the Bulgarians from passing over the Danov.
- 687 23. Justinian II. Son of Constantine the 3. subdued Mesopotamia, Armenia, and some part of Persia, forcing the Saracens to sue for Peace, and become his Tributaries. Against whom Leontius on the one side, and Aspasmus on the other, severally taking Arms; were declared Emperours. Justinian, taken by Leontius, hath his Nose cut off, and his person committed to Custody: but making an Escape, by means of Trebellin King of the Bulgarians, recovered his Imperial Dignity; and being too violent in the pursuit of his Revenge, was finally murdered at the Altar by the command of
- 713 24. Philippus Bardanes, Admiral of his Navy, elected Emperor by the Soldiers, a great enemy of Images, which he caused to be cast out of the Church, thereby incurring the Displeasure of
- 715 25. Anastasius II. called also Artemius, his principal Secretary, who thrust himself into the Empire; forced to relinquish it by that Army which he had raised against the Saracens: in which Tumult the City of Constantinople was sacked and spoiled.

- 717 26. Theodosius III. made Emperor in this Tumult by the Soldiers, hearing of the Approach of Leo, Commander of the Eastern Armies, resigned the Empire, and took Orders to preserve his Life.
- 718 27. Leo Isaurus, in whose time Caliph Zuleiman besieged Constantinople the space of three years, and when by Cold and Famine 30000 of the Saracens were destroyed, they desisted. At this Siege was that Fire invented which we, for the violence of it, call Wild-Fire; and the Latines, because the Greeks were the Authors of it, Græci ignis: by which the Saracens Ships were not a little molested. He was also a great Enemy to Images, and for this cause hated by the Pope and Clergy of Rome, who gave him thereupon the Nick-name of Iconomachus.
- 741 28. Constantinus IV. Son of Leo, surnamed Copronymus, for that when he was baptized he bewrayed the Font, followed his Father's Zeal in removing Images, which created him much Trouble, one Artabardus being chosen Emperor against him, but at last defeated.
- 777 29. Leo III. Son of Constantine Copronymus, honoured with the Adjunct of Porphyrogenitus, but commonly called Leo the 4. (Leontius the Usurper (as I conjecture) being reckoned for one;) an enemy to Images, and fortunate in his Wars against the Saracens.
- 782 30. Constantine V. the Son of Leo and Irene, first governed the Empire with his Mother, by whom at last supplanted, and deprived of Sight, he died of Melancholy.
- 798 31. Irene, Wife of Leo the 3. first Confort with Constantine her Son, and afterwards sole Empress of Constantinople: for her better support in which Estate she sided with the Popes of Rome, and called the second Council of Nice for defence of Images. In her time Charles, surnamed the great, was by the Pope and People of Rome created Emperor of the West, for the Popes, knowing their own Greatness to grow out of the Ruines of the Temporal Power, committed the Empire of the West unto the French Princes: whereby the Greek Emperours became much weakened; and the French, being the Pope's Creatures, were in tract of time brought to their Devotion. In following times, when Fredrick Barbarossa was by Pope Alexander the 3. pronounced non-Emperor, Emanuel of Constantinople sued for a Re-union of the Empires: but the crafty Pope returned this Answer, Non licere illi conjungere que majores ejus de industria disjunxerunt: Let no man presume to joyn what the God of Rome, the Pope, hath put asunder.
- 803 32. Nicephorus a Patrician, made Emperor by the Soldiers, persuaded that Irene had made choice of him to be her Successor: slain in a pitch Field against the Bulgarians.
- 812 33. Michael, surnamed Cyropalates, from his Office, (the Adior of the Palace, as it were) Husband to Procopia, the Daughter of Nicephorus, assumed the Empire, which, siding his own Weakness, he did soon relinquish, and betook himself unto a Monastery.

- 814 34. Leo V. surnamed Armenius, from his Country, General of the Horse to Michael, demolished the Images; which his Predecessors had set up. He was slain in the Church during the time of divine Service.
- 821 35. Michael II. surnamed Baltus, having murdered Leo, assumed the Empire, unfortunate in his Government, and died of Madness.
- 830 36. Theophilus, the Son of Michael Baltus, an enemy of Images, like his Father, and as unfortunate as he; losing many Battels to the Saracens, at last he died of Melancholy.
- 842 37. Michael III. Son of Theophilus, first ruling with his Mother Theodora, who took unto herself the supreme Command; and after of himself sole Emperor, his Mother being made a Nun.
- 866 38. Basilus, surnamed Macedo, from the place of his Birth, made Confort in the Empire by Michael the Son of Theophilus, whom he basely and treacherously murdered; killed casually by a Stag.
- 886 39. Leo VI. for his Learning surnamed Philosophus, the Son of Basilus, a vigilant and provident Prince: most of his time, with variable Success, was spent against the Bulgarians.
- 912 40. Constantine VI. commonly called the VII. Son of Leo Philosophus, first under his Uncle Alexander, next under Zoe his Mother, and after under Romanus Lacapenus, governed the Empire; by which last he was so miserably depressed that he was fain to get his livelihood by Painting, but Lacapenus being deposed and turned into a Monastery by his own Sons, Constantine at last obtained his Rights, and restored Learning unto Greece.
- 961 41. Romanus, the Son of Constantine.
- 963 42. Nicephorus, surnamed Phocas, first Governor or Protector of the young Emperor Romanus; after whose death, created Emperor by the Army, he recovered Antioch, Cilicia, and the greatest part of Asia minor, from the power of the Saracens: slain in the night by John Zimisces, his Wife Theophania being privy to it.
- 971 43. John Zimisces, Emperor in the place of Nicephorus Phocas, governed the Empire better than he did obtain it, vanquishing the Bulgarians, Rosses, and others of the barbarous Nations; and left it at his death to the Sons of Romanus.
- 977 44. Basilus II. surnamed Porphyrogenitus, as many of the Emperors had been before him, in regard that at their Births they were wrapped in Purple, (which the Greeks call Porphyrie) the Imperial Colour: he subdued the Bulgarians, and made them Homagers to the Empire.
- 1027 45. Constantine VII. or VIII. Brother of Basilus, and with him Partner in the Empire: after whose death he governed three years by himself, but did nothing memorable.
- 1030 46. Romanus II. for his Prodigality surnamed Argyrolus, Husband of Zoe, the Daughter of Constantine the 8. drowned in a Bath by the Treason of his Wife and her Adulterers.
- 1035 47. Michael IV. surnamed Papilago, from his Country, first the Adulterer and afterwards the Husband of Zoe; but died very penitent.
- 1042 48. Michael V. surnamed Calaphates, a man of
- obscure Birth, adopted by Zoe, whom he deposed from the Government, and turned into a Monastery. Out of which being again taken in a popular Tumult, he put out the Eyes of Calaphates, and, being then 60 years of age, belittowed both the Empire and her self upon
- 1043 49. Constantine IX. surnamed Momonachus, formerly Husband to a Niece of Romanus the 2.
- 1055 50. Theodora, Sister unto Zoe, after the death of Constantine, managed for two years the Affairs of the Empire with great Contentment of all people. But grown in age she surrendered it to
- 1057 51. Michael VI. surnamed Stratioticus, an old, but military man, deposed within 3 years by
- 1060 52. Isaacius, of the noble Family of the Comneni; valiant, of great Courage, and diligent in his Affairs: which having managed for two years, he left it at his death, with consent of the Senate and people, to
- 1063 53. Constantine X. surnamed Ducas, a great Justiciar and very devout, but exceeding covetous, whereby he became hated of his Subjects and contemned by his Enemies.
- 1071 54. Romanus III. surnamed Digenes, married Eudoxia, the Wife of Constantinus Ducas, and with her the Empire. Taken Prisoner by the Turks, and sent home again, he found a Faction made against him; by which Eudoxia was expelled, himself at his return deposed, and so died in Exile.
- 1075 55. Michael VII. the Son of Constantinus Ducas, surnamed Parapinatus, by reason of the Famine which in his time happened, made Emperor in the aforesaid Tumult. But being found unable for so great an Honour, (the Turks prevailing in all places) he was deposed again, and put into a Monastery.
- 1081 56. Nicephorus II. surnamed Broniates, of the House of Phocas, succeeded in the place of Parapinatus; deposed within three years by the Comneni.
- 1084 57. Alexius Comnenus, Son of the Emperor Isaacius Comnenus, obtained the Empire: in whose time the Western Christians with great Forces prepared for the Recovery of the Holy Land: of whose purposes being very jealous he denied them passage through his Country; but was in the end forced to find them Victuals and other Necessaries.
- 1113 58. Calo-Joanner, the Son of Alexius, had a good hand against the Turks, from whom he took Ladicea and some other places of Importance. He also vanquished the Seythians or Tartars passing over the Ister, most of which he either slew in Battel, or sold as Captives; permitting the remainder to abide on this side that River. He also conquered the Servians and Bulgarians, transporting many of them into Bulgary.
- 1142 59. Mannel, or Emanuel, the younger Son of Calo-Joanner, an under-hand enemy to the Western Christians, and an open enemy to the Turks; by whom being intrapped in the dangerous Straights of Cilicia, and his Army miserably cut off, he was on honourable terms permitted to return again.
- 1180 60. Alexius II. Son of Mannel, deposed and barbarously murdered by Andronicus, the Confin-german of his Father, with his Wife and Mother.

- 1183 61. Andronicus Comnenus, confined by Mamul to Oennu in Paphlagonia, by reason of his dangerous and ambitious practices, after his death, pretending to reform the State, came unto Constantinople: first made Protector, afterwards Comfort in the Empire with young Alexius: whom having barbarously slain and got the Empire to himself, he was not long after cruelly torn in pieces in a popular Tumult.

- 1185 62. Isaacus Angelus, a Nobleman of Constantinople, and of the same Comnenian Race, dignified to death by Andronicus, was in a popular Election proclaimed his Successor; deposed by Alexius his own Brother and his Eyes put out.

- 1195 63. Alexius Angelus, deprived his Brother, and excluded his Nephew from the Empire; but it held not long.

64. Alexius Angelus II. Son of Isaac Angelus, who being unjustly thrust out of his Empire by his Uncle Alexius, had recourse to Philip the Western Emperor, whose Daughter Mary he had married, who so prevailed with Pope Innocent the 3. (upon a promise for subjecting the Church of Greece to the See of Rome (that the Army prepared for the Holy Land was employed to restore him. On the approach whereof Alexius the Murderer fled, Alexius the young Emperor is seated in his Father's Throne, and not long after slain by Alexius Ducas. In revenge whereof the Latines assault and win Constantinople, make themselves Masters of the Empire, and divided it amongst themselves: allotting to the Venezians Candia, many good Towns of Peloponnesus, and most of the Islands; to Boniface Marquis of Montferrat the Kingdom of Thessaly; to the others of the Adventurers other liberal Shares; and finally to Baldwin Earl of Flanders the main Body of the Empire, with the Title of Emperor. The Seat of the Empire of the Greeks being transferred unto Nice, a City of Bythinia in the Lesser Asia, by Theodorus Lascaris, Son in-law to Alexius, the Usurper, continued there till the regaining of Constantinople by the Greeks again, after it had been 60 years possessed by the Western Christians.

Emperours of the LATINES in CONSTANTINOPLE.

- 1200 65. Baldwin, Earl of Flanders, first Emperour of the Latines reigning in Constantinople, taken in fight by John King of Bulgaria, coming to aid the Greeks, and sent Prisoner to Ternova, where he was cruelly put to death.
- 1202 66. Henry, the Brother of Baldwin, repulsed the Bulgarians out of Greece, and died a Conquerour.
- 1215 67. Peter, Count of Auxerre in France, the Son of Peter, youngest Son to Lewis the Gros of France, and Husband of Toland the Daughter of Henry, succeeded in the Empire after his decease. He was cunningly entrapped by Theodorus Angelus, a great Prince in Epirus, whom he had besieged in Dyrrbachium: but of an Enemy being persuaded to become his Guest, was there murdered by him.
- 1220 68. Robert, the Son of Peter, having seen the miserable usage of his beautiful Empress, whom a young Burgundian, formerly contracted to her, had most spitefully mangled, cutting off both her Nose and Ears, died of Heart's grief as he was coming back from Rome, whither his Melancholly had carried him to consult the Pope in his Affairs.

- 1227 69. Baldwin II. Son of Robert by a former Wife, under the Protection of John de Breime, the titular King of Hierusalem, succeeded in his Father's Throne: which having held for the space of 33 years, he was forced to leave the City of Constantinople being regained by the Greeks, and the poor Prince compelled to sue in vain for Succours to the French, Venezians, and other Princes of the West. And though both Philip the Son of this Baldwin, and Charles of Valois, Father of Philip de Valois the French King, in right of Catherine his Wife, Daughter of that Philip, did sometimes please themselves with the Title of Emperours of Constantinople, yet neither of the two had ever any footing or possession there.

The Empire restored unto the GREEKS.

- 1260 70. Michael VIII. surnamed Palaologus, extracted from the Comnenian Emperour, Emperour of the Greeks in the City of Nice, most fortunately recovered Constantinople; the Town being taken by a party of 50 men secretly put into it by some Country-Labourers under the Ruines of a Mine. Present in person at the Council of Lions, at the persuasion of the Pope he admitted the Latine Ceremonies into the Churches of Greece; for which he was greatly hated by his Subjects, and denied the honour of Christian Burial.

- 1283 71. Andronicus II. vexed with unnatural Wars by his Nephew Andronicus, who rebelled against him.

- 1328 72. Andronicus III. first Partner with his Grandfather, afterwards Sole Emperour.

- 1341 73. John Palaologus, Son of Andronicus the 3. In whose Minority Constatinus his Protector usurped the Empire, and held it sometimes from him, and sometimes with him, till the year 1357, and then retired into a Monastery, leaving the Empire unto John, during whose Reign the Turks first planted themselves in Europe.

- 1384 74. Andronicus IV. the Son of Joannes Palaologus.

- 1387 75. Emanuel Palaologus, the Son of the said John, and Brother of Andronicus the 4. In whose time Bajazes the sixth King of the Turks did besiege Constantinople; but found such notable Resistance, that he could not force it.

- 1417 76. John II. Son of Andronicus the 4.

- 1420 77. John III. Son of Emanuel Palaologus, in person at the Council of Florence for reconciling of the Churches in hopes thereby to get some Aid from the Western Christians, but it would not be.

- 1444 78. Constantinus Palaologus, the Brother of John the 3. In whose time the famous City of Constantinople was taken by Mahomet the Great 1452, the miserable Emperour, who had in vain gone from door to door to beg or borrow money to pay his Soldiers, (which the Turks found in great abundance when they took the City) being lamentably trod to death in the Throng. Now concerning this Empire of the Greeks, we may observe some fatal Contrarieties in one and the same name. As first, that Philip the Father of Alexander laid the first four-

Foundation of the Macedonian Monarchy, and Philip the Father of Persius ruined it. Secondly, that Baldwin was the first, and Baldwin the last Emperour of the Latines in Constantinople. Thirdly, that this Town was built by a Constantine, the Son of Helena, a Gregory being Patriarch; and was lost by a Constantine, the Son of a Helena, a Gregory being Patriarch also. And fourthly, the Turks have it by a Mahomet. So Augustus was the first blighted Emperour of Rome, and Augustulus the last emperor, the Son of Hydraspes, the Restorer; and Darius, the Son of Arfamis, the Overthrower of the Persian Monarchy. A like note I shall hereafter tell you of Hierusalem. In the mean time I will present you with a fatal Observation of the letter H, as I find it thus verified in

Not superstitiously I speak, but H this letter still Hath been observed ominous to England's Good or Ill. First Hercules, Hesperie and Helen were the cause Of War to Troy; & Aeneas Seed becoming so Outlaws. Humber the Hun with foreign Arms did first the Brites invade:

Helena to Rome's Imperial Throne the British Crown conveyed.

Hengist and Horfus first did plant the Saxons in this Isle: Hugor and Hubba first brought Danes, that swayed here long while.

At Harold had the Saxon end, at Harde-Canute the Dane. Hicorius the first and second did restore the English Reign.

Fourth Henry first for Lancaster did England's Crown obtain.

Seventh Henry jarring, Lancaster and York unites in Peace.

Henry the eight did happily Rome's Irreligion cease.

A strange and ominous Letter, every Mutation in our State being as it were ushered by it.

What were the Revenues of this Empire since the Division of it into the East and West, I could never yet learn.

That they were exceeding great may appear by three Circumstances. 1. Zonaras reporteth that the Emperour Basilus had in his Treasury 200000 Talents of Gold, besides infinite Heaps of Silver and other Monies, 2. Lippus relateth, how Benjamin a Jew in his discourse of Europe saith, that the Custom due to the Emperours out of the Victuals and Merchandize sold at Constantinople only did amount to 20000 Crowns daily. 3. We find that at the Sack of Constantinople there was found an invaluable mass of Gold, Silver, Plate, and jewels, besides that which was hid in the Earth. For so the Learned Citizens chose rather to employ their Wealth, than afford any part of it to the Emperour, who with Tears in his Eyes went from door to door to beg and borrow Money, wherewith he might wage more Soldiers for the defence of the Town.

The Arms of the Empire were Mars, a Cross Sol between four Greek Beta's of the second: the four Beta's signifying (as Bodin saith) Basilus, Bambur, Bambler, Bambur.

It may perchance be expected that we should here make an additional Catalogue of those Turkish Emperours who have reigned in Constantinople since the taking of it; and, being they are possessed of Greece, and do now inhabit it, that we should here also speak of the Turks themselves, their Customs, Forces, Policies, Original, and Proceedings. But the discourse of those things we intend to reserve for Turcomania, a Province of Asia, and afterwards into other parts of the World now subject to them, the only Province which retains any thing of their name. And though the Peninsula called anciently Taurica Cherfoneus (now part of Tartaria Preconensis) be within the Bounds of Europe also; yet we will defer the description and story of it till we come to the Affairs of the Tartars, and will here conclude our Discourse of Europe, and prepare for Asia.

And so much for GREECE, the last of the Provinces of EUROPE.

ASIA,

AND ALL
The Principal Kingdoms, Provinces, Seas, and Isles, thereof.

Of ASIA.

ASIA is bounded on the West, with the Mediterranean, and Egean Seas, the Hellespont, Propontis, Thracian Bosphorus, and the Euxine Sea, the Palus Maotii, the Rivers Tanais and Duina, a Line being drawn from the first of the two said Rivers unto the other, by all which parted from Europe; on the North, it hath the main Seybick Ocean; on the East, the Straits of Anian (if such there be,) the Indian Ocean, and Mare del Zur, by which separated from America; on the South, the Mediterranean, or that part of it which is called the Carpathian Sea, washing the shores of Anatolia, and the main Southern Oceans, pulling along the Indian, Persian, and Arabian Coasts: and finally, on the South-West, the Red-Sea or Bay of Arabia, by which parted from Africk. Environed on all sides with the Sea, or some Sea-like Rivers, except a narrow Isthmus in the South-West, which joyns it to Africk and the space of ground (whatsoever it be) betwixt Duina and Tanais, on the North-west, which unites it to Europe.

It took this name, as some will have it, from Asia, the Daughter of Oceanus and Thetis, the Wife of Iapetus, and (by him) Mother to Prometheus: as others say, from Asius the Son of Atis, a King of Lydia, from whence that Country first, afterwards all Anatolia, or Asia minor, and finally, the whole Continent had the name of Asia. Others again (but more improbably) derive the name from Asius the Philosopher, who gave the Palladium unto the Trojans; in memory whereof that Country first, and after the whole Continent did receive this name: But these Originations being very uncertain, Bochartus (out of his great affection to the Phœnic or Phœnician Language) will have it called so from Asia, a Phœnician word, signifying Medium, or the middle; because Anatolia, or the lesser Asia, which gives name (as he conceiveth) to the Greater also, lieth in the middle, as it were, betwixt some parts of Europe and Africa. And so far the Conjecture doth find countenance from some ancient Writers, that Asia is said by Pliny to be inter African & European, to be betwixt Africa and Europe; by Mela, medium noster, is aquoribus excipit, to be embraced in the middle of the two seas (he meaneth Pontus Euxinus, and the Mediterranean,) and finally, by Eustathius (conceive them all of Anatolia, or the Lesser Asia) μέσος ἀφ' ὧν ἔξω δέξιν, to have a middle situation betwixt Europe and Africa. But by what name, and on what grounds soever it be called by the Greeks and Latines, it is otherwise, and with better reason called in Holy Scriptures by the name of Semia; as being that portion of the world, wherein the whole Posterity of Sem had their seats and dwellings, if the observation of Magims be of any weight.

It is situate East and West, from the 52 to the 169 degree of Longitude, and North and South, from the 82 degree of Latitude, to the very Equator; some only of the Islands lying on the South of that Circle: so that the longest Summers day in the Southern parts, is but twelve hours only, but in the most Northern parts hereof, for almost four whole months together no night at all. And for a measurement by miles, it stretcheth in length 5200, and in breadth 4560 miles.

This Country hath heretofore been had in especial honour, 1. For the Creation of Man, who had his first making in this part of the world; 2ly. Because in this part of it stood the Garden of Eden, which he had for the first place of his habitation; 3ly. because here flourished the four first great Monarchies of the Assyrians, Babylonians, Medes and Persians; 4ly. Because it was the Scene of almost all the memorable actions, which are recorded by the Pen-men of the Scriptures; 5ly. Because that here our Saviour CHRIST was born, here wrought he most divine Miracles, and here accomplished the great Work of our Redemption; 6ly. And finally, Because from hence all Nations of the World had their first beginning on the dispersion which was made by the Sons of Noah, after their vain attempt of Babel.

The chief Mountains of this great Continent, not limited within the bounds of any one Province (for of those we are to speak in their several places) are 1. Mount Taurus, which having its beginning in Lycia, a Province of Anatolia, passeth directly Eastward to the Indian Ocean, and reckoning in its several windings and turnings, and by its spurs and branches every way, is said to be 6250 miles long, and 357 miles broad. This Mountain, or rather ridge of hills, divideth the Greater Asia as the Aequator doth the World, into North and South: memorable for three different passages from the one to the other; the first out of the reit of Anatolia into Cilicia, called Pyle Cilicæ; the second out of Sybia, or Tartary, into Thercomania, called Caucasæ Portæ; and the third out of Sybia into Persia, called Porsæ Cypsiæ. Of which, and of the whole course of this Mountain, more at large hereafter. 2. Imaus, which beginning near the shores of the Northern Ocean, runneth directly towards the South, divideth the Greater Asia (as the Meridian doth the World) into East and West, and crossing Mount Taurus in right Angles, in or about the Longitude of 140. This on the North of Taurus hath no other name among the Latins than Imaus only; and by that name divideth Sybia, into Sybia intra Imaum, and Sybia extra Imaum: but by the Tartars is called Altay, by some Writers Belgian. And on the South-side of that Mountain is known in Ptolemy by the name of Bitigis, extending from Mount Caucasus, or some other Branch of the Taurus, to the Cape of Comari, in the Southern Ocean: supplied by some to be mount Sephar, mentioned Gen. 10. 30. of which we shall say more also when we come into India.

The estate of Christianity in this vast Continent is in ill condition, discountenanced and oppressed, though not quite extinguished. For all the great Princes and Commanders of it being either Mohometans, or Pagans, the most that can be hoped for of the Christian Faith, is a toleratio or connivence; and that not found but with an intermixture of such afflictions, as commonly attend discountenance and dilgraced Religions. Yet is not Christianity so over-powered either by Mohometism, or Paganim, but that in Asser, the Laffer, Syria, Palestine, and Armenia, a great part of the Inhabitants do retain the Gospel, under their several Patriarchs and Metropolitans: differing in some few points from one another; but in many from the Church of Rome, with which they hold neither correspondence nor Communion. Nor want there many Christian Churches in the Empire of Persia, nor in those of Tartary, China, and the Indies, anciently planted in those Countries; besides the late increase thereof in the Eastern Islands: by the diligent preaching of the Jesuites, and some late Fatheries there settled by the English and Hollanders: of all which I shall write in place convenient.

In reference to the Roman Empire, whose Dominion did not often extend beyond the River Euphrates, this Continent contained only three Dioceses, or Jurisdictional Circuits; that is to say, the Diocese of Pontus, Asia properly so called, and the Oriental: which with the Dioceses of Thrace and Egypt, were under the Command of the Præfatus Prætorii Orientis, the greatest Officer of power and jurisdiction, next to the Emperours themelves, in the Roman Monarchy. And these three Dioeceses contained in them to the number of thirty seven Provinces, viz. the Provinces of Bithynia, 2. Helenopolis, 3. Pompe Polemoniacus, 4. Galatia prima, 5. Galatia Salutaris, 6. Honorius, 7. Euphlogonia, 8. Cappadocia prima, 9. Cappadocia secunda, 10. Armenia prima, and 11. Armenia secunda, contained in the Dioecese of Pontus, and governed by the Vicarius, or Lieutenant thereof, 11. the Provinces of Pamphylia, 2. Lycia, 3. Caria, 4. Pyssidia, 5. Lycomania, 6. Lydia, 7. Phrygia Pacatiana, 8. Phrygia Salutaris, 9. Asia (specially to be called), 10. Hellas, and 11. the Isles of Anatolia, making up the Dioecese of Asia: whereof the three last were governed by a peculiar Officer, called the Proconsul of Asia; the others by the ordinary Lieutenant, or Vicarius. III. The Provinces of Iscaria, 2. Cilicia prima, 3. Cilicia secunda, 4. Cyprus, 5. Phoenices, 6. Phoenices Libani, 7. Syria, 8. Syria Salutaris, 9. Palestina prima, 10. Palestina secunda, 11. Palestina Salutaris, 12. Euphratensis, 13. Ofoene, 14. Mesopotamia, and 15. Arabia, constituting the Dioecese of the Orient, under the Comes Orientis. The rest of Asia subject unto the Parthian or Persian Kings, besides those of India (and of many Regions and Countries not then discovered) was never conquered by the Romans; and therefore not within the compass of this distribution.

At this time Asia stands divided amongst fix great Monarchs; that is to say, the Turks, commanding all thofe parts and Provinces, which anciently belonged to the Roman Empire. 2ly. The Perfian, ruling in all the Provinces beyond Euphrates, poffeffed by the Perfian Kings in the time of Alexander the Great, or the Alcide, or Parthians in the times of the Romans. 3ly. The Great Cham of Tartary, commanding over all the North parts of Asia, anciently known by the name of Scythia. 4ly. The King of China, governing in that large and populous Country. 5ly. The King of Barmæ, whose Dominion comprehends all or the greateft part of Indæ beyond the River Ganges. And 6ly. The Great Mages, whose Empire is extended over all India on this fide of that River. And fome there be who in the defcriptions of this great Country, follow this divifion. But for our parts, for the better understanding of the Greek and the Roman Stories, and the eftate of the Affirians, Babyloni and Perfian Monarchies, to which the holy Scriptures do fo much relate; we fhall confider it as divided into the Regions of 1 Anatolia, or Asia Minor: 2 Cyper. 3 Myria. 4 Palefine. 5 Arabia. 6 Chaldæe. 7 Affirya. 8 Mefopotamia. 9 Turcomania. 10 Media. 11 Perfia. 12 Tartaria. 13 China. 14 India. And 15 The Oriental Iflands.

ANATOLIA, or ASIA MINOR.

ANATOLIA, or ASIA MINOR is bounded on the East, by the River Euphrates, by which parted from the greater Asia, on the West, with the Thracian Bosphorus, Propontis, Hellepont, and the Aegean Sea, by which parted from Europe: on the North, with Pontus Euxinus, called also the Black Sea, and Mare Maggiore; and on the South, by the Rhodian, Lycian, and Pamphylian Seas, several parts of the Mediterranean. So that it is demy-Iland, or Peninsular, environed on all sides with waters, excepting a small Isthmus or neck of Land extending from the head of Euphrates to the Euxine Sea, by which joyn'd to the rest of Asia.

It was anciently called Asia minor, to difference it from the residue of this great Continent; afterwards Anatolia, and ἡ ἀνατολή, from the more Eastward situation of it, in respect of Greece; and now Natalia.

by the Turks, with little deviation from the former name. But here is to be observed, that as this Lesser Asia was part of the greater; and the Diocese of Asia a part of the Lesser Asia: so was Asia properly and especially so called, but a part only of the Asian Diocese; the Lydian Asia, a part of the Asian Diocese; the Proconsular Asia, but a part of that. The limits of the Lesser Asia, and the several Provinces contained in the Asian Diocese, have been shewn already. And as for that part hereof which had the name of Asia properly and especially so called, it containeth only the two Phrygias, both the Asylus, Helis, Ionis, Lydia and Caria, which falling into the Romans, by the last Will and Testament of Attalus, the last King of Pergamum, whereby they made into one Province, and called Asia, after the name of the whole Continent, this being as it were the earnest penny, to make sure the rest. So witnesseth Strabo, where he saith, Ποσειδωνι στρατηγας ἀνέδωκεν ἡ γὰρ ἡμεῖς ἀποκαλεσόμεθα, ἡνίκαν τῆς ἡμετέρας, Lib. 13. And for the Lydian Asia, that contained only so much of the Roman or proper Asia, as anciently did belong to Lydia; that is to say, Lydia it self together with Helis, and Ionis, and some parts of the Greater Asia adjoining to it. Which as it had originally the name of Asia, from Asapa chief City of it near the foot of Mount Tmolus, which both Suidas, and the Great Erymologist have taken notice of, before that name became to be communicated to the greater Continent: so it retained that name to it self several distinct both from the Greater and the Lesser Asia; as also from the Asia propria of Phoeny, and others of the ancient Writers. And of this Asia only it is, which the Scriptures speak; both in the books of the Acts, and the Revelation: the seven Churches mentioned in the one being found in this Lydian Asia, and the passages in the other concerning Asia, not to be understood of any, but of this alone. For whereas it is said Acts the 16, that when they had gone throughout Phrygia, and the Region of Galatia, and were forbidden of the Holy Ghost to preach the Word in Asia; after they were come to Asyria, they assayed to go into Bithynia, and came down to Troas: most clear it is, that neither Galatia, nor Bithynia, though Regions of the Lesser Asia, nor Phrygia, Asyria, or Troas all Regions of the proper Asia, were any part of that Asia which the Scripture speaks of. So also where it is affirmed, that upon St. Pauls preaching and disputing for two years in Ephesus, all they which dwelt in Asia heard the Word of the Lord, Acts 19. 10. it is not to be meant of any but the Lydian Asia, whereof Ephesus at that time was the principal City. So also Acts 19. 22, 26, 31 and Chap. 20. 18. Finally, for the Proconsular Asia, which together with Hellespont and the Helis, made up a Government apart, exempt from the Command of the Vicarius, or Lieutenant of the Asian Diocese, it contained only Helis, and Ionis with the South part of Lydia, or the Countries lying about Ephesus. So witnesseth St. Hierom from the Christian Writers. So witnesseth St. Augustine. That although all the whole Penninsula have the name of the Lesser Asia, Specialiter his Ephesus Civitas est, Asia vocatur; yet more particularly the parts adjoining unto Ephesus have the name of Asia. And this appeareth by the distribution of the Provinces before laid down, where Lydia is reckoned for a Province of the Asian Diocese, distinct from the Proconsular Asia, which we now insist on.

So having cleared our way in regard of the name, proceed we next unto the Region, or place thus named, according to the notion in the largest latitude, extending from the Helleſpont to the River Euphrates, and from the Euxine Sea to the Mediterranean. By which account it reacheth from the 51 to the 72 degree of Longitude, and from the 36 to the 45 degree of Latitude: the length hereof from the Hellpoint to the River Euphrates, being estimated at 530 miles; the breadth from Sinns lying in Cilicia, to the City of Trabesond, 210. As for the situation of it, in reference to the Heavenly Bodies, it is lyeth almost in the same position with Italy, extending from the middle Parallel of the fourth Clime, to the middle Parallel of the fourth Clime, to the merry day in the Southern parts, is about fourteen Summers day and a half, and one hour longer in those parts which lie most towards the North.

The Temperature of the Air is exceeding found, and the foil generally exceeding fruitful, abounding in most excellent pastures, which breed a notable race of Horfes, of very good service in the Wars, if backed with European Riders; it being a by-word amongst the Turks: That the Horfes of Asia, and the Horsemen of Europe are of greatest action. It was anciently very plentiful of all fruits both for use and pleasure, as still it would be, were it cultivated as in former times. Once very populous, and replenished with goodly Cities, now in a manner waste and desolate, lamenting the destruction of 400 Towns: some of them destroyed by Earthquakes, (the falling-sickness of most great Cities in the East) but most by Wars, and have little now to boast of but the commodiousness of the Havens, which are very many; though most of them but meanly traded, as in a Country ill manured, and of little Manufactures.

The people anciently, for little Manufactures, originally, and the Nations bordering on the Euxine, were very warlike and industrious : the rest, especially the Lymanians, and those of the greater Phrygia, as idle and effeminate, wholly addicted to their pleasures. All of them that the Turks, (unless compelled thereto by extreme necessities) never inrol their Children in the number of the Christian Faith, but overpowered by Macchabean Church of Greece, and subject all (except those of Illyria and Cilicia) to the Patriarch of Constantinople. And retain the Greek Liturgies for Sacred Offices; not so well understood amongst them as in former times, when it was more generally spoken there than it is at the present: now over-topped in most places by the Turkish and Sclavonian Tongues. And though in former times, by reason of the many Greek Colonies planted in this Country; the Conquest of it by Alexander the Great, and the subjection of it to the Syrian Kings of the Macedon Race, that Language became generally understood amongst them; inasmuch as three of the Greek Dialects, viz. The Doric, the Ionian, and the Æolic, were spoken here; yet did it never so prevail, as to become the Vulgar Language of the people, or to extinguish any of the Vulgar Tongues. For it is said of Mithridates King of Pontus, that he understood two and twenty Languages, without any Interpreter; which were no other than the Languages of so many Nations subject to himself, whose Dominion was contained for the most part within Asia.

Principal Mountains of this Country, are Hermione in Pontus, Argæus in Cappadocia, Ida in the Lesser Phrygia, Olympus in Mysia, Idolus in Lydia, Amanus in Cilicia, and finally Antæranus, and Serdaricus in Armenia Minor: Out of which, for the most part, flow the chief Rivers thereof, that is to say, 1 Iris, (now Casimach) 2 Thermodon, 3 Halkis. (now Ottomanschi).
 4 Parthenius (now Dilop). 5 Sangerius (now Sangry).
 Z z

All of them falling into the Euxine Sea. 6 Acanthus. 7 Rhyndacus. 8 Asiapus, and 9 Graecus, passing into the Propontis. 10 Simois. 11 Scamander, called also Xanthus, ending their short course in the Hellespont. 12 Caicus. 13 Hermus. 14 Cystrus. And 15 Meander, losing themselves in the Ægean. 16 Calpis. 17 Xanthus, called also Lycus. 18 Limicus. 19 Catarelus, discharging into the Mediterranean. and 20 Melus, adding to the waters of the great River Euphrates. Of most which we shall speak more particularly in their several places.

In reference to the State of Rome, it contained the whole Diocese of Pontus, except Armenia the Greater, the Asian Diocese intirely, without any exception; and the peculiar jurisdiction of the Troas of Asia, together with the Provinces of Iuonia and Cilicia, parts of the Diocese of the East. But because the names of many of those Provinces were of new invention, and some of them as so short continuance, we will consider it according as it stood divided anciently, and before the Romans had made any conquests in it, into the Provinces of 1 Bithynia. 2 Pontus. 3 Paphlagonia. 4 Galatia. 5 Cappadocia. 6 Armenia Minor; which (together with Armenia Major) made up, though in other names, the Pontic Diocese. 7 Phrygia Minor. 8 Phrygia Major. 9 Mysia the greater and the lesser. 10 Asia, especially so called, comprehending Æolis and Ionis. 11 Lydia. 12 Caria. 13 Lycia. 14 Lycania. 15 Pisidia. 16 Pamphylia. 17 The Province of the Rhodes, all comprehended under the command of the Vicarius and Proconsul of Asia. 18 Iuonia. 19 Cilicia, parts of the Diocese of the East, as before was said.

BITHYNIA.

BITHYNIA is bounded on the East with Pontus, and the River Sangarius; on the West, with part of the Euxine, and Thracian Bosphorus, and part of the Propontis; on the North, wholly with the Euxine; and on the South, with Mysia, and Phrygia Minor: Formerly called Bebyria, afterwards Myrdania, and at last Bithynia, and that as some say from Bithynius, once a King hereof, more probably from the Thyni a people of Thrace, who passed over the Bosphorus, and subdued it, called therefore by some Writers Thracia Asiatice. So witnesseth the Poet Claudian, saying:

Thyni Thracæ erant, quæ nunc Bithynia ferunt.

By Justin the Historian it is called by the name of Metropontus, by reason of its neighbouring to the Euxine and the Pontic Regions.

The Country naturally rich, and in those parts hereof which lie next the Bosphorus, opposite to Constantinople, so plentifully enriched with fruitful hills, and pleasant Orchards, when kept by the more curious Christians, that it was thought not to be inferior to the so much celebrated Tempe: now robbed of all those former beauties by the carelessness of the Turks, who affect neither art, nor sumptuousness, in their retirements and delights.

Chief Rivers hereof are 1 Phyllis. 2 Sangarius, now called Sagris, both falling into the Euxine Sea; this last arising from Mount Dindymus, in the furthest parts of Phrygia Major; and making two long reaches in his journey thither. 3. Acanthus, which rising also in Phrygia Major, but more near the borders of this Country, fallth into the Propontis, making the Bay called Sinus Acanthus; which with a Lake in the same Country, called Lacus Acanthus, doth plainly manifest, that the Bi- thynians are derived from Askenaz, the Son of Gomer, and grand-son of Japhet.

The principal Towns hereof are 1 Scutari, over against the Haven of Constantinople, called anciently Chrysopolis for that there the Persians received their tribute from the other Cities of all these parts of Asia Minor. An ample Town, well garriioned with, and surrounded round about with most pleasant Orchards, and honoured with the neighbourhood of a Royal Seraglio. Not far off is a Tower, called the Maiden-Tower, serving both for a Fort and Watch-Tower, and being furnished for defence with 20 Pieces of Ordnance. 2 Chalcedon, on the same shore also, a Colony of the Megarenses, called blind by the Oracle, for neglecting Byzantium, and choosing the less convenient place for their habitation. And yet did Constantine the Great resolve upon the same place also for his Regal City; but changed his resolutions on a kind of miracle: it being observed, that when his workmen began to draw the Platform, some Eagles conveyed away their Lines to the other side of the Bosphorus, and let them fall directly upon Byzantium. Memorable after that for the fourth General Council there assembled by command of the Emperour Martianus, for repressing the Heresie of Nestorius; in which were 530 Bishops: now so decayed, that it can only show some few of the ruins of it; Scutari being risen on the fall thereof. 3 Nicomedia, so called from Nicomedes King of Bithynia (the Son of Ziper, and Grandchild to that Bithynian King, who so valiantly defended his own and his Countries liberty against Celantus, one of Great Alexander's Captains) by whom founded: Situate on the top of an Hill, environed with a pleasant and delightful Plain, honoured with the Seat and Residence of many of the Roman Emperours, when their affairs called them into the East, before the building of Constantinople; on that occasion made the Throne on which many of Gods Saints received the Crown of Martyrdom, especially in the Persecution under Dioclesian. In those times wealthy, and of fame, now much decayed; but notwithstanding well inhabited both by Greeks and Turks, for the commodiousness of the fresh Springs which are thereabouts. 4 Libussis, betwixt Nicomedia, and the River Acanthus; memorable for the death and sepulture of the famous Annibal, who to prevent his being made prisoner to the Romans, when Prusus King of Bithynia intended unworthily to betray him, here made away himself by poison. 5 Prussa, founded by another Prusus, whose name it beareth; a large and wealthy City as most in Asia: honoured for a long time with the residence of the Turkish Kings, till the removal of their Seat to Adrianople, by Mahomet the first; and still ennobled with the sepulture of the Princes of the Ottoman Race, except the Emperours themselves. By the Turks called Bursas Nica or Nicea, by the Turk called Neichia, but most commonly Ischias, situate near the Fens of the River Acanthus, occasioned by the frequent overflowsings of that River: by some affirmed to be the Metropolis of Bithynia; but I think Nicomedia hath more right to claim that honour. First named Antigonis, from Antigonus the founder of it; and afterwards Nicea, by the name of Nice, Wife unto Lysimachus: both of them Captains of the Great Alexander; which last had the happiness to survive the overthrow of the former, and was the longest liver of those Great Commanders. Sufficiently famous both in Ecclesiastical and Civil Story, for the first General Council there holden by the appointment of Constantine the Great, Anno 324. for settling the peace of the Church, then miserably distracted by the Arian Heresie. The number of Bishops there assembled, no more than 318. yet of such high esteem for Learning and Piety, that that never Council hath been held in so great an honour. Here was also held the Council by the Emperess Irene, for establishing the veneration of Images; that passing by the name of the Nicean Council, the Acts thereof might be of greater reputation amongst ignorant men. In which it was decreed by such doubtful Arguments, as Let us make man after our own Image, once mainly insisted on by a Legate of the Eastern Churches, that they should be revered and adored in as ample and religious manner, as the blessed Trinity it self. This City was also the Imperial City of the Greek Emperours, after the taking of Constantinople by the Western Christians, and there continued till the expulsion of the Latins, under these Emperours of the GREEKS residing at NICE.

A.C.H.
1200 1 Theodorus Lascaris, Son-in-law to Alexius Angelus the Usurper, upon the taking of Constantinople by the Latins, passed over into Asia, and fortifying the City of Nice, made it the head City of this Kingdom, containing Bithynia, both the Phrygia, both the Mysia, Lydia, Æolis, and Ionis.

1223 2 John, surnamed Ducas, the Husband of Irene, Daughter of Theodore Lascaris, succeeded his Father-in-law in the Empire; to which he added Pontus, most of the Isles of the Ægean, and not a few places of importance in Thrace it self.

1256 3 Theodorus II. the Son of Ducas.

1259 4 John II. the Son of Theodore the second, an Infant of about six years old, supplanted first, and after cruelly deposed and deprived of sight.

1259 5 Michael Palaeologus, descended from the Imperial family of the Comneni, first took upon him as Protector of the Infant-Emperour, and afterwards as his Assessor in the Empire: in which confirmed by many fortunate successes, as well against the Latins, as some Greek Usurpers in Thessaly and Peloponnesus, especially the taking of Constantinople, he deprived the young Emperour of his sight, made himself sole Emperour, and left it unto his posterity, who held it with a great deal of trouble and continual disquiets, till the year 1452, when conquered by Mahomet the Great, as before was said. But this recovery of Constantinople was the loss of Nice, taken not long after the removal of the Imperial Seat, by Sultan Ottoman, Anno 1299, who presently thereupon took off himself the style of King, from which before he had obtained.

As for the fortunes of Bithynia it self, I look upon the Bithynians as a Thracian people, whom both Strabo and Herodotus speak of, as the founders of the name and Nation. Of such a King of theirs as Bithynius I find some mention in my Authors; and possibly it may be he who had the leading of the Thymi, or Bithyni in this expedition, proper Family. But for the line of Kings which held out till the flourishing of the Roman greatness, they began to reign here some few generations, before the time of Philip, and Alexander, the Macedonians: by which last, having other employment, and lying out of the road towards Persia, they were little troubled. Celantus, one of Alexander's Captains, made an expedition into their Country, and was vanquished by them; and afterwards they had to do with one of the Lieutenants of Antigonus, (one of Alexander's greatest Princes) who though he humbled them for the present, yet got he neither title nor possession by it. And thus they held it out till the time of Prusias, so shuffling with the Macedonian and Syrian Kings, that betwixt both they still preserved their own estates. This Prusias, when the Romans became so inconsiderable, as that no danger need be feared from Crete, or Syria, picked himself with them; and having aided them in their wars against Philip and Antiochus both, and most unworthily promised to deliver Annibal (who had fled to him for succour) unto their Embassadors, made all fire to this side. His son and successor Nicomedes, being outed of his Kingdom by Mithridates King of Pontus, and reformed again unto it by the power of the Romans, held it as their Fendatary, as did Nicomedes his next Successor, surnamed Philometor: who dying without issue in the time of Augustus, gave his whole Kingdom to the Romans. By them, with the addition of that part of Pontus which lay next unto it, it was made a Province of their Empire, by the name of Pontus and Bithynia, continuing to till the division of that Empire into the Eastern and Western; when falling to the share of the Constantinopolitans, and with them to the power of the Turkish Tyrants, who do still possess it.

2 PONTUS.

PONTUS is bounded on the East, with Colchis, and Armenia; on the West, with Bithynia, and the River Sangarius; on the North, with the Euxine Sea; and on the South, with Phrygia Major, Paphlagonia, Galatia, and Cappadocia. So that it taketh up the whole length of Anatolia, or Asia Minor, from Bithynia to the River Euphrates, which parts it from Armenia Major, but not of unanswerable breadth; and gives name to the Sea adjoining, a Ponto regione illi adjacentis ita appellari, as Orellius hath it, called from hence Pontus by the Latins, the adjunct of Euxinus coming on another occasion, which we have spoken of before. A Country of a large extent, and therefore divided by the Romans (when Matters of it) into three four parts, viz. Metropontus, or Pontus specially so called, 2 Pontus Galaticus, 3 Polemoniacus, and 4 Pontus Cappadocius.

1 PONTUS, especially so called, or Metropontus, bordering on Bithynia, and bounded on the East with River Parthenius, which divided it from Paphlagonia, had for the chief Cities thereof, 1 Claudiopolis, so called in honour of Claudius, the Roman Emperour; 2 Flaviopolis, in honour of Flavius Vespasianus; and 3 Julianopolis, in honour of the Julian Family; all midland Towns. 4 Diopolis, on the Euxine Sea, so called from a Temple consecrated to Jupiter, of great report. 5 Heraclea, a Colony of the Phocians, called for distinction sake (there being many of that name) Heraclea Pontis: memorable of late times for being the seat and residence of a branch of the Imperial Family of the Comneni; when at the taking of Constantinople by the Western Christians, David and Alexius Comnenus fled into these parts: the first fixing here his Royal residence, commended over this part of Pontus, and Paphlagonia; the other possessing himself of Cappadocia and Galatia, made Trebizonde his Regal or Imperial City. But these two Empires, though of the same date, were of different degrees, that of Heraclea and Pontus, being partly conquered by the Greek Emperours residing at Nice, and partly seized on by the Turks in the beginning and first fortunes of the Ottoman Family; the other keeping up the Majesty and State of an Empire, till the year 1461, when subdued by Mahomet the Great. 6 Phyllura, at the mouth or influx of the River Phyllis, upon which it is seated. 7 Amasria, the farthest Town of this part towards the East, on the Sea-side also, once of great strength; but taken by Lucullus, together with Heraclea, Synope, Amisus, and other Towns, in the war against Mithridates, the great King of Pontus.

2 East-ward of Pontus, specially so called, or Alta-pontus, as Justin the Historian calls it, lyeth PONTUS GALATICUS, so named, because added to Galia in the time of the Romans. The chief Cities wherof were 1 Synope, pleasantly seated on a long point or Promontory, shooting into the main, remarkable in ancient story for the birth and sepulture of Mithridates, after mentioned; and in the latter times for being the chief seat of the Isfendians, a noble family of the Turks, who had taken it with the rest of his Tract from the Comnens, and held it till the same year in which the Empire of Trabzon was subdued by Mahomet. First built by the Milians, and continuing in a free estate, till taken by Pharnaces, a King of Pontus, and made the Metropolis of that Kingdom. 2 Cassanopia, the head City of the Principality of the Isfendians, before mentioned; preferred by them for strength and convenience of situation, before Heraclea, or Synope. 3 Themiscyra, now called Favagaria, seated on a spacious Plain near unto the Sea, and anciently giving name to the Province adjoining. 4 Amasia the birth-place of Strabo the Geographer, remarkable in the Ecclesiastical Histories for the Martyrdom of St. Theodore, and of late times for being the residence of the eldest Sons of the Grand Signior, sent thither as soon as circumcised, never returning back again till the death of their Father. Accompted now amongst the Cities of Cappadocia, and the chief of that Province: a midland Town, as also is Cabira called afterward Diopolis, memorable for the great defeat which Lucullus gave there unto Mithridates, more for the trick which Mithridates there put up on Lucullus. For being well acquainted with the covetousness of the Romans, he saw no better way to save himself and the rest of his forces after the defeat, than to scatter his treasures in the way which he was to take; that by that means his enemies might slacken the pursuit to collect the spoils, and he preserve himself to another day; and so accordingly it proved. 6 Comana, to difference it from another of that name, called Comana Pontica; to which other, being of Cappadocia, or Armenia Minor, Mithridates came in safety by the trick aforesaid, and thence escaped unto Tigrinus the Armenian King, with 2000 horse.

3 East-ward of Pontus Galaticus lies P O L E M O N I A C U S, so called by the Romans either from Polemonius a chief Town of this tract, or from Polemo the last King hereof, after whose death this Kingdom came unto the Romans. Places of most importance in it. 1 Polemonium on the Sea-side, spoken of before. 2 Hirmanassa, a Sea-Town also. More in the land. 3 Neo-Cesarea (now Nisaria) the Metropolis of Polemoniacus, when made a Province of it. 4 Zela, enlarged by Pompey, and called Megalopolis; by Constantine laid unto the Province of Helenopolis. 5 Sebastia, so called in honour of Augustus, whom the Greeks called Sebastos, a place of great strength, and one of the first Towns in the Lesser Asia, which held out against Tamurlane: in revenge wherof, when he had took it, he caused 12000 men, women, and children, to be most cruelly buried alive in some hollow pits, which he had digged for that purpose. Nigh to this City is Mount Stella, where Pompey gave Mithridates his fatal overthrow: where also Tamurlane with an Army of 80000 of his Tartars, encountered with Bajazet the Turk, coming to the relief of Sebastia, with an Army of 50000 fighting men. The issue of which fight was this, that Bajazet having lost 20000 of his souldiers, was himself taken prisoner, and carried by the insolent Conquerour in an iron cage, against the bars wherof he beat out his brains. 6 Barbassia. 7 Megalopolis. 8 Gozalicia, &c. not much observable in story.

Thermodon, on the banks wherof the Amazons, a sort of warlike women, are said to dwell; so called either quasi audax, because they used to cut off their right paps, that they might not be an impediment to their shooting; or from a word, fine paps, because they used not to eat bread; or from audax, because they used to live together. They were originally of Scythia, and accompanied their husbands to these parts, about the time of the Scythians first irruptions into Asia, in the time of Solystir King of Aegypt. The Leaders of this people into Cappadocia were Plinos and Scolypthus, two young men of a great house, whom a contrary faction had banished. They held a great hand over the Themiscyrii, who inhabited this Region, and the Nations round about them. At last they were by treachery all murdered: But their wives now doubly vexed, both with exile and widowhood, and extremity of grief and fear producing its usual effect, despatched, they set upon the Conquerours under the conduct of Lampedo and Marpessa, and not only overthrew them, but also infinitely enlarged their Dominions, and for some time continued in great reputation: the names of whom, or of so many of them at least as occur in story, we shall here subjoin.

The Amazon Queens.

1 Lampedo, First Queen of the Amazons in these parts.

2 Otrara.

3 Antiope, whose Sisters Hippolite and Mendippe, challenged Hercules and Theseus to single combat, and were at last hardly vanquished, to their eternal credits.

4 Penthesilea, who came with a troop of brave Virgo's, to the aid of Prianus King of Troy: she invented the Battle-Axe, and was at last slain by Pyrrius, son to Achilles. Long after her death reigned Thalefria, who came to Alexander, being in Hircania, and plainly told him that she came to be his bedfellow; which done he returned: and at last by little and little this female Nation was extinct. They used in matters of copulation to go to their neighbouring men thrice in a year; if they brought forth Males, they sent them to their fathers; if females, they kept them, and trained them up in all discipline of war and courage. Of these more elsewhere.

4 The most Eastern part of Pontus called C A P P A D O C I U S, for that it bordered on that Province, and for a time was added to it by the Romans; extended from Polemoniacus to Colchis, and the River Euphrates, the utmost boundaries of this Country. Places of most consideration in it, 1 Pharnacia, built by Pharnaces, a King of Pontus. 2 Cerasus, by Constantine laid unto the Province of Polemoniacus, from whence Cherries were brought first to Rome, An. V. C. 680. called therefore Cerasia by the Latines; first brought into Italy by Lucullus, at the end of his war with Mithridates, no less deservng for that service to be made a God (as wittily Terrullian stiffs it) than Bacchus was for his transplanting of the Vine from the Eastern Countries. 3 Scopolis, on the Euxine Sea, as the others are. And so is also, 4 Trapesus, now Trabzon, the Imperial City of the Comnens here reigning over Cappadocia, Gallatia, and these parts of Pontus. An Empire founded first by Alexius Comnenus (Nephew of the great Tyrant Andronicus Comnenus by his son Emmanuel) who at the taking of Constantinople by the Western Christians, fled into these parts, which willingly submitted unto his command, Anno 1200. Here his posterity flourished in great prosperity, preserving the Majesty of the Empire in a better measure, than the Constantinopolitans themselves, till the time of David the last Emperour; in whose reign the City of Trabzon, and therewith all the whole Dominion belonging to it, was taken by Mahomet the Great; the the poor Emperour led prisoner unto Greece, and there cruelly murdered. A famous Empery, and specially for the trade of fish, caught by the people on the shores of the Euxine Sea here salted, and from hence transported in great quantities to Constantinople, Cassia, and other places. And for the better help herein, it is said that there is a Mountain not far from this City, affording a black stone, which being beaten in a Mortar serves instead of salt, wherewith they season the fish which they send abroad. A City honoured heretofore with the residence of the Lord Deputies, or Lieutenants of the Græcian Emperour, for defence of the out-parts of the Euxine against the Persians; and now the Station of such Gallies as are the Black-Sea, and secure their trade. More in the land others named in Ptolemy, but not else observable.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Country were called LEUCOSTRIS, or White Syrians, governed by a race of Kings descended from the Royal house of Archevmen of the seven Competitors for the Persian Kingdom, on the death of Cambyses. But that honour falling on Darius (of which more hereafter) he seated himself in these remote parts of Asia Minor; the Ancestor of many great and puissant Princes, but none more memorable than one of his own name, Regum Orientis post Alexandrum Magnum Maximus, the most potent King of all the East since the time of Alexander the Great, as my Author hath it. A Prince of great abilities both in war and counsel, and one who longer held it out against the Romans, than Phryrius, Antibal, and the great Kings of Macedon, and Syria, had done together. This was that famous Mithridates, who being once a friend and confederate of the Romans, took their part against Aristonicus, who would not consent to the admission of the Romans unto Pergamum, according to the will of Attalus. Afterwards conceiving an ambitious hope to obtain the Monarchy of Asia, in one night he plotted and effected the death of all the Roman Citizens dispersed in Anatolia, being in number 150000: in like manner, as in after times the English, taught perhaps by this example, murdered all the Danes then resident in England; and the Sicilians massacred all the French, inhabiting Sicilia, as we have formerly declared. He dispossessed Nicomedes, son to Prusias, King of Bithynia; Ardoxanes, King of Cappadocia; and Philumenes, King of Paphlagonia, of their estates; because they persisted faithful to his enemies of Rome. He excited the Greeks to rebel, possessed himself of Athens, and dislured all the Isles, except Rhodes, from their obedience to the Romans. And finally, having disturbed their victories, and much shaken their estate, for the space of 40 years, he was with much ado vanquished by the valour and felicity of L. Sylla, Lucullus, and Pompey the great; three of the greatest Soldiers that ever the Roman Empire knew. Yet did not the Roman puissance so much pluck down his proud heart, as the rebellion of so much Pharnaces, against him; which he no sooner heard, but he used his body to a kind of poyson allay, (which from some could not work upon him, he flew himself. He is said to have been an excellent Scholar, & to have spoken perfectly the Languages of 22 Nations; & to have spoken for many Nations which were subject to him. But neither those common miseries, which ordinarily attend a falling greatness, And so ended this long and tedious war, exceeding troublesome to the Romans, but withal very beneficial. For under colour of having given aid to Mithridates, they took in Crete, Gallatia, Colchis, Iberia, and Taurum pennis Orientem & Septentrionem involvit, that in his heed; after his death the Kingdom continued unto his Nero: when Polemo the last King hereof dying without issue, it was cantoned and divided into many parts, and laid unto the Provinces of Bithynia, Gallatia, and Cappadocia, only that part of it which was called Polemoniacus, And so it remained till the reign of Constantine the Great, who changing the names, lessening the bounds, and increasing the number of the Provinces, left only the Province of Pontus and Bithynia in the state he found it. And for the rest, he cast it into two new Provinces, that to the old Polemoniacus, whereto were the Cities of Tramæus, Neo-Cesarea, Cerasus, Comana Pontica, Palemoniacus, and Petræorum Civitas, called afterwards Justinianus; of which Neo-Cesarea, was the Metropolis. That towards the East, separated from the Province of Pontus & Bithynia, by the River Parthenius, he caused to be called Helenopolis, by the name of Helen his Mother: and it, Ibora, Euchaïta, Zela, Andrapsus, Agæum, Climachus, Sinope, Amisus, and Leontopolis. But this division held not long, both being united into one, and called Helenopolis, by Justinian, continuing after that a member of the Roman Empire, till the coming of David & Alexius Comneni from Constantinople; wherof the one reigned in Heraclea, and the other in Trabzon, as before is said. But their estates being overthrown, it remains wholly to the Turks, who do now possit it.

The Arms of the Emperours of Trabzon, the greatest Princes of these parts, till the Turks subdued them, were Or, and Eagle volant Gules.

3. PAPHLAGONIA.

PAPHLAGONIA is bounded on the East, with the River Hydris, by which parted from Cappadocia on the West, by the River Parthenius, which parted from the Province of Pontus and Bithynia, on the North, with that part of the Kingdom of Pontus which was named Gallatius; and on the South, with Phrygia Major, & Gallatia. So called of Paphlago the Son of Phineus, esteemed in it by his Father, who had newly conquered it.

The Country was but small, and of little power; and consequently the Cities were not very many, and of no great note. The principal of such as were, were 1 Gangra, times, Anno 339. commonly called Synodus Gangrensis. 2 Conica, or Coniata, so for convenient a situation, that it was entrenched and fortified by Mithridates, when he was Master of this Country. 3 Romæopolis, raised out of the foundation of some lesser Town, by Pompey the Great, and by him so named. 4 Gerymanopolis, 5 Xoand. 6 Andrapa, called afterward Novia Claudiopolis, to difference it from another City of that name in Pontus.

This Province, though but small in circuit, was heretofore the seat of four different Nations, viz. 1 The Tiberians, of whom it is said that they never waged war on any of the time and place of their fight. 2 The Hephæstians, 3 The Mysians, both which were a people so heathily and shameless, that they used to perform the work of generation in public; not knowing that Multa sunt hominum factu, que sunt curpia visis. And 4 The Heteti, to whom the Phoenicians, as we have already said, do owe their first original. The Kings which ruled in this Country, derived themselves from Philonemus, who assisted Prianus King of Troy in his defence against the Greeks; in memory of whom, this Region for a while was called Philonimia. Applying themselves unto the times, they were always favourable to the strongest, serving the Persian, and submitting to Alexander as he passed that way; and so maintained their estate without much molestation, till the time of Mithridates King of Pontus: who finding them firm unto the Romans, then growing to great power in the Leffer Asia, depriving Philonemus, then King hereof, and took the Kingdom to himself, fortifying the chief Towns and places of it. Restored again unto his Kingdom by the power of the Romans, he gave it to them at his death. But the Country being very much wasted, and most of the Cities of it destroyed and desolate in the course of that War, it was not thought worthy a particular care, and therefore laid into Galatia. Not reckoned a distinct Province in the time of St. Peter, who writing to the Hebrews, dispersed in Pontus, Cappadocia, Galatia, Asia, and Bithynia, takes no notice of this Paphlagonia, nor was it otherwise esteemed than as a member of Galatia, in the time of Proculus. Afterwards it was joined to Pontus, by the Emperor Constantine; part of it after that, with some parts of Pontus and Bithynia, being made into a new Province by the Emperor Theodosius, and called Honorius, in the honour of his Son Honorius, whereof Claudiopolis, a City of Pontus properly so called, was made the Metropolis. But by Justinian the name of Honorius being abolished, and that of Paphlagonia revived again, the whole Country, as before limited, was governed by an Imperial Officer, whom he called Prætor Justinianus: continuing under the command of the Constantinopolitani, till the taking of that City by the Latines. After which made a Member of the Empire of Trabzon, till the conquest of it by the Turks, by whom called Rom.

4 GALATIA.

GALATIA is bounded on the East, with Cappadocia; on the West, with the River Sangarius, and some part of Pontus specially so called, or Mesopotamus; on the North, with Paphlagonia, on the South, with Lycania. So called from the Galls, who having ranged over Greece, passed into Asia, and brought a great part of it under their command: but being broken by Antiochus King of Pergamus, and drove out of Mysia and the lesser Phrygia, were at last confined to this Country. It was also called Gallo-Græcia, from that mixture of Galls and Græcians, who uniting into one body when they came for Asia, were commonly called Gallo-Græci. By Suidas Græco-Galli, and the Country futable Græco-Gallia. Which mixture of Græcians notwithstanding, the Galls (being both the greater and prevailing Party) not only preserved their own Language, but in short time made it the common Language of the whole Country. And it continued so till S. Hieron's days, who telleth us in the Preface to his Commentaries on St. Paul's Epistle to this people, that it was Sinitina Treverensium, a language like to that of the Treveri, or people of Triers. A sure and certain Argument of their first Original.

The Country very plentiful of all manner of fruits, even unto voluptuousness; and providently provided of the stone called the Ameihs, which is said to preserve from drunkenness the man that weareth it. The name doth signify as much, derived from a privatio, and amē, which cometh from amē, signifying wine.

The people had a custome in their public funerals, to cast letters fairly written, into that last and fatal fire, wherein the dead body was to be burned, supposing that their friends should read them in the other World. Much given to Sacrifices, in the number and frequency whereof they excelled all Nations: inasmuch that Athenius telleth us of one Artemides, a rich Galatian, that he feasted the whole Nation for a year together with these Sacrifices of Bulls, Sheep, Swine and other Provisions, boyled in great Chaldrons made for that purpose, and distributed amongst them in Tents and Booths erected for that entertainment. A brave flash of vain-glorious hospitality.

Rivers of note here are not any, but what are common unto them with their neighbouring Nations, as Haly, Sangarius, and some others. The Towns of most consideration in it were, 1 Ancyra, on the banks of the River Sangarius, the chief City of the Tetragages; a Gallic Nation, and the Metropolis of the whole Country; memorable in Church-story for a Synod held here in the Primitive times, Anno 399. called Synodus Ancyranæ, but of most note at the present for the making of Chamlets: now called Angauri. 2 Oleum. 3 Agrinina, Cities of the same people also. 4 Tavium, or Tanum, (for I find both names) the chief City of the Trocmi, or Trogmi, where was a brazen Statue of Jupiter, whose Temple there was a privileged Sanctuary. 5 Androsia. 6 Pharvæna, Cities of that Nation also. 7 Therma, a Roman Colony, so called of the hot Baths there; the chief City of the Tolistobigæ, Proly, or Tolistobogæ, as Strabo nameth them. 8 Talachobocra, belonging also to that people.

Besides the Nations above-named, here dwelt also the Byceni and Profliginitæ; who had also their peculiar Cities, mentioned by name in Proculus, but of little or no observation in the course of story. Of all which Nations, only the Tetragages, were of the Gallic Original; who with others of their Country-men under the conduct of Belgus and Brennus, having ravished Pannonia and Illyrium, fell at last into Macedon; where having tyrannized a while, and laid waste the Country, they were at last vanquished and expelled by Antigonus Gonatus. After this overthrow, under the conduct of Lamproia, and Laurium, they ferried over the Hellepont, and subdued almost all Asia Minor on this side the Taurus; employed there by those petty Kings and States against one another: their reputation grown so great, that no Prince thought himself secure without their alliance, or able to make war without their assistance. The very Switzers of that age; as mercenary, but more faithful unto those that hired them. But being over-rigorous in compelling their neighbouring Princes to become their Tributaries, and too severe in the exacting of their Tributes, they informed Alexander King of Pergamus, by whose favour they had settled about the Hellepont, to become their enemy. Vanquished by him, they were constrain'd to contain themselves within the bounds of this Province, which from them in the following times was called Galatia, and Gallo-Græcia. Here for a while they kept their ancient courage and estimation, molesting many times their neighbours; and sometimes setting themselves to hire in the wars of others: but in the end they lost both courage and esteem, and were Galls only in name, retaining little in them of their Ancestors valour. For as most plants and trees lose full of their virtue, being transplanted into another soil: so these men lost their native courage, strength and hardiness, being weakened by the Asian pleasures and delicacies. And as Tully faith, for a man to be good in other places, is no mastery; but in Asia to lead a temperate life, is indeed praise-worthy: so might one have said to the Galls, that to be courageous & patient of travel amongst the mountains, rains, was no whit to be admired, but to have continued so amidst the delights of Asia, had been indeed meritorious in them. But these men were so far from afflicting the Romans in the Capitol, that they lost their own Country to Manlius, a Roman General. A war which Manlius undertook for no other cause, but that they had been aiding to Antiochus against the Romans; nor was there any memorable act performed herein; but that of the Chioniæna the Kings Wife, who being ravished by one of the Roman Captains, took her advantage whilst he busied cut off his head, which he presented to her ransom, to Manlius got little honour by his success, not being well comed with a Triumph at his coming home, according to the Roman custom, because he undertook the war of his own accord, without Commission from the Senate. And yet the Senate was content to enjoy the fruits of it, keeping the Galatians as their Subjects, and the Kings their time I find Deiotarus, by content of the Romans, to reign here as King: who siding with Pompey in his war against Cæsar, incurred the anger of the Victor; and had died for it, had not Tully pleaded his cause, and obtained his pardon. But he being dead, his Country in the time of Augustus was made a Province of the Empire; Lollius Pallinus being the first President or Governor of it; enlarged afterwards with the addition of Paphlagonia, and some part of Pontus, from whence called Galaticus. Reduced to its first bounds by the Emperor Constantine, and divided into two Provinces by Theodosius, the one called Galatia Prima, the other Salutaris from its medicinal waters. Of both which Ancyra remained the Metropolis. In the falling of the Eastern Empire, it was partly seized on by the Turks; not totally come into their hands, till the subverting of the Empire of Trabzon upon which it depended. By the Turks at this day called Chianger.

5 CAPPADOCIA.

CAPPADOCIA is bounded on the East, with Armenia Major, and some part of Armenia Minor; on the West, with Galatia; on the North, with Pontus, Polemoniacus, and Cappadocia; and on the South, with Lycania, and the rest of Armenia Minor. So called of the River, as Pliny telleth us, which runneth betwixt it, and Galatia.

The Country very plentiful of wine, and most kind of fruits, rich in mines of Silver, Brass, Iron, and Allom; affording also besides a mean sort of Alabaster, good store of wealth heretofore its breed of Horses infinite almost in this is universal in all parts of the Country, but not the very barren, especially about the furs and branches of the Antitaurus, which is a chain of hills, thrusting out on the edges of this Country, and the two Armenias. Here is also in this Country the mountain Argæus, said to be of so great an height, that from one of the summits or tops thereof, a man of peripetuous eyes may discern the Euxine on the one hand, and the Mediterranean on the other.

The People of this Country in the time of the Romans were of ill report, so vicious and lewd of life, so monstrous addicted to all kind of wickedness; that besides the share they had in the old Greek Proverb, of Trochæus and Andrus, they had some Proverbs to themselves, Kawachius and Kawachius rizes, that is to say, a man of Cappadocia, and a Cappadocian Monster, being used proverbially, to signify a man most extremely wicked. The story of George, the Asian Patriarch of Alexandria, if either stand him rightly. And they made good the Proverb in Alexandria, Auxentius, Asterius, Euthasius, principal Pastors of the Arians, and that Arch-heretic Eunomius, Christianity, where once entertained, that this lewd disposition of the Cappadocians was to be corrected and reformed, and that this Country afforded as many godly Prebends, and courageous Martyrs, as any other whatsoever. Highly commended for it by Nazianzen before remembered, who with Gregory Nyssen, and St. Basil, all learned amongst many Martyrs of great faith and constancy. St. George, a noble Cappadocian, Collected or Tribune of Solboth East and West, than any other Saint in the Churches, the blessed Apostles and Evangelists excepted only, and for that reason made Patron of the Order of the Saints by Edward the Third. Finally, it is reported of these Cappadocians, that they were not only morally wicked, but naturally venomous also; inasmuch that if a Serpent did bite any of them, the mans blood was a poyson to the Snake, and killed him.

Principal Rivers of this Country, were 1 Haly, spoken of before, which had here its Fountain and Original; the end of Cræsus Empire both in site and fate, the utmost bounds of his dominions on that side: the utopian to pass over in his way to Media, which he intended to invade, he was encountered with, and vanquished by Cyrus the great King of Persia. 2 Iris, which a part of Pontus, dischannelled it self, as the other doth, in the Euxine Sea.

Places of most observation in it, 1 Mazaca, beautified and enlarged by the Emperor Tiberius; after the uniting of this Province to the Roman Empire; and in honour of Augustus Cæsar, by him called Cæsarea, the Metropolis of Cappadocia, and the Episcopal See of renowned St. Basil. 2 Nyssa, the See of Gregory, famed Nyssen, the brother of Basil. 3 Nazianzen, the Episcopal See of another Gregory famed Nazianzen; three men, which as for the theoplicity of their conversation they were not equalled in those times: so for their admirabilities in all kind of learning, nothing more admirable to the most eminent of the ancient Græcians. 4 Tyana, the Metropolis of Cappadocia secondarily, the subdivision of it by the Emperors. 5 Archelaus in the Prefecture of Quadratus, founder or repaire of it. 6 Comana, for distinctions sake that name in Pontus, by Proculus placed, I know not one. Memorable in old times for a Temple consecrated to Bellona, whose Priests and other inferior Officers of both Sexes, amounted in the time of Strabo to 6000 and the Revenue of the Region next adjoining to it, in hundreded also. 7 Diocæsarea, called formerly Cabira, as we find in Strabo. 8 Eusitopolis, so called in honour of Faustina, wife of the Emperor Antoninus. 9 Andresia, 10 Ptochæ. 11 Salambria. 12 Compe, spoken of by Proculus, with many others so obscure, and not worth the naming. Of more note, though not found in the ancient Writers, is 13 Ezerion, situate on the very confines of the the Greater Armenia for that cause made the Rendezvous, or place of meeting for the Turkish Soldiers when there is any expedition in hand against the Persians; at which place also after the ending of the War for the present year; they are disbanded and sent home to their several quarters. And 14 Pertium, not named in Ptolemy, but memorable for the great Battle fought in fight thereof, between Cresus King of Lydia, and Cyrus of Persia, in which Cresus having lost the field, and with it his Kingdom, found the Oracle true (though not in the sense that he expected) that Cresus passing over the River Haly, should overthrow a great estate, as indeed he did; but it was his own, and not the Persians.

That the Cappadocians are derived from Tosayma, the Son of Gomer, hath been so fully proved already in our General Preface, that we shall not trouble our selves to repeat it here; Nor shall we need to say more in confuting of their opinion, who would fetch Caphroim out of Aegypt from the rest of his brethren, to plant him in this Country, than hath there been said. Their fortunes in the former times I find little of: subjected by the Persians, with the rest of Asia Minor, after the overthrow of Cresus, who before had given the Law unto it, as to the Phrygians, Paphlagonians, Bithynians, Mysians, and others of the neighbouring Nations. By Cyrus given together with Atossa his Sister, to Pharnaces a Noble Persian, who had saved him from the fury of a ravenous Lion running upon him with full mouth, as he was hunting. A noble loyalty, and no less royally rewarded. From him descended Artabanus King herof in the time of Alexander the Great, continuing steadfast in his duty to the Crown of Persia, when almost all the rest of the Kings of Asia yielded to the Enemy. Nor did Alexander call him to account in his march for Persia. But after his decease, Perdiccas having the command of the Army, set upon him, vanquished him, and most cruelly crucified him, together with as many of his kindred as could be found. One of his Sons, who fortunately had escaped this slaughter, eluding his time when the Macedonians were at wars amongst themselves, recovered his estate again, and passed it over to his off-spring: continuing in his line, without any subjection, till the time of that Artabazanes, who by Mithridates was deprived of his dominion, as was told before. Restored again unto his Kingdom by the power of the Romans, he became their Homager, holding, as did his Successors, by their courtesy only: Continuing yet in Rate of Kings, till the death of Archelaus the last King herof, who having angered Tiberius for not attending on him when he lived at Rhodes, during the life time of Augustus, as did others of the Tributary States and Princes, was by him then possessed of the Empire, cited unto Rome under colour of projecting somewhat against the State. Where the old Prince, even spent with age, the Gout, and some other Difinances, had without question been condemned by the servile Senate, but that one of the witnesses depoted, that he had said, That if ever he went back into Cappadocia, Tiberius should find, quales nervi sibi essent, what a man he was. Which moved such a laughter in the Senate, the old King being neither able to sit nor stand, that he was dismissed; Tiberius thinking that he could not punish him more effectually, than to let him live. A favour which the old King construed to the best, and in the way of gratitude bequeathed his Kingdom at his death to the Empire of Rome. Being added to the Roman Empire, it was exceedingly enlarged by the addition of the greatest part of the Kingdom of Pontus: and so it stood in the time of Ptolemy, who reckoneth Pontus Galaticus, Cappadocia, and Polemoniacus, as parts and Members of this Province. Divided besides those into these eight Prefectures that is to say, Clamianensis, Sargavanensis, Gardicranensis, Cilicia, Tyavidis, Lycania, Antiochiana, and Cataonia. But Pontus, Lycania, and Antiochiana (he means Pisidia as I take it) being made Provinces of themselves, by the Emperor Constantine, it returned unto its natural bounds, and made one Province of the Empire, of which Cæsaria, as is said before, was the Metropolis; and so remained, till the Emperor Valens, a great Patron of the Asian faction, of purpose to depose St. Basil, who opposed that Heretic, created another Province out of it, called Cappadocia Secunda, whereof the Metropolis was Tyana. After this it continued part of the Eastern Empire, till the erecting of the new Empire of Trapezond, together with which it fell into the hands of the Turks; by whom the whole Province, with the addition of Pontus, is now called Anatolia, after the name of that City, which the Beglerbeg of Anatolia honoureth with his residence, and is said to yield yearly to the Grand Seignior 60000 Ducks.

ARMENIA MINOR.

ARMENIA MINOR is bounded on the East, with Euphrates, which parteth it from Anania Major; on the South, with Mount Taurus, which separates it from Cilicia; on the West, and North, with a long chain of Hills, called Mts Scordiscus, by some called Mts Amanus, by others Anti-Taurus, according to the change of places; by which divided from Cappadocia. Of the reason of the name hereafter.

The Country of the same nature with Cappadocia, before described; in some parts overgrown with Mountains, by which, and by the River Euphrates so inclosed and fenced, that it is difficult of entrance: in others pleasant and delightful, well watered with sweet fountains, and some fair Rivers issuing out of the Mountains, the principal whereof is Aras, so called from the blackness of the water thereof, which falleth into the Euphrates.

Divided in the time of the Romans, into these four Regions; that is to say, Loviana, Aravena, Armenie, lying on the Euphrates; Armenia more within the land towards Cappadocia, each of which had their several Cities, whose names are to be found in Ptolemy. The principal Armenie, the chief City of the Region so called, and the Metropolis of the lesser Armenia, called afterwards Molania, and now Szur; the Territory thereof abounding in Oyl and Wine, not inferior to the best of Greece. The City said by Onuphris to be a Colony of the Romans, much spoken of by Eusebius, and other Writers of Ecclesiastical story, for the piety of the Christians there inhabiting in the fiery times of Persecution. 2 Nicopolis, and 3 Orontodanus in the Mountain Countries; the former built by Pompey, in memory of his victory there obtained against the forces of Tigranes, King of Syria, and both Armenia's. 4 Garnace, a well-fortified Town, mentioned by Tacitus in the twelfth book of his Annals, and by him called Gurneus, 5 Cuculus, and 6 Arabsis, memorable for the Exile of St. Chrysothome, Patriarch of Constantinople, confined unto these places by the power and malice of the Empress Eudoxia, by whom hated for his Orthodoxy in points of faith; who dying afterwards at Comana of Cappadocia, was there interred.

This Country was once part of Cappadocia, till the Armenians by their incursions and Colonies possessed themselves of it, and gave unto it the name of Armenia Minor; continuing part of their estate till the war of Mithridates against the Romans; who being discomfited by Lucullus, fled with two thousand Horse to the Court of Tigranes the Armenian, who had married his daughter. By whom at first neglected, and not suffered to come into his presence; but afterwards on the apprehension of the common danger, more esteemed and set by: in somuch that his royal entertainment there, and the refusal of Tigranes, to yield him up when required by the Romans, occasioned Lucullus to bring his forces into these parts, Victories being seconded by Pompey, and confirmed by Augustus, this Country was made a Province of the Roman Empire; the greater Armenia, lying on the other side of that River, though conquered also in that war, not being taken into the account of the Roman Provinces, till the time of Trajan Augustus, thinking it an high point of wisdom (as no doubt it was) not to extend the Empire beyond those banks. After this it continued Roman, till the declining times of the Eastern Empire, when wasted by the Persians, and subdued by the Turks; by whom called Genech, or as some say Pegia.

And so much of the Provinces of the Pontic Diocese, lying within Anatolia, or Asia Minor; converted to the Christian faith by the two great Apostles of the Jews and Gentiles, as appeareth by St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians, and St. Peter's to the Strangers dispersed in Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia.

7. ASIA PROPRIA.

Come we now to the ASIAN Diocese, and first to that part thereof which Ptolemy and others for the reasons spoken of before (call Asia Propria. Anciently the most rich and flourishing part of all this Peninsula; and so affirmed to be by Tully, who calleth us, that the Tributes which the Romans had from other places, hardly sufficed to defray the publick charges for defence thereof, Asia vero tam opima est & fertilis, ut & uberius agrorum, & varietate fructuum, & magnitudine passionis, & multitudine earum rerum quae exportentur, facili omnibus terris antecellit. But as for Asia (saith he) it is so fertile and so rich, that for the fruitfulness of the fields, variety of commodities which were brought from thence, it very easily excelled all other Countries. The fortunes of the several Provinces we shall see anon. Brought under the command of the Persians, they continued subject to that by the Grecians, under the prosperous Ensigns of victory divided amongst his Captains, Asia fell to the share of Antiochus, whose Son Demetrius seized on the Kingdom of Asia, and left Asia to Seleucus Nicator, King of Syria, and the East, being also one of Alexander's heirs. The sixth from this Seleucus, was Antiochus called the Great, who waging war with young Ptolemy Philopater, King of Egypt, committed by his father to the protection of the Romans, and otherwise practising against their estate, from his Asian victories) Asiaticus, against him; who finally took into their possessions, which the Romans pretended to the present estate of their Affairs, (the Kingdom of Macedonia standing in their way) to make further use of Eumenes King of Pergamum, and the people of Rhodes, who had been aiding to them in the former way, they gave unto Eumenes, the Provinces of Lycania, Phrygia, Mysia, Ionis, Lydia; Lycia and Caria to the Rhodians, knowing full well, that they could easily take them back again, when they saw occasion. More herof in the story of the Kings of Pergamum, on the decease of Attalus, the last King thereof; these Provinces returning fully to the power of the Romans.

It contained only after the account of Cicero, the Provinces of Phrygia, Mysia, Caria, Lydia, as he reckoneth them up in his Oration for Flaccus: computing the two Asia and Ionis, under that of Lydia. But for our more punctual and particular proceeding in it, we will consider it as divided into 1 Phrygia Minor. 2 Phrygia Major. 3 Mysia. 4 Aolis and Ionis, or Asia more especially so called. 6 Lydia, and 7 Caria.

8. PHRYGIA MINOR.

PHRYGIA MINOR, is bounded on the East, with Mysia, interpoling betwixt it and the Greater Phrygia on the West, with the Hellespont; on the North, with the Propontis; on the South, with the Aegean Sea, Called Phrygia from Phryx, a River in the Greater Phrygia; or as some say, from Phryxus, the son of Atamas of his Mother-in-law, did here eat himself. Minor was added to it to distinguish it from the other Phrygia, which being the bigger of the two had the name of Major. It was also called Phrygia Hellespontica, after its situation on that Strait, and Troas, from Troas the chief City of it, by which name it occurth in the book of the names I find not, except it came from the Epistates, a people dwelling on the East parts of Bithynia, and consequently near this place.

Chief Rivers of it Scamander, on whose Banks stood the renowned City of Troy, honoured by Hesiod with this Title of Divine Scamander: in which the Virgins of Asia took a little before they were to be married, used to bath themselves, and to say these words, Scamander mi Virginitate auguras, that is to say, Take O Athenian taking, clapped a Coronet of Reeds upon his head, like a River god; and so bestowed Callisto a no by the Virgin, then betrothed to another, occasioning there called Xanthus by the Poets, Xanthusque bibissim, as in Virgil, and watered a little Region called Lycia, whence Trolemus Lycian tepefecerat hantem (Sanguine Jan Spear. But of this more anon in the greater Lycia. 2 Asopos, passing this little Region from the Lesser Mysia, the boundary of it on the North, as the Promontory called Lebium, is the furthest point of it towards the Hellespont, 3 Simois, now called Shores, falling into the (convenient for the Statue and Sepulchre of Ajax, ybut which Paris (being by his Father exposed to the fury of wild Beasts) judged the controversy of the golden Ball in favour of Pentus; respecting neither the great Riches of Imo, nor the divine delight of Pallas, but transplanted with a sensual delight, fatal in the end to the whole Country.

Cities of most observation in it, 1 Dardannus, or Dardania, the Town and Patrimony of Atreus, 2 Assor, mentioned Attili 20. 13. by Pliny called Apollonia; who it will suffice me that earth about it is of such a nature, that it will consume a dead body in forty days. 3 Trojanopolis, the Sea-side, opposite to the title of Leibos, destroyed by Trojan war, and the Greek in the first beginnings of the the Lady Briseis, relieved by Achilles to himself for his part of the booty, and after taken from him by Agamemnon, which caused such a deep displeasure in him, that he would not go into the field till she was restored.

5 Sigamum, the Port-town to Troy, near a noted Promontory of the same name. 6 Troy, situate on the River Scamander, the beauty and glory of the East, called Ilium, and Pergamum, for the reason to be shewn anon. A famous Town, from the people whereof, all Nations desire to fetch their original. The beauty of it may be (as I have written) yet seen in the ruins, which with a kind of Majesty entertain the beholder: the walls of large circuit, consisting of a black hard stone cut four-square; some remnants of the Towers which stood on the walls, and the fragments of great Marble Tombs and Monuments of curious workmanship. But certainly these are not the ruins of that Ilium, which was destroyed by the Greeks, but 7 Troas, or New-Troy, built some four miles from the situation of the old by Lysimachus, one of Alexander's Captains, who peopled it from the neighbouring Cities, and called it Alexandria, or Troas Alexandri, in honour of Alexander the Great, who began the work, but lived not to bring it to any perfection. In following times called Troas only, and by that name mentioned, Acts 20. 6, then the Metropolis of this Province, now a ruin only; but every day more ruinous than other by the Turks, who carry daily the stones and Pillars of it to Constantinople, to adorn the houses of the Bassas. 7. Scamandria, a strong piece, but of latter foundation, cunningly surprised by Ottoman the first King of the Turks, in the time of a Funeral. Now concerning old Ilium, the buildings, glories, and fall of it, take this story with you.

The KINGS of TROY.

- A.M.
2487 1 Dardanus, son to Corimbis King of Corinth, having killed his brother Asius, fled into this Country, where he built this City, calling it Dardania; according to that Verse of Virgil, Dardania Illice primus pater urbis, & autor. Both of Troy Town, and Trojan race, Dardanus the first founder was.
- 2518 2 Erichonius, of whom little memorable. 75.
- 2593 3 Tros, the son of Erichonius, who so much beautified and enlarged the City of Dardania, that from thenceforth it was called Troja, and the people Troes. By supporting the unnatural malice of Saturn against his son Jupiter, he lost his own son Ganymedes: who being taken prisoner by Jupiter, who carried the Eagle for his Ensign, is by the Poets said to have been snatched up to Heaven by an Eagle. 60.
- 2653 4 Ilus, the son of Tros, who built the Regal Palace called Ilium; and did withal so enlarge the City, and added so much Ornament and beauty to it, that it is frequently called Ilium, and the People Iliaci. The many Towers and Towers of it, were of his erection, which being by the Greeks called ἰλίος and sometimes ἰλίου occasioned the whole City to be called Pergamum. 54.
- 2707 5 Laomedon, who new built Troy, which afterwards Hercules and the Greeks (justly conceiving duplicity against the treacherous King) twice took and defaced; Laomedon himself being slain the latter time. 36.
- 2743 6 Prianus who re-edified Troy, but giving leave to his son Paris to ravish Helen wife to Melenas King of Sparta, forced the Greeks to renew their ancient quarrel: who, after a ten years siege, forced the Town, having lost of their own men 860000, and killed 666000 of the Trojans, and their Associates,

A. M. 2783. so as that of Ovid was most true,

Luxuria Phrygio laqueine pinguis humus.*
Corn fit for Ithaca now grows where Troy once stood. And the soil's fattened with the Phrygian blood. Concerning the taking of this Town, two things are to be considered. First, whether the Greeks in these ten years lay continually before it; and it seems they did not; but rather that they did beat up and down, waisting the Country, and robbing the Seas for the first nine years; and in the tenth only laid a formal siege. This is the more probable, because that in the tenth year of the war, Prian is recorded by Homar in the third of his Iliads, to have fate on a high Tower, and to have learned of Helen the names and qualities of the Greek Commanders, which he could not be thought ignorant of, if they had so long together lain in eye-reach. Secondly, by what means the Town was taken: and here we find a difference. For some Historians tell us, that Aeneas and Antenor, being either weary of the war, or discontented that it was not managed by their sole advice, or otherwise corrupted by the Greeks, betrayed it to the Enemy: but this Virgil could not brook, as prejudicial to his Aeneas, whom he intended to make the pattern of a compleat Prince. He therefore telleth of a Wooden-horse, wherein divers of the Greek Princes lay hidden, which by Sidon one of the Greeks, was brought to Troy gates; and that the people desirous of that monument of the Enemies flight, made a breach in their walls, the gate not being high enough to receive it. And that this fiction of Virgil might be grounded on History, it is thought by some, that over the Scenae Gate where the Greeks entered, was the portraiture of a large and fately Horse: and by others that the walls were battered by a wooden Engine, called an Horse; as the Romans in after ages used a like Engine called a Karr. Neither of which is much improbable; but with me perfwade not the integrity of Antenor or Aeneas, for whose fakes the fable of the wooden Horse was first invented.

The City being thus destroyed, the Trojans who remained in the Country, when Aeneas and Antenor had forsaken it, began to think of some other place for their habitation, which having often shifted, they fixed at last by advice of an Oracle, some four miles from the former, giving it the name of Ilium. A poor and sorry Village when Alexander came thither, who in the Temple of Minerva, (the only one they had, and a mean one too) offered up his own shield, and took down another, which he used after in his fights against the Persians, honouring it with gifts, and promising the People to rebuild and enlarge their City. But what he lived not to make good, was performed by Lysimachus, who gave it the name of Alexandria, next called the Alexandrian Troas, at last Troas simply. A free City it continued till the war of Antichrist against the Romans; in the course whereof Fimbria a Roman Quæstor having seditiously slain the Consul Valerius Flaccus in Bithynia, and made himself Master of the Army, being refused entrance here as a Thief and a Rebel, besieged the City, and in the space of eleven days took it. And when he boasted that he had done as much in eleven days, as Agamemnon and the Greeks could do in as many years, one of the Ilians tartly answered; That they wanted an Hector to defend them. Afterwards Julius Caesar, emulous of Alexander's attempts, and descended from Julius of Trojan race, restored them to their liberty, and enlarged their Territories: a Colony, and an University of the Romans of no mean esteem. But time and war, and the barbarity of the Turks, have brought it unto rubbish, as before was said.

In the distributing of the Provinces of the Roman Empire, Empire, this little Region, with that of Mysia Hellepontica adjoining to it, made up the Province called by the name of Hellepontus, subject with Æolis, Ionia, and the Asian Isles, to the exempt Jurisdiction of the Proconsul of Asia. Following the fortunes of Constantinople till the taking of that City by the Turks, it became then subject to the Greek Emperours residing at Nicea, conquered not long after by the Turks of the Seldassian family. In the devolution of whole Empire on the death of the second Murad, the whole Province of Hellepontus, with part of the greater Mysia and Æolis adjoining to them, and of some parts of Lydia, were seized upon by Carafius, a man of great power amongst the Turks, who here erected a small Kingdom, called from him Carafius, or Caraf-illi; long since swallowed up by the Ottoman Race, in the time of Orchanes, Son of Ottoman, and the second King of that house.

8. PHRYGIA MAJOR.

PHRYGIA MAJOR is bounded on the East, with Galatia; on the West, with Mysia, interposed Maratonus, and the Lesser Phrygia; on the North, with Maratonus, or Pontus specially so called; on the South, with Lydia. Called Phrygia for the reasons before laid sake, because the greater of the two.

The People of this Country were anciently more superstitious than the other Asians, as appeareth by the rites used in the Sacrifices of Cybele, and some other Goddesses: said to be also the Inventors of Augury, and other kinds of Divination. And yet for the most part men of afterwits, and all for had I wife, whence the Proverb, Serò jam Phryges, applied to those who wanted foresight, and off; and used not to bethink themselves of what would follow, till it was too late. A people noted for effeminacy and lightness of conversation; and for fear they should not of themselves be wanton enough, their very Musick was so fitted as to dispose them to lasciviousness. Whereby the ways I find three sorts of Musick spoken of amongst the Ancients: the first, that which Aristotle calleth ἰνδική, because it fettered and composed the affections; and Boetius, the Lydian Musick, because much used by that people, before corrupted by long ease and ill example. It consisted principally of long notes or Spondees, such as is that supposed to be which Elitha called for, 1 Kings 3. 15, to invite the Spirit of prophesie to him; and was played by David before Saul; to drive away the ill Spirit from him. And of this sort was the Church-Musick of the Primitive times, fitted to calm mens passions, and raise their devotions. Or per oblectamenta aurium (as St. Augustine hath it) assurgens animus ad pietatis affectum, that by the pleasure of the ears the passions might be calmed, and the Soul inflamed with pious and devout affections. The second sort was that which Aristotle calleth ἡρώδης, or ἡρώδης (as the other ἰνδική or moral) commending it stirring them to action; consisting of Dactyles, or more long notes; and two short notes, by him and Boetius both called Dorian, as most peculiar to that people: The third and last by the Philosopher called ἑυδαίμωνος, or ravishing to lascivious gestures, and wanton thoughts: consisting of three notes or Tribachies. Boetius terms it Phrygian, on; such as the French Musick in our age. A sort of Musick forbidden to be used by Aristotle, but upon the Theatre, for contentation of the rude and unpolished people by reason of that influence which it had upon mens behaviours. Musica Mithica (saith the Orator) mutatur & mores; Curandum itaque in Musica quædam gravissima & sedatissima retinenda, that is to say, the change of Musick maketh an alteration of manners; care therefore is to be taken in the Common-wealth, that the Musick be composed and grave: and such only out of the way how this fiddling humour hath led me out of the

The Country very rich and pleasant, well watered with the Rivers Sangarius and Marfias. Of which the former hath its Spring or Fountain in this Country, but his fall in the Euxinus, on the banks whereof standeth the City Gordium, and many others of good note. The latter was so called from one Marfias, who striving with Apollo for prebeminence in Musick, was by himhead, which tears of the mourners grew this River. The chief Towns 1 Gordium, the seat of Gordius, who from a Plowman being raised and chosen King of this Kingdom, placed the furniture of his Wain and Oxen in the Temple of Apollo, layed in such a Knot, that the Monarchy of the world was promised to him that could untie it; which when Alexander had tried and could not undo it, he cut it with his Sword. 2 Midas, the seat of Midas, son to Bacchus, that what ever he touched should be turned into gold; which Petition granted, he was almost starved, his wife; and afterward for preferring Pan's Pipe before Apollo's Harp, his head was adorned with a comely pair of Asses ears. 3 Coleffe, where dwelt the Coleffians; to whom St. Paul wrote one of his Epistles. 4 Pessinus, Dea Pelinnia, The Romans were once told by an Oracle, that they should be Lords of the world, if they could get this Goddess into their possession. Hereupon they lend to the Phrygians to demand it. The Phrygians willing to please a potent neighbour, especially the Romans, being their Country men, as descended from Aeneas, decds is shipped away for Rome. But behold the unluckiness of fortune: The Ship, Goddess and all made a stand in Tiber; neither could it be advanced forwards by force of Art: it hapned that one of the Vestal Virgins, named her self upon this experiment and fasting her girdle to the Ship, prayed to the Goddess, that if she were cause, which was no sooner heard than granted, Claudia draw people wondering at the miracle, as well they might. But to return unto the City, it stands in the borders of Galatia, and is by some made to be the City of Gordius, and the Gordian Knot placed in it also; but neither rightly. The City, in which the Priests of Cybele had their usual residence, thence called Dindymene. 5 Apamea, situate not far from the banks of Meander, anciently a most flourishing Emport, and the Metropolis of the whole Country, till Constantine divided it into the two Provinces of Salutaris, and Pactiana: making 6 Synada, the Metropolis of the first. 7 Hierapolis, and 8 Lusidæa, two noted Cities in those times, the principal of the other Province. 9 Tiropolis, and 10 Tiberiopolis, so called from the Emperour to whose honour dedicated. 11 Doxyram, &c. Not known unto the ancient Writers, but of more note in modern stories; are 1 Syngia, the habitation of Ereclus, Father of Ottoman the first King of the Turks. 2 Choras-chis, by the Greeks called Melanopygia, or the Black Tower, 3 Cilicene, 4 Eimeiol, places places of consequence and importance, taken by the said Ottoman from the Christians, in the first rise of his fortunes.

As for the Phrygians, they descended (as was shewn before) from Gomer the eldest Son of Japhet, and Askenaz, the eldest Son of Gomer: of which Gomer first placed himself in the mountainous Countries of Albania, and afterwards in the more pleasant Plains of the Greater Phrygia, where the City of Cimmerius (the posterity of Gomer being generally called Cimmerians) did preserve his memory. And as for Askenaz, he first took up his dwelling in the Lesser Phrygia, and the banks of the Hellepont; where was anciently a City and Territory called Ascania, some times adjoining called Insula Ascania, the name of Ascanius also very frequent in Troy itself. An ancient people they were doubtless, esteemed the ancientest of the World by Psemiticus King of Egypt, upon this Experiment. Desirous to inform himself to what Nation the privilege of greatness Antiquity did right belong, he caused two children to be kept in a fold, where they were suckled by Goats: all mankind being prohibited upon very great penalties to have recourse to them. All the language which the children learned from their speech & Nurses, was no more than Bec, which in the Phrygian language significeth bread; and being of no signification at all in any other which was then known to the Egyptians, gave up the Verdict on their side: But other Nations of the world not yielding to this sentence, by a Writ of Error, or an Ad melius inquirendum, impeach'd a new Jury; wherein it was pronounced on the Scythians side, Scythianum gens semper antiquissima. Where by the way, Goropius Becanus makes the like use of this experiment, to prove the High Dutch to be the Original or Mother-tongue of the world; because Becquer in that language significeth, as with us, a Baker, or a maker of Bread. In this Country reigned Niobe, who preferring herself before Latona, the mother of Phobus and Diana, had her children slain before her face by an unseen means, and was her self turned into a stone, as the Poets fable. Here also reigned Tantalus, who being rich, and wanting wisdom to make use of it, is feigned to stand in Hell up to the chin in water; and that too under a tree whose fruit toucheth his lips: yet both the one and the other lie from him, when he offereth at them. Of which thus Ovid.

—Tibi Tantalus mille

Dependunt aquae, quaeque imminet, effugit arbor,
In English thus,

Thou canst not, Tantalus, those waters taste;
The tree just at thy lips, flies off as fast.

But this race of Kings being worn out by the Tyranny of time or war, the Phrygians were made subject to the Kings of Lydia; continuing under their command till the Conquest of Lydia by the Persians, with which they fell together to the Crown thereof, not made the fronger by the accession of effeminate Subjects. Gained from them by the Sword of Alexander, they fell unto Antiochus one of his great Captains, and on his overthrow at the battle of Issus, to Seleneus the Conqueror, the first King of that race: following the same fortune after that with the rest of Asia, till they came to be possessed by the Romans, and made a Province of that Empire. But Constantine laying to the Greater Mysia, made two Provinces of it; the one called Salutaris, from some miraculous cures there wrought by the Arch-Angel Michael, as was then generally believed; the other called Pactiana, from Pactianus, who in the time of the said Constantine was Præfect for the Prætorium of the East; and divers years before had begun his honours with the Lieutenanship of Britain. In the declining of the Constantinopolis- tians, it became a prey unto the Turks of the Selaccian Family; possessed by them till the death of Aladin, the last King of that race: when seized upon, together with the Greater Mysia, and those parts of Lydia which lay next unto it, by Aidin, a great Turkish Prince, and made a peculiar Kingdom, called by his name Adinidia, or Adinili; extorted shortly from his heirs by the house of Ottoman.

9. MYSIA.

Interposed betwixt the two Phrygias lyeth the Country of MTSIA A bounded on the East, with Phrygia Major; on the West, with Phrygia Minor, and the Ægean Sea; on the North, with parts of Bithynia, Propontis, and the Hellepont; and on the South, with part of Lydia, Æolia, and the Ægean. So called from the Mysians, the Inhabitants of it.

Whether these Mysians were originally a Phrygian Nation, or some interlopers which thrust in afterwards amongst them, I find not determined. Most probable it is, they were natural Phrygians, being as superstitious in the worship of their several Deities, as any Phrygian of them all; and that they had this name given them by the Lydians, from the abundance of Beech-trees which grow amongst them, by them called Mysia. A people of so base & contemptible quality, that it grew into a common Proverb to call a fellow of no worth, Mysiorum posterum.

The principal Mountain of this Country is that called Olympus, situate in the North parts hereof bordering towards Bithynia: which as it is called Olympus Mysia, to difference it from Olympus in Greece; so the people of the Greater Mysia, where this Mountain is, are called Olympeni, to difference them from the Mysii or Mesi of Europe. And as for Rivers, those of most note besides Ægeus, parting it from Troas, or the Lesser Phrygia, are 1. Caius, on whose banks stands the City of Pergamus, and from thence passeth into the Ægean Sea, at the Bay of Elaia; and 2. the famous River of Granicus, which hath its fountain in Mysia Major, and passing through Mysia Minor, falleth into the Propontis. A River memorable for the Victory which Alexander obtained on the banks hereof, in his first essay against the Persians, by whom upon the first noise of his preparations he was so flighted, that Darius King of Persia, gave command to his Lieutenants residing in Asia Minor, that they should take him alive, whip him with Rods, and so convey him to his presence. A notable example of the pride and folly of the Persians. But Alexander soon taught them another Lesson. For though the Persians were possessed of the higher banks of the River, with an intent to stop his passage; yet he resolved to charge them in the face of their strength, knowing full well, that if he could beat them on a place of so great advantage, he should not only lessen them in point of reputation, but beget an opinion of himself that he was invincible. And so accordingly it proved, the Persians being vanquished by him, and all the Kingdoms and Provinces of this Asia submitting to him on the noise of the Victory (as an enemy not to be resisted upon equal terms) some few Towns excepted. And therefore it was wisely advised by Machabiel, that he who takes upon him to defend a passage, should with his ablest forces oppose the Assailants, because in all Invasions where the Nations invaded have been beaten upon a great advantage of place, as defence of Rivers, Straights, and Mountains, they do not only dishearten their Soldiers from dealing afterwards on even ground with that Enemy, but leave no hope unto their fellows and partakers, of being succoured and defended by such weak Protectors. Which caution if the Persian commanders had observed either here, or at Pylæ

Cilicia

Cilicia, spoken of hereafter, Alexander had not so easily subverted the Persian Monarchy. But the fatal period of it was now drawing on, and the men either naturally Cowards, or else prodigiously befotored.

It is divided commonly into Mysia Minor, or the Lesser Mysia, which lying on the West towards Troas and the Hellepont, is called sometimes Mysia Hellepontica; and joyned unto Troas by the Emperor Constantine, made up that Province which he called the Consular Hellepont: and Mysia Major, called from Olympus which was in it, Mysia Olympica, and the Inhabitants Olympeni; which joyned by that Emperor to the Western parts of Phrygia Major, made up that Province which he called to be called Phrygia Salutaris, for the reason formerly delivered.

Places of most observation in the Lesser Mysia, were 1. Aydus, standing on the narrowest of the Hellepont, opposite unto Sefor in Thrace; first built by the Adilems with the consent of Gyges King of Lydia, to whom the Country then belonged; Memorable both in the ancient and modern stories. In ancient story for the famous resolution of the Inhabitants, when besieged by Philip the father of Persus King of Macedon. For being brought by him into some distress, and hopeless of good conditions from him, the young men of the Town who had bound themselves by oath to die rather than fall into his hands, set fire thereof, and barbarously flew themselves, with as many of the women and children as could be met with. Which news being brought to Philip, moved so little compassion, that he said he would give the Aydians three days leisure to die; and therefore would not suffer any of his soldiers to enter the Town, then set open to him, either to take the spoil thereof, or hinder this bloody execution, till the three days end. In Modern story no less memorable for the taking of it by the Turks, in the reign of Orchamus the son of Ottoman, through the treason of the Governours Daughter: who bewitched with the person and valour of Alderach-men, a young Turkish Gallant, whom she had beheld from the Towers of the Castle, threw a Letter to him as he drew near the wall, wherein he manifested her affection, and promised to make him Master of that Fortress, if he would persuade his General to raise the siege, and come to receive it from her, which was done accordingly. The Town continuing ever since in the power of the Turks, the well fortified, and one of the two Castles spoken of before, which defend Constantinople on that side from all Island of the same name also, but so near the Continent, that it joyned to it by two bridges. The Metropolis of See in the prosperous times of Christianity; as were all other Cities or Metropoles of their several Provinces. A known to the Romans, called therefore by L. Florus, the civitas nobilis civitas, arce, manibus, porru, turribusque munita Asia; plaga littora illustrat, that is to say, that the noble City of Cyzicus by the excellency of the Walls, Bulwarks, Haven, and Towers of Marble, doth beautify and illustrate the shores of Asia. Honoured amongst many other goodly and magnificent buildings, with a glorious Temple, the Pillars whereof being 4 Cubits thick, and 50 Cubits high, were each of one entire stone only; the whole Fabrick all of polished Marble, every stone joyned unto the other with a line of Gold. In vain besieged by Mithridates in the time of his war, who lost before it by the Sword, Pestilence, and Famine, no fewer than 300000 men, and yet could not force it. Afterwards, ruined by an Earthquake, the Falling-sciency of the former lustre: the very ruins of it daily made more ruinous, by transporting the Stones and Marbles to Constantinople, for the embellishing of that City. 3. Lampsaenus on the Propontis, in which the beauly God Præpus was worshipped in as beauly a figure: Quem non desudo (as wittily Lactantius scoffeth) ne quid appareat risu detum; supposed to be the same with the Syrian or Phœnician Baal, so often mentioned in the Scriptures. For this and on some other reasons, Alexander had conceived against it such an high displeasure when he was in Asia, that he resolved to raze it to the very ground. And seeing Anaximenes coming to him as an Embassador from the Town to obtain his favour, commanding him to hold his peace, and swear as by way of prevention, that he would deny whatsoever he requested of him: whereupon Anaximenes entreated him to destroy the City, which now for his Oaths sake he could not do, and so this wicked City at that time escaped. 4. Parium, so called, as this wicked City from Parium the son of Jafon, a Colony at first of the only two Roman Colonies in all the Province. By Homæ called Adraestia; as Lampsaenus in the same Author, is called Pityusa. More in the land, are 5. Seppis, 6. Hirathene both mentioned by Pliny, but of more antiquity

Chief Cities in MTSIA MAJOR or OLYMPIA are 1. Dainia, in the North parts, not far from Olympus, 2. Apollonia, near a large Lake sacred to Apollon, in the same parts also; 3. Pala Seppis, or Seppis Vetus, on a Bay of the Ægean Sea, joyning upon Troas, or the Lesser Phrygia, 4. Adranthium, mentioned Acts 27. where St. Paul took ship to go to Rome, 5. Antandrus, on the same Sea also, now called St. Dimiri, named at first Cimmeria from the Gomerites or Cimmerians here inhabiting (which sheweth that Asyianus was a part of Phrygia) afterward Edonis, and at last Antandrus, and that either because built or repaired rather by the men of Andros, an Island of the Ægean, spoken of before, among the Cyclades, or because the Grecians having taken Polydorus the son of Priam, from the King of Thrace, received this City for his ransom, or rather in exchange for him as the word doth intimate. 6. Protaeleus, on the same coast also. More in the Land, 7. Prepenissus, 8. Tragæopolis, 9. Aydus, of which little memorable. 10. Pergamus, the Regal City of this tract, situate in a goodly or Fortified with a stately City by the Kings hereof, and beautified with an excellent Library containing 200000 Volumes; for the writing or transcribing whereof, Pavement was here first invented, which from hence to this day is called Pergamenum. Here also were those costly hangings first invented, which we now call Tapestry; by the Romans called first Aulen, from Aula, signifying a Hall; the Hall of Attalus King hereof (by whom invented) being the first room furnished and adorned herewith. Here was born Galen the famous Physician, living very healthfully to the age of 140 years: his health preserved to so great age, by these means especially. 1. Never eating or drinking his fill. 2. Never eating any thing that was raw. 3. 24. Always carrying about him some sweet Perfumes. Finally, this was one of the seven Churches to which St. John writ his Revelation. For near unto the borders of Lydia, it was reckoned as a City of Lydian Asia; within the limits whereof those seven Churches were all comprehended.

As for the Kings hereof which flourished here for some

Some ages in such wealth and splendor, they came but from a poor and obscure original. The first of them one Phileteus, an Eunuch, belonging to Antigonos, one of the Great Alexander's greatest Captains; and after his death to Lysimachus King of Thrace, by whom trusted with his money and accounts. Fearing the fury of his Master then grown old and tyrannous, he seized on the Cattle of Pergamus, and therein on 90000 Talents which he offered with his service unto Selucus, the first King of Syria. But both Lysimachus and Selucus dying shortly after he kept the money to himself, and reigned in this City as an absolute King; leaving the Kingdom at his death to his brother Eumenes, no better man than a poor Carter, till raised by the fortunes of this Eunuch. Eumenes furnished with money, though of no great territory, was able by the Galls and other Mercenaries, not only to preserve himself against the Syrian Kings, who laid claim to his City, but also to enlarge his bounds as he saw occasion. But the main improvement of this Kingdom hapned in the days of Eumenes the second, the son of Attalus, the brother and Successor of this Eumenes: who being useful to the Romans in their wars against Philip of Macedon and Antiochus the Great, King of Syria, was liberally rewarded by them with the Provinces of Lydia, Phrygia, Æolia, Jonis, Troas, and both the Myasias; which they had taken from Antiochus in the end of that war. The rest of the affairs hereof, till it fell in fine unto the Romans, take here in this short Catalogue of

THE KINGS of PERGAMUS.

- A. M.
3668 1 Phileteus, the first King of Pergamus, of whom before 20.
3688 2 Eumenes, brother, or as some say, the brothers son of Phileteus, vanquished Antiochus, surnamed Hierax, in a light near Sardis, and awed Selucus Calinicus, both Kings of Syria. 22.
3710 3 Attalus, brother of Eumenes; restored Ariathes the Cappadocian to his Kingdom, and discomfited the Galls, compelling them to keep themselves within the Country since named Galatia. A Confuldiate of the Romans, and by them much courted.
3754 4 Eumenes II. son of Attalus, gratified by the Romans with the spoils of Antiochus. He was an hereditary Enemy to the Kingdom of Macedon, which he laboured with the Romans to destroy, as in fine they did; and thereby finding no more use of these Pergamon Kings, began to grow to less liking with them.
3782 5 Attalus II. Brother of Eumenes, to whom the Kingdom was offered by the Romans, in the life of his Brother, then less gracious with them; but he most gallantly refused it to the great indignation of the Roman Senate.
3813 7 Attalus III. son of Attalus the second, succeeded on the death of his Uncle Eumenes, and having held the Kingdom but five years only, deceased without issue, and bequeathed it by his last Will unto the Romans. But before the Romans had possession of so great a Legacy Aritonicus the base son of Eumenes, made himself Master of Mindus, Colophon, Samos, and many other Towns and Estates hereof. Against whom the Romans making war were aided by the greatest part of the Asian Kings; not seeing their own danger and destruction to draw near unto them, by letting such a potent neighbour come amongst them, to undo them all. But the Romans got little by this war, though they had the better of it. For being now made Masters of the Riches and Sweets of Asia, they took with them their Vices also: growing thereby to great riot, and unparalleled luxury; which overcame the rigour and severity of their former discipline, and made them apt for Faction, and those bloody quarrels, which proved the ruin of their State. So truly was it laid by Jyslin, Sic Asia facit Romanorum cum quibus suis vicia quoque sua Romanorum transmissit. This Kingdom, taking it in the largest extent thereof, being thus subdued and settled as a Roman Province, had the name of Asia, according to the name of the Greater Cominens; by Protony, and others, called Asia Propria: continuing under the subjection of the Roman Emperors, till the translating of the Imperial seat unto Constantinople; as after that unto the Emperours of the East, till conquered piece-meal by the Turks of the Seluzian family. Which being ended in the person of Mulidne the second, those parts hereof which lay next Troas, made up the Kingdom of Carasus, or Carasus III; as those which had been laid to the Greater Phrygia, made up the Adianian: both of them swallowed up long since by the Ottoman Kings, the Accessories running the same fortune as the Principals did.

IO. ASIA SPECIALIUS DICTA.

BESIDES the Propria Asia spoken of before, containing all the Provinces of the Pergamon Kingdom, there was one part hereof which anciently had the name of Asia, before it was communicated to the greater Cominens, or this whole Peninsula. This for distinctions sake the Romans called the PROCONSULAR ASIA; because committed to the government of one of their Pro-consuls (who had his residence in Ephesus, the principal City of this Province) together with the Consular Hellespont, and the Province of the Isles of Asia. This we have spoken of before, as also how the Country lying about Ephesus, had more specially the name of Asia, than any other: so specially, that Erasmus thereupon interteth, that by Asia in the New Testament, (but more particularly in the Acts) is meant that part of Asia only in which Ephesus standeth.

This being agreed on for the name, we shall bound it on the East with Lydia, whereof it was anciently a part; on the West, with the Ægean Sea; on the North, with Myfia; and on the South, with Caria. And having so bounded it, we shall divide it into the two Regions of ÆOLIS, and IONIA: that of Æolia lying on the North, towards Myfia; as Ionis doth upon the South, towards Caria: policed both of them by Greek Nations, and of whom so named.

Principal Towns in ÆOLIS, are 1 Acarne, over against the Ile of Lesbos, the Royal Seat sometimes of the Tyrant Hermias, who being once a Scholar of Aristotle, but unworthy of so good a Master, seized on this City, and here committed to great cruelties; that: last he was taken by the People, sewed in an Oxes hide; 2: baited to death. 3 Pirane, on a little River so named, falling into Caicus, not far from the influx or fall thereof into the Ægean; in which Town they had an Art of making Brieks which would swim on the water. 4 Elea, on the mouth of Caicus, the Port-Town to Pergamus. 5 Myrina, afterwards in honour of Argus, called Sesepodium. 6 Cene, by Strabo called Cane, by Mela, Canna, not far from a Promontory of the same name. 7 Cuma, the principal and greatest of all Æolis, the Birth-place of Ephorus a Learned man of Elder times; and the habitation of Sibylla, surnamed Cumaica, to difference her from Sibylla Cumaica, so named from Cuma, a City of the Realm of Naples. 7 Phocæa, a Colony of the Athenians, so named from the multitudes of Sea-Calves (the Greeks call them Phoca) which thrust themselves ashore at the building and impatience of so great servitude as was laid upon them, forsook their Country, binding themselves by a fearful Oath, never more to return unto it: and after many and long wanderings came at last into Gaul, where they founded the famous City of Marseilles.

The Inhabitants of this little Region are by Josephus said to be descended of Elisba the son of Javan, who therefore called them by the name of Elisai. And it is possible enough that so it was, Elisba being planted in Greece, where he gave name to Elis, one of the Provinces of Peloponnese; from whence some of his Race in succeeding times might pass over into Asia, and possess those Coasts. For that they were a Greek people, is confessed by all; the Æolic Dialect or phrase of speech, taking name from hence. Not otherwise much mentioned in the course of story, than as partakers of the same fortunes with the rest of their Asian Neighbours before related, and so not necessary to be now repeated.

IONIA, as a larger tract, requires a more particular and punctual description. For here the River Lycus falleth into the Meander, and here Meander and Cassius, two of the most famous Rivers of Asia Minor (of which more hereafter) fall into the Ægean. Here is the renowned City of Ephesus, honoured with one of the worlds seven wonders, the long abode of St. Paul, and the death and sepulture of St. John; the Promontory Trogyllum, with a little Isle adjoining of the same name, mentioned Acts 20. 15.

Principal Cities of this tract, are 1 Myas, on an arm of the Sea, allyed by Ariarxes, together with Lampsaena, and Mænesia, to Themiocles; when being banished his own Country, he fled to his greatest Enemy for entertainment; and there met with more safety than Athenis would, and more honour than it could afford him; So that he might well say (as he often did) Periiston nisi perissem. And on the other side, the King was so overjoyed at his coming to him, (as having now on his side the man who had moit hindered him in the Conquest of Greece) that many times in his sleep he was heard to clap his hands, and say, Habes Themioclem Atheniensem. In brought forth such an innumerable number of Fleas, that the Inhabitants were fain to forsake the City, and with their Bag and Baggage to retire to Miletus; nothing of Panjanis. 2 Erythra, memorable for the habitation of one of the Sibylls, from hence called Sibylla Erythraea; of which Prophetesses we shall speak more when we come to Africa. 3 Lebedus, of most note in the elder times, for those publick Plays which were here annually held in the honour of Bacchus. 4 Clazomenæ, situate on a small Islet, near unto the shore, of much esteem amongst the Romans for the wines there growing; and no less honoured by the Asians for a beautiful Temple of Apollo seated seven Wissens of Greece. 6 Ipsus, renowned for the great Battle betwixt Antigonos and Selucus, two of Alexander's chief Commanders; the Victory whereof falling to Selucus, with the death of his Adversary, obtained him in all the Conquests of his Master, except Agypt only. 7 Tous, the birth-place of his Master, except Agypt only. 7 Tous, the birth-place of Anacreon, that lascivious and drunken Poet, hence surnamed Teius; the Ovid of the Grecians both for wit and wantonness; of both which it may well be doubted, whether the smoothness be the more predominant. 8 Smyrna, a fair and ancient City, on a Bay, thence named the Bay of Smyrna: the greatest part whereof lay towards the Sea, but the fairest on the side of an hill overlooking the waters. Destroyed by the Lydians, it was re-edified by Antiochus and Lysimachus, two of Alexander's great Commanders; of good account in the time of the Romans, and one of the seven Asian Churches, to which St. John inscribed his Revelation. Much traded and frequented to this very day, especially for Chamlets, Grograins and such stuffs, especially for the most part at Ancyra, the chief Town of Galatia, and here vend to the foreign Merchant. For government of the Trade whereof, and of other commodities of these parts, the English Merchants have an Officer called the Consul of Smyrna. In old time there was in it, amongst us, a goodly Temple dedicated unto Homer, said to be born in this City, and to have writ his Poems in a Cave hard by. 9 Colophon, most memorable for the Inhabitants of it, so skilled in Horse-manship, that the side on which they served in War was sure of Victory; whereupon Colophonem addere, to put a good end to any business, grew into a Proverb. It was also another of those Cities, which so ambitiously contended for the birth of Homer; of which there were seven in all, as the old Verles tell us, saying,

Septem urbes certant de stirpe insignis Homeri
Smyrna, Rhodus, Colophon, Salamis, Chios, Argos, Athens.
Whether Homer purposely concealed his Country, that all places might challenge him for theirs, I am not able to say; but sure I am, that Paterculus speaketh it in the commendation of Ephesus the next Greek Poet after him in course of time) that he had specified his birth-place: Qui ut ait vitare in quod Homerus incidit, parvam Cyprianæ refertur esse. 10 Ephesus, the Metropolis of the Dioecæ, and the seat of the Primate of the Asian for being the Episcopal See of Timothy the Evangelist, the first Bishop thereof: 2ly. In that St. Paul directed to al of St. John the Apostle, who by some learned men of the elder times, is said to have gone alive into his Grave, and that he is not dead, but sleeping; building that thought upon that saying which went abroad among the Brethren, That that disciple should not die, Joh. 21. 23. And no less memorable amongst the Gentiles for that sumptuous and magnificent Temple here consecrated to Diana, which for the largeness, furniture, and workmanship of it, was accounted one of the Wonders of the World. The length thereof said to be 425 foot, 220 foot in breadth; supported with 127 Pillars of Marble, seventy foot in height; of which twenty seven were most curiously engraven, and all the rest of Marble polished. The Model of it contrived by one Cresiphon, and that with so much Art and curiosity of Architecture, that it took up two hundred years before it was finished. When finished, only to get himself a name, the last time by Erostratus, night in which Alexander the Great was born, gave occasion to that weighty but witty Scoff, that Diana (he was attend the preservation of her Temple, being then builded at the birth of so great a Prince.

As for those Ioni, or Ionians, they were no doubt the descendants of Javan, the fourth son of Japhet, as hath been shewn before in our general Preface: but whether they came either out of Gracia, or passed from hence into that Country, hath been made a question. The Athenians boasting 3357 8 Halyattes II. of whom before.

3406 9 Cresus, the last King of Lydia, subdued Doris and Æolis; after which Victories, he was overcome by Cyrus King of Persia: in which Battle, a son of Cyrus who had been dumb from his Cradle, seeing a Soldier ready to kill his Father, suddenly broke out into these words, Res cæci, cave ne occidas. After his overthrow, and the Captivity of Cresus (one of the richest Kings that ever was of old) Lydia was made a Persian Province, A.M. 3420.

The Lydians after this rebelled, but being again subdued, Cyrus bereaved them of all their horses of service, dispoiled them of all their Armour, and trained them up in all manner of loose and effeminate living; weakening by this means a powerful Nation, which before that time had not only maintained its own liberty, but awed all the Provinces adjoining. After this they continued Persian till the Conquest of Asia by the Macedonians, in the division of whose spoils they fell to the portion of Seleucus and the Kings of Syria: following the common fortune of the rest of this Asia, till they came under the power of the Romans. Made by them one of the Provinces of their Empire, it had the Lower Mysia, or Mysia Olympea annexed unto it; by means whereof the limits of each became so confounded, that the Towns and Cities of the one, are many times ascribed to the other. In the falling of the Eastern Empire it was made (as all the rest of Anatolia) a prey to the Turks: that (as all of it which lieth next to Æolis, subject to the Carpathian Family; as the other parts towards Phrygia Major were to the Aidian.

12 C A R I A.

CARIA is bounded on the East, with Lycia; on the North with Lydia and Jonis; on the West, with the Icarian or Bægean Sea; and on the South, with the Carpathian. So called from Cares, the son of Phoroneus King of Argos, once the Lord hereof, who is said to have invented the Science of Divination by the flying of Birds, called Augury; though others ascribe it to the Phrygians, and others unto other Nations, all alike uncertain.

In this Country is the Hill called Lamus, the dwelling, or rather retiring place of Endymion, who being much addicted to the study of Astronomy, found out the changes and courses of the Moon, and is therefore by the Poets supposed to have been her Paramour. Others add, that Jupiter hid him in a Cave under this Hill, and cast him into a deep sleep; (which notwithstanding, the defended sometimes to kiss him) whence came the old By-word, of Endymionis somnum dormit. Here is also in this Country the River Salmacis, said to infect all fish as either drink of it, or bathe in it: from whence the Poets raise the fiction of Salmacis and Hermaphroditus, described by Ovid; and the Proverb of Salmacida spolia sine sanguine & sudore, mentioned by Tully in his Book of Offices, and there used for effeminate and wanton exercises.

Places of most note in it, 1. Miletus, not far from the hill Lamus, the birth-place of Thales, one of the seven Wise-men of Greece, from hence called Milesius; and the Mother of no fewer than 75 (or as Pliny saith of 80 Colonies, dispersed in several places of Greece and Asia: described by the Oracle of Apollo, sirnamed Didymus, whose Temple being burnt by Xerxes, was again rebuilt by the Asyians, to be to wait a greatness, that I remained without roof, compassed about with a Grove, and dwelling houses, and sumptuously set out with costly workmanship. This is that Miletus mentioned Act. 20. to which St. Paul called together the Bishops of Ephesus, and of other the adjoining Cities, Ad Epheso & reliquis proximis Civitatibus, saith St. Irenæus, the renowned Bishop of Lions, lib. 3. cap. 14. Anciently it was called Legia and Anatolioria. 2. Mindus, which being but a small Town, had so great Gates, that Diogenes the Cynick cried out, and said, Te men of Mindus, take heed that your City run not out at your Gates. 3. Halicarnassus, so called because situate at the foot of that Mountain, to difference it from many others of that name. 4. Borgylus, or Borgylus, as Pliny calleth it, where anciently Diana had another Temple, though not to be compared with that of Ephesus. 5. Milasa, in old times famous for two Temples sacred unto Jupiter; the way to which for 60 furlongs was paved with stone for the easier travelling of Pilgrims, and the better ordering of Processions; the principal of the Citizens serving there as Priests, which office they held unto their death. 7. Primasus, memorable for the Stratagem by which it was taken by Philip of Macedon, the Father of Persius. Who meaning to force it by Mines, and finding the earth so stony that it would not work, commanded the Pioneers notwithstanding to make a noise under the ground, and caused great Mounts of Rubbish to be raised secretly in the night, at the mouth of the Mine, as if the work went very well forwards; At last he sent word unto the Townsmen, that two parts of their wall stood only upon wooden props, to which if he gave fire, they should find no mercy; which heard, the Citizens yielded up the Town unto him. So useful in the Art of War is a piece of Wit, that it prevails sometimes more than Mines or Batteries.

In the South-West of the Province, thrusting it self into the Sea like a spacious Promontory, stands the Country of DORIS, so called of the Dores, a Greek people, who there inhabited. The principal Cities whereof were 1. Cnidus, not far from a Foreland or Promontory of the same name, famous of old times for the Marble Image of Venus, called hence Dea Cnidia. 2. Cressa, a noted Haven-Town in the time of Ptolemy. 3. Halicarnassus (now called Ness) the birth-place of Herodotus and Dionysius, named hence Halicarnassus, two famous Historians, and the seat-Royal of Artemisia Queen of the Carians (called from hence sometimes the Queen of Halicarnassus) who in the honour of her husband Mausolus, built a stately Monument, accounted one of the Worlds seven Wonders, of which thus Martial, speaking of the Roman Amphitheatre erected by Domitian,

*Aere non vacuo pendens Mausolea

That is to say,

Mausolus Tomb filling the empty Air,
Let not the Carians praise beyond compare.

That the Carians were so called from Cares, the son of Phoroneus, King of Argos, hath been said before. But Bochartus will rather have them so called from Cer, which in the Phœnician Language signifieth a Sheeps Ram; with numerous flocks whereof he did once abound. And this may seem more probable, in regard that the Ionians next neighbours to Caria, borrowing this word from the Phœnicians, called sheep by the name of Cares, Καρες τας αρεις, saith Hesychius, the old Grammatician. From whomsoever they had their name, certain it is, they were a very warlike people. Es amicum pugnaculo amantes, (saith Pomponius Mela) in aliena arma bella appetere, who when they had no wars at home, would seek out for action. A little before the time of Xerxes, Mausolus reigned here, whose wife Artemisia (late mentioned) aided that King in his undertakings against Greece. Afterwards, in the time of Alexander the

the Great, we met with Ada Queen hereof, who aided him against the Persians; adopting him for her son and it followed the same fortune with the rest of these Provinces, till the defeat of Antiochus near Magnesia: in incorporated of whose spoils it was given to the Rhodiens, made a Province of the Empire. Wreathed from the miltythe greatest part hereof, on the death of Aladine II. reft, so called from Mendos (or Mindus) by the name of Mendia; the residue being laid to the Carmanian Kingdom, both long ago subdued by the Ottoman Family: that of Menesia by Alabomer sirnamed the Great, who dispoiled Elias the last Prince thereof, Anno, 1451.

LYCIA is bounded on the East, with Pamphylia, on the West, with Caria; on the North, with parts of Lydia, and Phrygia Major; on the South, with the Meander Sea. Environed on three sides with the above mentioned, by consequence naturally strong, and not very accessible: the Sea for the space of 20 miles shuttles this, there was a little Region of the same name, not either old or new, but mentioned sometimes by the Poëts, Xanthique fluenta Descrii, &c. Qualis ubi bybernæ Lyciam of the Phrygian, or Trogan Lycia, the word lyberna being this. Of this somewhat hath been said before in Phrygia Minor. In which also that there was a River called Xanthus, appears not only from these words of Virgil which unto Paris no less and evident.

The people hereof were sometimes called Xanthi from Xanthus the chief River hereof, which rising in two Springs from the foot of Mount Cadmus, passeth by a Town called Xanthus also, and falleth into the Sea. But from Lycus the son of Pandion King of Athens; who amongst them, or did some memorable act, which deserved that honour.

The principal Mountain of this Country, and indeed in this Province, extending Eastward to the great already, and more is to be said hereafter, when these hills are grown unto the great.

One of the branches of it, and the most notable in this like Sicilian Ætna: the bottom whereof was fire with Serpents, the middle parts grazed upon by Goats, and the higher parts made dangerous by the dens of Lions. Hence by the Poets made a Monster, having the head of a Lion, the body of a Goat and the tail of a Serpent; according unto that of Ovid in his Metamorphosis: Pellus & ora Leo, caudam Serpentis habebat. In English thus,

Chimera from a Goat her mid-part takes,
From Lions head and breast, her tail from Snakes.
This dangerous Mountain was first planted and made habitable by the care of Bellerophon, a noble Grecian, who is therefore fabled by the Poets to have killed this Monster; employed upon this business by Jobares the King of Lycia, to whom he had been sent by Praxus King of Argos, who was jealous of him, and sent his Letters to rebuke that King to kill him. Whence came the saying, Bellerophonis literas portare, applied to those, who were employed to carry Letters tending to their own destruction: such as those carried by Urial to Joad the General, by command of David.

This Country was so populous, that anciently there thirty remained in the time of St. Paul, now nothing left were 1 Myra, the Metropolis of Lycia, when a Roman Province; by consequence an Archbishop See, when *Chri*stive times is said to have been a great Patron of *Scho*lars; his Festival annually holden on the sixth of *Decem*ber; and still in some Schools here in England (as in breeding and my birth) for a feast and a play-day. Of this City there is mention Act. 27. 5. 2. *Telme*si, the Inhabitants whereof are famous for South saying, and accounting the first Interpreters of dreams, 3. Patara, or Haven, and many Temples (one of them dedicated to Apollo, with an Oracle in it, for wealth and credit equal unto that of Delphos. 4. Phaselis, on the Sea-side also, a whom then haunted and enriched, as Alger is now: but Pompey scoured the Seas. And unto the Pirates of this town the former ages were indebted for the first invention of those swift Vessels, which the Romans called *Pha*bricantines. 5. Cragus, with the Mountain of the same name, thrusting out eight points or Promontories near to the Chimæra. 6. Rhodis, or Rhodopolis, as Pliny calleth Rhodians. 7. Solyra, on the borders of the neighbouring Lycia, the people of which were hereof towards *Pis*ta Lycia by the sword of Bellerophon, whom Jobares with employed in that service. 8. Corydalla, near the Mountain called Mausolus, the Majestic of Phrygia. 9. Podalis, two little Regions in this Country.

The Lydians were in former times a puissant people, extending their power upon the Seas, as far as Italy. Subjected to the Persian not without great difficulty; the some of them being belleged by Harpagus, Lieutenant their wives, children, servants, and richer, in a common whom put all into the sword. To Alexander in his our any resistance. After whose death they fell with the rest of these parts into the hand of Seleucus. On the de to the Rhodiens at the battle of Myndus, it was given verved as a free Estate by a Common Council of 14 Sena tors, elected out in their principal Cities: over whom they called one chief President, or Prince of the Senate, whom the sole power of imposing taxes, making War and all things appertaining to the publick Government, under the Romans, and a shadow only: the Supreme power being no longer in the Senate of Lycia, but in that of Rome. Nor had their Lyciarchus any thing but an empty name, and the vain privilege of ordering and disposing the publick Games, wherein by his Office he presided. When made a Province of the Empire, it had the same fortune as the others had, till it fell into the power of the Turks; after the death of the second Aladine made a part of the Kingdom of Carannania; of which more anon.

LYCAONIA is bounded on the East with Armenia minor, from which parted by a branch of the Mountain Taurus; on the West, with the Greater Phrygia; on the North, with Cappadocia; and on the South, with Pisidia. So called from the Lycæones a People of Lycia, or from the Lycæonians, Inhabitants of Lycæonia, a Town of Phrygia Major; who enlarging themselves into these parts, gave this name unto it. Either of which I should prefer before their conceit, who derive it from Lycæon King of Arcadia, dispossessed by Jupiter of that Kingdom; or think that Lycæon was a King of this Country, and not of that.

Places of note herein, 1 Iconium (now Cogni) the Metropolis hereof when a Roman Province: A place of great strength and consequence, situated advantageously in the Mountains for defence and safety, and therefore chosen for the Seat of the Turkish Kings in Lesser Asia, at such time as they were most distressed by the Western Christians, who under the command and presence of the Emperor Conrade did in vain besiege it, forced to depart thence with great loss both of men and honour. Afterwards made the Seat-Royal of the Aladine Kings, the former Race being extinguished by the Tartars; and finally of the Kings of the house of Carannan, whose Kingdom called the Kingdom of Carannania contained all the South part of the Lesser Asia, that is to say, part of the Province of Caria, all Lycia, Pamphylia, Isauria, Cilicia, Pisidia, and this Lycæonia. 2 Lycra, the birth-place of Timothy the Evangelist; where Paul and Barnabas, having miraculously healed a Cripple, were adored as Gods; and not long after, on the infligation of some Jews which came down from Antioch and Iconium, most despitefully treated: Paul being stoned into the bargain, though it pleased God to raise him to life again, Acts 14. v. 19, 20. Such was the divine pleasure of Almighty God, that he that did consent to the stoning of St. Stephen the Protomartyr, and took charge of the cloaths of his Executioners, should suffer in the same kind wherein he had trespassed, and feel some smart remembrance of his former Actions. 3 Derbe, honoured by the preaching of the said Apostle. 4 Laranda, so called by Protonius, and still preserving its old name, the second place for reputation next unto Iconium. 5 Adopissia. 6 Paraliss. 7 Camia. 8 Caratha, with others named by Protonius, but not else observable.

Nor indeed were the Lycæonians themselves, from whomsoever they descended, of any great note or observation in the former times: Subject to Cappadocia when it was a Kingdom, and reckoned as part of it in the time of Protonius, when made a Province of the Empire. Disembred from it by some of the following Emperours, either to create new Offices and Perquisites for some Court-Favourites, or to satiate the ambition of some pretence, aspiring to the dignity of a Metropolitan, it was made a Province of it self. Torn from the Empire by the Turks, it was at first a member of the Saluzzian Kingdom, as afterwards of the Carannanian. Which last founded by Carannan a great Prince of the Turks, on the death of Aladine the second, the last King of the Saluzzian Family, was a great eye-force unto those of the House of Ottoman from the time of Anwarat the first, who first warred upon it, to the Reign of Bajazet the second, who in fine subverted it, Anno 1486, as shall be shewn hereafter, when we come to Cilicia, the last of the Provinces of that Kingdom, in the course of this Work.

PISIDIA hath on the East, Armenia Minor; on the West, some parts of Lycia and Phrygia Major; on the North, Lycæonia; on the South, Pamphylia, and some part of Cilicia; and from which parted by the main body of Mount Taurus. So called from the Pisides, the Inhabitants of it; but the reason of their name I find not amongst my Authors.

The Country small, but furnished with great plenty of all provisions, as appeareth by that passage of Livius, where speaking of the Expedition of Manlius into these parts, he telleth us that he came into the Fields of Sagalassa (one of the Cities hereof) being of a rich soil, and plentiful of all manner of Fruit, Idem ventum est (saith he) in agrum Sagalassarum, ubi ubi fertilemque omni genere frugum: But this is to be understood only of the Plains and Champaign, the Mountainous parts hereof being (like others of that nature) poor and barren.

Towns of most observation in it. 1 Antioch, the Metropolis hereof, when a Province of the Roman Empire, called for distinction sake Antiochia Pisidia; mention of which is made Acts 4. and of the Jems Synagogue therein, honoured by St. Paul's preaching, the sum of whose divine Sermon is there repeated. Built by Seleucus, the first King of Syria of the Macedon Race, and by him so called in honour of his Father Antiochus. 2 Seleucia, the foundation of the same Seleucus, called also, to distinguish it from others of that name, Seleucia Pisidia. 3 Lysimnia, on the borders hereof towards Phrygia. 4 Selge, a Colony of the Lacedæmonians. 5 Sagalassa, situate in the most fruitful part of all this Country, as appears by that of Livius before mentioned. 6 Crenæa, which only had the honour of a Roman Colony. 7 Ternessus, strongly situate in the Streights of the Mounts, the hilly Country about which hath the name of Milyer. 8 Olbanissa. 9 Platanessus, of which little memorable.

As for these Pisides, they were originally defended of the Solyms, Inhabitants of the Borders of Lycia. A valiant people, and so affirmed to be by Livius, who calleth them longè optimos bellos. Nor did he speak it without cause, this small Nation holding out against the Persians, and not conquered by them, when their great neighbours were subdued. Against these, Cyrus the brother of Ariarxes Mithran King of Persia did pretend a Quarrel, as if they had trespassed on the borders of his Province. Which though perhaps they had not done, yet this gave him good occasion to levy an Army, proceeding revenge on them; but intending to dispossess his Brother of the Persian Monarchy: But Tijepheres Lieutenant to the King in Asia, seeing greater Preparations than were sufficient to oppose the weak Pisidians, made the King acquainted with his suspicions, who accordingly provided for resistance. The Army of Cyrus consisting of 12000 Grecians, and 10000 Persians; the Kings Forces were no fewer than 90000 fighting men. They met at Cumæa, not far from Babylon, where Cyrus lost both the Victory and his Life. The Grecians who had made their side good, and stood in honourable terms of Composition, being by Tijepheres betrayed, lost the best of their Country. The rest under the the conduct of Xenophon, made safe retreat home in despite of 200000 men which followed at their heels. This Xenophon was an Agent in, and the Historian of this war them the Macedonians first, and after the Conquest of Persia. But to return to these Pisidians, they fell, with others of their neighbours, under the Dominion of Seleucus, and were made part of the will of the Romans, and settled in obedience by the Military progress of Manlius, spoken of before; they were of. Afterwards made a distinct Province of it self, and continued till those parts of the Eastern Empire were subdued by the Turks: first part of the Saluzzian and Aladine Kingdoms, after of the Kingdom of Carannania; whereof more anon.

PAMPHYLIA is bounded on the East, with Isauria and Cilicia, on the West, with Lycia, from which parted by a branch of the Taurus; on the North, with Pisidia, separated from it by the main body of that Mountain; and on the South, with the Mediterranean Sea, which in those parts which lie next to it, is called Mare Pamphylia. The reason of the name I find not, unless we think with Metaphrastes, that it was so named, quod ex omnibus gentibus conflata est, that it was inhabited by a mixture of many Nations; for so Pamphylia in the Greek Tongue doth expressly signify. And probable enough it is, that lying near unto the Sea, and with an open Shore, opposite to Greece, near Syria, and not far from Greece, several Nations from those Parts might repair unto it; and from thence the Name.

The Country for the most part is very Mountainous, over-run with the branches of Mount Taurus; but these branches feed great store of Goats, of whose hair they made abundance of Charlets and Grainins, not inferior unto Silks for fineness. Towards the Sea, which for the space of an hundred and fifty miles coasts along this shore, more pleasant, populous, and fruitful; well watered, and as well planted. The principal Rivers hereof, being 1 Cataractus. 2 Cefrus, and 3 Euric. Captain General of the Albanian Army, overthrowing one day both the Sea and Land Forces of the Persians. In the manner thus: Having by plain force broken their Navies, and three thousand Gallies, he fowed the Persians wearing the colours of the Persians in the tops of their prepared to entertain their victorious Countrymen, and all the Greeks once in, suddenly put them to the Sword, and took twenty thousand of them Prisoners.

Principal Cities of it, 1 Atalia, founded by Protonius Philadelphus King of Egypt, and for long time the well fenced, and most flourishing City of all this Province; on a very fair Bay, now called Golfo di Satalia, by the Romans did confer the honour of the Metropolitan point of Riches, and is to this day a wealthy and well-known here made. Of this Town there is mention in Acts 14. v. 25. 2 Pegea, famous in old times for a Temple of Diana, and the yearly Festivals there held in honour of her, from hence called Diana's Pegea; and more famous in the fulness of time, for St. Paul's Preaching in it, mentioned Acts 14. v. 25. 3 Syde, renowned in times of Gentilism, for a Temple of Pallus. 4 Mas, an in-land Town, but strongly situate, made the Metropolis of the Province in the time of the Romans: re- one hand both held their Harps and plaid upon them, the Proverb of the other free for more gainful uses; whence by which they signified a Thief. The Town first founded by the Argives, the Colony sent thither being led by Mopsus, from whom the Country hereabouts had the name of Mopsia. 6 Olbia, not far from Atalia. 7 Caraceni, and 8 Colobrasia, two of the Towns of that part hereof which had the name of Cilicia aspera; as 9 Cretopolis, and 10 Macedonius, of that part which was called Carabalia.

Of these *Pamphylia*ns there is little to be said in point of story, but that they were for the most part on the suffering hand, subject from time to time to those mighty Princes, who would not let their neighbours rest in quiet by them. Being on the same side of Taurus, and of easy access, they became first Vassals to the Syrian, and after to the Persian Kings. When Alexander passed Sea-Towns of it: The whole brought under with the Seleucus the great King of Syria. In the expiration of whole Line, this people and their neighbours of Cilicia, his faction, began to be troublesome on the Seas, and proved notable Pirates, and were the first Authors or an hundred and sixty Oars apiece; which the Italians call from hence by the name of Pamphylis. But forced Romans with great Forces both by Sea and Land (a full conclusion of that War, they lost that liberty which they unto Rome. Afterwards made a Province of the Asian due by the Turks: and at the death of Aladine, were done; of which we shall hear more when we come to Cilicia. And so much for the Provinces of the Asian more anon) converted to the Christian Faith by three great Apostles; but most especially by St. Paul, of whose Travels through most Cities and Regions of it, And that Saint Peter and Saint John had also their parts Epistle of the other: Paul planting, John and Peter watered; but God himself giving the increase. Pass we on next Provinces of the Dioecesis of the Orients, were parts of the Carannanian Kingdom: of which having taken a Survey; and to cleared our selves of this Pamphylia, we will then fall about such Islands as make up the remainder of the Asian Dioecesis.

17 ISAURIA. IS CILICIA.

These two, though distinct Provinces, I have joyned together, because the first was only a part of the last; Cilicia anciently comprehending both: The fortunes of both being the same also in point of story, which makes the conjunction the more natural.

ISAVRIA, a mountainous and hilly Province, seated on both sides of Taurus, hath on the East and South, the rest of Cilicia, whereof anciently it was a part; on the North, Pisidia; on the West, Pamphylia. So called from Isaurus, the chief City of it, when first made known unto the Romans; which being taken by Servilius the Proconsul, employed by Pompey in that Service, reduced the conquered Country under the command of Rome, and gave unto the Conquerour the name of Isauricus.

The quality of the Soil, and whole Estate of this small Province, take thus from Ammianus Marcellinus, who had seen these Countries. Cilicia lateri dextro annexa Isauria, ubi palmitis ciret, & frugibus multis; quam mediam, flumen navigabile Calicadnus intersemit, &c. i. e. "On the right hand of Cilicia lieth Isauria, a Province of a wealthy Soil, plentiful of Vines, and much other Fruits, which the River Calicadnus parteth in the very midst. Beautified, besides many Towns, with two principal Cities. 1 Selenia, founded by Selenus; and 2 Claudiotopia, into which Claudius the Emperor brought a Roman Colony. For as touching 3 Isaurus, heretofore a walled City, and of most esteem, it hath been long ago destroyed, as yielding too secure a Refuge to the neighbouring Rebels; inso much that now there are scarce any visible Tracts of its former greatness. And not much after, He due Provincia bello quondam Piratico ceteris mixta Predomum, a Servilio Proconsule missis sub jugum, fissa sunt vestigalia. i. e. "These Provinces (Cilicia and this) heretofore in the Piratical War joyning with those Robbers, were brought under by Servilius the Proconsul, and made subject to the State of Rome. And here we have in brief the nature of the Country, the names of the chief Rivers, and the principal Cities, with so much of the story as relates to the first subjugation of it. What further doth concern it we shall hear in Cilicia, upon the which it did depend.

2 CILICIA is bounded on the East with Syria, or rather that part thereof which is called Comagena, separated from which part by a branch of the Mountain Taurus, called Amnus; on the West, with Pamphylia; on the North, with Isauria, and Armenia Minor; on the South, with the Mediterranean, and Syria, specially so called. It was thus named, as the old tradition was, from Cilice the Brother of Cadmus the Phœnician, a near neighbour to it: but as Bochartus (of whose humour I have told you often) from Calkinim, a Phœnician word signifying Stones, quia lapidosa est Regio, because in some parts, especially in that which is called Cilicia Trachea, or Cilicia Aspera, it was very stony. It is now called Caramania, as the last Province of the Caramanian Kingdom, which held out for those falling Princes, when the rest was conquered by the Turks of the Ottoman Race.

The Country said by Marcellinus to be terra d'aves omnibus bonis, wealthy and fruitful of all necessities. Which Character holdeth good, chiefly in the Eastern parts, which heretofore had the name of Cilicia Campestris: the Western parts lying towards Pamphylia, formerly called Cilicia Aspera, being rough and stony. But generally where the Lands lie in fœval, and are duly cultivated, it answereth to the former Character; being also very well watered, and having a fair and large Sea-coast for the space of three hundred miles and upwards. Notwithstanding it is not much traded, and but meanly inhabited; a great part of the Country lying in large and common Fields, to which none can lay any proper claim, and therefore planted only with Goats and Sheep: out of which the Commoners on all sides raise good profit by Cheese and Butter, by their Fleeces chiefly. Here is also a good breed of Horses, of which fix hundred yearly are called out for the special Service of the Grand Signior. But as they have some profitable and useful Creatures, so they have others as dangerous and hurtful to them; especially those which the vulgar Greeks call the Squillachi, of a mixt making betwixt a Dog and a Wolf; which go in troops, and are so bold, and thewily wital, as they never let to fet upon a man as he is asleep, and leave him neither Hair, Cloak, nor Fardel, nor any thing they can conveniently get from him.

Chief Rivers hereof are, 1 Pyramus, now called Malmsira, which rising on the North side of the Taurus, and forcing his passage through that Mountain, makes such a noise in falling down the precipices and rocks thereof, as resemblanceth at a great distance a clap of Thunder. 2 Orymagus, 3 Calicadnus, spoken of before. 4 Cidnus, which riseth in the Anti-Taurus; a River of a violent course, and so cold a water, that as Pliny writes, it cureth the Gout: the waters of which proved very dangerous to Alexander the Great, the coldness of them striking violently into his stomach; and deadly to Frederick the first Emperor of the Germans, as he here bathed himself, the violence of the stream tripping up his heels, and he not able to recover, was presently drowned.

Of their chief hills I need add nothing, having already said that the Country is parted by Amnus from Syria, and by Taurus it self from Pisidia and Armenia Minor; not ease of entrance by the first, but very difficult by the last: the Streights thereof called Pila Cilicia, or the Ports of Cilicia, being indeed so freight, and almost impassable, that had they been guarded or regarded by the Persians, as they should have been, the Progress of Alexander's Victories might have ended there. But Asiaticus, who had the charge of them, durst not stand his ground, and so left them open to the Enemy, whom by those Ports he put into the possession of the Kingdom of Perfia. With better faith, though no better fortune, did the Souldiers of Persennius niger make good their Streights against the Emperor Severus; the Monarchy of the World lying the second time at the stake, and to be tried for in this Cock-pit. For the Perrians possessed of these Streights and Entrances courageously withstood the Severian party; till at last a sudden Tempest of Rain and Thunder continually darting in their faces (as if the very Heavens had been armed against them) they were fain to leave the passage, and therewith the Victory to the adverse Faction: having lost that at the loss of 20000 of their own lives, which Alexander had the happiness or the hap to buy for nothing.

In the borders of this Country towards Pamphylia, lived a Tribe or Nation called the Soli, originally of Attica: but in long tract of time diffused from converse and communication with their Countrymen, they spoke that Language so corruptly, that from their barbarous manner of pronunciation, and as rude expression, came the word Solacianus. Yet amongst these were born three men of eminence; note, that is to say, Chrysippus the Philosopher, Philemon and Aratus the Poets; out of the Writings of which last St. Paul vouchsafed so use this passage. 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 20 21 22 23 24 25 26 27 28 29 30 31 32 33 34 35 36 37 38 39 40 41 42 43 44 45 46 47 48 49 50 51 52 53 54 55 56 57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69 70 71 72 73 74 75 76 77 78 79 80 81 82 83 84 85 86 87 88 89 90 91 92 93 94 95 96 97 98 99 100 offspring, Act. 17. v. 28. That blessed Apostle thought himself never the worse Preacher, for being brought up in humane Learning at the feet of Camallid, nor held it any disparagement to the influences of the Holy Ghost, to make use of it in his Sermons and divine Discourses: and therefore to prevent those Excell, which ignorance or misprision might chance to make in times succeeding, he hath hath thrice vouchsafed the words and testimony of the Heathen Writers; viz. of Epenides, Tit. 1. v. 12. of Alexander, 1 Cor. 15. v. 33. and that of Aratus before mentioned. So lawful is it in this kind, for those of the spirited Isaid to rob the Egyptians; and to make this Isaur serviceable to her Mistress Sarah.

Principal Cities of this Province, 1 Sole, the habitation of the Soli, before remembered; by some said to be built by Solos the Athenian; but generally affirmed to have been planted by those of Rhodes and Attica: mistakenly called Etiopolis; by Qu. Curtius, which is as much in Sole as Solis Civitas, or the City of the Sun. On the site heretofore then decayed and ruinous (the Town having been destroyed by Tigranes the Armenian King in his late Wars against the Romans) did Pompey build his City of Pompeopolis after his victory over the Pirates; who not only Lorded it over the Seas, and consequently obstructed Trade and Merchandize, but wasted and spoiled the Villages of Italy it self. Pompey being Victor, and having inflicted exemplary punishment on the King-leaders, with the rest, peopled this new Town, and the Country adjoining, allowing them competent possessions, lest want and necessity should again enforce them to the like courses. An action truly commendable, and worthy to great a Captain, rather to take an occasion of offending from the people, than after offence done, to punish them. Hythlodius in the Utopia, somewhat bitterly though perhaps not unjustly, inveigheth against the Laws of England, for ordaining death to be the punishment of theft. Chm multo potius providendum fuerit, ut aliquis esset proventus vitæ; ne cuiuspiam sit tam dira furandi primum, deinde perendi necessitas. Whereas (saith he) the Laws ought to make provision for putting men into some orderly course of life, and not let them run upon the necessity of stealing first, and then being hanged for it.

2 Tarsus, the birth place of St. Paul the Apostle; for that sufficiently famous, were there nothing else to commend it to consideration: But it was a Town wital of great note and consequence, the Metropolis first, of all Cilicia, and after the division, of Cilicia Prima. The Inhabitants whereof had the Privilege of Roman Citizens. In Situate in a goodly Plain on the banks of the Cydanus, and by some said to be the work of Sardanapalus the last King of Assyria; it being engraven on a Monument erected to him, that in one day he had built this Tarsus. And 3 Anchiala, another City of this Country, near the Sea-side, and not far from the Promontory Zephyrium. Of the same date (if the said Monument speak truth), but neither of the same fortune nor continuance, that being utterly decayed, but Tarsus still remaining of great wealth and strength. Much spoken of in the Wars of the Holy Land, and in the stories of the Caramanian and Ottoman Kings. And though the Turks to ingratiate themselves with Julius Cesar, would needs have their Country called Julopolis, yet the old name survived the new, and it is to this day called Tarsus or Tarsus by the vulgar Greeks: not but Hania by the Turks, as Belonius telleth us. 4 Adana, the Adana of Proton, a large Town, Castle Situate in a fruitful soil, both for Wine and Corn, wherewith the Town is always furnished for the use of take in here three days provision. 5 Epiphania, the birth-place of George the Arian Bishop of Alexandria; thrust into the world of late by some learned men (but of more tyr. 6 Mopsuestia, as famous, or infamous rather, for giving title to Theodorus Mopsuestenus, Bishop heretofore, and a great Patron of the Nestorian heretics, in the time of St. Chrysostome. The City otherwise of good note, and of great consequence, in the course of the Roman Wars, described at large by Ammianus Marcellinus, 7 Isfus, upon an spacious Bay, called hence Sinus Isficus, near the borders of Syria: memorable for the great battle here fought betwixt Alexander and an handful (in comparison) of his Macedonians, and that vast Army of Darius, (himself there in person) consisting of 600000 untill the dead bodies seemed to have buried the ground; who chose to ill a place to fight in, that they could make minations of the Asian Souldiers, unable to endure the charge, there fell that day no fewer than 200000 of them the Wives and Daughters of Darius, and not above 1000 of the Alexandrians, if Qu. Curtius be not partial in his former purchases, and opened a way unto the rest: the Persians not being able to make head again, till he had pierced into the bowels of their Empire, and added Syria, and Egypt to his former Conquests. Offo great of a Kingdom. This Town it self now called Ainzoo. 8 Alexandria, built by command of the Conquerour near the place of battle, commodiously for Trade, upon the Sea, but otherwise in a Fenny and Boggy soil, which makes the air there to be very unwholesome to men not used to it: little now remaining, but a few houses on the Sea-shore built of straw and mud, hardly affording it the reputation of a sorry Village, and would not continue such, but that it is the nearest Haven to the Town of Aleppo (whereof more in Syria) which draweth unto it the resort of some Christian Factors, whose houses are of Clay and Timber; but of them not made full, diminished first to Alexandretta, now called Sev, so named in memory of his great Victory before mentioned. 10 Anaverra, a City of great Antiquity in the time of Sarab, and the Metropolis, of the Province of Cilicia Secunda. 11 Heraclea, mentioned by Belonius, Plain, at the foot of Mount Taurus; a fair and large Town, Northward about three days journey. But I find no such Town in Sarab, or Proton, or any other of the Ancients. 12 Scandaro, a City of Cilicia Aspera, or that Part of the adjoining Territory governed as a State distinct from all the rest of this Country was under the Kings of Caramania: against whom the Prince heretofore being a of the Knights of Rhodes, and the Kings of Cyprus. And when the Caramanian Kingdom was subdued by Bajazet, he made so good conditions for himself, that he had other lands and estates in the Lesser Asia assigned to him in exchange for this; and so surrendered this to the will of the Conquerour.

The first Inhabitants of this Country were of the Progeny of Tarsish, the son of Javan, by whom, or some of his Posterity, to preserve his memory, the City of Tarsus was first built. Increased in tract of time by some new Colonies out of the neighbouring parts of Syria, it followed for the most part the fortunes of Syria, it successively together subject to the Assyrians, Persians, and Macedonians. In the declining fortunes of the house of Selenus they began to stand upon their own legs; and might have continued longer in so good a posture, had they not hearkened hearkened to ill Councils. Tempted by Mithridates to join with him against the Romans, of whose greatness all the Eastern States were grown very jealous; and being naturally good Sea-faring men, they began together with the Pamphylia, to infect the Seas. At first they ventured no further than the shores adjoining. But after emboldened with success, and finding that the Romans were sufficiently employed in domestic troubles, and a sharp war with Mithridates, fell upon the Coasts of Greece, and in fine of Italy it self; Publius Servilius the Proconsul first employed against them, gave them an overthrow at Sea; and following his good fortune, set upon them in their Harbours and retiring places, in which pursuit he not only took from them Phaselis, a strong Town in Lycia, one of their Reveries, and others of their best and strongest Receptacles; but wasting the whole Country of Cilicia, fell upon Isauria, the most defensible Town thereof, which he took and ransacked. No sooner was Servilius departed home, but they broke out more violently than before; filling all the Creeks and Ports of the Eastern Seas with their Frigates, Brigantines and other light Piratical Vessels, in such manner that Pompey himself thought it to be an action not unbecoming his greatness to undertake the War against them. And he pursued it to such purpose, that having armed 500 sail of all sorts, and stored his ships with 130000 men, he set upon them all at once; and in the space of one sole month made an end of the War. An action not sufficiently to be wondered at, if we consider either the speediness of it, done in so little time as a month; or the cheapness of the Victory, purchased without the loss of one Roman Vessel; or finally, the importance and consequence of it, the Pirates from that time not daring to infect the Seas; and all Cilicia subjected to the State of Rome. How they were afterwards disposed of hath been shewn already. After this they did very good service unto Pompey in his War against Cæsar; of whom thus Lucan, reckoning up his Allies and Aids.

Atque Cilix iussu, nunc non Pirata, cavinda.
And the renowned Cilician now
No Pirate, in his fleet did row.

Nor were they pliant unto him only, as unto their Conqueror; but generally to tame and tractable in the time of Cicero, one of the first Proconsuls or Lord Deputies which were sent to govern them; that he writ merrily to Rome, that he found all quiet in his Province: save that the Panthers (some of which, one of his Friends had prayed him to send to Rome, for the adorning of his triumph) were for fear of him fled into Pamphylia. At the first conquest by the Romans, it was divided only into Campisphren and Trachean, as was said before; of which Campisphren was reduced immediately to the form of a Province. Aspera or Trachea was a while continued under the Government of Kings, till the time of Vespasian, and then made a Province as the other. By the succeeding Emperours, on some reasons of State (if not those intimated in Lycaonia) the number of Provinces being increased (though the bounds of the Empire were no larger than they had been formerly) the whole was divided into three: that is to say, Cilicia prima, taking up all Campisphren wholly; Cilicia secunda, containing the Maritime parts of Cilicia Aspera; and Isauria, taking up the Mountainous part of this last division. Laid by the Emperor Constantine to the Diocese of the Orient; and consequently subject in spiritual matters to the Patriarch of Antioch, where the Presbiterio Orientis had his usual residence. In the falling of the Eastern Empire, it was conquered by the Saracens in the time of Muharran or Muavi, the sixth Caliph. Continuing under their command till their declination, it was recovered by the Greek or Eastern Emperours, and from them conquered by the Turks in the course of their victories. But the first race of Turkish Kings being worn out by the Tartars, and the Aladinian Kings ending in Aladine the second, it was part of the new Kingdom of the Caramanians, continuing theirs till the destruction of that line by Bajazet the second, Anno 1486. by whom incorporated with the rest of the Ottoman Empire.

Thus having made out progress over all the Provinces of the Lesser Asia, and shewn how every one of them was made subject to the Turkish Tyranny: we must next draw down the succession of such Turkish Kings as have reigned herein, till it was wholly conquered by the Princes of the house of Ottoman. Concerning which we are to know in the way of Preamble, that the Turks having made themselves Masters of the Kingdom of Perfia, and following their successes into Syria also, fell to a breach amongst themselves. For making up whereof it was defended unto by Axen, the then Perfian Sultan, that Alloch and Duena, two of his discontented Kinmen, should be infeoffed in the Cities of Alleppe and Damascus, and their several Territories, with whatsoever they could conquer from the Caliph of Egypt, possessed at that time of most part of Syria, Cilicia, and some of the adjoining Provinces. It was also then agreed upon, that a third but nearer Kinman, called Culu Moset, another of the Leaders of the opposite faction, should have leave to conquer for himself, whatsoever he could win from the Christian Princes: And he being furnished with a competent Army, subdued the Provinces of Media and Armenia in the Greater Asia, with Cappadocia, Pontus, and Bithynia in Asia Minor. Which, and the rest of their affairs, take here in the ensuing Catalogue of

The Turkish Kings in Asia Minor of the Selzucian Family.

1075. 1 Culu Moset, Nephew to Tangrolipix, the first Perfian Sultan of the Turks, won Media, part of Armenia Major, Cappadocia, Pontus and Bithynia.
- 2 Solyman, son of Culu Moset, for a while dispossessed of most of his estates by the Western Christians, in their first passage towards the Holy Land; the Northern parts of which by those Christians were restored to the Grecian Empire, never recovered afterwards by the Kings of this house.
- 3 Mabomet, the son of Solyman, recovered some part of his estates in the Lesser Asia; but ousted of them, and subdued by
- 4 Musfat, Sultan, or Lord Deputy of Iconium for the Kings of Damascus; but of the same Selzucian Family, who was thereby dispossessed of all the Turkish Provinces in the Lesser Asia.
- 5 Calisfatlan, the son of Musfat (to whom his Father left Iconium, with the adjacent Provinces) wrested Amasia, and Ankyra, from his brother Jagupasan; Sebastia, and Cassius, from his brother Dodime: which with their several Territories were bequeathed unto them, by the will of their Father. He overthrew the Emperor Emanuel Comnenus, and united Phrygia to his Kingdom.
- 6 Reucratine, the third son of Calisfatlan, having dispossessed his three brethren, Musfat, Campisphren, Caicosphos, of the estates left them by their Father, became sole Monarch of all the Turkish Provinces in the Lesser Asia. In the latter end of whose reign, Oceanus the Tartarian Chah having driven the Turks out of Perfia, many of them under the conduct of Aladine, a Prince of the same Selzucian Family, joined themselves to their Countrymen here, with whose help they won Cilicia from the Grecian Emperours, who in the reign of Culdo Johannes, (the Turks being then employed by the Western Christians) had not long before regained it; and after the death of Reucratine, advanced him to the whole estate.

The Turkish Kings in Asia Minor, of the race of Aladine.

- 7 Aladine, descended in a direct line from Cusfane, the last Turkish Sultan in Perfia, having with many of his Nation seated himself in Cilicia, first made Sebastia, one of the Cities thereof, his chief seat or residence: which after the death of Reucratine, he removed to Iconium, as the ancient Regal City of the former Kings.
- 8 Azalide, by some called Aladine, eldest son of Aladine, waited the most part of his reign in wars with his brother Jathatine, whom at last he forced into exile.
- 9 Jathatine, on the death of his brother possessed the Kingdom, slain afterwards in single combat by Theodorus Lascaris, Emperor of the Greeks, at Nice.
- 10 Jathatine II. Son of the former, driven out of his Kingdom by the Tartars, and died in exile: the Turks becoming Tributaries and Vassals unto the Tartarian.
- 11 Musfat, and Cei-cubades, of the same Selzucian Family (but whether the sons of the second Jathatine, I am not able to say) substituted in his place; as Tributaries to the conquering Tartars.
- 12 Aladine II. son of Cei-cubades, succeeded his Father in the Kingdom, but as Vassal and Leigeman to the Tartars. After whose death, leaving no issue of his body, the great Princes of his Family, divided amongst them his Dominions. To Sarachen fell Æolis, Ionis, and part of Lydia, from him named Sarachen, Sarachen, or Saracha-Illi; to Aidin the rest of Lydia, Phrygia Major, and the greatest part of the Greater Myssia, from him called Aidin, or Aidin-Illi; to Carafan, the Lesser Phrygia, with the rest of Myssia, the Lesser Phrygia, or Carafan-Illi; to the Family of the Isfendiar, the Cities of Heraclea, Sinope, and that part of Pontus which lieth next to Bithynia. There were also lesser Troarchies or subdivisions, from whence we find a Prince of Smyrna, a second of Amasia, a third of Amisus, a fourth of the Estate was seized by Caraman, who for his share had of the whole Provinces of Lycia, Lycaonia, Pisidia, Pamphylia, Isauria, Cilicia, with the Regal City of Iconium, the Prince of part of Caria, (the rest of it appertaining to the Prince of Ademissia), with part of Cappadocia, and Armenia Minor, and some Towns in Phrygia, continuing in his Family for as many descents (as either of the former had held before) in great power and lustre, under

The Turkish Kings in Asia Minor, of the house of Caraman.

- 13 Caraman, the first raiser of this Family, Contemporary with Ottoman the first King of that race.
- 14 Aladine son of Caraman, and Son-in-law of Amrath, the first of the house of Ottoman, by whom subdued, but pardoned and restored unto his Estate, on the humble entreaties of his wife.

- 15 Aladine II. son of the former, subdued by Bajazet the first, and hanged by Tertumages, one of Bajazet's great Commanders.
- 16 Mabomet, son of Aladine the second, recovered his Kingdom on the death of Bajazet, vanquished and led captive by the mighty Tamerlane. Afterwards warred upon and vanquished by Abdomet the son of Bajazet, redeemed his peace, by yielding up unto him many of his principal Towns; and was finally slain at the siege of Atalia.
- 17 Ibrahim, the son of Mabomet, and son-in-law of Amrath the second, against whom unadvisedly raising War, he was forced to submit and become his Tributary: after whose death, rebelling against Mabomet the Great, he was then also vanquished, and a reconciliation made betwixt them.
- 18 Ibrahim II. by some called Pyramus, the son of Ibrahim the first, supported Zimus, the brother of Bajazet the second in his War against him; for which Bajazet having settled his affairs, invaded and subdued the Kingdom of Caramania, killed the unfortunate King in batel, and so united that state unto the rest of the Dominions of the house of Ottoman. The strange success of which house, from the first rising of it to these present times, shall be deferred till we come unto Turcomania; from whence this Nation first attempted and achieved the conquest of Perfia, and which only of all their large possessions doth retain any thing of their name. In the mean time we will survey the Islands of this Lesser Asia, and so proceed to their possessions in the Greater, as they lie before us.

19 The Province of the ASIAN ISLES.

The Province of the ASIAN ISLES comprehendeth all the Islands in Asia Minor, from the mouth of the Hellepont to the Rhodes, reckoning that for one: united first into a Province by the Emperor Vespasian, next reckoned as a part of the Asian Diocese; and afterwards, together with the Province of the Hellepont, and that of Asia properly and specially so called, making up the peculiar or exempt jurisdiction of the Proconsul of Asia. Those of most consideration are, 1. Tenedos, 2. Lesbos, 3. Chios, 4. Samos, 5. Cos, 6. Icaria, 7. Tanios, 8. Clarus, 9. Carpathos, 10. Rhodes. Others of less note, having nothing memorable but their names, are scarce worth the naming.

1. TENEDOS, is situate at the mouth of the Hellepont, over against the noted Promontory called of old Trom, or now Cape Janizarie: a Promontory of above five miles. The Isle it self in circuit no more than ten; swelling with a round Mountain towards the North, in other parts level; in both producing as good Wines as the best of Greece. It took name, as the general Tradition was, from Tene: the son of Cygnus, King of a little City in the Lesser Phrygia, who being falsely accused by his Stepdame for soliciting her to that incestuous mixture which he had violently importuned, and he as piously refused, was by the command of his Father put into a chest, exposed to the mercy of the Sea; and here miraculously preserved. Here for a time he is said to reign, with great commendation for his justice; and afterwards going to the aid of the Trojans, to have been slain by the hand of Acchilles of whom therefore it was not lawful to make mention in any of the Sacrifices offered in the Temples thereof. But Bocharius calling off all this as an old Wives Fable, will have it fo called from Tin-edum a Phœnician word, signifying Red-clay, which the Potters made use of in their Earthen Vessels. A Town it had of the same name with the Island, in which a Temple facred to Apollo Smintheus; and another called Asterion situate near a little River well stored with Crab-Fish, whose shells were made in the form of an Ax or Hatchet. From which Town as the Islanders have in some Authors the name of Astieris, fo from the other circumstance, they are said to have the stamp of an Hatchet on their Coin or Money. Memorable for an Old Custom observed amongst them which was, That at the back of the Judge there always stood a man with an Axe advanced; as well to terrifie the Witnesses from giving false Evidence to the Judge, as the Judge from pronouncing a false Sentence upon the Evidence: Whence the Proverb, Tenedos ienris. More memorable for the final destruction of Troy, which was plotted here; the Græcians withdrawing their Forces hither as if gone in earnest: but from thence setting fail again to surprize the Town, when they saw their plot had took effect. And fo I leave it with that Character which the Poet gives it:

*Est in conspectu Tenedos, nostrissima famâ
Insula, dives opum Priami dum Regna manebant:
Nunc tantum sumus, & statio male-fida carinis.*

In English thus;

In sight of Troy an Island stands, well known,
Call'd Tenedos: rich, and of great renown,
Whilst Trian's Kingdom flourish'd; now (they say)
Grown a poor Road, for Ships an unsafe Bay.

2 LESBOS, the largest of these Asian Isles, is distant from the main Land of Troas about seven miles, 168 in compass: reckoned the seventh in bigness of the Mediterranean, which Aristotle in his Book de Mundo ranketh in this order following, 1. Ægeus, 2. Ægeus, 3. Ægeus, 4. Ægeus, 5. Ægeus, 6. Ægeus, 7. Ægeus, 8. Ægeus, 9. Ægeus, 10. Ægeus. That is to say, The most considerable of these, are Sicilie, Sardinia, Corsica, Crete, Eubœa, Cyprus, and Lesbos. And though both Seylex in his Periplus, a nameless Poet in Eusebius, Diodorus Siculus, Strabo, and others of the Ancients, vary in ordering of the rest, according as their information or phancies led them; yet Lesbos comes in the seventh place constantly, without change at all. Upon which ground Bocharius will have it called Lesbos from Eubœus, a Phœnician word signifying seven: contracted first to Eshu, by leaving out the last syllable of it; and then by changing hu to ho, and prefixing L to the beginning. Far enough fetch'd; and were it but as dearly bought, would be good for Ladies: this Island being reckoned in the seventh place for no other reason, but because it lay furthest off, and most North from Sicilie, from whence they ordered their account, and not any mystery in the name thereof.

It had then the name from Lesbos the chief City of it, as that from Leibus the son of Lapylus, who married Methymna the daughter of Macarinus, Prince hereof from which Macarins, it had sometimes the name of Macaria; as that of Mitylene, by which it is now commonly called, from Mitylene another of the Daughters of the said Macarins. And that the memory of the whole Family might be preferred in this Island, Methymna also had a City called by her name, one of the principal of the Country.

The Country towards the West and South, reported to be mountainous and somewhat barren; the rest level and fruitful. Plentiful of excellent Corn, and abounding in delicious Wines, compared by Athenens to Ambrasia, the Liqueur of the Gods, as the Poets fable; affording also plenty of Sheep, and store of Horfe, these last courageous and strong, though but low of stature. More memorable for the eminent Persons which it hath produced, as 1. Sappho, an Heroick Woman, whose invention was the Sapphick Verse; and therefore called the 10th Muse. 2. Pittacus, one of the Seven Wisemen of Greece. 3. Theophrastus, that notable Physician and Philosopher. 4. Alcaeus, the successor of Orpheus in the excellency of Lyrical Poetic; and 5. Arion, the Musician, who was so perfect on his Harp, that being cast into the Sea playing on that Instrument, a Dolphin took him on his back, and wafted him safe as far as Corinth, where he related the whole Story unto Periander, attested by the Mariners who had thrown him overboard. And though this be by some rejected as a Poetical Fiction; yet past all doubt, the man was not only an excellent Musician, but an eminent Poet, the first Inventor of Tragedies, a chief Lyrick, and the Author of the Verse called Dithyrambick.

Principal Towns herein, 1. Lesbos, as the whole Island had the name of Lesbos. 2. Methymna, so named from Methymna one of the daughters of Macarins, spoken of before. 3. Mitylene, so named from the other daughter, and wife of Leibus, now the chief City of the Island; seated on a Peninsula, looking towards the main Land, strong by Nature, and fortified by Art: enjoying on either side a commodious Haven, that on the South most fit for Gallies, the other capable of Ships of burden. Beautified heretofore with magnificent Buildings, and sweetened with variety of delights and pleasures. Little now left of it since subdued by the Turke, but a strong Castle manned with an able Garrison, and a well-stored Arsenal for Gallies, kept here in readiness to preserve those seas from Pirates, with which much infested. But the two first long since decayed and grown out of knowledge, though the name next Mitylene are. 4. Vassica, 5. Theodori. 6. Cassiderea all of late days; and therefore of no observation in point of story.

The Island was first inhabited by the Pelasgians, conducted hither by Zantus the son of Triopus, whence named Pelagisia: afterwards by some Ionians, and people of sundry Nations, planted here by Macarins (the father of Mitylene and Methymna) who by his providence, and the reputation of his Justice, obtained a kind of Sovereignty over the neighbouring Islands. Leibus the son of Lapylus arriving here with his Family, married Methymna, and had the Island for her Dowry; though Mitylene had the hap to have the predominant City, and the Island consequently called by her name. Made subject to the State of Athens, in the time of the Peloponnesian War (when almost all Greece banded against that City) they revolted from it, and were so faithfully besieged by Paches, an Athenian Captain, that they submitted unto mercy. The General sends to Athens to know what should be done with the Mitylenians: Answer was sent, That he should put them to the Sword. But the Senate on the morrow after, repenting of that cruel Decree, sent a countermand. These latter Messengers made no stay, but eating with one hand, and rowing with the other, came to Mitylene just as Paches was reading the former Order, by this speed prevented. So near were these miserable people to a fatal destruction. Subdued by the Romans with the rest of Greece, they fell together with it to the Constantinopolitan Emperours: from whom taken, with Chios, Samos, Andros, and some other of these Isles, Anno 1124, by the State of Venice, upon a quarrel betwixt them and the Greecian Emperour. Confirmed unto that Signerity by the Emperour Baldwin, and all the rest of the Ægean added added to their portion; those above-named were again recovered by the valour and good fortune of John Ducas, the Greek Emperour then residing at Nice. Afterwards in the year 1335, the Emperour Calo Johannes gave it to Franciscus Cavalinus, a Noble Gentleman of Gema, with one of his Sisters, for her Dowry. By whose Posterity enjoyed, till the year 1462, when Mahomet the Great incensed against Dominicus Catalufus the then fil and Tributary of his Empire: (these Princes paying for the Turken annual Tribute of 4000 Ducats) but more him in Mitylene his principal City, which in 27 days (for therewith all the Island also. Some of the chief Families State, the main Body of the People were permitted to remain here to till the Land, and fo continue to this day, with some few Turks, inconsiderable for their strength or numbers, intermixed among them.

3 CHIOS, the next to Lesbos both in site and bigness, lieth opposite to the Shore of Ionis, from which distant not above four Leagues, is in compass about 126 Miles. So called, as some say, from Chione a fair Nymph here- of, much fought after by many Suters: as others say, from a Greck word signifying Snow, wherewith the Mountains of it are sometimes covered. And some again will have it take name from Chios the chief City of it, which that name unto it itself, and afterwards did communicate to the whole Island. Isidore in his Origines gives another signifying Mastick, wherof there is plenty in this Isle. Chios Insula (saith he) Syrâ lingua appellatur, eo quod ibi there is it, that Chios in the Syrick did signifie Mastick, this Island being more furnished with that Commodity; than any place in the World besides. A Gum it is, growing out of the Lemick Tree, which in the Months of July and August the Inhabitants force out of those Trees, by making with sharp Instruments a deep incision into the Barks of them; out of which the Juice dropping, is afterwards hardened like a Gum, and in the September following gathered. A Commodity which yieldeth yearly to the Inhabitants 18000 Sulantes, every Sulante being valued at the rate of a Zechine of Venice: and therefore the felling of the Lemick Tree, at the time of the distilling of this precious Juice, interdicted, on the penalty of losing the right hand of him that doth it.

Other Commodities of this Island are Corn and Oyl in indifferent plenty, some Quarries of most excellent Marble, a certain green Earth like the rust of Brass; some Silks and Cotton-wool, but short in worth to that of Smyrna, and other places; Honey as good as any the World affordeth, and a vein of most delicious Vines, those specially which grow on the Mountain Arvis, now called Amisus. Of which Pliny gives this commendation, In summa gloria fuerit Thaliu, Chionique, ex Chio, quod Arviliu vocant. Of all Wines (saith he) those of Thasus, and Chios, are of best esteem; and of those of Chios, the Arvillian, Strabo extolleteth hereof, in the superiorem degree, and calleth the Wine of Greece. And Plutarch, speaking of an Epicurean; or voluptuous Plutarch, affirms, that he conceived it the Supreme felicity, hæc de arviliæ, et autem in hæc, et in his Lais, et drink these Arvillian Wines. Here are also infinite store of Partridges, of a red colour, kept tame, and fed in flocks like Geese, in the Streets and Greenyards of their Villages; some little Boy or Girl driving them to field, and calling them home again with a Whistle, when the night comes on.

The Island divided commonly into two parts, the higher, called Apanomera, lying towards the North and West, hilly and rough, but intermixt with fruitful Vales and pleasant Rivers: the lower, opposite unto it, Hills, on which growth the Lemick. The whole inhabited by Grecks intermixt with Genoese, and (since their Conquest by that People) some few Turks amongst them. Which mixture with the Genoese, tempereth the levity of the Grecks with Italian gravity; the better sort of the People both in Apparel and Manners coming near the Genoese, once the Lords of this Island; the common sort continuing their old Greck humour of mirth and jollity (not sensible of the Thurk Thralldom under which they suffer) with as much licentiousness as ever. And though this intermixture hath so corrupted their Language, that neither the Greck nor the Italian be here rightly spoken, but a compound Tongue made up of both; as if they had never known another.

Here are reckoned in it fix and thirty Towns and Villages, the principal whereof are, 1. S. Elier, in the North. 2. Pigirne, in the midst hereof; and 3. Chios itself, now called Sio (as is all the Island) one of the Sepulchre they pretend to shew in an old Castle near the Mount and Town of S. Elier, (which were it his, for his Birth.) The Town situate in the most pleasant and fruitful part of the Country, to which both Industry and Art have given great Advantage; there being few Houles with Orchards of excellent Fruits, as Oranges, Lemmons, Pomegranats, Citrons, and kind of Figs, much praised for their quickness of taste by the Romans. It standeth on the East-side, opposite to the Shores of Asia, stretched along the bottom of the Haven, and on the West-side backed with a rocky Mountain, upon which it formerly did stand. The Buildings ordinary, the Streets narrow, and the Haven every day decaying; though otherwise secure, once entered: and for directing of the entrance, a Lanthorn advanced by the Genoese (when Lords hereof) to give Light by night, and serve for a Land-mark in the day. Fortified on the North-side by a large and strong Castle, environed with deep Ditches, well furnished with Munition, and a Turkish Garrison. And because the Island is on all parts accessible: not naturally fortified with Rocks and dangerous Precipices, as many others; besides this Castle, they have all along the Coast small Watch-Towers, which with smoke by day, and fire by night, give notice unto one another of such Vessels as they see approaching: the Guards about the Castle being so intent also about their Charge, that every minute of the night there goeth a word about the Walls, to declare their vigilancy.

The Chians were at first a Free People, governing themselves as a Common-wealth; and by reason of their many Harbours, able to furnish out a Navy of 80 Sail, by the Rhodians. Besieged by Philip the Father of Perseus, with his utmost Power; who when he could not get it by force, proclaimed freedom to the Slaves (of which here were many) and liberty to marry with their Masters. And when this policy would do it, the Town being held out with greater heat of indignation, he gave over the Siege. At last they became subject to the Romans with the rest of Greece, and followed punctually the same change of fortunes, as did those of Lesbos, which we have spoken of before; till given by Andronicus Palæologus, one of the last Greek Emperours, to the Justinians, a noble Genesian Family, affilant to him in his wars. Under them it continued as Tributaries to the Turks (after the Turks had made themselves Masters of Constantinople) to whom they annually paid eighteen thousand Ducats, till the year 1566. When Solyman the Magnificent picking a quarrel with them for some suspected correspondence with the Knights of Malta, commanded Pial, one of his greatest Bassas, to seize the Island. And he accordingly presenting himself before the City, with a strong Fleet of eighty Gallies did so alomn and amaze the Inhabitants of it, that without any other summons than the sight of the Navy, they surrendered themselves unto his disposing, upon Easter-day being the same day he came before it. Since that time it hath continued Turkish, all save their Religion, enjoyed by them with like liberty, as in former times.

4 SAMOS, is on the South-east of Chios, distant above five miles from the shores of Jonis, about eighty, or eighty seven in compass; environed for the most part, especially in the North-west, with inaccessible rocks, but beautified with a fair and capacious Haven; of little use by reason of Pirates which infested those Seas. The soil sufficiently enriched with most kind of fruits, abundantly plentiful of Oyl and Olives, but of Vines altogether unfurnished; which is the more to be admired, in regard all the Islands and shores about it, produce them in so great a plenty. It stretcheth from the East to the West: and on the South part it stood the City of Samia, near unto the Haven before spoken of. In former times populous, and well inhabited, as was the rest of the Island, now wholly desolate in a manner, because of the Pirates, and in most places very much over-grown with woods: becoming thereby very useful to those public enemies, who find here Timber enough for Shipping, and can upon the sudden put a ship to Sea, for pursuit of their Robberies. The chief commodity it affordeth besides those above, is a medicinal Earth, useful for Chirurgery and Physick: of which in former times were those Vessels made, called Vasa Samia, in great request amongst the Romans.

Anciently it had the names of Drynisa, Anatemesusa, Melampylis, and Cyparissa; out-worn by that of Samos, which it still retaineth. Memorable in old times for the birth of Juno, of one of the Syblis, hence called Samia; and finally of the wife-man Pythagoras (a wiser than any of the seven wise Men) so renowned amongst them) who first brought Philosophy into Greece, and from thence into Italy. Once a free Commonwealth of no small esteem, the infinites whereof are mentioned by Heraclides, in his Books of the several Commonwealths then being: afterwards made subject to the Tyrant Polycrates, a man so fortunate, that for a long time he never fell into any mischance. Fearing lest such a long calm would bring on a tempest, he let fall into the Sea a most precious Ring, by him deviously esteemed, that so it might be said he had some mis-fortunes. Which after he had found again in the belly of a fish, brought accidentally to his Table, he was overcome by Orantes a Persian, and brought to a miserable death. Leaving a notable example, that fortune is certain in nothing but uncertainties; and like a Bee with a sharp sting, hath always some misery following in the train of a long concatenation of felicity. From this time forwards it ran the same fortune with the rest of these Islands; subject successively to the great Monarchies in former times, as of late times to the Venetians, Greeks, and Turks who do now enjoy it.

5 ICARIA, (now called Nicæra) lyeth not far from Samos, to the West-ward of it, narrow, but extended out in length; the whole compass seven and thirty miles: neighboured by two great Rocks, or little Islands, of old called Melambii, now the Fernæes; formidable at all times to Mariners, in the night especially. Meantly inhabited at the present, though abounding in pasturage, and yielding sufficiency of corn; Havenless, and therefore the less frequented, yet that defect supplied by commodious Roads. In former times called Doliche, then Macris, after Ishisafa: which name it held till the flight of Dadalus out of Crete, who justly fearing the anger of Minos, for being Pandor to his wife in her loves with Taurus, secretly with Icarus his son, fled out of that Island. And because he would be sure to out-trip the Rovers who pursued him, he added fairs unto his Boat, which it is said he first invented. But Icarus, coming after in another Bark, delighted with the new device, clapped on too much Canvass, and bearing too great a sail, was here cast away. Hence the new name both to this Island, and the Seas adjoining to it, and the occasion of the Fable of Dadalus putting wings upon his shoulders when he fled from Crete; and of his flying too high, whereby the wax melted which his wings were fastened with, and so he perished in the water. Of which thus Ovid.

Icarus, Icaris nomina fecit aquis.*

In English thus,

Whilst Icarus gave wings too high did soar
He fell, and gave name to the Icarian shore.

9 PATMOS, now called Palmosa, is situate on the South of the other two; A little Island, not above 30 miles in compass. Mountainous, but indifferently fruitful, especially of wheat and pulse; of other commodities, and fruits, not to well provided. On one of these Mountains stands a Town of the same name with the Island; having on the top thereof a Monastery of Greek Caloires; and on the bottom a fair haven (I mean in reference to the Island.) Forty sail of Ships are said to belong unto it; by the trading whereof they bring in those provisions which the soil affordeth not: the soil about the Town being so incomparably barren, that nothing groweth on or near it, but on such earth as is brought thither from other places. Unto this Island (as to others in other parts of the world) did the Roman Emperours use to confine offenders. A punishment laid by Dominian on St. John the Divine, who in this place wrote his Revelation to the Churches of Asia. So much the Text affirms for certain, as to the writing of it in this Island. And the Inhabitants by tradition point unto an house on the North-side of the Town, in which it was written, and not far off the Cave where it was revealed. Both places equally honoured by the Greeks and Latines. They also shew a dead mans hand, which they affirm to be his, the nails whereof grow again as oft as cut. But the Turks (faith Maginus) claim it for the hand of one of their Prophets. Let them dispute the controversy, whilst we halt to.

7 CLARO, another Island not far off, containing about 40 miles in compass. Well stored with commodious Harbours, but very mountainous; some of whose hills of such an height, that from the tops thereof, the City of Ephesus in Jonis, (though distant at least eighty miles) may be easily seen. It is now called Calano. Neighboured by Lero (of old called Ileoron) a little Island not above eighteen miles in circuit, but very populous, inhabited both by Greeks and Turks, and furnishing the neighbouring Countries

Countries with some store of Aloe. Sacred in former times was Claros to Apollon; reckoned by him amongst his honours, in his brags to Daphne: where he declares,

Mibi Delphica relis,

Et Claros, & Tenedos, Patareque Regia seruit.

That is to say,

The folk of Delphos, Tenedos, and Clare,

And Royal Patare, my Vassals are.

8 COOS, COS, or COVS, for by all these names it was called of old, is situate over against Caria, in the very bottom of the Aegean, that is to say, in that part thereof which is called Mare Myrtoum, the Myrtoan Sea. A Sea so called, as some say, from one Myrtilus, Coachman or Charioter of Oenomaus, who having betrayed his race with Pelops, and importunate for his reward, was by Pelops precipitated into this Sea. Pliny left probably conceived that it took name from Myrtos, a little Island not far from Eubœa, a little too far off to extend its name to the shores of Caria. And therefore considering that Lydia anciently was called Myrtus, and that in those times Æolis, and Jonis, lying on this Sea, were accounted but as parts thereof, I think we may resolve with more probability, that it derived this name from that Lydian Myrtus.

In this Sea stands the Isle of Coos, now called Lange, affording Sayers as they pass by a most beautiful prospect, lying for the most part flat and level, but swelling towards the East with some graceful Mountains, out of which issue many sweet and pleasant springs to refresh the Island which maketh it more than ordinary fruitful. Productive of Cypress trees, Turpentine, and sundry others, both delightful and medicinal; but most especially celebrated for those rich wines, which the Good Fellows of Rome so much loved to quaff, called Vinum Cos. It is in the suburbs whereof stood anciently the Temple of Asclepius, famous and rich with the offerings of those, who having by his assistance (as they supposed) recovered health, came hither to make payment of their vows, and express their gratitude. It is now fortified with a strong Castle, held by a Garrison of Turks; and besides this, two Villages only in the Island, and both inhabited by Greeks.

In elder times it had the name of Merope, Caria, and Nymphæas, and at last Coos. Memorable in being the Country of many famous men who were here born: viz. of Hippocrates, the Reviver of Physick, then almost decayed, who is hence called Hippocrates Cos. 2 Sinuis, a Physician also. 3 Ariston, a Peripatetic Philosopher, for a time oppressed the liberty of this people. And 6 of Apelles, the famous Painter; who to express his Art in assembled together all the most beautiful women of the Island, uniting in that piece their divided perfections. Which famous piece being afterwards hanged up in the Temple of Stondimene, one of the principal of this Island, was thence conveyed to Rome by Augustus, and there dedicated to Cæsar, as the mother of the Julian family: the Coans in regard hereof, being eased of a great part of their annual tributes. Not much less memorable much in use amongst the chief Ladies of Rome; who at once shewed them clothed and naked. Periculi non vestire, ita, ut nuda conspicui possint, as my Author is. so often mentioned by the Poets, especially in their Amatoria; as Con pulvis Vestis, in Tibullus; Indue me Co so in Propertius; Sive eris in Cois, faith the Poet Ovid. here. I pass to 9 CARPATHOS, situate on the South of Caria in the Mæderranean, from this Island, called hereabouts the Carpathian Sea. A rugged and unpleasant foil, full of difficult Mountains, but those Mountains stored with quarries of most excellent Marble. In circuit about 60 miles, extending more in length than breadth. Hereabouts beautified with four Cities, and thence named Tetrapolis. But three of the four Cities are long since perished, that of Carpathor being still remaining, and still the principal of the Island; both now called Scarpanto. Some other Towns it hath all along the shore, and every small, and for the most part very unsafe. Situate in the middle as it were betwixt Crete and Rhodes. It hath continued hitherto in the possession of the State of Venice (if not taken from them very lately:) to whom being given with other of the Islands of these Grecian Seas, at the taking of Constantinople by the Western forces, it had all the residue were subdued by the Turks. The people Greek, of the communion of that Church, notwithstanding their subjection to a state of Italy.

10 RHODES, situate in the Rhodian or Carpathian Sea, lyeth over-against the coast of Lycia in Asia Minor, from which distant about 20 miles. Formerly called Ophisa, Aleria, Eubœa, Tynachia, Pæsis, Corymbia, Atabyria, and at last Mascaria; it settled finally and fortunately in the name of Rhodes. So named by the Grecians from the abundance of Roses, which the soil produceth, Rhodes in that language signifying a Rose, the Isle of Roses, as it were: but as the Poets say, of Rhoda, a Nymph of these Seas, here declared by Apollon, or rather of Rhoda, one of the daughters of Apollon begot on Pennus, For so one of them thus declared it, Insula Diis Rhodos, de Sole & Cypride nata est.

Rhoda, from whom this Isle took name,
Of Pennus and Apollo came.

The Island 140 miles in compass, enriched with a most temperate air, and a fertile soil, producing fruits in very great plenty, full of excellent pastures, adorned with trees which always do continue green: and in a word, so blest with the gifts of nature, that it gave occasion to the Fable of those Golden Showers, which were once said to have fallen upon it. The wines hereof so excellent, and so rich of taste, that by the Romans they were used in their second courses, or reserved for the sacrifices of the Gods, as too good for mortals, as affirmed by Virgil in the Georgicks. The cause of which perpetual flourishing, and fluences of Rose, is to be ascribed to the powerful influence of the Sun, so dearly cherishing this Island, of so much in love with it, that it is constantly affirmed, that no day passeth wherein he shineth not clearly on it, be the air in all other places never so much over-cast with clouds, or obscured by mists. Feigned for that cause to have been naturally a meir Marish, altogether inhabitable, if not covered with waters; till loved by Phœbius, and erected above the waves by his vigorous influences.

Of the People we shall speak anon; Look we in the mean time on the places of most observation. 1 Lindus, now Lindo, a petty town but formerly of more esteem: of note in those times for the Temple consecrated to Athena, by Danaus King of Ægypt, landing here when he fled out of that Kingdom. As also for the birth of Chæres, the Architect of the huge Colossus, whereof more presently; but specially for the nativity of Cleobulus, one of the seven wise-men of Greece: the other fix being Solon of Athens, Periander of Corinth, Chilon of Sparta, Bim of Priene, Thales of Melinus, and Pittacus of Mytæne. Seven men of whom the Grecians most immenly bragged, as if the World

World could neither afford them equals, or an equal number: for which derided handsomely by Lallantius, an old Christian Writer, who scoffs their paucity, and calleth it a miserable and calamitous age, In quo septem soli fuerint qui hominum vocabula mererentur; in which there were no more than seven who deserved to be accounted men. 2. Rhodes, anciently, as now the chief City of it, the Island from hence taking name, and formerly, as well as in latter times, depending on the fortunes and strength hereof. No place in elder times held superiour to it, for the convenience of the Haven, magnificent buildings, delightful Orchards, and other excellencies. Situate on the East part of the Isle, on the declining of an hill, and near the Sea, where it enjoyeth a safe and common Haven: treble walled, fortified with thirteen Turrets, and five strong Bulwarks, besides divers Scences, and other out-works; this Town, and Famagusta in the Isle of Cyprus, being conceived to be the two strongest holds in the Turkish Empire. In former times, one of the principal Universities of the Roman Empire; this Rhodes, Marfilius, Tarlus, Athens, and Alexandria, being reckoned the old Academies of that Monarchy. And to this Town, as a most noted place of Study, Tiberius (afterwards Emperor) did withdraw himself, when Augustus had declared his two Nephews Lucius and Caius, for his Heirs: pretending only a desire to improve himself in the ways of Literature; whereas the true cause was his envy at their preferment. Honour'd in those times with that huge Colossus, one of the seven Wonders of the World, made by Chares of Lindum, before mentioned. Composed of Brass, in height seventy Cubits, every finger of it being as great as an ordinary man; and consecrated to the Sun, as the proper Deity of the Island. Twelve years in making, and having stood but 66 years was pulled down in an Instant by an Earthquake, which terribly shook the whole Island. The *Rhodian*s being forbid by an Oracle to erect it again (or possibly pretending such an Oracle to save that charge) yet held the brass and other materials of it (in a manner) sacred. Not meddled with, nor sacrilegiously purloined till Mauroas, the General of Osman, the Mahometan Caliph, finding in himself no such scruple of conscience, (after he had subdued this Island) made a prey hereof, loading nine hundred Camels with the very brass of it. From this Colossus was the Island sometimes called Colossa, and the people Colossians: not those Colossians (as some have very vainly thought) to whom St. Paul writ his Epistle, those being of Colosse, a Town of the Greater Phrygia, as hath there been noted. Here was also in this City anciently a Temple of Bacchus, enriched with many presents both of Greeks and Romans; of both which People the *Rhodian*s were then held in a fair esteem; but the God and the good Wines in greater. Town of less note, are 3. Villanova, 4. Kullisware, and sometimes others, but as little memorable.

This Island was first peopled by Dodanim the son of Javan, and the Grand-child of Japhet, whom the Greeks call commonly, but corruptly, Rhodian; mistaking the Hebrew Letter Daleth for that of Reh, letters so like as easily it might draw them to that mistake. Finding this Island too narrow for him, he left here a Colony, and with the main of his people passed into Greece; where he planted the Country of Epirus, as hath there been said. Those which staid here being mistakingly called *Rhodian*s (or called so by the Greeks, not looking with too curious eyes into their Antiquities, from the abundance of Roses here growing) making the best use of their Haven, and other the advantages of their situation, became so expert in maritime affairs, that by Florus they are styled Populus nauticus, and not only in the way of Trade and Merchandize, but of power and government: holding for many years the command of these Seas, and prescribing Laws for the Reiglement of Navigation. Which being called the Rhodian Laws, became the general Rule for deciding marine causes, and ordering the affairs of Sea, in all the parts and Provinces of the Roman Empire: and so continued till supplanted in these Western parts by the Laws of Olerou. Fearful of falling under the *Macedonian*s, they applied themselves unto the Romans, whom first they aided in their wars against Philip, the Father of Perseus; and afterwards in that also against Antiochus. Rewarded for this last service with Lycia and Caria, two of the Asian Provinces, which Antiochus was to leave on his composition; they became so faithfully affected to the State of Rome, that when all the other Islands of the Mediterranean and Aegean Seas revolted to Mithridates King of Pontus, this only adhered unto the Romans. Proud either of their strength at Sea, or of those good offices, they began to take upon as Mediators, and thought themselves fit men to advise their Masters. Grown troublesome by their frequent interpositions, and losing much of their esteem by fact impertinencies, they began to grow jealous of the Romans, and incline to Perseus King of Macedon; whose Father they before oppos'd with their utmost power. A change which Paterculus exprest with some admiration. Rhodii ipsi fidelissimi amica Romanis, ubi iam fide promissas in Regis partes vixi, tur, as his words there are. But yet they held for them against Mithridates, as before was said, and served their turn on all occasions, until insensibly they betrayed their liberty to the power of their friends; and of Consuldrates and Allies, became the Vassals. Made by Vespasian into a Province with the rest of the Isles, the Governour or President of that Province fixing here his residence, as the chief of those Islands; which gave the title of Metropolitan to the Bishop of Rhodes. Under that Empire it continued (or under that of Constantinople after the division) till the year 1124, when taken from the Grecians by the State of Venice; again recovered by the Greeks, in the time of their Emperor John Ducas, then residing at Nice. Won from the Grecians by the Turks, the Knights of St. John of Hierusalem, being utterly driven out of Asia, possessed themselves of it, by the favour of Emanuel the then Emperor, who aided them in the conquest, Anno 1308. Afterwards proving bad neighbours to the Turkish Tyrants, whom they ceased not to insult upon all occasions, they were many times in vain invaded; Mahomet the Great, famous for taking Constantinople, and the Empire of Trebezond, spending some time before their City, with both loss and shame. At the last Anno 1522. it was again besieged by Solyman the Magnificent, Lilladamas Villier being then great Master, who did as much in defence hereof as policy and puissance could extend unto. But multitude in the end prevailed and upon Christians day, the Turk entred Rhodes as Conquerour; though possibly he might have said (as Pyrrhus once said of a Victory against the Romans) that such another Victory would have quite undone him. Since that a Province of the Turks, by whom, and by some Jews banished out of Spain, the City of Rhodes is wholly inhabited: the Christians which are licenced to dwell in the Country, and have leave to trade there in the day time, not suffered upon pain of death to stay there all night. And so we pass from the Islands of the Asian Diocese, to the Isle of Cyprus, a near neighbour unto Anatolia; and no member of it: the rest of that Diocese, and those Seas, as 11 Paphlagonia, 12 Arcepsus, 13 Bugades, 14 Minyas, 15 Sinu, 16 Ceph, and the rest, yielding but little matter of observation besides their names.

CYPROS is situate in the Syrian and Cilician Seas, extended in length from East to West two hundred miles, in breadth fifty; the whole compass reckoned five hundred and fifty. Distant about sixty miles from the rocky Shores of Cilicia in Asia Minor, and about an hundred from the main Land of Syria; towards which it shooteth it self out with a long sharp Promontory, extending heretofore to the main Land, from which rent in former time by a violent Earthquake, as is laid by Pliny, and worn unto this narrowness by the continual working of the Sea upon it.

No place hath oftner changed his name, or at least had more names on the by than this. Called at first Cebin, or Cebinia, from Kevin the son of Javan, who first planted it. 2. Cerastis, from the abundance of Promontories, thrusting like Horns into the Sea, (as the word intimates in the Greek) 3. Amathusia, 4. Paphia, 5. Salamina: These three last from the principal Towns in those parts hereof. 6. Macaria, from the fruitfulness and felicity of it. Besides these, it hath in some times had these By-names also; as, 7. Aperia from the roughness of the Soil. 8. Collina, from the frequency of Hills and Mountains. 9. Eroisa, from the Mines of Brass, which abound therein. 10. And finally, all those forgotten and laid by, it settled at last in the name of Cyprus. So called, say some, from the abundance of Cypres Trees, with which most plentifully provided; as others, from Crypsos a Greek word, signifying Concealed, or hidden, because sometimes concealed by the Surges from the eye of Sailors; but most improbably said by City of Aphrodisia; whereas indeed six hundred years before Cypris his Birth, we find it by this name in Homer. More rightly Stephanus, who deriveth it, Σει Κύπρις Κυπρις Κυπρις, from Cypris daughter of Cinyras, one of the Kings hereof, living before the Trojan Wars: though in my mind the first comes nearest to the truth, the Cypres Tree not only growing here in so great abundance, but being anciently peculiar in a manner to this Island only.

But on what ground soever it was called Cypris, certain I am it had the name of Cerastis upon very good reason; no Island or Region that I know of (for the biggness of it) thrusting out so many sharp Promontories. For on the West there is, 1. The Promontory called Acamas, now Capo S. Pafano. 2. Drepanum, now Trepano and Malechia. 3. Zephyrum, or Caput Calidonis, now Punta Malata. On the South, 4. Phrynum, now Capo Bianco. 5. Cyrtus, or Capo della Catre. 6. Gades, or Capo di S. Throni, or Capo Pila. On the East, 8. Pendulium, now Capo di Griego. 9. Clides, now Capo S. Andrea. And on the North, 10. Coromyn, now Capo Cor-nazietti, besides some others of less note. Some of the Poets give another reason of this name, as that Venus of Guccis, should turn them into horned Cattel, Unde virum nomen traxere Cerastra, as it is in Ovid, but that merely fabulous; somewhat of kin unto the Legend of Thomas Becket, and the Kentish-long-tails. Yet so far called Cerastis, but that the People were also called Cerastis, and that there wants not proof from some other that name being altogether worn out of use, and no other that of Cypris given it in common Speech. Nor is called so by the Grecians from its abundance of Cypres Trees, anciently and originally peculiar to this Island, as before was noted: than that the same Grecians should from its great plenty of Roses; or to the neighbouring Continent the name of Phoenicia, from its great plenty of Palm-trees the word so signifying in that Language.

It is situate under the fourth Climate, so that the longest day in Summer is no more than fourteen hours and a half; and for that cause the Air in Summer time exceeding hot and foultry: The Soil moistned with some few Brooks, meriting rather the name of Torrents than Rivers, which being generated for the most part by rain-water, are not seldom dried up by the heat of the Sun; inso much that in the Reign of Constantine the Great, this Island was for 36 years together almost utterly forsaken, no rain falling all that time. These inconveniences notwithstanding, it is stored with such plenty of all things, that without the help of any Foreign Nation, it is of it self able to build and rig a tall Ship from the Keel to the Top-sail, and to put it to Sea furnished with all things needful for a Voyage, or a Sea-sight. It also aboundeth in Wine, Oyl, Coriander, Cotton, Honey, Wool, Turpentine, and Almond, Verdegreece, all sorts of Metals, store of Salt, Grograins, and other Commodities, whereupon this Island was once called Macaria (i. e. Happy.) By reason of which wonderful affluence of all necessities, and that afforded, it was anciently consecrated unto Venus, who is hence called Venus Cypris, and Dea Cypr: Sic te dicunt Cypri in Huore; and in Ovid, Effusa dies Veneris; tota celebrissima Cypro, Venerat; ipsa Jussu aderat Venus aurica fessis Venus Ecstas hallowed through all Cypris came, and Venus with her presence grac'd the same.

The People hereof are war-like, strong, and nimble; of great civility and hospitality to their Neighbours, and love to Strangers of all Nations, Jews only excepted. For in the Empire of Trajan, the Jews inhabiting Ægypt and the adjoining Countries, drew themselves to gether, and chose one Alexander for their Captain and r whose conduct conduct they entred into this Island, and laid it desolate, killing in it 240000 Persons of all Sexes and Ages; not without much bloodshed vanquished and slain by Lucius the Emperours Lieutenant. Since which time the Cypriots permit no Jew to enter into the Island; but come heither voluntarily, or by force of Tempelt, they lay hands on him, and lead him presently to Execution. A hated Nation, that neither innocence can protect, or equity relieve from that cruel custom.

The Women in former times much noted for their Unchastity, to which their worshipping of Venus was no small incentive; it being the custom of these Women to prostitute themselves on the Shores, to the passers by: their very Virgins not refusing to be handled there, before their Marriage; either to raise their Portions by the sale of their Bodies, or else to please their Goddes with such beastly Sacrifices. And if Polaterranus may be credited (as I think he may) the Ladies which attended on Queen Carotide, when she came to Rome, to seek for aid against Jamas the Baffard, who had dispossessed her of this Kingdom, shewed themselves little chaster than the most ancient Cypriots. Somewhat more fortunate in the Men: 1. Aesclapides, the Author of the Verse so named; 2. Xenophon, an old Poet; 3. Zeno, and 4. Apollonius, the Philosopher; 5. Ephraimus, the learned Bishop of Salamis; and 6 above all, Saint Barnabas the dear Associate of Saint Paul, being all natives of this Country.

The Christian Faith was first here planted by Saint Paul and Barnabas, as the very first fruits of their Apostleship after they had been separated to the Work of the Ministry by the imposition of hands, as appeareth Acts 13. v. 4. &c. The Church hereof, by reason of the Antiquity of it, and the honour of this joint Foundation to privileged in the best Ages of Christianity, that the Archbishop of this Island had all Prerogatives of a Primate; consecrated by his own Suffragan Bishops and acting in all Sacred and Ecclesiastical Affairs, without dependance on, or relation to the See of Antioch, whereunto all other Bishops in the Eastern Dioceses were either subordinate or Subject. Which Privilege being questioned in the Council of Ephesus, was by the Fathers there assembled, on a full hearing of the Cause, approved and ratified; confirmed by the Civil Sanction of the Emperour Justinian, whose Wife was a Native of this Island; and by the name of Jus Cyprianum, the Privilege or Exemption of the Cyrian Church, transmitted to the Prelates of succeeding times. Which notwithstanding, they continued in good correspondence with the Eastern Churches of the Greek Communion, and officiated all Divine Acts after the Rites and Forms thereof, till the Venitians became Lords of it, who brought in the Latin Service into some of their Churches, and appointed Bishops and other Ministers of the Papal party, for execution of the same. And for the Government of these Churches, they had at first fourteen Bishops and Archbishops; to gratifie Queen Alice, (who had a mind to enrich her friends with some of the Spoils of them) reduced by Innocent the third to four only, that is to say, the Archbishop of Nicosia, the Bishopsricks of Famagusta, Paphos, and Amathus; but each See furnished with two Prelates, the one for the Greeks, the other for the Latins: of which the Bishops for the Latins have all the Lands, and Annual Revenues which of right belong to those Cathedral, the Greek Bishops living upon Stipends levied on the Priests and Deacons of their Jurisdiction.

Rivers, as formerly was said, here are very few; and of those few, the principal are called Lycu and Lapithu; the first running towards the South, the last towards the North; both not seldom so dried up, that they leave their empty Channels without any water. Both also have their Source from the Hill Olympus (the highest Mountain of the Island) garnished with Trees and Fruits of all sorts; in compas about eighteen Leagues (which make four and fifty Italian miles) and at the end of every League a Monastery of Greek Monks, or Caloires, and a Fountain of fresh water for the use of the House. Here are also two other little Rivers, the one called 3 Bodeni, the other 4 Tolius; but of the same nature as the former.

By Prology, or in his time, divided into four parts or Provinces; but since it fell into the hands of the Lufinian Family, distributed into twelve Counties or Centredes; most of them called by the names of their principal Towns: viz. 1 Nicosia, 2 Famagusta, 3 Paphia, 4 Andima, 5 Limissa, 6 Maforum, 7 Salina, 8 Messoria, 9 Cryfocum, 10 Pentalia, 11 Carpafia, 12 Cerines. The whole containing, besides the Cities and great Towns, 805 Villages or thereabouts, which they called Caflets, whereof the one half anciently belonged unto the Crown, the other half divided betwix the Lay Nobility, and the Ecclesiasticks; the Patrimony of these last being computed at 80000 Crowns of Annual Rents, besides Casualties, and the Vails of the Altar. But because the tracing out of these Centredes will be very difficult (as a way which none have gone before me) I will adhere to the division made hereof in the time of Prology, into the Provinces of 1 Paphia, 2 Amathus, 3 Lapethia, and 4 Salamine.

1 PAPHIA so called of Paphos the chief Town thereof, taketh up the West part of the Island; in which the Towns of most importance and observation are, 1 Paphos, on the Sea-side, by Pliny, called Parpaphos, or old Paphus, built, as some say, by Cymrus, the Father of Myrrha, and so named in memory of Paphus his Father; but, as others say, by Paphos, the son of Pygmalion, King of Phoenicia and Cyprus: to which last Ovid doth agree, who speaking of Pygmalion's Statue, turned into a Woman by the power of Venus (or rather of his beautiful Wife, fabled, for the surpassing whiteness of her skin, to be made of Ivory) he adds this of her,

Illa Paphium genus de quo tenet insula nomen.

She Paphus bare whom from the name

Of Paphio to the Island came.

Here Venus had her so much celebrated Temple, hence the name of Paphia; and here her Votaries of both Sexes in their natural nakedness, did perform her Sacrifices. Both Town and Temple ruined by a fearful Earthquake; or as the Legends have it, by the prayers of St. Barnabas; or the ruins of it fill remaining. 2 Prophos Nova, or New Paphos, now called Rafu; five miles from the old, built by Apapenur, one of the Nephews of Lycurgus the Spartan Law-giver, after the Sack of Troy forced hither by a violent Tempelt; consecrate to the same impure Goddes, and much frequented, but without injury to the other; those which here offered not thinking they had done her sufficient service, unless they went in a solemn manner of Procession, and paid their Vows also at the other. 3 Asifone, situate betwixt both; built by, or called so in honour of Asifone, daughter of Ptolemy the first King of Aegypt, and Lord of Cyprus, of that House. 4 Drepanium, now called Trepam, under the Promontory so named, a well-traded Port, but miserably defaced by the Turks, when they took this Island. 5 Comedia, one of the richest of the Island, by reason of the plenty of Sugar and Cotton-wool, growing thereabout. Built in the place of 6 Cithera, dedicated to Venus also, but differing from the Island of that name in the Aegean Sea, rather in pronunciation than the purity of her oblations; the last syllable have one, in the name of that Island, being short in verse, but this of Cyprus founding long, as in this of Virgil, Est Amathus, est celsa mihi Paphos, atque Cithera.

Cithera and Amathus divine,
And lofty Paphos are all mine.

2 On the South-East of Paphia lieth the Province or District of AMATHUSIA, taking up the South-parts of the Island which look towards Aegypt. Chief Towns hereof, 1 Amathus, giving name unto this division, then of most note, and much frequented for the annual sacrifices made unto Adonis the darling of Venus, who had here another of her Temples: the ruins of both hardly now discerned. Built, as some say, by Amasis, King of Aegypt, when he conquered this Island; but as others say by some of the Anabites, descended from Anab one of the sons of Canaan. 2 Catium, or Cittium, (for I find it called by both names) the birth-place of memorable for the death of Simon the Athenian General. 3 Town, is most anciently preferred. 4 Epifepio, one of the chief of all the Island, built on the place, or out of the decay of 4 Curias, not far from the Promontory of the same name, founded by the Argives, where Apollo had both a Grove and a Temple, by the name of Apollo Hy-lar; his Altars in those times held so sacred, that whosoever presumed to touch them, was thrown into the Sea from the Promontory or rocks adjoining. 5 Salinae, or chief Towns of this part, and giving name to one of the twelve Centredes, into which the whole is now divided.

3 LAPETHIA, the third part of the Island, lyeth on the North thereof, opposite to Cilicia in Asia. Minority of the Kings, the See of the Archbishop, and the chief of the Island: anciently called Ledronis, and Lemains; but those names long ago laid by. Situate in the midst of the life, and in a plain and champain Country, abundantly fertile and delightful. Environed with a fair wall, so exactly round as if it had been drawn with a pair of Compasses; in circuit about five miles, and both for situation, numbers of People, and magnificent buildings of all sorts both publick and private, compared by some to the most beautiful City of Florence. Fortified by the Venetians, when in their possession, with new walls, deep ditches, and eleven strong Bulwarks, with three great Out-works, all of them built according to the Art of modern Fortification. But notwithstanding all these works, and the help of 250 pieces of Canon planted on the walls, and about the City, it was by the Turks taken at the second or third assault, Sept. 9. Anno. 1570. So evident a truth it is, that Fortifications are more strengthened by the gallantry and courage of the Defendants, than the Defendants are by their Fortifications. 2 Cerines, situate near the Sea, strong by Art and Nature, and furnished with all things necessary to endure a Siege; but yielded to the Turks by Alphonfus Palaius the unwearied Governor, terrified with the great slaughter made at the sack of Nicosia, before the Enemy came near it. At first great Perfian King, when he first subdued the nine Kings hereof, and united the Island to that Crown; blest with a more temperate and wholesome air, than any other in the Country. 3 Tremis, the birth-place of Spirdidion, Bishop of the Primitive times, renowned for miracles; in many of which reported by Sosomen, lib. 1. chap. 10. and other Ecclesiastical Writers. Wholly decayed, the ruins of it much contributing to the rise of Nicosia, a Lapithus (by Pliny called Lapero) on the banks of a small Riveret of that name, of so great note in former times, that it gave to this Division the name of Lapethia; in that part I standeth the hill Olympus, (now the Mountain of the holy Cross) described before.

4 SALAMINE, the fourth and last Province of this Island, taketh up the whole East-parts hereof: So named from 1 Salamis, once the chief City of the Isle; and the See of the Primate, or Metropolitan hereof in the Primitive times. Destroyed by the Jens in the reign of Tyrtan, and re-built again; but being after that taken, sacked, and razed unto the ground by the Saracens, in the time of Heraclius, it never could again recover the Metropolitan See after that subversion, being removed to Nicosia. It was sometimes, and by some Writers, called Constantia also; but that name could give it no more perpetuity than the other of Salamis. Memorable whilst it stood for the founder of it, being Tenar the Son of Telamon King of Salamis an Isle of the Aegean Sea; banished his Country by his Father, and settled in this Island by the power of Belus King of Phoenicia: as also for a famous Temple sacred unto Jupiter, hence called Salaminus. Out of the ruins hereof arose, 2 Famagusta, now the prime City of these parts; built as is said by Coffa the Father of St. Catharine; but that uncertain. Situate at the East end of the Island, in a plain and low ground betwixt two Promontories, the one called the Cape of St. Andrew, and the other Cape di Griego, or the head of Greece. In compas not above two miles, in form four-square, but that the side towards the East stretcheth out more in length than the other three. On two parts beaten on with the Sea, the other parts towards the Land defended with a Ditch not above fifteen foot in breadth, an old stone wall, and certain Bulwarks. The Haven (opposite to Tripolis, a Town of Syria) openeth towards the South-east, defended from the injury of the Sea by two great Rocks, betwixt which the Sea cometh in at a narrow passage not above forty paces broad, but after opening wider and wider; maketh a convenient Harbour, rather safe than large, secured both by the difficult entrance and a chain crooked over it. The whole Town, when the Turks appeared before it, but meanly fortified, the works of it of the old fashion, generally decayed except one Bulwerk, which was but according to the modern Arts of Fortification, with Galifadours, Curtains, Casemates, and all other Advantages: most gallantly defended by Bragadine the noble General, to the wonder and envy of the Turks, who spent no less than 18000 great shot upon it; and at last yielded upon honourable terms, had they been as punctually performed. 5 Aphrodisium, so named of Venus, whom the Greeks called Aphrodite, who had here another of her Temples. 4 Asifone, built also by one of the Asifones Queens of Aegypt, there being two others of this name, and the same foundation, now called Leferre, and anciently renowned for the Groves of Siphier. 5 Tamafius, as afterwards for an abundance of Perlegrace and Perid, found plentifully in the fields adjoining. 6 Iadiumneur a Mount of the same name, so called by accident. For he should fear himself, and build a City, where he first law the rising Sun: one of his followers, seeing the Sun begin to rise, cried out Ida Idus, that is to say, Behold the Sun. Which Omen taken by Chalco, he heth built this City. But whether this were so or not (as for my part I build not very much upon it) certain it is, that Venus had here another Temple, neighboured by the Adian Groves so memorized and chanted by the ancient Poets. So strong an influence had lust and sensuality on this wretched People, that every corner of the Island was defiled with those brutish Sacrifices, which day by day were offered to that impure deity: though to say truth, it was no marvel if having made their Belly their God, they made in the next place their glory their Name.

The first Inhabitants of this Island were the posterity of Cittim the son of Javan, and grand-son of Japhet: who having seen his brother Turkish settled in Cilicia, (where his memory is still preserved in the City of Tarsus) planted himself and his retinue in this opposite Island. The City of Cettium, as Ptolomy, or Cittium, as Pliny calleth it, one of the ancientest of the Island; taking name from him: which with the authority of Josephus, and others of the ancient Writers, put it out of question. But being this Island was too narrow to contain his numbers, and willing to seek further off for a larger dwelling, he left here so many of his followers as might serve in time to plant the Country; and with therewith passed into Macedon, where we have already spoken of him. Made tributary first to Amasis King of Ægypt, from which distant about three or four days sailing, subjected afterwards to the Phœnicians, a near neighbour to them, who being a Sea-faring people, made themselves Masters of the Sea-coasts and maritime places. Cyprus the Father of Myrrha, (by whom both Father and Grand-Father to Adonis) is said to have been King of both. The like affirmed of Belus one of his Successors, who is said to have been the founder of the City of Cittium, named so (if not rather repaired than new built by him,) with reference no doubt to Cittim, the first Progenitor of this People. By the power and favour of this Belus, Tencher, the son of Telamon, banished his Country, accompanied with many followers from Salamis, Athens, and Arceadia, was settled in the East parts here; where the City of Salamis, by him built, was his first Plantation. Yet so that the Phœnicians kept their former hold; it being evident in Story that Eulenes one of the Successors of this Belus, (but a King of Tyre), and a Co-temporary with Salmassar King of Affria, passed over into Cyprus with a puissant Navy to reduce the Citians to obedience, who had then rebelled. The Island at first coming of Tencher hither so infinitely overgrown with woods, that the people were not able to till the Island. Inso much, that notwithstanding the great waste made of them, both in building ships, and casting metals, a Law was made, that every one which would should fell them, and take as much ground in severality for his own inheritance, as he could overcome and make fit for tillage. Encouraged herewith the natural Cypriots, together with the Colonies of Grecians, Phœnicians, Ægyptians, so belirred themselves that at last they brought it unto Champan: parcelled out in succeeding times, amongst nine Kings, for so many Cyrm the great Perfian Monarch found at his coming hither. But Cyrm, though he did subdue all those petty Princes, yet he took not from them their Estates or Titles: contented with the conquest of it and an annual tribute. For after this, in the time of Artaxerxes Menemon, we find Eucagrat, and Nicolet, to whom Iscrates inscribed two of his Orations, to be Kings hereof. And in the time of Alexander the Great, Cittium it self (such was the honour born unto the Mother-City) had a King apart, not subject unto any other. The King whereof to incard himself with the Conqueror, gave to him a sword, μυχαγενε σωαυδης, Smith Plutarch, an admirable sword, both for colour and lightness, which he after used in all his fights. And after the death of Alexander, his great Commanders cantoning his estates amongst them, the Princes and People of this Island were in great distractions, not knowing to whom they might submit for their best advantage. But Ptolomy, who had seized on Ægypt for his part of the spoil, being strong in shipping, fettered them by a personal visit; and fortifying some of the best pieces in it, assured the Country to himself. To him and his posterity it continued subject till the time of Ptolomy Auletes, the ninth King of this Line in our Account, who gave it for a portion to one of his Brethren: in whose time, the Romans, without any colour or pretence of quarrel, but only to enrich themselves with the spoil of the Island, sent Porcius Cato to subdue it. And he at first assayed to get it with the Kings consent, offering him in the name of the Roman Senate, the Priest-hood of the Temple of Paphos, being a rich and gainful Office, and of high esteem among that people. But when Ptolomy for fear of worse mischief had made away himself by poison, Cato without more ceremony takes possession of it. And because Amminius Marcellinus the Historian, hath so significantly expressed this business, and withal described so punctually the Estate of this Island; we will add this discourse from him, though somewhat be repeated which was said before. Cyprus insulam procul à Continente distantem, & portualem, &c. "The Isle of Cyprus, far distant from the Continent, and well stored with Harbours, is famous, besides many Municipal Towns, for two principal Cities, that is to say, Salamis, and Paphos; the one sacred to Jupiter, and the other to Venus. An Isle so admirably fruitful, and with all things furnished, that without the help of any foreign Nation, it is able of itself to build and rig forth a ship, from the very keel unto the top-sail, and trim it with all tackle necessary for a present voyage. Nor do I flatter to say, that with greater Avarice than Justice, the Romans did invade this Island, King Ptolomy, our old Confederate and Ally, being unworthily proscribed for no other reason, but that our Treasury was bare, our Exchequer empty. And he no sooner had prevented this dishonour by a quick and voluntary death, making away himself by poison, but the Island was forthwith made tributary, and the riches of it, Vetus hostiles exuvie classis impo- sita & in urbem adducta per Catonem, as the spoils of some conquered enemy, were brought on Ship-board, and conveyed by Cato unto Rome. So far, and to this purpose he.

I know there is another cause alledged for the sending of Cato on this Errand, viz. that Clodius who was then Tribune, and spied the Edict, might have opportunity by his absence to revenge himself on Cicero, and some others of the opposite faction: but the main business was the money, as before was said; the prey amounting to 7000 Talents, which comes to two Millions, and one hundred thousand Crowns of Coin now current. Which money and moveables, amounting unto so vast a sum, he fearing to lose by Sea, divided it into many small portions, which he put into several Boxes, viz. in every Box two Talents and fifty Drachms. At the end of every Box he fastened a long rope with a piece of Cork; by which, floating above the water, the money, if by Shipwrack lost, might be espied again: which was not much unlike the boys which Mariners fasten by long ropes to their Anchors, that they may be sooner found. We see by this, that the pretence of the Romans to this Country was very weak: Avaricie magis quam justis sumis essent, are the words of Sextus Rufus also. But being made a Roman Province, it was in the division of the Empire assigned to the Constantinopolis Emperours, under whom it suffered, as all other parts of the Empire did by the violent invasion of the Saracens, who spoiled and ransacked it in the time of Confiance the second, destroying then the City of Salamis or Constantia. But that tempest being over-blown, they returned again unto that Empire, governed by a succession of Dukes, till the year 1184. At which time Andronicus Comnenus usurping the Greek Empire, compelled Isaacius Comnenus, one of the blood Royal, to lift for himself: who seizing on this Island made himself King thereof, and ruling till the year 1191. when Richard the first of England, being denied the common courtesy of taking in fresh water, and seeing his Souldiers abused by the Cypriots, not only took the King Prisoner, but subdued the whole Island. And as Paterculus telleth us, that when Marcus Antonius had captivated Artamides King of Armenia, Catenis, sed ne quid honoris deesset, aureis vincit; So did our Richard keep a Decorum towards this Prisoner, binding him not in bonds of Iron, but Silver. King Richard having thus possessed himself of this Country sold it for ready money, (which for the managing of his intended wars against the Turks, he most needed) unto the Templers: and taking it, upon I know not what discontent, again from them, he bestowed it on Guy of Lusignan, the titular and miserable King of Hierusalem; receiving in way of exchange, the title of that lost and shipwrecked Kingdom, with which title he and some of his Successors for a time were honoured.

In the posterity of this Guy, this Island continued free and absolute, till the year one thousand four hundred twenty three; when Melechella (or Melchiasar) Sultan of Ægypt, invaded this Country, took John King hereof Prisoner, ransomed him for 150000 Sultanies, restored him to his Kingdom, and imposed on him and his Successors the yearly tribute of 40000 Crowns. This John was father to another John, whose two children were Carlote a legitimate Daughter, and James a bastard Son. James after the death of his father, dispossessed his sister Carlote of the Crown, by the consent and help of the Sultan of Ægypt; and the better to strengthen himself against all opposition, he took to wife Catharine Cornaris, daughter by adoption to the Venetian Senate: whom at his death he made his heir, if the child he went withal (having then none by her) should die without issue, as it did, not long after it was born; and the seeing the factious Nobility too head-strong to be bridled by a female authority, like a good child resigned her Crown and Scepter to the Venetian Senate, Anno 1473. These defended it against all claims, (paying only as tribute to the Ægyptian, and afterwards to the Turkish Sultans, the 40000 Crowns before mentioned) till the year 1570. when Mustapha, General of the Turks, wrested it from the Venetians, to the use of his Master Suliman the second, who pretended title to it as Lord of Ægypt. The Governor of the Venetian Forces at the time of this unfortunate loss was Signior Bragadino, who as long as hope of succours, means of resistance, or possibility of prevailing continued, with incredible valour made good the Town of Ramagusa, in whose defence consisted the welfare of the whole Island. At last he yielded it on honourable conditions, had they been as faithfully kept, as punctually agreed on. But Mustapha the Turkish General inviting to his Tent the principal Men of worth in the Town, caused them all to be murdered: and as for Brigadin himself, he commanded his ears to be cut off, his body to be head alive, and his skin stuffed with straw, to be hanged at the main yard of his Gally. The chief of the prisoners and spoils were in two tall ships, and one Gallion sent unto Salimus; but he never saw them. For a Noble Cyprian Lady, destinated to the lust of the violence whereof both the vessels and the booty in them were in part burned, in part drowned. A famous and heroic act; inferior unto none of the Roman Dames, so much commended in their Stories, though more to be commended in a Roman than a Christian Lady. Thus having summed up the affairs of this Island from the first plantation of it, till this last said conquest, I will lay down the succession of the Cyprian Kings of the Noble Lusignan Family, in this ensuing Catalogue of

The KINGS of CYPRUS.

- 1 Guy of Lusignan, the titular King of Hierusalem, elected in the Kingdom of Cyprus, by Richard the first of England.
- 2 Americus, the brother of Guy.
- 3 Hugh, the son of Americus.
- 4 Henry, the son of Hugh.
- 5 Hugh II. son of Henry.
- 6 Hugh III. son of Hugh II. the second.
- 7 John, son of Hugh the third.
- 8 Henry II. the brother of John.
- 9 Hugh IV. son of Guido, the younger brother of John, and Henry the second.
- 10 Peter, the son of Hugh the fourth.
- 11 Petrinus, the son of Peter.
- 12 James, younger brother of Peter, and Uncle to Petrinus.
- 13 James, the son of James, made Tributary by Melchiasar, to the Kingdom of Ægypt.
- 14 John II. the son of James.
- 15 Carlote, sole daughter and heir of John the second, first married to John the Prince of Portugal, and after to Lewis Prince of Savoy; outed of her Estate and Kingdom, by
- 16 James II. the bastard son of John the second, who by a strong hand seized upon it; and by help of the Venetians kept it during life.
- 17 James III. born after the decease of his father, whom he survived not very long. After whose death, being the last of this Family, the Venetians possessed themselves of Cyprus: which they invaded with no better title, than the Romans had done in former times; not likely to be blest with a long fruition, of that which they had so unjustly got into their hands. But of that already.

And here is to be observed, that these Cyprian Kings retaining the title of Hierusalem (towards which they sometimes cast an eye) bestowed upon their greatest Subjects, and deservng Servitors, both titles of honour and Offices of State, belonging anciently to that Kingdom. So that we find amongst them a Prince of Antiochia, a Prince of Galilee, a Count of Tripoli, a Lord of Sarea, and a Lord of Mount Tabor; a Seneschal of Hierusalem, a Constable, Marshal, and high Chamberlain of that Kingdom also. With better reason, though no doubt with as little profit, as the Pope gives Bishopsricks and Archbishopsricks in Greece, or Ægypt. But those titular Offices are now quite extinct, though possibly some of the Titles of honour which were took from thence, may be still remaining.

But to return unto the Turks; having thus taken Famagusta and Nicosia, on which the whole Island did depend, all other Cities of it, and the whole by consequence, were forced to submit to the Turkish Tyranny.

The Noblemen, and Citizens of principal quality, either most cruelly massacred in the Sack of those Towns; or banished for ever their Native Country, as men whose living there might possibly endanger their new Conquest. But the Country people, Artificers; and Pe-amongst themselves, and a devout invocation on the Name of God, to direct them in it. The word Xpianoi used in the Original, importeth somewhat of Oracular and Divine direction. And certainly it standeth with reason that it should be so. For if upon the giving of a name to John Baptif, there was not only a consultation had of the Friends and Mother, but the dumb Father called to advise about it; and if we use not to admit the poorest child of the Parish into the Congregation of Christ's Church by the door of Baptif, but by the joynt invocation of the Name of God for his blessing on it: with how much more regard of Ceremony and Solemnity, must we conceive that the whole body of Christ's people were baptized into the name of Christians? And there is some proof of it too, besides probability and conjecture. For Suidas, and before him Johannes Antiochenus, an old Cosmographer do expressly say, that in the days of Claudius Caesar, ten years after the Ascension of our Lord and Saviour, Eudius received Episcopall consecration, and was made Patriarch of Antioch the Great in Syria, succeeding immediately to St. Peter: then addeth, that at that time the Disciples were first called Christians. Τὴν δὲν ἑταίρειαν τοὺς πρώτους ποικίλους ὁ δόξας, ὡς διδόντες αὐτῶν τὸ ὄνομα Χριστοῦ, &c. i. e. Eudius their Bishop calling them to a Solemn Assembly, and imposing this new name upon them, whereas before they were called Nazarites and Galileans. A people so hated by the Heathens, that they could not so slander them from the first beginning. For as concerning this Self we know that it is every where spoken against, said the Jews of Rome to the Apostle, Acti 28, 22. Tacitus a Roman, but a Gentile, goes yet further with them, calling them Homines per fugitios invidios, & novissima meritis exempla: the calumny in this time being thorough and general, that at their private meetings they devoted Infants, and had carnal company with their Mothers and Sisters. Which defamations notwithstanding, they grew in few years to so great numbers, that they were a terror to their Enemies; though grievously afflicted, tortured, and put to several kinds of death, under the ten Famous Persecutions, raised against them, by Nero, Anno 67, 2 Domitian, Anno 96, 3 Trajanus, Anno 110, 4 Marcus Antoninus, Anno 167, 5 Severus, Anno 195, 6 Maximinus, Anno 237, 7 Decius, Anno 250, 8 Valerianus, Anno 259, 9 Aurélianus, Anno 278, 10 By Dioclesianus, Anno 293. All, but this last especially, to extremely raging, that (as St. Hieron writeth in one of his Epistles) that there martyred 5000 for every day in the year, except the first of January, on which they used not to shed blood. But Sanguis Martyrum, Semen Ecclesie. This little grain of Mustard-seed, sowed by God's own hand, and watered by the blood of so many holy men, grew to great a Tree, that the branches of it spread themselves over all the world; and got such footing even in the Roman Army it self, (Men commonly not of the strictest kind of Religion) that when Julian the Apostate had vomited out his Soul, with Verbis tandem Galilee, they elected Jovinian, though a Christian, for his Successor, with this acclamation, Christiani omnes sumus. We are also Christians. But see how the baptizing of God's people by the name of Christians, in the City of Antioch, hath drawn me out of my way, I return again, both to the place, and to the Author. In whose evidence, besides what doth concern the imposition of the name of Christian, upon the body of the faithful, we have a testimony for St. Peter's being Bishop of Antioch, the first Bishop thereof (of the Church of the Jews therein at least) as is said positively by Engelb in his Chronology, St. Hieron in his Catalogue of Ecclesiastical Writers, St. Chrysostom in his Homilie de translatione Ignatii, Theodore Dialog. 1. St. Gregory Epist. lib. 6. cap. 37. and before any of them by Origen, in his sixta

Homily on St. Luke. With reference whereunto, and in respect that Antioch was accounted always the principal City of the East-parts of the Roman Empire (the Presbiter of the East for the most part residing in it) the Jurisdiction hereof in the first Ages of Christianity, had Jurisdiction over all the Churches in the East; as far as the bounds of that Empire did extend that way. To which by Constantine the Great the Provinces of Cilicia and Phoenicia, with those of Mesopotamia and Osfroene were after added, containing 15 Roman Provinces, or the whole Dioecesis of the Orient. And though by the subfracting of the Churches of Palestine, and the decay of Christianity in these parts by the Conquests of the Turks and Saracens, the Jurisdiction of this Patriarch hath been very much lessened; yet William of Tyre, who flourished in the year 1130. reciteth the names of 13 Archiepiscopals, 21 Metropolitans, and 127 Episcopals Sees, yielding obedience in his time to the See of Antioch. Since which that number is much diminished, Mohometism more and more increasing, and Christianity divided into Sects and Factions; inasmuch that of three sorts of Christians living in these Countries, viz. The Maronites, Jacobites, and the Melchites, only the Melchites are subordinate to the Church of Antioch, the others having Patriarchs of their own Religion.

And first for the Melchites, who are indeed the true and proper Members of the Church of Antioch, and the greatest body of Christians in all the East; they are so named in way of scorn, by the Jacobite and Maronite Schismatics, supposing without just cause from their Communion. The name derived from Melchi, signifying in the Syriack Language a King or Emperor; because adhering to their Primate, they followed the Canons and Decisions of preceding Councils, ratified by authority of the Emperor Leo, by whom subscription was required to the Acts thereof: and were in that respect (as we use to say) of the Kings Religion. Conform in Points of Doctrine to the Church of Greece, but that they celebrate Divine Service as solemnly on the Saturday, as upon the Sunday: Subject to the true and Original Patriarch, who since the destruction of Antioch doth reside in Damascus; and on no terms acknowledging the Authority of the Popes of Rome.

Next for the Maronites, they derive that name, either from Maron, one of the principal Villages where they first inhabited; or from the Monastery of St. Maron, mentioned in the first Act of the Council of Constantinople holden under Mennas, the Monks of which called Maronites, were the head of their Sect. Some Points they hold, in which they differ from all Orthodox Christians; others in which they differ only from the Church of Rome. Of the first sort, 1 That the Holy Ghost proceedeth from the Father only, without relation to the Son. 2 That the Souls of men were created all together at the first beginning. 3 That male Children are not to be baptized together, but at several times by one and one. 4 That Heretics returning to the Church are to be re-baptized. 5 That the Child is made unclean by the touch of his Mother till her Purification; and therefore not baptizing Children till that time be past, which after the birth of a Male-child must be forty days, of a Female eighty. 6 That the Eucharist is to be given to Children presently after Baptism. 7 That the fourth Marriage is utterly unlawful. 8 That the Father may dissolve the Marriage of his Son or Daughter. 9 That young men are not to be ordained Priests or Deacons, except they be married. 10 That nothing strangled, or of blood may be eaten by Christians. 11 That Women in their Monthly courses are not to be admitted to the Eucharist, or to come into the Church. 12 And finally (which was indeed their first discrimination from the Orthodox Christians) that there was but one will and action in Christ; the Factors of which opinion had the name of Monoblastes. Of the last kind, 1 That the Sacrament of the Lords Supper was to be administered in both kinds. 2 And in Leavened bread. 3 That bread to be broken to the Communicants (and not each man to have his Wafer to himself) according to the first Institution. 4 Not refusing that Sacrament. 5 Nor carrying any part of the consecrated Elements to sick persons in danger of death. 6 That Marriage is nothing inferior to the single life. 7 That no man entrench the Kingdom of Heaven till the General Judgment. 8 That the Saturday, or old Sabbath is not to be fasted. 9 Nor the Sacrament upon days of fasting to be administered till the Evening. They withdrew themselves from the See of Antioch, and set up a Patriarch of theirs own, many ages since (but the certain time thereof I find not) conferring on him for the greater credit of their Schism, the honourable title of the Patriarch of Antioch. His name perpetually to be Peter, as the undoubted Successor of that Apostle in the See thereof Disperfed about the furs and branches of Mount Libanus, where they have many Townships and scattered Villages, of which four are reported to retain in their common speech the true ancient Syriack; that is to say, 1 Eden, a small Village, but a Bishops See, by the Turks called Acherah, 2 Hatchath, 3 Sherry, 4 Bolos, or Bloufa, little superior to the rest in bigness or beauty, but made the seat of their Patriarch, when he comes amongst them. At such time as the Western Christians were possessed of these parts, they submitted to the Church of Rome; but upon their expulsion by the Turks and Saracens, they returned again to the obedience of their own Patriarch, on whom they have ever since depended. His residence for the most part at Tripolis, a chief Town of Syria; but when he came to visit his Churches, and take an account of his suffragan Bishops (who are nine in number) then at Bloufa, as is said before. Wrote to the Papacy again by John Baptif a Jesuite, in the time of Pope Gregory the thirteenth, who sent them a Catechism from Rome Printed in the Arabian Language (which is generally spoken by them) for their instruction in the Rudiments of that Religion; yet so that their Patriarch still retains his former power, and the Priests still officiate by the old Liturgy of those Churches, in the Syriack tongue. So that this reconciliation, upon the matter, is but a matter of complement on the one side, and ostentation on the other; without any increase of Power or Patrimony to the Pope at all. And for the Jacobites, though dispersed in many places of this Country; yet since they are more intirely settled in Mesopotamia, where their Patriarch also hath his abode or residence, we shall there speak of them.

The Language vulgarly here spoken is the Arabick Tongue, continued here ever since the subjugation of these Countries by the Saracens. But anciently they spake the Syriack and Phoenician Languages. Of which, the first (for of the other we shall speak when we come to Phoenicia) was the very same with the Chaldaean, (as the learned Brewood hath observed) either originally so, or else received by them when first conquered by the Babylonians. In which respect the Jews, when they returned home from their long Captivity, gave to the Language which they brought with them, the name of Syriack, being a compound of the Hebrew and Chaldaean tongues; Chaldaean for a great part of it, as to the substance of the words: but Hebrew as to the notation of Points, Conjunctions, Affixes, and other properties of their former and original speech. And of this more hereafter also, when we come to Palestine. But whatsoever their language was in former time, it is now so overtopped by the Arabick, that it is spoken in four Villages of the Maronites only in all these Countries; the Arabick being generally used ill all the rest, as was said before.

Principal Rivers of these parts are, 1 Chorasan, called Chisbon by the Hebreus, which hath its fountain in Palestine; but his fall in Phoenicia, not far from Mount Car-mel. 2 Orontes, now called Saladin, and by some Writers Jordan the 1st, ariseth out of the hills called Pieria, not far from Mount Libanus; and after a while running nader the ground, breaketh forth again about Amamia, and passing by the great City of Antioch, falleth into the Sea not far from it. It was first called Tiphon, and took this name from one Orontes, who built first the Bridge over it, as we find in Strabo. 3 Eleutherus, which riseth out of some part of Libanus, and glideth with a speedy course thorow a strangely intricate Channel, into the Mediterranean Sea: Cully of the death of the Emperor Fredrick Barbarossa, who falling from his horse as he pursued the Infidels, and oppressed with the weight of his Armour, was here drowned, and lyeth buried at Tyre. It is now called Casmer, 4 Singus, by whom said to be called Marfus also, which arising in the mountainous parts of Comagene, and passing by the City of Aleppo, falleth into the Euphrates. 5 Euphrates, the most famous River of the East; of which more hereafter.

Chief Mountains of it, 1 Carmel, which being properly of Phoenicia, we shall there speak of. 2 Pieria, out of which the River Orontes hath its first Origin. 3 Casius, not far from Antioch, said to be four miles high perpendicularly. 4 Libanus, famous for its multitude of Cedars growing thereupon; affording materials unto Solonon for the holy Temple. Besides which it affordeth such store of Frankincense, that some derived the name from Albas, signifying Frankincense in the Greek; and so replenished with Honey falling from the Heavens; and hanging on the Boughs of the Trees; that the Husbandmen used to sing (as Galen telleth us) that God rained honey; and yearly filled their Pots and Vessels with the sweets thereof. This the most famous and greatest Hill of all these parts, extending in length 150 miles, that is to say, from Sidon, a City of Phoenicia, to Suwayna, one of the Cities of Carlo-Syria; and taking seven hundred miles in compass. Inhabited wholly in a manner by the Maronite Christians, who to keep that dwelling to themselves without the intermixture of Mohometans, do yearly pay to the Great Turk 15000 Sultanies a man, for every one above twelve years of Age; each Sultany being reckoned at seven fillings & six pence of our money. And yet those Maronites, though intire, without intermixture are held to be the smallest Sect, for numbers, in all the East; not estimated to exceed twelve thousand households, by reason of the indispotion of this Mountain, in most places unfit for habitation. For besides the craggy cliffs and steepness of it, which makes many parts hereof to be inaccessible; the higher Ridges of it are in a manner perpetually covered with snow, not melted in so hot a Climate at the nearest approaches of the Sun. And thence no doubt it took this name; the word Liban, in the Hebrew and Phoenician Language, signifying White, of Whiteness; even as from the like whiteness of snow, the highest part of the Pyrenean hills had the name of Camus; and that perpetual Ridge of Mountains, which parts Italy from France and Germany, had the name of Alpes. 5 Anti-Libanus, opposite to the former; and for that so called, a rich, but little Valley only being interposed; out of which Valley the Orontes hath its Spring or Fountain, the hill Pieria there beginning to advance it self. Some make but one Mountain of them both, divided into two great Ledges or Chains of Hills. Of which the main body lying towards the North, hath the name of Libanus; that on the South, being but a branch or exension of it, called Anti-Libanus. And to this the Scripture gives some hint, in which both pass for one, the name of Lebanon.

The whole Country was anciently divided into these six parts, viz. 1 Phœnicia. 2 Palestine. 3 Syria specially so called. 4 Coenagene. 5 Palmyrene. And 6 Celestia-Syria, or Syria Coena. But Palestine, coming under a more distinct consideration, we shall now speak only of the rest.

1 PHOENICIA.

PHOENICIA is bounded on the East and South, with Palestine; on the North, with Syria, properly and specially so called; on the West, with the Mediterranean Sea. So called by the Grecians, from the abundance of Palm-trees therein growing, the word phœnix in that language signifying a Palm. And for a further proof hereof, (for I know there are other Etymons and Originations pretended for it) the Palm was anciently the special Cognisance or Ensign of this Country; as the Olive-branch, and Corn of Spain, the Elephant of Africa, the Camel of Arabia, and the Crocodile of Egypt, being peculiar to those Countries. And in an old Coin of the Emperor Vespasian's, stamped for a memorial of his conquest of Judea, the Impress is a Woman sitting in a sad and melancholic posture, at the back of Palm-trees, with these two words, Judea Capta, inscribed thereon; in which, no question may be made, but that the desolate Woman signifieth the Land of Judea, and the Palm Phœnicia; Phœnicia being seated immediately on the North, at the back of Jewry.

But it was thus first called by the Græcians only, the Latins and other People after them taking up that name. For by themselves, and the people of Israel their next Neighbours, they are called Canaanites, or the Posterity of Canaan, five of whose sons, viz. Zidon, Heth, Avdai, Senari, and Chamath, being planted here: the other six inhabiting more towards the South and East, in the Land of Palestine. For further evidence hereof we may add these reasons; first, that the same Woman which in St. Matthew's Gospel, Chap. 15. 22. is named a Canaanite, is by St. Mark, Chap. 7. 26. called a Syro-Phœnician. Secondly, where mention is made in the Book of Josueh, of the Kings of Canaan; the Septuagint (who very well understood the History and Language of their Country) call them Βασιλεις των φοινικων, or the Kings of Phœnicia. Thirdly, the Pœni or Carthaginians, being beyond all dispute a Tyrian or Phœnician Colony, when they were asked any thing of their Original, would answer that they were Chamei; meaning (as St. Augustine that Countryman doth expound their words) that they were Originally Canaanites, of the flock of Canaan. And lastly, from the language of it, which was anciently the old Hebrew, Canaanish, or the Language of Canaan; spoken both here and in Palestine also, before that Country was possessed by the House of Jacob: as appears plainly by those names, by which the places and Cities of Canaan were called, when and before the Israelites came first to dwell amongst them, which are merely Hebrew. And so much as to the Language is acknowledged by Bochartus also, who in the entrance of his Book inscribed Canaan, declares what profit may ensue from that undertaking to the Hebrew Tongue; Cujus Phœnicia lingua dialecta fuit, of which the Phœnician language was a dialect only.

The Country of it self not great, extended in a good length, from the further side of Mount Carmel, where it joins with Palestine, to the River Volanus on the North, by which parted from Syria: but which so narrow, that it is little more than a bare Sea-coast, and therefore very rightly called Terræ unguisfina by a modern Writer. Rich rather by the benefit and increase of trade (to which no Nation under Heaven hath been more addicted) than by the natural commodities which the land afforded: yet for the quantity thereof, no place could be more plentifully furnished with Oyl, Wheat, and the best sort of Balm, and most excellent Honey; the lower part hereof being designed for the feast of Asaph, of whom Moses prophesied, Dent. 33. 24. that he should dip his foot in Oyl. So that the Country generally, was well-conditioned, lovely to look upon, populous, and adorned with more beautiful Cities, than such a span of earth could be thought to hold. Of which thus writeth Ammianus, Acrois monti Libano Phœnicia Regio, plena gratiarum & omnifatis, urbium decorata magnis & pulchris, &c. It falling from Mount Libanus, lyeth the Country of Phœnicia, full of all graces and elegancies, adorned with great and beautiful Cities, of which the most renowned for the fertility of their soil, and the fame of their achievements, are Tyre, Sidon, Berytus, &c.

The People anciently, by reason of their Maritime situation, were great Adventurers at Sea, trading in almost all the Ports of the then known World, and sending more Colonies abroad upon foreign Plantations than any Nations in the Earth. An active and ingenious people, laid to have been the first Navigators, the first builders of Ships, the first inventors of Letters, (of which hereafter more on some other occasion) and the first Authors of Astrimerick, the first that brought Astronomy to an Art or Method, and the first makers of Glasses. Defamed in holy Scripture for their grofs Idolatry, by which they laid a stumbling-block at the feet of the Israelites; (Arab (or Assure) the Goddess of the Sidonians; but whether Juno, Venus, or some other, I dispute not here) being so highly prized amongst them, that Solomon himself, when he fell from God, made this one of his Idols. One yearly, as Eusebius telleth us, they sacrificed some of their Sons to Saturn, whom in their Language they called Moloch; and in the inmost retreats of Libanus had a Temple to Venus, defiled with the practice of most filthy lutes, intemperately using the natural Sex, and most unreasonably abusing their own. Nor could the purity and piety of the Christian Faith prevail so far, as to extinguish these ungodly rites, till Constantine finally destroyed both the Temples and Idols, and left not any thing remaining of them, but the flame and infamy. St. Augustine addeth, that they did prostitute their Daughters unto Venus, before they married them: and it is most likely to be true. For the Phœnicians and Cyprians being so near neighbours, and subject for a time to the same Princes also, could not but impart their impure Rites and Ceremonies unto one another.

Rivers of note there can be none in so narrow a Region but what are common unto others, and shall there be spoken of. Most proper unto this is the River of Adonis (now called Canis), so named most probably from Adonis the Darling of Venus, whose Rites are here performed with as much solemnity, as they be in Cyprus. His Obsequies celebrated yearly in the month of June, with great howlings and lamentations, Lucian fabling that the River usually streameth blood upon that Solemnity; (as if Adonis were newly wounded in the Mountains of Libanus) to give the better colour to their Superstitions. But the truth is, that this redness of the water ariseth only from the Winds; which at that time of the year blowing very vehemently, do thereby carry down the stream a great quantity of Minium or red Earth, from the sides of those hills, wherewith the waters are discoloured.

discoloured. Such use can Satan make of a natural Accident, to blind the eyes and captivate the undisciplined of bested People.

Chief Mountains of this Country are, 1 Libanus, spoken of before, which hath here its first advance or rising. 2 Carmel, which Proton placeth in this Country, of which it is the utmost part upon the South, where it joyneth with Palestine. Walked on the North-side with the Brook Chifon, on the West with the Mediterranean Sea; steep of ascent, and of indifferent altitude; abounding with several sorts of Fruits, Olives, and Vines in good plenty, and stored with Herbs both medicinal and sweet of smell. The Retreat sometimes of Elías, when he fled from Jezabel, whose Habitation here, after his decease, was converted to a Jewish Synagogue. To this place (being then in the possession of the Kings of Israel) did that Prophet ascribe the Priests of Baal; and having by a miraculous Experiment confuted their Idolatrous follies, caused them to be cut in pieces on the Banks of the River Chifon near adjoining to it. Upon this visible declaring of the Power and Presence of the Almighty, the Gentiles grew persuaded that Oracles Carmelus. Where speaking of Vespasian, who had then newly took upon him the Imperial Dignity, he addeth, Apud Judeam Carmeli Dei Oracula consistentem ita confirmaverunt, &c. That consulting in Judea with the Oracle of the God Carmelus, he was assured that whatsoever he undertook should succeed well with him. In after-times the Order of the Priests Carmelites, as Successors unto the Children of the Prophets left here by Elijah, had their names from hence: a Cave or Chapel, said to have been the lurking place of that Holy Prophet, in the time of his troubles.

Places of most importance in it, 1 Ptolemais, now nothing but a ruin of what it hath been, but formerly of great strength and consequence. Named Ace at the first, a Refuge for the Persian Kings in their Wars against Aegypt: Enlarged, or rather new built by Proton, the first of that Race, by whom called Ptolemais, which name still continued, though Claudius Cesar planting there a Roman Colony, would fain have had it called Colonia Claudia. After the Conquest of it by the Saracens, in the time of Omer the great Caliph, it returned towards its first name, and was called Acon, or Acre: both names still remaining in vulgar speech, as that of Ptolemais amongst Latin Writers. Situate in the flourish of it on a flat or level, in the form of a triangular Shield; on two sides neighboured by the Sea, which comes up close to it; on the third looking towards the Champaign: environed with a double Wall, to each Wall a Ditch, fortified on the outside with Towers and Bulwarks; within the Walls so strongly fortified, as if the whole Town had been a Conjunction of Fortresses, and not ordained for private dwellings. In the midst of the City was one Tower of great strength and beauty, which had sometimes been the Temple of Belzebub, and was therefore called the Castle of Elias; like the Pharos of Egypt, to give comfort and direction in the night to such Mariners as made towards this Port. Took from the Christians by the Saracens in the time of Omer, and from them wrested by the Turks in the time of Syria. It became Christian again Anno 1004. in the Reign of Baldwin the first, Brother of the famous Gudfrey of Bouillon, and second King of Hierusalem, by the help of the Genoese; who for their pains had the third part of the City assigned unto them. Recovered by Saladine to the Turks, and from him taken again by the Western Christians, under the conduct of Philip of France, and Richard the first of England, Anno 1191. It continued in the possession of the Kings of Hierusalem, Malta till the year 1291. When besieged by an Army of an hundred and fifty thousand Turks, it was forced to yield, though lost by inches; and the Turks fearing left the Christians would again attempt it, razed it to the ground, demolishing the large Walls and Arches of it, which lie like mally Rocks on their old Foundations Memorable in those times for the brave service here done by the Christians of the Western parts, of which done more renowned than those of our Richard the first, and Edward the first. This latter here treacherously wounded by an Infidel, with a poysoned Knife, the vehemence whereof could by no means be allayed, till his most virtuous Wife (herein proposing a most rare Example of conjugal affection) sucked it out with her mouth. And for the former, he became so terrible and redoubted among the Turks, that when their Children began to cry, they would say, Peace, King Richard is coming; and when their Horses started, they would spur them, saying, What you fadest, do you think that King Richard is here? By the Mamelukes, when Lords of Syria, it was patched together, and made fit for habitation rather than defence: not peopled by above 300 Inhabitants, nor would it have so many, but for the Haven adjoining; which though a small Bay, and of very ill anchorage, is much frequented by the Merchants of our Western World, trading here for their Cotton Wools; with which the neighbouring Country is abundantly furnished. I have said the longer in this place, by reason of the great fame and importance of it, as being the last Hold which the Christians had of all their Conquests; with the loss whereof, they laid aside all thoughts of those Holy Wars. 2 Tyre, seated in a rocky Island, about seven fathoms from the main Land; well built, and circular of form, as well by Art as Nature impregnablely fortified. A Colony of the Sidonians, and therefore by the Prophet Isa. ch. 23. v. 12. called the Dagbiter of Sidon: but by them built upon an high Hill, the Ruins whereof, by the name of Palatyrus, or old Tyre, are remaining still. Removed unto the Islands by Agassius King of the Phœnicians, and by him named Sor, or Tyros, from the rocky situation of it (as that word importeth.) Mollified by the Greeks to Tyrrus, and from them taken by the Latins, though known to them also by the name of Sarra (the Tyrian Purple being by Virgil, Ossurn:) and now at last returned to its first original name, vulgarly at this time called Sur. A City in elder times of great Trade and Wealth: as the Prophet Isa. ch. 27. v. 8. calling the Merchants thereof Princes, and his Chapter the Nobles of the World. Excelling all others of those times both for Learning and Manufactures, specially for the dying of Purple, first here invented; and that as Julius Pollux said, by a very accident; the Dog of Hercules (or if not his, some Dog of other) whose lips by eating of the Fish called Cochylis, or Pharura, had been made of that colour. Grown to great pride, by reason of the Wealth and Pleasures, her destruction was fore-signified by the holy Prophets, accomplished in God's own time by Nebuchadnezzar; who with great industry and toil joynted it to the Continent. But his Works being demolished by the fury of the Sea, and the labour of the Tyrians, it was after seventy years again re-edified; and having flourished after that for two hundred years, by Alexander the Great was again demolished, to whose indefatigable perseverance nothing was impossible. For having filled the Channel with the

Stones and Rubbish of old Tyre, and rammed them in with huge Beams brought from Libanus, he made a passage for his Army; and having once approached the Walls, so over-topped them with Towers and Frames of Timber, that at last he made himself Master of it, putting to the Sword all such as resisted, and causing two thousand of them to be hanged in cold blood, all along the shore, for a terror to others. This Rendition of the Town was divided by the Sooth-Tellers; who followed the Camp of Alexander, upon a dream which he had not long before; For dreaming that he had disported himself with Satyrs, the Diviners only making of one word two, found that Σατυρ was no more than Σα Τυρ, that is, The Tyre; and it happened accordingly. Recovering once again both her Riches and Beauties, she became a Confederated of the Romans in the growth of their Fortunes; endowed by them with the Privileges of their City, for her great fidelity. Made in the best times of Christianity the Metropolis for the Provinces of Phœnicia, the Bishop hereof having under him fourteen Suffragan Bishops. Subjected to the Saracens in the year fix hundred thirty and six, and having groaned under that yoke for the space of four hundred eighty and eight years, was at the last regained by Gharimund Patriarch of Hierusalem, in the Reign of the second Baldwin, the Venetians contributing their assistance to it, Anno 1124. In vain attempted afterwards by victorious Saladin; but finally brought under the Turkish thralldom, Anno 1289, as it still continueth. Now nothing but an heap of Ruins; but the very Ruins of it so fair a Prospect, as striketh both pity and amazement to the beholders, shewing them an exemplary pattern of our humane frailty. Subject at the present to the Emir or Prince of Sidon, and beautified with a goodly and capacious Haven, one of the best of the Levant, but of no great trading. 3 Sarepta, by the Hebrews called Sarphat, situate on the Sea-coast betwixt Tyre and Sidon. Memorable in Holy Writ for the Miracle here performed by the Prophet Elijah, in raising the poor Widows Son; in Heathen Writers for the purple Wines, little inferior unto those of Falerum in Italy, or Chios in Greece: of which thus the Poet;

Quæque Sarcapæo palmite missa bibas.*

In English thus;

Have no Chian or Falerian Wines,
Nor those of Gazæ or Sarcapæi Vines.

4 Sidon, the ancientest City of all Phœnicia, and the most Northern of all those which were assigned for the Portion of the Sons of Affir; beyond which the Country of Phœnicia having been hitherto nothing but a bare Sea-coast, beginneth to open towards the East in a fine rich Valley, having Libanus upon the North, and the Anti-Libanus on the South; once closed up from the rest of Syria with a very strong Wall, long since demolished. It was so called from Zidon, one of the Sons of Canaan, who first planted here; not (as some say) from Sida the Daughter of Belus, once a King hereof; this City being mentioned in the Book of Ysaias, when no such Belus was in being. Situate in a fertile and delightful Soil, defended with the Sea on one side, and on the other by the Mountains lying betwixt it, and Libanus, from whence descended those many Springs with which they watered and enriched their most pleasant Orchards. The Inhabitants hereof are said to be the first makers of Chrystal Glasses, the Materials of the Work brought hither from the Sands of a River running not far from Prolemais; and only made fusible in this City. And from hence Solomon and Zorobabel had their principal Work-men, both for Stone and Timber, in their several Buildings of the Temple. The People hereof so flourishing in Arts and Trades, that the Prophet Zacharias, chap. 9. v. 2. calleth them the wife Sidonians. A City which at several times was both the Mother and Daughter of Tyre; the Mother of it in the times of Heumenism, Tyre being a Colony of this People; and the Daughter of it when instructed in the Christian Faith, acknowledging the Church of Tyre for its Mother-Church. The City in those times very strong both by Art and Nature, having on the North-side a Fort or Citadel mounted on an inaccessible Rock, and environed on all sides by the Sea; which when it was brought under the command of the Western Christians, was held by the Order of the Dutch Knights; and another on the South-side of the Port, which the Templars guarded. Won by the Turks, with the rest of this Country, from the Christians, and ruined by those often interchanges of Fortune, it only sheweth now some marks of the ancient greatness; the present Sidon standing somewhat West of the old, and having little worth a particular Description, in respect of what it was in her ancient Glories. The Haven at this time decayed, or serving at the best for Gallies; with a poor Blockhouse, rather for show than service: the Walls of no great strength, and as little beauty, and the Buildings ordinary; but that the Mosque, the Bannia of Bathes, and the Cane for Merchants, are somewhat fairer than the rest: yet gives a Title at this time to the Emir of Sidon, one of the greatest Princes of all this Country, of whom more hereafter. 5 Berytus, originally called Gerys, from Gerys the fifth Son of Canaan, took this new name from Berith, a Phœnician Idol here worshipped; and now called Barnis. Destroyed by Tyrion in the Wars of the Syrians against the Jews, it was re-edified by the Romans, by whom made a Colony, and honoured with the Privileges of the City of Rome. By Herod and Agrippa Kings of the Jews, much adorned and beautified; and of no mean esteem in the time of the Christians, when made an Episcopal See under the Metropolis of Tyre. Being a place of no great strength, nor aimed at by every new Invader, it hath sped better than the rest of these Cities (though stronger than this) retaining still her being, though not all her beauties; well stored with Merchandise, and well frequented by the Merchant. Nigh to this Town is a fair and fruitful Valley, which they call St. Georges, in which there is a Castle, and in that an Oratory of the same name also: All sacred to St. George the Martyr, who hereabouts is fabled to have killed the Dragon, and thereby delivered a Kings Daughter; but what Kings I know not, nor they neither. 6 Biblis, sometimes the Habitation of Hevi, the fourth Son of Canaan, and then called Heva. Afterwards made the Regal Seat of Cinyras, Father and Grandfather of Adonis by his Daughter Myrrha; whereof we have already spoken when we were in Cyprus. Of such esteem in the Primitive Times of Christianity, that it was made a Bishops See; desolate and of no repute since it lost that honour, and became thrall unto the Turks. 7 Ortobofa, called also Anaradus, because opposite to Aradus, another old City of this Tract; but in after-Ages called Toriosa, and by that name well known in the Histories of the Holy Wars, undertaken by the Western Christians: To whom it made such stout and notable resistance, that though besieged on all sides with united Forces (the whole Army formerly divided, sitting down before it) yet after three Months hard sieges, they were fain to leave the Town behind them, and content themselves with spoiling the adjoining Country. 8 Tripolis, seated in a rich and delightful Plain, most fruitful fruitful than can be imagined; one of which Fruits they called by the name of Ammeza Franchi, i. e. Kill Frank, because the Western Christians whom they call by the name of Franks, died in great numbers by the intemperate eating of them. A Valley which is said to have yielded yearly to the Counts of Tripolis no less than two millions from the Sea, at the foot of Mount Libanus; ties, that is to say, Tyris, Sidon, and Aradus. Of no great note among the Romans, for ought I can find, till bishop of Tyre in the Primitive times. But thriving by the Western Christians warred in the Holy Land: When chieftly, or Capital Cities for the four Quarters of their Comagene, or Mesopotamia, Antioch for Syria, and this the custody of Raymond Earl of Tholouse in France; Title of Earls of Tripolis. A City, which I know not by what good hap, hath sped better than any of those parts, retaining still as much in strength and beauty as ever it had, if not grown greater by the ruin of all the rest. Situate two miles from the Sea, as before is said; but not above half a mile from the Haven, which lieth upon the West side of it: Compelled with a Wall, and fortified with seven Towers, of which the fourth is commonly called the Tower of Love, because built by a Turkish Woman, for which he had forfeited his life, if not thus redeemed it. Before the Haven is an ill-neighbour and nearer to it; by which every day growth greater which faith it shall be quite soaked: On both sides of it, and Shops to sell them: the way from hence unto the City, having on both sides very pleasant Gardens, The Town it self stretched out in Length from South Libanus, conveying a Brook into the Streets, and many which, and in those towards the Haven, and on other sides of the Town, the Inhabitants keep great flocks of Silk-worms, selling their Silks raw unto the Italians, and buying them again of them in the Stuff or Manufacture. Their Buildings generally low, and the Streets fair and open. Over the Brook, at the East-side of the City, are built two Bridges; and on the South-side a strong Castle mounted on an Hill, built by the French for the Grand Signior with two hundred Garnizaries. At this time it is looked on as the Metropolis or chief City of Phœnicia, honoured with the residence of the Patriarch of the Maronites, for the most part dwelling in of Scanderone, or Alexandrette, removed thither some forty years ago by the Turkish appointment; that Haven lying unenclosed, and more open to Pirates.

That the Phœnicians were descended of the Sons of Canaan, hath been proved already. And being descended of them, by the Chiefs of their Families, whom they honoured (as most Nations did) with the Title of Kings. But by Ysaias, Agenor a stout and prudent man, one of those many Kings, which commanded in those parts of the Country, seeing how impossible it was to relict had his Breeding, to make good the Sea-coasts of his Country; in which the Philystines, who interposed upon thole Coasts betwixt him and Aegypt, concurred also with him. By which alliance, and by the fortifying of Cities of this Country that were then in being, he did not only preserve his own Estate from the present danger, but left it so allured to the Kings succeeding, that neither Solonon, nor David, nor any of the Kings of Israel, durst attempt upon them. To Agenor succeeded his Son Phœnix, (Cadmus, his elder Brother, going into Greece in search of his Sister Europa, ravished by Jupiter, where he built Thebes, and therein reigned till his death) from whom, as some conceive, this Country had the name of Phœnicia. And though I have declared myself for another reason of this name, which I like much better; yet I shall rather yield to this, or to any other, than to that of Bocharus, who will have it derived from Ben-Anak, or the Sons of Anak, (as if the old Phœnicians were such Giantly men) which must first be contracted in Bemach, then by the Grecians turned ed and extorted Phœnix. Such far-fetched notions touching the first Originals of Names and Nations, where there is not very pregnant Reason to persuade me otherwise, than strain my self so far for a for what cause forever they were named Phœnicians. But tain it is, they were a very active and industrious people, trading in most parts of the Mediterranean, and Bochar, Nola in Italy, Gades in Spain; Orica, Lepus, in Carthage in Africk, were of their foundation. Nay, if we may believe Bocharus, there was no Island or Sea-coast in the Mediterranean, or on the Cantabrian, Gallick, or British Ocean, wherein they did not keep some Factory, or erect some Colony. What Kings succeeded Phœnix in a constant and continued course, I can no where find. Most like it is, they were not under the command of any one Prince; and that besides the Kings of Sidon, where Agenor reigned, there were some others who called themselves Kings of Phœnicia also, as well Pigmalion, who had their Regal Seat at Biblis, and Lord gave some part of that Isle to Tencar, as is said before. There is also found mention of one Phœnix, a Phœnician term him none, till the subjugation of this Country by the Babylonians; Taramesset, Tennes, and Strato, mentioned in succeeding times, being Tributaries to the Perfians, and no absolute Princes. Whether it were that the that the Kings thereof did nothing to preserve their memory, I am not able to determine. Certain it is, that the Kings of Tyre came in a short time to be of very great repute, and to possess themselves of the Coasts of Syria and Phœnicia, and a great part of Cyprus; whereby, grew rich and powerful, and of great consideration in Affairs of the World. The Names and History of whom I shall here subjoin, in this ensuing Catalogue of

THE KINGS OF TYRE.

A. M.

1 Abibalas, as Isaias. Alexander, as Theophrastus.

gining of the Wars for the Holy Land. 6 Hierapolis, of great renown in those dark times of Ignorance and Idolatry for the Syrian Goddess therein worshipped; from whence it had the name of Hierapolis, or the Holy City; being formerly by the Greeks called Callinice; by the Syrians, Magog; one of the first seats of Magog the Son of Japhet, and from him denominated. The Goddess so esteemed of in those wretched times, that from all parts, Affrica, Babylonia, Arabia, Cilicia, Cappadocia, and indeed what not, they brought her many rich gifts and costly offerings. Nero himself, who scoffed at all Religions else, being for a while a great Votary of this Syrian Idol, though afterwards he grew weary of her, and defiled her with urine. The Temple built by Stratonice, the wife of Seleucus, in the midst of the City, compassed with a double wall, about the height of 300 fathom: the roof thereof inlaid with Gold, and made of such a fragrant and sweet-smelling wood, that the cloaths of them which came thither retained the scent thereof for a long time after. Without the Temple there were places inclosed for Oxen, and Beasts of sacrifice; and not far off a Lake of 200 fathom in depth, wherein they kept their sacred fishes: the Priests attending here for their several Offices, amounting in number to three hundred, besides many more subservient Ministers. The tricks and jugglings of these Priests to deceive the people, he that list to see, may find them copiously described in the Metamorphosis of Apuleius: which, changing both the names and times, may serve for a relation of those gulleries and Arts of Leger-de-main which the Friars and Pardoners have practised in the Church of Rome. 7 Chelybanus, whence the parts adjoining were called Chalybanicus; conceived by Pofellus and some others to be Chalpinum, or Alpe, but on no good ground; this City having one degree less of Northern Latitude, than Berza had. 8 Barbaricis, in the same subdivision, near the banks of Euphrates. 9 Chalcis, the principal of that part of Syria Propria, which is called Chalcidice, but not otherwise memorable. 10 Telmaddis, another Town of the same division, and as little famous. 11 Selucia, so named from the Founder of it, the first Eastern Monarch of that Race, and the greatest Builder of the World, founding nine Cities of this name, sixteen in memory of his Father Antiochius, six by the name of Laodice his Mother, and three in honour of Apantia his first Wife; besides many others of great note in Greece and Asia, either new built, or beautified and repaired by him. From this, the Country hereabouts had the name of Selucia. 12 Laodicea, one of the Cities founded by Seleucus, in honour of Laodice his Mother, from which the Region adjoining is called Laodicea: built by him in the place where formerly stood the City Rhamnus, so called from a certain Shepherd, who being struck with a flash of lightning, cried out amazedly Rhamnus, that is to say, Dem ab excelso; before which time it had been named Lenca Alie, from the whiteness of the Sea-cliffs near to which it is situate: the Country round about commended anciently for the best Wines, and choice of very excellent Fruits. 13 Apamea, so named in honour of Apantia, the Wife of Seleucus; which together with Laodicea and Selucia before mentioned, having the same Founder, and maintaining a strict League of amity with one another, were commonly called the Three Sisters. From this the Country near is called Apamene. 14 Emefa, (now Hanf) the Episcopal See of Enfibus, hence called Enesius, who flourished in the time of Constantinus, the Son of Constantine: in whose name are extant certain Homilies, justly conceived to be of a later date. The City seated in a spacious and fruitful Plain of Apamene, watered with many pleasant and cheerful Rivereets: once of great note, as may easily be conjectured from the walls herof, which are still perfect and entire, built of polished stone, and of very large circuit; but the dwelling-houses so decayed, that it affordeth nothing worthy observation. 15 Epiphania, in the Cantred or subdivision of Casotis, called at first Hamath, from Hamath a Son of Canaan, the founder of it; and upon that account mistaken by St. Hieron for another Town of the same name, in the Tribe of Naphthali; so indifferent from this place both in Longitude and Latitude (as we shall shew hereafter when we come to Palestine) that they can by no means be the same. But that old Town being gone to ruin, it was repaired, if not re-edified by Antiochus Epiphanes King of Syria, who thereupon commanded it to be called Epiphania; obeyed therein as Josephus telleth us, by the Macedonians, though the Syrians still called it Amath, as in former times, Antiq. l. 1. c. 7. 16 Larissa, which still preserveth its old name being now called Laris; much mentioned in the Wars of the Holy Land, especially for the death of Baldwin the first, Brother of Godfrey of Bouillon, and second King of Hierusalem, Anno 1118. 17 Gabal, the Gabala of Proton, and others of the ancient Writers, situate on the South of Laodicea, about which twelve miles distant; mentioned Psalm. 83. as a confederate with Tyre, and other uncircumcised Nations, in their hatred and designs against the Israelites: at this day called Gaballa (with little difference from the old name of it) and by that name remembered in the Stories of the Holy Wars. 18 Albaria, distant two days march from Antioch, remembered also in the Wars of the Holy Land. 19 Aradus, one of the Co-founders of Tripolis, situate in a rocky Island of a mile in compass, directly opposite to the mouth or influx of the River Eleutherus, and distant from the Continent about twenty furlongs. So called from Aradus, one of the Sons of Canaan, and mentioned by that name in the Prophet Ezek. 27. 8, 11. This oncea Kingdom of it self, containing not this Island only, but some part of the Continent; especially about Antaradus (so called because built over against it) situate on the Northern banks of the River Eleutherus, of which we have spoken in Phoenicia. 20 Daphne, about five miles from Antioch; but afterwards by the continual enlargements of that City, accounted as the Suburb to it; so named of Daphne, one of the Mistresses of Apollo, who was here worshipped by the name of Apollo Daphneus, and had here his Oracle and his Groves, with other Additions appertaining unto those Idolatries; as much esteemed of, but more suspicious than those of Delfos. The Grove about ten miles in circuit, environed round with Cypresses and other trees, so tall and close to one another, that they suffered not the Sun to enter in his great heats: the ground perpetually covered with the choicest Tapestry of Nature, watered with many a pleasant stream, derived from the Cassilian Fountains as it was given out; and yielding the most excellent Fruits both for taste and inclosure, to which the wind and air participating, the sweetneets of the place did add a most delightful influence.

A plate devised for pleasure, but abused to lust: he being held unworthy of the name of a man, who transformed not himself unto a Beast, or trod on this unholy ground without his Curse on, inasmuch as they which had a care of their good names, did forbear to haunt it. A fuller description of it he that lists to see, may find in the first Book and eighteenth Chapter of Salomon's Ecclesiastical History, who is copious in it. The Temple said to have been built by Seleucus also, renowned for the Oracle there given, by which Adrian was foretold of his being Emperor; and therefore much resorted to by Jarlan the Apollatus, for that purpose also. But the body of

Babylar the Martyr and Bishop of Antioch, being removed thither by the command of his Brother Gallus, then created Cesar by Constantinus, the Devil and his Oracles were both frightened away, as the Devil did himself confess to Julian; who being desirous to learn here the success of his intended Expedition into Persia, received this Answer, That no Oracle could be given so long as those Divine Bones were to near the Shrine. Nor was it long after, before the Idol and the Temple were consumed by a fire from Heaven, as was avowed by those who observed the fall of it; though Julian did impute it to the innocent Christians, and in revenge caused many of their Churches to be burned to ashes. 21 Antioch, situate in that part herof which is called Casotis, first built, or began rather by Antigonus, when Lord of Asia, by whom named Antigonia; but finished and enlarged by Seleucus, after he had overthrown and slain him at the Battle of Issus. Built near the place, and partly out of the Ruins of an ancient City, in the second Book of Kings called Riblah in the Land of Hamath, Hamath the Great, in the sixth of Amos; by Josephus and the Syrians, Reblan, Memorable in those days for the Tragedies of Jehothas and Zedechias, Kings of Judah, the first of which was here deprived of his Crown and Liberty, by Pharaoh Necho King of Aegypt, 2 King. 23. 33. the other of his Eyes and Children, by the command of Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon, as was said before. In following times it was by some Greek Writers called Epiaphne, from the nearness of it to that Grove: as Trolois, or the City of God; either from the many Miracles there done in the Primitive time, or from the great improvement which the Christian Faith did here receive, where the Disciples first obtained the name of Christians. The Royal Seat for many Ages of the Kings of Syria; and in the flourish and best fortune of the Roman Empire, the ordinary Residence of the Prefect or Governour of the Eastern Provinces; next, of the intendency over the Dioecesis of the Orient, though that large enough, but also of the Dioecesis of Aegypt, Asia, Pontus, Thrace, extending to his Jurisdiction into all the parts of the then known World. Honoured also with the Residence of many of the Roman Emperours, especially of Vernus and Valens, who spent here the greatest part of their times; and from the first dawning of the Gospel with the seat of the Patriarch. A Title of such eminency in all times of the Church, the second in account to the See of Rome (till Constantinople being made the Imperial City, got precedence of it) that there are at this time no less than four great Prelates which pretend unto it; that is to say, the true Patriarch, governing the Christians of those parts, whom they call Syrians or Melchites; the Pseudo-Patriarch of the Jacobite and Maronite Sectaries, both which, for the greater credit to their Schisms, do assume this Title; and finally, a titular Patriarch nominated by the Pope, who since the time that the Western Christians were possessed of these Eastern Countries, hath assumed a power unto himself of nominating Patriarchs for Alexandria, Hierusalem, and this City of Antioch.

The City seated on both sides of the River Oronter, about twelve miles distant from the Shores of the Mediterranean; the River Pharfar passing on the South-side of it. By Art and Nature fortified even to admiration; compassed with a double Wall, the outermost of which was of Stone, the other of Brick, with four hundred and sixty Towers in the Walls, and an impregnable Castle at the East-end thereof; and on the other side defended with big broken Mountains, whereunto was adjoining a deep Lake coming out of the River Pharfar, before-mentioned. Adorned in former times with many sumptuous Palaces and magnificent Temples answerable to the Reputation of so great a City; till taken by men careles of all State and Beauty in their fast City, it began to grow unto decay. Recovered by the Western Christians from the power of the Turks, after a Siege of seven Months, June 3. Anno 1098. confirmed in their possession by a great and memorable Victory, got in the very light hereof within few days after (June 28.) obtained against Corbanus, Lieutenant to the Persian Sultan, in which, with the loss of four thousand and two hundred of their own, they slew a hundred thousand of the Enemy. The Town and Territory given by the Conquerors to Bohemund a Noble Norman, and Prince of Tarentum; who by practising with one Pyrrhus, who had the command of one of the chief Towers thereof, afterwards called St. Georges Tower, was secretly let into the City, and so made way for all the rest. Bohemund left it to Bohemund his Son about ten years after; succeeded in this Principate by Tancred and Rogers, Princes of great renown in those Holy Wars; which last unfortunately slain by the Turks, not far from Alappa, in the year 1120. Baldwin the second having revenged his death by a signal Victory, joynted this Estate to the Kingdom of Hierusalem. Betrayed above sixty years after this, that is to say, in the year 1188, it came into the Power of Saladin, the victorious King of Aegypt and Damascus, and therewithal no fewer than five and twenty Cities which depended on the fortunes of it: the glories of this famous City so declining after this last Tragedy (but whether laid desolate of set purpose, or destroyed by the injury of the time, I am not able to declare) that it is grown the Sepulchre of what once it was, and lieth buried in its own laid Ruins, hardly preserving the repaire of a forry Village. Such is the infatigability of all worldly Glories. Some other Towns there are in this part of Syria, but not to be remembered the same day with Antioch.

As for the Story of his Province, as a State distinct, we find it had a King of its own, called the King of Hamath (the Kingdom of Toi or Tou before remembered) who together with the King of Arphad, commanded in this part of Syria, and the Isles adjoining, Vassals in time succeeding to the Kings of Tyre, who had great Influence on the Islands also. And it continued in this State till the Affrian Kings began to turn their Forces Westward; when added to that Empire by Tiglah Pileser, after the subversion of the Kingdom of Damascus; or by Salmanasser, after the destruction of that of Israel. The proud but dreadful vaunt which Sennacherib, the Successor of those mighty Monarchs, made to Hezekiah, viz. Where are the Gods of Hamath and Arphad? shews clearly, that those Kingdoms had been conquered not long before; and therefore needs by Salmanasser or Tiglah Pileser. Afterwards, in the struggles betwixt the Babylonians and Aegyptians, for the chief Command, it was a while at the devotion of the King of Aegypt, it being at Zablabah in this Province, that Jehoaahaz, King of Judah was put into Bonds, by the command of Pharaoh Necho, as was said before. But Necho being not long after vanquished by Nabuchadnezzar King of Babylon, it returned again to that Crown, and after followed the same fortunes with the rest of Syria.

3 COMAGENA.

COMAGENA is bounded on the East with the River Euphrates; by which parted from Mesopotamia; on the West, with the Mountains called Ananias, which divided from Cilicia; on the North, with Taurus, by which separated from Armenia Minor; on the South with Palmyrene. Called also Euphratenfis and Euphrastia, when a Roman Province, by reason of its situation, bordering on the River.

The reason of the name I find not amongst my Authors; but find that many Learned men conceive it to be that part of Syria, which the Scriptures call Syria Maachab, mention whereof is made 1 Chron. cap. 19. ver. 6. gain-fayed by others, because they find a place called Maacha in the Tribe of Manasse but with no great reason as I take it. For being it is joyned (in 1 Chron. 19. v. 6. above mentioned) in the same action with Mesopotamia, and Syria Sobab; and not so only, but placed between them in the Method of that holy Penman, I dare not think but that they were all very near neighbours, and ranked according to the natural situation of them. Which agreeth very well with the site of Comagena, having Mesopotamia on the East, and Aram-Sobab on the South. Nor is it any stronger proof unto the contrary, that Maacha is a Town of the Tribe of Manasse: than if a man should say, that there is no such Province as Manfield in High Germany, because there is a Town of that name in England; or no such place as Savoy amongst the Alpes, because there is a House of that name in London.

As for the People herof, besides what they have common with the rest of the Syrians, they were of old much given unto Divination, and for that cause derided thus in the Sixth Saty of Juvenal.

*Spondet amatores tenerum vel divitis orbi
Tysanum unguis, calidae pulvisque Columbe Tricrato, Armenius ubi Comagenae Aruspex.
Pectora pulchrum rimabitur, exita Castellis, Interdum & pueri. Faciat quod desera ipse.*

Thus Englished by my honoured Friend

Sir Robert Stapleton.

A childless rich mans Legacy, or young Love,
Are found it? Light of a warm trembling Dove,
By Comagene South-fayers; they look into
A dead Chicks breast, the fame the Armenians do,
They view the Entrails of a Dog, and reach
A Child perhaps? They do it, and then preach.

Chief places of this part, 1 Samosata, the Metropolis or Head City of it, when a Roman Province, situate near the Banks of Euphrates, over which it had a Bridge for passage into Mesopotamia. Unfortunate for being the Birth-place of Lucian, that profane Scoffer of Christianity, though otherwise a man of a quick Wit, and of great Abilities: as also of Paulus Samosatensis, Patriarch of Antioch, condemned of Hereticks in a Council holden in his own City, Anno 273. (by the great and most Learned Bishops of that Age, there assembled together) for teaching, That our Saviour was no other than a natural man; but neither God, nor the Son of God, as the Scriptures testify. 2 Germanicia (by some called Germanicopolis) on the other side of the Country near the Mountain Ananias; no less unfortunate than the former, in being the Birth-place of Nestorius, Patriarch of Constantinople, who troubling the Peace of the Church with Heterodoxie, and impertinent nicities about the blessed Mother of Christ, as also about the Nature and Person of Christ himself, was thereupon condemned of Hereticks in the Council of Ephesus, Anno 435. In former times called Adana, as some write Adapa; but took this new name from Germanicus Caesar, in honour of whom it was made a Roman Colony by Augustus, testified by this Inscription extant in Onuphrius viz. COLONIA JULIA GERMANICIA, S. A. C. R. A. V. G. V. S. T. A. F. O. E. I. X. 3 Singa, so called from the River upon which it is situate. 4 Antiochia penes Taurum, so called because seated at the foot of that Mountain, to differ it from the other of this name in Syria. 5 Pinar, one of the Chief Cities of that part which is called Pieria. 6 Doliche, a small Town, but made an Episcopal See in the best times of the Church, as appeareth by the Acts of the Councils of Antioch and Constantinople, in which there is some mention of the Bishops of it. 7 Aleppo, now the principal of all the Country, supposed by some to be the Sepharvaim, mentioned 2 King. 17. 24. It was thus called, as some say, from Halep, which in the Language of those parts signifies Milk, afforded liberally by the Rich Pastures round about it: as others more improbably from Aleph, the first Letter of the Hebrew Alphabet, because the first in estimation of the Cities of Syria: Most probably from Alepius, Lieutenant here in the time of Julian the Apostata, who did here many notable Exploits, and amongst others, in or near the Ruines of some old Town of these parts, not yet agreed on (in case it be not Sepharvaim before mentioned) advanced this City. Situate on the Banks of the River Singus, which rising out of the Hill Pieria, with many windings and turnings, runneth through Comagena, and there falleth into Euphrates. Destroyed by Hadrian, King of the Tarst, at such time as the Western Christians were possessed of this Country, and the Holy Land: but being repaired and re-peopled, became by reason of the commodious situation of it, to be much frequented by Merchants from all parts of the World. Situate in the midst betwixt Tripolis, Beritus, and Alexandretta, the three prime Ports of Turkey on the one side, and the Persian Territories on the other: it was made choice of for the Staple of the Eastern Commodities, brought to Euphrates, and then boated to this Town by the River Singus. A City of great Trade at present, the English Merchants (amongst others which frequent the same) disposing here three Houses for the Storage and halving of their Commodities, and a chief Office of Superintendent over the whole Factory, whom they call the Consul of Aleppo. But greater was the Trade heretof in former times, before the Portugals found out a way by Sea to those Eastern Countries, since followed by the English, Hollanders, and other Nations. The building of it, but of one Roof high (as in most Towns of Syria) with a plain top plaistred to walk upon; and with Arches before their doors or Houses: as well to passy under them in time of Rain, as to shew their Wars. Pleasantly seated amongst Gardens, with the sweet fennels whereof very much refreshed; the ordinary residence of a Turkish Besla; safe rather in the remoteness of it from any Enemy, than the strength of the place, as being nothing less than well fortified. Near one of the Gates they shew a Sepulchre, by them affirmed to be Saint George's (whom of all the Christian Saints they only worship) before which they maintain a Lamp which burns continually. 8 Amn, in the way betwixt Tripolis and Aleppo, supposed by some to be that Hamath, mention whereof is made 2 King. chap. 17. 12. A City of a large circuit, pleasantly seated on two Hills, which give it a fair prospect over six of the neighbouring Villages; a thing not to be boasted of, as the World now goeth, by many of the Syrian Cities. On a third Hill once stood a Castle, now decayed, ruinous, beneath

4 PALMYRENE.

PALMYRENE is bounded on the East, by the River Euphrates; on the West, by Syria properly and specially so called; on the North, with Comagena; and on the South, with Mount Libanus, dividing it from the Province of Calo-Syria; and part of Arabia Deserta.

It took this name from Palmyra the chief City of it. When conquered by the Romans, and made a distinct Province of it self, it had the name of Syria Secunda, and Salutaris: called Syria Secunda, to distinguish it from Syria specially so called, which by them was named Syria Prima; and Salutaris, in regard of the medicinal waters springing in many places of it. But before it had any of these names, it was in the Scriptures called Arenvix, as we read 2 Sam. 8. 3. and 1 Chron. 18. 3.

The Country destitute of Rivers fit for Navigation, save that it bordereth on Euphrates; but liberally furnished with those hot Springs good for many Diseases, writeth Marcellinus, lib. 14. In his traditibus navigantibus natura calentes emergunt, ad usum aqua multiplicem medelantur. So he: The fens whereof we had before.

Places of most observation, are 1 Palmyra seated in a mon in the Wildernefs, mention of which is made 1 King. 9. 17, 18. this Palmyra being supposed to be that City Latin. The cause for long time of much contention betwixt the Parthians and the Romans, as situate in the heart, till that they had subdued Zenobia, then the Queen was called Hadrianople, but it held not long; the old 3 Bethloron the upper. And 4 Bethloron the nether; said to be fenced Cities, with Walls, Gates, and Towers ledged, or called by new names in the time of Proclus; doth intimate, by some of the Adada Kings of this Country towards the River Euphrates, in the Notitia, called repaired, or made a Colony by the Emperor Vespasian, pitcopal See also in the times next following, as appeareth on the Acts of the Council of Constantinople. 8 Alamath, lawful for me to criticize upon my Author, if it were conceived to be Hamath of the Scriptures, which is prevailed 1 the mistake from Camatha to Alamath, be that passage in 2 Chron. 18. 3. where it is said, that David went to establish his Dominion by the River Euphrates: By the Camatha or Alamath of Proclus is said to do: And to be the chief Seat of those Kings, and the principal City of this Kingdom: the word Sobab, being added to But if the judicious Reader approve not this criticism, I should next think that this Alamath of Proclus were that Alema, or Helaus, next unto which Dau d discomfited that great Army of the Mesopotamians, mention whereof is made 2 Sam. 10. 16. 17. 9. Rafaphis, a Town of note in the time of Prology; but of greater in the Holy Scripture, where it is represented to us by the name of Refeph, Ila. 3. 20. Refeph Civitas Syria, as Saint Hieronym hath it: and if a Town of Syria, then most like this. 10 Betab, and 11 Berobai, two other Cities of this Kingdom, taken by David in his War against Hadad-ezar, 2 Sam. 8. 8, the last supposed to be the Barabene of Prology, though placed by him among the Towns of Arabia the Desart, to which it seems it was allotted in the change of time.

This part of Syria, as the rest, was once a distinct Kingdom of itself, by the name of the Kingdom of Sobab, or of Aram-Sobab. The first King thereof, whose name occurs in Holy Scripture, being Rehob, the Co-temporary of Saul King of Israel, by whom discomfited in battle, as is said 1 Sam. 14. 47. But Adad-ezar the Son of Rehob, a Prince of greater power and valour than his Father was, having brought all the neighbouring Kings under his command (as is said 2 Sam. 10. 19.) conceived himself a fit match for David, and thereupon opposed his passage, as he went to recover his border at the River Euphrates. In which Action though he lost a thousand Chariots, and twenty thousand Foot, and seven hundred Horse, yet would he not end the war: but first with the Syrians of Damascus, and after with the Ammonites and their Confederates; and finally by the aid of the Mesopotamians, renewed the Quarrel. But being discomfited also in this last enterprise with the loss of forty thousand and seven hundred men, and his life to boot, the Kingdom of Zobah was brought under by the Kings of Damascus. The story of this war we have in 2 Sam. ch. 8. v. 10. in 1 Chron. ch. 18. and 1 King. 11. 23, 24, yet were not the Kings of Damascus so well fedled in it, but that David had possessed himself of Betab and Berobai, and other places of importance: the Regal City of Hamath-Zobah being won by Salomon, and many of the best Towns of it built by him to assure his Conquest. But the Kingdom of Salomon being rent in pieces in the next Succession, the Kingdom of Zobah fell unto those of Damascus: and so continued till Damascus it self was conquered by the Kings of Affria: unless perhaps that Hamath, which Jeroboam the second is said to have subdued (together with Damascus it self) to the Crown of Israel, 2 King. 14. 28. were this Hamath-Zobah, as perhaps it was.

After this nothing memorable in the affairs of this Country, till the time of Gallienus the Roman Emperor: during whose reign, amongst the rest who cantoned that Empire betwixt themselves, commonly called the Thirty Tyrants) Odenatus a man of great power and virtue assumed the Imperial habit, and took unto him the command of these parts of Syria, together with Mesopotamia, and some other Provinces, which he had conquered from Sapor the King of Perfia, against whom he had so good an hand, that he discomfited him in battle, seiz'd upon his Treasures, and took many of his Nobles, and most of his Concubines. For which great acts admitted partner in the Empire by Gallienus, he was not long after slain by Aeoni his Cousin German. Who by that murder hoped to obtain the Principality of Palmyrene (for by that name it was so called) but in that deceived. For after his death, Zenobia his unfortunate Widow, a most masculine Lady, not only preserved the Principality of Palmyrene for the use of her Children; but took upon her both the Purple habit, and the command of his Army: which she managed with great wisdom and gallantry, the rest of the time of Gallienus, all the reigns of Clau- dus, and Quintilianus, his two next Successors. But vanquished and took Prisoner by Aurelianus (who had the happiness to undo the broken limbs of that Empire into as strong a body as ever formerly) she was led in triumph through Rome. The terror of her name, and the unreasonableness of the fight, so generally heightening the expectation; Ut ea specie nihil unquam esset pompabilius, faith Trebellian Pollio. That never any shew was esteemed so glorious. A Lady of so strong a virtue, and of such command upon her self, that she is said never to have made use of her husbands company when she perceived her self with child. After this nothing singular in the story of Palmyrene, but when all the rest of Syria was subdued by the Christians of the West, this Province and the next only was made good against them by the Turkish Sultans of Damascus.

COELO-STRIA.

COELO-STRIA is bounded on the East with Palmyrene, and Arabia Deserta; on the West, with Palmyrene; on the North, with Palmyrene, and some part of Syria Propria, from which divided by the interposition of Mount Libanus; on the South, with Ituraea, and Arabia Deserta also.

This is the Syria so much mentioned in the Books of Kings and Chronicles, called by the Greeks, Caelo-Syria, i. e. Syria Cava, because partly situate in the hollow Valleys interjected betwixt Libanus and Anti-Libanus; and sometimes also Syro-Phoenicia, from the intermixture of those people; the Phoenicians which went with Dib into Affrica, were called Libo-Phoenices. By the Romans when made a distinct Province of that Empire, it had the name of Phoenice Libani, or Phoenicia Libanensis, to distinguish it from the other Phoenicia, which they call Martima. But before all this by the Hebrews named Aram-Damasci. Syria Damascena in the Latin, from Damascus the chief City of it: unless perhaps we should rather say, that Aram-Damasci contained only that which lay betwixt the Mountains of Libanus and Anti-Libanus, the rest being added by the Romans, out of the neighbouring parts of Palmyrene and Arabia Deserta, as perhaps it was.

Chief Rivers hereof are 1 Abana, and 2 Pharfar, the Rivers of Damascus, as the Scripture calleth them, 2 King. 5. The one of which is thought to be the River Adonis, spoken of already; the other that which Prology calleth Chryssorhoas, or the golden Flood; which rising in the Hills of this Country, passeth by Damascus, and so together with the other into the Mediterranean Sea. Chief Mountains of it, 1 Adamanus, by the Phoenicians called Syrius, by the Amorites, Samir; a ridge of Hills which beginning at the East-point of Anti-Libanus, bend directly Southwards, shutting up to that side the Land of Israel, whereof more in Palmyrene. 2 Hippus, a ledge of Mountains in the South parts of this Province, where it bordereth on Arabia Deserta.

Towns of most consideration in it. 1 Heliopolis so called from an Image of the Sun there worshipped in the time of Paganism; now Belbeck, or (as some say) Balbec. 2 Chalcis, more Eastward toward Damascus, which gave the title of a King to Prology Meneus, and his Son Lysanias, the Kingdom then extending over the City of Abila, and the whole Province of Ituraea in Palmyrene. But that Family being either expired or grown out of favour, and Abila with Ituraea otherwise disposed of, the title of the King of Chalcis, with the Town and Territory, was given to Herod, brother of Agrippa the first King of Jewry. Erroneously supposed by some Learned men to be that Chalcis, from which the Country called

Chalcidica

Chalcidice takes denomination; that Chalcis being placed by Prology a degree and a half more East than Damascus, and two degrees more towards the North; whereas this Chalcis lieth on the West of that City, in the shades of Libanus, and in the very same degree of Northern Latitude. 3 Abila, seated at the foot of Libanus, betwixt Heliopolis and Chalcis from whence the Country round about it is called Abilene; given to Lysanias, the Son of the former Lysanias, King of Chalcis, with the Title of Tetrarch. Mentioned Luke 3. 1. with those other Princes which shared Palmyrene amongst them. Not that he was the Son of Herod, as anciently Beda and Euthymius, and of late times some very industrious men have been of opinion: but partly because to those of the Tribe of Naphthali (though never conquered or possessed by them) and to be accounted a part of Palmyrene; and partly because the Tetrarchy of Abilene, when Saint Luke wrote that Gospel, was possessed together with the rest by King Agrippa. Restored (as it seemeth) to the former Family, after his decease; for known it was by the name of Abila Lysania in the time of Prology. 4 Adida, memorable for the Victory against Aretas King of Arabia obtained near unto it, then lying open as a prey to the next invaders. 5 Hippus, or Hippone, as Pliny calleth it, not far from the Mountain of that name. 6 Capitolias, now called Suena. 7 Gadara, 8 Scythopolis. 9 Gersa, and 10 Philadelpia, reckoned by Prology as Cities of Coelo-Syria; but of right belonging unto Palmyrene, where we mean to take notice of them. 11 Eden, at the foot of Mount Libanus, now a Town of the Maronites; and anciently of such esteem that the whole Country of Damascus was called Beth-Eden, Amos 1. 5. 12 Damascus, situate in a large Plain environed with Hills, and watered with the River Chryssorhoas, which with a great noise descendeth from the Mountains, and so abundantly serveth the City, that not only most of the Houses have their Fountains of it, but their Orchards and Gardens have some Rivulets conveyed into them. The Country round about abundantly enriched with plenty of most excellent Wines (the Vines hereof bearing Grapes all the year long) and great store of Wheat; as Damasceni, (or Prima Damascena, as the Latins call them) coming first from hence; as also our Damask Roses, but infinite sort of their natural sweets, by the transplantation. A place so surfeited of Delights, so girt about with odoriferous and curious Gardens, that the vile impostor Mahomet was never perwaded to come into it, for fear (as himself was used to say) lest being ravished with the ineffable pleasures of it, he should forget the business he was sent about, and make there his Paradise. But Muhavias, one of his Successors, having no such scruple, removed the Regal Seat unto it, where it continued (for the most part) till the building of Bagdat by Ingisfer the twentieth Caliph, about an hundred years after this Removal: the Regal Seat before that time being at Meca, Cufa, or some other of the best Towns of Arabia Felix. The chief Buildings of it, of late times (till destroyed by the Tatars) were a strong Castle, in the opinion of those times held to be impregnable; and not without great difficulty forced by Tamurlane, whom nothing was able to withstand: as was Majestical a Church, garnished with forty sumptuous Porches, and no fewer than 3000 Lanthorns of Gold and Silver; which with 30000 people in it (who led thither for a Sanctuary) was by the said Tamurlane most cruelly and unmercifully burnt, and pulled down unto the ground. Repaired by the Mamlukes of Aegypt when Lords of Syria, it hath since flourished in Traue, the People being industrious, and celebrated for most excellent Artizans; the branching of Satins, and fine amongst many others, one of their Inventions. Renowned in the Old Testament for the Kings hereof, and the birth of Eliezer, Abraham's Steward (so honourably ancient was this City;) and in the New, for the Conversion of St. Paul, who first preached the Gospel in this place, and here so narrowly escaped the snares of his Enemies, that he was fain to be let down out of the House in which he was, by the help of a Basket.

But ancient and honourable though this City of Damascus was, we find nothing of the Story of it, till the time of David; the Kings thereof until those days, being conceived to have been Homagers and Tributaries to the Kings of Zobah. The first Exploit ascribed unto him in the Holy Scripture, is their coming to the aid of Adad-ezar, upon his first defeat by David: in which action having lost 22000 men, they were so broken, that they did not only suffer David to put Garrisons in Servants, and brought presents to him, 2 Sam. 8. 5, 6. The name of this unfortunate Prince not made known in Scripture, is by Josephus affirmed out of Nicolaus Damascenus, to have been Adad (a name much cherished and assumed by the Kings Successors) who keeping constant to the party of Adad-ezar in his following Wars, was at last slain with him, in that great discomfiture v. 18. In which Text the Scripture telleth us nothing of the death of those Kings, that being supplied to us by Josephus out of their Records; who also added, That Rezin, one of the chief Commanders of Adad-ezar, taking his advantage, not only usurped his Masters Kingdom, but made himself Master of the Kingdom of Damascus also. From this time forward the Seat-Royal of the Kings of Syria. Nor is this the Tradition of Damascus only, but founded plainly on the Scriptures, of which see 1 King. 11. v. 23, 24. the Scriptures after this taking no notice of any other Kings of Syria (by the name of Kings of Syria) but of those that reigned in Damascus; who in short time had swallowed up the petty Kingdoms of Gesser, Ish-tok, Rehob, besides that of Sobab before mentioned.

The KINGS of STRIA or DAMASCUS.

- 1 Adad, the Friend and Confederate of Adad-ezar King of Sobab, in whose quarrel he was vanquished and slain by David.
- 2 Rezin, of whom the Scripture saith, in the 2. of Chron. that when David slew them of Sobab, he fled from Adad-ezar his Lords, and gathered men unto him, and certain Captains over a Band, and went to Damascus, and dwelt therein, and reigned in Damascus.
- 3 Adad II. an Adman, supposed to be of the Family of Adad-ezar, but rather as I think of Adad, for fear of David fled to Aegypt, where he married Tapines the Queens Sister; and hearing that both David and Joab were dead, returned again into his Country, and as some write, expelled Rezin out of Damascus and reigned there as King.
- 4 Hezion, Successor unto Adad.
- 5 Tharimon, the Son of Hezion, as is said 2 King. 15. 18.
- 6 Ben-medad, the Son of Tab-mon, hired by Azi King

King of Judah, to aid him in his Wars against Baalsh of Israel.

7 Ben-hadad II. Son of the former, twice invaded Israel in the reign of Ahab; but both times notably repulsed: the first time by a Sally of 700 men, at the Siege of Samaria; the next at Aphek, where with the like number in effect, he was taken Prisoner and his Army routed.

8 Hazael, Captain of the Host to Ben-hadad, anointed King of Syria by the prophet Elisha, whom God appointed so to do, that by his hands he might avenge himself on Ben-hadad, whom Hazael slew; but he proved as ill a neighbour to the Kings of Israel, as those before him. He attempted upon Judah also in the time of Joas, but bribed with the Treasures of the Temple, he withdrew his Forces.

9 Ben-hadad III. Son of Hazael, discomfited in three set Battles by Joas King of Israel.

10 Ben-hadad IV. Son of Ben-hadad the third.

11 Ben-hadad V. Son of Ben-hadad the fourth.

12 Ben-hadad VI. Son of Ben-hadad the fifth, in the time of one of which three Kings, but which one we find not for a certain, Jeroboam the Son of Joas King of Israel subdued both Chamath, and Damascus; of which see 2 King. 14. v. 18.

13 Rezin II. Son of Ben-hadad the sixth, and the last King of Damascus, who joining with Pekah King of Israel, against Abaz King of Judah, enforced him to call unto his aid Tiglath Pileser King of Assyria; by whom Rezin was taken and beheaded, and the City of Damascus won; the Kingdom of Syria by that means united to the Assyrian Empire.

After this time, the Syrians continued subject to the Babylonian and Assyrian Monarchs; and in the overthrow of that Empire by the Medes and Persians, became a part of their Estate: remaining till the first Battle betwixt Alexander and Darius, fought near Issus in Cilicia. The Victory wherein falling to the Macedonians, gave him without more trouble than the Siege of Tyre, the possession of Syria and Phoenicia. He dying not long after his Conquest of Persia, this Country lay as it were at stake betwixt Ptolemy King of Egypt, and Antigonus the chief Lord of Asia: but the possession of it, together with the rest of the Persian Empire, in both Asia, fell into conclusion to the share of Seleucus, for his many great and signal Victories surnamed Nicator; a man strangely preferred. For being at the first Governour of Chaldaea only, he was forced to leave Babylon, and to forsake his Province for fear of Antigonus, then dreadful to all the Macedonian Captains; and to fly into Egypt, where he became Ptolemy's Admiral. After which Ptolemy fighting at a pitched Field with Demetrius, Son to Antigonus, took Seleucus with him, and having won the Battle, gave him aid and licence to recover his former Government. Seleucus, well beloved of the People, soon made himself Master not of Chaldaea only, but of all the Persian Provinces beyond Euphrates: and not long after (being seconded by his good Friends Ptolemy, Cassander, and Lysimachus) he encountered Antigonus at Ipsus in Ionia, where Antigonus himself was slain, and his whole Army routed. This Victory made Seleucus Lord of all Asia, from whence passing over into Europe, he vanquished and slew Lysimachus: Seven Months after which Victory, he was slain by Ptolemy Ceraunus, whose Patron and Protector he had formerly been; being yet the last Saviour of all Alexander's Princes, and the only Possessor of all the Dominions which his Master had, by the way of Conquest, Egypt excepted. His Successors, although they were Lords of all Asia, yet since in Syria they kept their residence, to the end that they might the better furnish themselves with Soldiers out of Greece upon all occasions, as we said before, they were commonly called the Kings of Syria. But long they held not in that greatness of Estate and Power, which Seleucus left them; though being a full-bodied Tree, and of several Limbs, it endured the lopping off of many Branches, and many a sad blow at the very Root of it, before it fell. For in the time of Seleucus Callinicus, the fourth of this House, Arsaces a Noble Parthian recovered from it all the Provinces of the Persian Empire lying on that side of Euphrates; and erected the so much celebrated Parthian Kingdom, whereof more in Persia. And in the Reign of Antiochus Magnus, so called for his Victories in Egypt, Judaea, and Babylonia, the Romans extorted from it all the Asian Provinces on this side Mount Taurus, not wanting many provocations to incite them to it: for he not only had made War against Ptolemy Philopater King of Egypt, whom the Romans had taken into their Protection; but stirred up the Cities and States of Greece against them: invaded Lycimachus, and some other parts of Europe, in defiance of them, and had received Amibab the Carthaginian, and Thua the Aetolian, their most mortal Enemies, into his Dominion, governing his Councils by the influences which they had upon him. Nor may we think but that Ambition and Avarice, to add to their Fame and Empire by the overthrow of so great a Prince, did persuade much with them. So that the point being brought too ready issue, they pleaded it on both sides in the Battle of Magnesia, a City of Lydia, to which Antiochus brought an Army of 300000 Foot, and as many armed Chariots, besides more or Elephants, if the Roman Writers be not over-lavish in their Reports. But rejecting the advice of Amibab, and committing his Affairs wholly to Evil Counsellors, he was vanquished by no more than four Legions of Enemies, and for his Peace compelled to quit all his Asian Provinces on that side of Taurus, and to pay 15000 Talents in ready money for the charge of the War. The rest of his Estate they were content he should enjoy for a longer time, Et libentius quod tam facile cessisset (as Florus handsomely says it on him) because he had so easily relinquished that. Afterwards in the civil Broils among themselves, about the Succession of the Kingdom, Alexander King of the Jews took from them many of their best Towns in Palestine, as Joppa, Gaza, Ambedon, Azotus, Rhinocorra, almost all Samaria, and Gaudonitis, with Sychar, Gadara, and many other strong Towns in Galilee Syria. Finally, when they had consumed almost all the Royal Race, and changed their Kings no less than ten times in forty years (a sure sign of a falling and expiring Kingdom) they were fain to cast themselves upon Tigranes the King of Armenia, a puissant and successful Prince, till engaged in the Quarrel of Mithridates against the Romans: by whom stripped of all his Estates on this side Euphrates, he was fain to content himself with his own Armenia, leaving Syria to the absolute disposal of Pompey, who presently reduced it to the form of a Province. This laid, we have not much more to do with the House of Seleucus, but to lay down their Names, and times of their several Governments, till we draw towards the last end of

The MACEDONIAN KINGS of STRIA.

A. M.
3654. 1 Seleucus Nicator, the first King of this House. 31.

3685 2 Antiochus, surnamed Soter, or the Saviour; memorable for nothing so much, as marrying with Stratonice his Father's Wife, in his Father's life-time.

3704 3 Antiochus II. by his flattering Courtiers surnamed Theos, or the God; but being punished by his Wife, he proved a Mortal.

3719 4 Seleucus II. surnamed by the like flattery Callinicus, or fair Conquerour, because shamefully beaten by the Parthians.

3739 5 Seleucus III. called for the like reason Ceraunus, or the Thunderer; the eldest Son of Callinicus.

3742 6 Antiochus III. surnamed Magnus, the younger Son of Callinicus, a Prince that embraced great Actions, and was fortunate in his Successes beyond Euphrates: he plagued the Jews, but lost all Asia Minor unto the Romans.

3778 7 Seleucus IV. called Philopater, the Son of Antiochus, who first began to cast his Eye upon the Riches of the Temple at Hierusalem.

3790 8 Antiochus IV. surnamed Epiphanes, or the Illustrious; but more truly Epimanes, or the Mad. The great Scourge of the Jews, Brother of Seleucus Philopater, with whom begetteth the Story of the first Book of the Maccabees.

3802 9 Antiochus V. called by the name of Eupator, the Son of Epiphanes; who by Lysias his Captain tyrannized over the poor Jews, for the little time that he reigned; as did also.

3804 10 Demetrius, surnamed Soter, Son of Seleucus Philopater, by the hands of Nicator: having possessed himself of the Diadem, by the death of Eupator, slain in his favour by the Soldiers who revolted from him. He was afterwards deposed for a time by Alexander Bala, pretending himself to be the Son of Eupator, supported herein by the Antiochians.

3814 11 Alexander Bala, discomfited in his first Battle by Demetrius, whom he slew and vanquished in the second; married Cleopatra Daughter of Ptolemy Philomator, by whose aid he was victorious. But a Quarrel breaking out between them, Ptolemy invaded Syria, and caused himself to be crowned King of it; Alexander being slain by some of his Soldiers.

3819 12 Demetrius II. surnamed Nicator, Son of Demetrius the first, recovered his Fathers Kingdom, a Friend of the Maccabees, but too cruel to his own People, that he was driven out of his Kingdom by Tryphon General of his Armies.

3821 13 Antioch VI. surnamed Embes, the Son of Alexander and Cleopatra, advanced unto the Throne by Tryphon, and after slain by him to make way for himself unto the Diadem.

3824 14 Tryphon, called also Diodorus, having driven out Demetrius, and slain Antiochus, made himself King.

3827 15 Antiochus VII. surnamed Soter, Brother of Demetrius, having overcome and slain Tryphon, succeeded him in the Estate; for a while victorious against the Parthians; but afterwards overcome and slain by them.

After whose death Demetrius Nicator (having lived in Parthia since the loss of his Kingdom) was restored again unto the Throne; which having held about four years, he was again dispossessed and slain by

3843 16 Alexander II. surnamed Zebema, an Egyptian of mean birth, set up by Ptolemy Evergetes, and pretending himself to be the adopted Son of Antiochus, afterwards vanquished and slain by 3845 17 Antiochus VIII. from the crookedness of his nose surnamed Gryphus, Son of Demetrius, aided herein by the Egyptians, with whom reconciled: having reigned about eight years in peace; embroiled him in war with his half Brother Antiochus surnamed Cyzicus; which with variable successes on both sides, continued till the time of his death, having reigned 29 years in all.

3874 18 Seleucus V. Son of Antiochus Gryphus, in the beginning of his reign overcame and slew his Uncle Cyzicus: but being vanquished by Antiochus surnamed Eusebes or Pius, one of the Sons of Cyzicus, he fled into Cilicia, and was there burnt in his Palace.

19 Antiochus IX. surnamed Eusebes, having first vanquished Seleucus, and afterwards Antiochus, another of the Sons of Gryphus, was crowned King of Syria; but slain not long after in the Persian wars.

20 Philip, and Demetrius III. surnamed Eucerus, younger Sons of Gryphus, jointly Kings of Syria; but reigning in their several parts. Of which Demetrius intending to dislize his Brother, was himself vanquished, and forced to fly into Parthia; leaving the whole Kingdom unto Philip. During which amongst themselves Syria was invaded, and in part conquered by Artaxas King of the Arabians, and Alexander King of the Jews.

3884 21 Tigranes King of Armenia, during these dissensions was by the Syrians chosen King, and Arabians: the most puissant Prince that reigned in Syria, since the time of Antioch the Great, as being King of Syria by election, of Armenia by succession, of Media by conquest. But engaging himself with Mithridates (whose Daughter he had married) against the Romans, was vanquished by Lucullus: who with the loss of five tenths to have slain of his Enemies above 100000 men. Finally, being again broken and vanquished by Lucullus, he yielded himself to Pompey (who being appointed Lutatius War) and retaining to himself Armenia only, he left all Syria to the Romans, having reigned eighteen years. And though Antiochus Comagenus, the Son of Eusebes, petitioned Pompey for a restitution to the Throne of his Ancestors, yet it would not be granted: Pompey replying, That he would not trust the Country into such weak hands as were not able to defend it against the Arabians, Parthians, and the like Invaders; and so reduced it presently to the form of a Province. The government of this Country under these new Lords, was accounted to be one of the greatest honours of the Empire: the Prefect hereof having almost regal jurisdiction over all the Regions on this side Euphrates, with a superiority over Egypt, Niger, the concurrent of Severus was Prefect here; and on the strength hereof presumed on that competition. So also was Cassius Syrus, who became ing a Native of this Country, and well-beloved by reason of his moderate and plausible demeanour, had almost tumbled M. Antonius out of his Throne. On this Occasion it was enacted by the Senate, that no man hereafter should have any military or legal command in the Province where he was born: Left perhaps supported by the natural propension of the People to one of their own Nation, and heartened by the powerableness of his Friends, he might appropriate that to himself, which was common to the Senate and People of Rome. But this was when it was entire, and passed but from one Province only, Phoenicia being taken also into the account; which made the Antiochians so proud and insolent, that Adrian, in his time intended to subduet Phoenicia from it, Ne tot civitatum Metropolis Antiochia crederetur (saith Gallicanus) that Antioch might not be the chief of so many Cities. But what he lived not to accomplish, was performed by Constantine, by whom Phoenicia was not only taken off, but Syria it self divided into four distinct Provinces, as was shewed before, each of them having its Metropolis or Mother City, but all subordinate to the command of the Comes, or Præfekt of the East, as he to the command of the Præfektus Prætorii Orientis, the greatest Officer of the Empire, of whom we have often spoke already.

For the defence hereof as well against all Foreign invasions as the insurrections of the Natives (a wavering and inconstant People) the Romans kept here in continual pay four Legions, with their aids, and other additaments. For so many Murians had here in the time of Galba; and by the strength and reputation of those Forces, was able to transfer the Empire upon Vespasian. And though the Constantinopolitan Emperors to whose share it fell, in the division of the Empire, rather increased than diminished any part of this strength: yet when the fatal time was come, and that Empire was in the declination, the Saracens, under the conduct of Hamer their third Caliph, Anno 636, possessed themselves of it, Heraklius then reigning in Constantinople. And it continued in their power till Tangolipix the Turk, having conquered Persia, and the Provinces on that side of Euphrates, passed over the River into Syria, and made himself Master of a great part of that also. A quarrel falling out betwixt him and the nearest Kinsmen, and thereby a great stop made in their further progress, was thus composed, by the mediation of the Caliph of Babylon, in the time of Ascor his Successor. To Cutlu Moses was assigned a convenient Army, to be by him employed against the Christians, with Regal power over the Provinces by him gained, without relation or subordination to the Persian Sultan: of whose successes and affairs hath been spoke elsewhere. To Melich and Ducar, two others of his discontented Kinsmen, but all of the same Selzucian family, he gave the fair Cities of Alippo and Damascus, and those parts of Syria, with whatsoever they could conquer from the Caliph of Egypt, who then held all Phoenicia, and the Sea-coasts of Palestine: to be held in fee and vassalage of the Crown of Persia. To these two Brethren then we are to refer the beginning of the Turkish Kingdom in Syria: who, with their Successors, by reason that here they held their residence, caused themselves to be called

THE TURKISH KINGS of DAMASCUS.

1075 1 Melich and Ducar, the first Turkish Kings of Damascus, by the gift of Ascor, the second Sultan of the Turks in Persia, added to their Dominions all the rest of Syria, together with part of Cilicia, and some neighbouring Provinces in the Leffer Asia.

2 N. N. Sultan of Damascus, at such times as the Christians of the West won the Holy Land: against whom he notably defended the City and Territories of Damascus; and in a fat battel discomfited and slew Roger the Norman Prince of Antioch.
3 Noradine, (the Son of Sanguin) General of the Armies, and Son-in-law to the former King, succeeded him in the estate. A noble Prince memorable amongst other things for a gallant answer made to his Commanders, when they perswaded him to take the advantage on the death of Baldwin the third, and to invade Hierusalem whilst the Christians were buſie in solemnizing his Funerals. He so, saith he, Compassion and regard is to be had of the just sorrow of those Christians, who have lost such a King, as could not be equalled in the world.

1175 4 Melchisala, Son of Noradine, contemned by reason of his youth, by his Nobles, and the Souldiery, who made choice of Saladine for their King; by whom dispossessed first, and after vanquished.

1176 5 Saladine, the Turkish Sultan of Egypt, having vanquished the Persians, or Parthians, coming under the conduct of Cacobed, Uncle to Melchisala, to restore that Prince to his estate, remained King of Damascus; and by the puſsance of his Armies, recovered from the Christians all Syria, and the Holy Land, with the City of Hierusalem also.

1199 6 Eladel, or E. Appzel, the eldest Son of Saladine, succeeded in the Realm of Damascus; which he exchanged for that of Egypt with his Brother Elaziz.

7 Elaziz, the second Son of Saladine, succeeded upon this exchange in the Realm of Damascus; murdered not long after by his Uncle Saphradine.

8 Saphradine, the Brother of Saladine, having barbarously murdered eight of the Sons of Saladine, (the youngest called Saphradine escaping only, who was after Sultan of Alippo) possessed himself of the Kingdom of Damascus, left at his death to Corradine, his Son or Nephew.

9 Corradine, Son or Nephew to the Tyrant Saphradine, was by him at his death left Sultan of Damascus; to which all Syria and Palestine were then made Provincials. But the treacheries and murders of Saphradine crying loud for vengeance, Haadon the Tartar, in the year 1262, having taken the King of Damascus Prisoner (but whether Corradine, or some other, I am not able to say) brought him before the walls of the City, threatening to kill him in the sight of the people, if they did not deliver it unto him. Which the Citizens refusing to do, the wretched King was torn in pieces, and the City taken by assault: the Kingdom taken by the Conquerors conferred upon Agab the Son of Haadon. And so ended the Selzucian Family of the Kings of Damascus in the person of Corradine, or the Son of Corradine, most miserably murdered by the Tartars; as it had done in Egypt 17 years before, in the person of Melchisala, and Elmurran, the Son of Melchisala, so villainously deposed and murdered by the Mamelucks. So slippery is the foundation of those Kingdoms that are laid in blood.

Tartars, recovered from them in short time by the Mamelucks, then Kings of Egypt: from them once more regained by the furious Tamurlane: who in the year 1400 besieged Damascus with an Army of 1200000 men, (if the number be not mistaken, and one Cypher added more than should) in pursuit whereof he filled up the ditches with his Prisoners, put all the people to the Sword; and with great Art raised three Towers as the Trophy of his victory, built with the heads of those up of vice and virtues, that it is hard to say which had the predominancy. But the violence of this tempest being overblown, the Mamelucks, from whom he had also conquered the Kingdom of Egypt, recovered Syria by degrees, and repaired Damascus, continuing in their power till the year 1516, when Selim the first discomfited Campſon Gaurus the Egyptian Sultan in the fields of Alippo. Upon the news whereof the Citizens of Damascus, fearing the spoil of their rich City, then of very great trading, set open their Gates unto the Visitors; as did all the other Cities and Towns of Syria, by their example. By means whereof, without any more blows, the Turks became Lords of this Country; as the next year of Egypt also, by the vanquishment and death of Tonambesin who succeeded Campſon: so rooting out the name and government of the Mamelucks, and adding those rich Kingdoms to the Turkish Empire.

MOUNT HERMON.

ON our passage out of Calo-Syria into Palestine, we must cross Mount Hermon; a ledge of Hills; which beginning at the East point of the Anti-Libanus, bend directly South: in different places, and by several Nations called by divers names. By the Phoenicians, Syrians; and by the Amorites, Samir; by the Book of Plalms. But Alfadamus they are called only where they border upon Calo-Syria. Where they begin to part the Region of Trachonitis from Arabia Deserta, they are called by Moser and the Scriptures Hermon, part of the Kingdom of Oz, the King of Basan, as is said; Iſhmael, chap. 12. 6. Syrian by the Sidonians, as is affirmed Deut. 3. 9. Running further after this unto the South, they are called Gilead or Galaad; by Strabo, Trachonitis, after the name of the Region along which they pass, and are conceived to be the highest part of all Mount Libanus, or rather of that long ridge of Mountains which there take beginning. And so we are to understand the words of the Prophet Jeremy, saying, Galaad tu mihi Caput Libani, as the Vulgar readeth it. That is to say, that as the head is the highest part of a man; so these Hills, or this part of them, was the highest of all the branches, or spurs of Libanus, called Galeed by Jacob, from that heap of stones which was there laid by Laban and Jacob, to be a witness of the Covenant which was made betwixt them, Gen. 31. 27, the word signifying in the Original, An heap of Witnesses. And Laban said, This heap is a Witness betwixt me and thee this day; therefore was the name of it called Galeed, ver. 28. By these Hills, and the main Body of the Anti-Libanus Lying on the North, and the Mountains of Phoenicia and Idumea on the West, the Land of Palestine is so shut up on every side, that no Fortresses can be the passages in some parts so narrow, as hardly to afford passage for a single person. Clauditur undique montibus, hinc abruptis rupibus, & profundis vallibus concussa Torventium, inde altis & implexis anfractibus sic contractis, ut per angustos colles vix patet transitu viatori, as my Author hath it. I had almost forgot to add, that that part of these hills, which is commonly known in Scripture by the name of Hermon, is in one place thereof called Sihon, as Deut. 4. 48. where it is said, that the Israelites possessed the Land from Aroer on the bank of the River Arnon, even to Mount Sihon, which is Hermon. As also that one of the highest tops or Summits of it, had the name of Anania, alluded to by Solomon in the fourth of the Canticles; by some mistaken for Amanus, a branch of Taurus, which divides Syria from Cilicia in the Leffer Asia, with which Solomon had but small or no acquaintance. And so having cleared our selves of so much of this Mountain, as lay before us in our way, we pass over to Palestine: where we shall meet with it again, (or rather with the Western parts and branches of it) under the names of Gilead and Trachonitis, as a part of that Country.

from whence the divers opinions touching Christ our Saviour, Mat. 6. 14. are supposed to spring; as if his Body had been animated with the Soul of Eliab, John the Baptist, Jeremy, or some other Prophet. 2. They adhered so tenaciously to unwritten Traditions, that in comparison of them they Neglected the written Law; as either insufficient or impertinent: And 3. ascribed so much sanctity upon frequent washings, especially when they came from Market, Mark 7. 4. (where possibly they might meet with some unclean persons) and before their sitting down to Meat, Mat. 15. 2. that if they came unto a place where there was not water enough both to drink and wash, the Pharisee would rather chafe to wash than drink, though he died for thirst. More of them he that list to see, may find it copiously set down in the four and twentieth Chapter of Saint Matthew; and thither I refer the Reader, by means of which pretensions to so great a sanctity, and some other Arts they had to abuse the People, they grew so strong, and had such store of followers and dependants on them, that they became formidable in short time to their Kings and Princes. Inasmuch that Alexandra durst not enter on the Government in her Childre's nonage, as Josephus telleth us, Antiq. lib. 13. cap. 23. until she had permitted all things unto their disposing; ἡ βασις δὲ τὸν δαδὸν ὑποτάσσοντες, &c. and promising to do nothing without their advice. And this she did by the direction of King Alexander, her dying Husband: whose Government, as she found by too sad experience had in many things proved unsuccessful, ὅτι τὸν δαδὸν καὶ αὐτὴν, because he had put some scorn upon them, and otherwise offended that prevailing Faction. A Faction so predominant amongst the People, faith the same Josephus, Antiq. lib. 19. cap. 18. ὅτι ὁ βασιλεὺς ἀνέβητο; ὡς καὶ Ἀρχιερεῖς, &c. that whatsoever they pleased to spread abroad, either of the High Priest, or the King himself, how false or scandalous soever, it was received for truth without more dispute, or any inquiry made into it.

4. But of the Pharisees enough, of the Scribes anon. Proceed we now to the Herodians and the Gaulonites, whom I look not on, as either the Authors or Promoters of any Sect of Religion in the Jewish Church; but as the names of two opposite Factions in the Civil State. The first were such who depending upon Herod's Fortune, as he did on the pleasure of the Roman Emperours, solicited the paying of Tribute to the Romans; and earnestly pressed upon that point, that Herod might be thereby the more endeared to his Masters of Rome, and they to him. Upon this ground nick-named Herodians by the People, as men that more endeavoured the greatness and Estate of Herod, than the prosperity and liberty of their Native Country. And possible enough it is, that some amongst them seeing the Magnificence of Herod's Palace, and experimentally knowing his Power, might fancy him to be the Messiah so long looked for, and thereby own this name with a better Title, than the others did. Opposite unto these, were those called the Gaulonites (we may call the one the Court-Faction, the other the Faction of the Country, or Common people): so named from one Judas a Gaulonite, as Josephus calleth him, from the place of his birth; a Gaulanite, as Gamael calleth him, Act. 5. 37. from the place of his abode or habitation. By him the Jews were practised with to deny this Tribute, telling them that it was a manifest token of their servitude, and that they ought to know no Lord, but the Lord of Heaven; in which Actions he and his Adherents perished, and were brought to nothing. Most of his followers were of Galilee, though he had some Disciples in Hierusalem and Samarita also: and of these Galileans were those poor men, whose blood Pilate is said to mingle with their Sacrifices, Luk. 13. 1.

The Language of this People, by them called the Hebrews, was naturally and originally the same which Abraham found the Land of Canaan, at his coming thither; as hath been shewn before when we were in Phoenicia. Used by them constantly till their subjugation by the Babylonians, when being led captive to that Country, and conforming themselves to the Speech and Dialect of it; they came at last to speak a kind of broken Language, neither true Chaldee, nor good Hebrew, but one made of both. Chaldee as to the main body of it; but Hebrew as to the affixes, points, and Conjugation: being the same with that which we now call the Syriack. And at their coming home, after seventy years, had so far lost the knowledge of their Mother-Tongue, that they were not able to understand the words of the Holy Scripture, when Ezra read it in their hearing; inasmuch that he was forced to employ some learned in that Tongue to expound it to them. To this the Scribes so often mentioned in the New Testament, must refer their original: there being no such Office heard of till the time of Ezra, though long before that time the Law had ordinarily been read unto them in the Feast of Tabernacles. For this cause they were called Scribes of the Law, Ezra. 7. 6. Doctores of the Law, Luk. 5. 17. and simply by the name of Lawyers, Luk. 7. 30. as men whose office was to expound the Law, and make it intelligible to the People. These we may best resemble to the Canonists in the Church of Rome or the Divinity-Reader in some School or College: and grew to such great estimation in the Jewish State, that it was hard to lay at last whether the Pharisees or they were the better men. For what the Pharisees gained on the common people by pretence of Sanctity, these got more justifiably by their zeal to the written Word, which they endeavoured to preserve from the common dangers both of corruption and contempt. And though I look on those men especially, as the name of a Faction, not a Sect: yet being they held so close to the Pharisees, and concurred with them in most of their Superstitions, as appeareth Mat. 23. I consider them as a strong and potent Faction, of great authority and influence in affairs of moment.

For matters of Religion, the People of this Land were privileged above all others, had they had the grace to make good use of it: the Law being given to them by God the Father, the Gospel preached amongst them by God the Son, and that Gospel countenanced and confirmed before their eyes. By the miraculous Operations of the Holy Ghost. The Government of that Church in the time of the Law, by a subordination of Priests and Levites to their several Heads; the Priests divided by King David into twenty four Ranks or Classes, each Class serving in their turns at the Holy Temple: the Chiefs or Heads of which several Classes, made but that Body of men which are called Principes Sacerdotum, or Chief Priests, so often mentioned in the Writings of the Holy Evangelists. Over all which there was one Supreme, whom they called Summus Sacerdotum, or the High Priest, descended lineally from Aaron, till the Romans out of avarice and Reason of State made the Office saleable. And because possibly the High Priest might be under some pollution, and so incapable by Law to perform his Office, he had his Suffragan (or Sagan) to discharge it for him. Of which sort was Zephaniah, the Sagan or second Priest to Semibab, mentioned Jer. 52. 24. And of this sort is Annas thought by some to have been to Caiaphas; and for that cause the title of High Priest to be given to both, Luk. 3. 2. though others think that Annas was High Priest in right, and the other in fact; the one being deposed by the Romans, and the other super-induced into the place. In time of Christianity they were governed as in other Churches, by a subordination of Priests to Bishops. The first Bishop said to be St. James, the Son of Alphaeus, commonly called the Lord's Brother, affirmed by Ignatius, Scholar to the Apostle, in his Epistle ad Trallianus; by Egeffippus, who lived in the Apostles times, as St. Hierom and Eusebius cite him; as also by Clemens of Alexandria cited by Eusebius, Hist. l. 1. c. 14. by Cyril of Hierusalem, Catechesis 4. 4. Epiphanius, Hæres. 78. n. 7. St. Ambrose in Gal. 1. St. Chrysostom on the last of St. John's Gospel; St. Hierom in his Catalogue of Ecclesiastical Writers; St. Augustine com. Crescon. l. 2. c. 37. To whom there may be added the joyful consent of 289 Prelates assembled in the sixth General Council holden at Constantinople, affirming James the Lord's Brother to be the first Bishop of Hierusalem: all of them, with the Fathers before mentioned, taking the word Bishop in that sense, in which it generally passed for the times they lived in. His Successors subject at the first to the Bishop of Cæsarea, as their Metropolitans; though privileged in their own Diocese, with the rights of Patriarchs, as appears evidently by the Acts of the Nicean Council. But afterwards for the greater honour of the Holy City, wherein our Saviour wrought the work of our Redemption, it was ordained at Chalcedon, that the Bishop of Hierusalem should have as well the jurisdiction as the name of a Patriarch; the three Patriarchs (for Constantine had before divided it into so many Provinces) being subducted from the power of the See of Antioch, to make up his Patriarchate. So stood it in elder times, but now by the inroad of Mahometanism the Christian faith is obscured, and the beauty of it so eclipsed, that were it not for some Sects of Christians dwelling in Mount Sinai, and about Hierusalem, it might be said without any manifest untruth, to be quite extinguished.

But to look back upon the Country, it cannot be described more fully and significantly, than Moses hath done it to our hands, in Deut. 8. Where it is said to be a Land of Brooks and Waters, of Fountains and Depths, that spring out of the Valleys and Hills: a Land of Wheat and Barley, and Vines, and Fig-trees, and Pomegranates; of Oyl-Olive, and Honey: a Land, wherein man bread, without scarceness; a Land whose stones were as Iron, and out of whose Hills one may dig Brass. An ample commendation; and a Country, which did not only consist in this flourishing plenty, but the perpetuity of its fruits: it being on record in the Epistles of the Emperor Julian (surnamed the Apostate) that the Fig-trees, and other fruit-trees herein, were seldom or never without fruits; the old not falling off, till the new come on. Which his report, if true, (as certainly he did not love our Saviour so well as to flatter the Country for his sake) we have then an answer to the difficulty, which hath so much perplexed all Commentators of former times; and that is, why our Saviour should curse the Fig-tree for not bearing fruit, when Mar. 14. 13. For though the time for new fruits was not yet come; yet come it being then but early Spring; yet our Saviour being hungry might expect to find some of the old, and this solution of the doubt discountenanced, (rather much try, as it stands at present; naturally adorned with beautiful Mountains, and luxurious Valleys, the Rock affording excellent Waters, and the air never pinched with colds, nor scorched with heats. And though either by the negligence of the Inhabitants, or some curse laid upon the Land, far short of that fertility with which it flourished; Yet still Figs, Olive, Pomegranates, Wine, with Oranges, and the Apple of Paradise, which agrees very well with that of Julian (spoken of before) as with Goats, Swine, Hares, Quails, and Partridges; and also pestered so in many places with Rats and Mice, that if it were not for certain Birds, which feed upon them, it were not possible for the people to have any Harvest. But what they had anciently, not now. Nor any Nuts, Pears, Plums or Cherries, but what are brought thither from Damascus.

Principal Rivers of this Country, are 1. Chisbon, the Chorlens of Proteny, which riseth out of Mount Tabor in Galilee, and falleth into the Mediterranean Sea, not far from Mount Carmel in Phoenicia. 2. Cedron, a Torrent Mount of Olive; but more remarkable for many notable actions, than many others of a greater both name and course. For over this Brook did David pass when he fled from Achish; and over this our Saviour, the Son of Bethsaida, did Asa the King of Judah burn his Mothers Idols, 1 King. 15. as Joshab did the Vessels whith were made for Baal, 2 King. 23. 3. Zared. And 4. Naphthali, which arising out of the hills of the Tribe of Issachar, which hath his spring in the Mediterranean, 5. Arnon, his course in the Mare Mortuum. 6. Jordan, oft mentioned in the Scriptures; which issuing out of the Mountains of Galaad. And 7. Hermon, which springing from the hills so named, lose themselves in Jordan. 8. Jordan, so called from Jor and Dan, two neighbouring Fountains, out of which he seems to take his source; though they do also fetch their spring from Phinias, a round deep Well at the foot of Anti-Libanus, about twenty four miles from these Fountains, into which he maketh his way like a Mole under ground. A River of more fame, than length; breadth, or depth, running from North to South, almost in a straight line to the Dead Sea, where he endeth his course; not navigably deep, nor above 10 yards in breadth, where broadest; shadowed on both sides with Poplars, Tamarisks, and Reeds of many several sorts, of some of which the Arabians make Darts & Quarrels, of others Arrows, & some again they fashion into Pens to write with. Passing along it maketh two Lakes, the one in the Upper Galilee, by the Ancients called Sannachonitis, dry for the most part in Summer, and then covered with shrubs and sedge; not mentioned in the holy Scriptures: the other in the Lower Galilee, about an 100 furlongs in length, and about forty in breadth; called the Sea of Galilee from name on the banks thereof, & for the like cause called also the Lake of Genesareth. And here it is to be observed, that the River passeth thorow this Lake with so swift a current, that it preserves it self distinct from the waters of it both in taste and colour, as is affirmed of Nilus for a long time in the Mediterranean, and other great Rivers in their falls. Finally, having run thorow the Plains of Hiericho; it is fifteen it's course at last in the Mare Mortuum, or Dead Sea. Honoured with the name of a Sea, because salt; and large, seventy miles long, and sixteen broad; & furnishing with Salt the whole Land of Jerry, but called the Dead Sea, either because it had no visible efflux into the Ocean; nor is it at all increased with the waters of this River, and many other Torrents which fall into it; or because no living Creature is nourished in it, suffocated with the Bisuminous favour which it fendeth forth, from the abundance of which matter it is also called Lacus Asphaltites. Nigh herunto stood the once famous Cities of Sodom and Gomorrab, with three others more, whence the Valley had the name of Pentapolis, destroyed for their abominations by a fire from heaven: now fruitful in flow only, but not in substance; the fruits here growing, being very fair unto the eye, Sed levi tactu pressa in aqum fassitum pulverem, but if touched, moulder into ashes, as Solinus hath it.

Chief Hills and Mountains of it, besides Anti-Libanus, and Mount Hermion, spoken of already, which be only borderers, are 1 Mount Sion, memorable for the Tower of David, which was built upon it, called frequently the Holy Hill of Sion. 2 Mount Moriab, famous for the intended Sacrifice of Isaac, and the Temple of Solomon. 3 Mount Calvary, on which CHRIST suffered, supposed to be the burial-place of our Father Adam. 4 Mount Tabor, on which our Saviour was transfigured. 5 Mount Oliver, from which he ascended into Heaven. 6 Mount Gazizim, whercon stood the Samaritanians Temple, their ordinary place of Worship, mentioned Joh. 4. 20. 7 The Mountains of Saron, stretching with intermixed Valleys from the Sea of Galilee to the Mediterranean, not far from Tyre, there ending in a white cliff, and for that cause called Capo Bianco by the Sailer. The whole Mountain pleasantly enriched with the fragrant smells of Rosemary, Sweet Marjoram, Hyslop, Bayes, and other Odoriferous Plants which do grow there naturally; but for that, destitute of any other Inhabitants than Leopards, Boars, Jaccals, and such Savage Creatures. 8 The Mountains of Gilboa, the highest on the West of Jordan, as 9 those of Bajan, celebrated for their height in the Book of Psalms. And 10 those of Abarim on the East-side of it: from one of the Summits of which last called Nebo, by some Writers Pigab, the Lord gave Moses a Survey of the Land of Promise.

As for this whole Country comprehended in the name of Palestine, it hath had divers divisions, according to the quality of the people, or the will of those who have been formerly Masters of it. Divided first betwixt the Philistines, Perazites, Hittites, Jebusites, and others of the Sons of Canaan, on this side Jordan; the Moabites, Ammonites, Midianites, and Amorites, dwelling on the other. When conquered by the Sons of Jacob, it was divided into twelve Tribes, of 1 Judah, 2 Benjamin, 3 Simeon, 4 Dan, 5 Aser, 6 Nephthali, 7 Zabulon, 8 Issachar, 9 Gad, 10 Reuben, 11 Ephraim, and 12 Manasseh. When that great breach was made by Jeroboam, in the Kingdom of David, it was broken into the two Kingdoms of Judah and Israel; of which the first contained only the two Tribes of Judah and Benjamin, the latter comprehending the other Ten. When the Israelites were led Captive into Affrya, and a new set of People planted in their rooms, those new-comers from Samarria, their Capital City, had the name of Samaritians: and when the men of Judah were released of their long captivity, and came back from Babylon, they took to themselves the name of Jews. After which time, the whole Country of Palestine anciently possessed or subdued by the seed of Abraham, was divided into 1 Peraz, 2 Ituraea, 3 Galilee, 4 Samarria, 5 Judea, and 6 Idumea. When conquered by the Romans, all these were joynted into one Province, which for a time was reckoned as a part of Syria, or at least subordinate. But Constantine not liking of the one or the other, went a way by himself, and cast it into three Provinces, viz. 1 Palestina

Prima, 2 Palestina Secunda, and 3 Palestina Salutaris; the Metropolis of the first being Casarea Palestina; of the second, Samarria; of the third, Hierusalem. But this division of Constantine's growing out of use, we will adhere unto the former: Beginning first with those parts herof which lay on the other side of Jordan, because first conquered and possessed by the house of Israel; who at that Gate found entrance into all the rest; and coming round to Idumea, which last of last these Provinces was added to the State of Jettyry. In the Chorography wherof, I must confess my self a Debtor to Sir Walter Rowligh, whose industry heren hath saved me a great deal of search, though sometimes I make bold to differ from him, and add to him, as I see occasion.

PERAZ, is that part of Palestine, which lyeth betwixt the River Jordan, and the Mountains of Armon, (which divide Palestine from Syria and Arabia) East and West; and reacheth from Pellain the North, to Petra the chief Town of Arabia Petraea, in the South. By Pliny it is made to bend more towards Aegypt, who describes it thus: Peraz Judea pars est ulterior, Arabia, & Aegypti proxima, apertis dispersis montibus, & acatis Judæis, Jordane amne disiecta. Peraz (saith he) is the furthest part of Judea, neighbouring Arabia and Aegypt, interperfed with rough and craggy Mountains, and parted from the rest of the Jews by the River Jordan. So called from the Greek word παρα, in regard of the situation of it on the other side of that River; and not improperly might be rendered by Trans-Jordania. Blessed with a rich soil, and large fields beset with divers Trees, especially of Olives, Vines, and Palms. The habitation in times past of the Midianites, Moabites, and Ammonites, as also of the two Tribes of Gad and Reuben. Of all which I shall speak in order, beginning with the Midianites, and the Children of Lot, as the first occupants heresof, upon the knowledge of whose affairs, the State and Story of the Israelites hath so much dependence.

And first the ADIANITES inhabited on the South-East of the Dead Sea, at the very entrance of the Country; descended from one or more of the five sons of Madian, the son of Abraham by Keturah, mentioned Gen. 25. 4. who leaving the rest of their brethren to seek themselves new habitations, more towards the Banks of the Red Sea, and the Deserts of Arabia Petraea; continued near unto the place of Abraham's dwelling; and mingling with the Moabites and Canaanites in blood and marriages, came in short time to lose all the knowledge of the true God, and to worship idols, as the rest of their neighbours did.

Their chief Cities were 1 Recome, built by one of the five Kings of the Midianites, which was slain by Joshuah, afterwards called Sebab, 2 King. 14. 7. accounted at that time a City of the Edomites; next of the Israelites or Arabians, and by them called Hogaz. Best known unto the Greeks and Romans, by the name of Petra, and by that name we shall take further notice of it when we come to Arabia. 2 Midian, on the Banks of the Dead Sea, the ordinary residence of their Princes, absolute of themselves at first, as in other places; but at the time when Moses and Joshuah led the People into their possessions, subjected unto Sihon King of the Amorites; whose Dukes their five Kings and Princes are said to be, Joh. 13. 21. A People whom the Israelites had neither Commillion or intent to make War upon, if they had not causlessly provoked them, at the request of the Moabites, by sending amongst them (as Balaam the false Prophet had advised) the most beautiful of all their women, not only to entice them to prohibited mixtures, but to allure them to the worship of their Idols also. A mischievous and successful plot, but alike dangerous to both parties: God sending a fierce Plague amongst the Israelites, which cost them the lives of 24000 persons; besides such as perished by the sword; and giving a command to Moses, to avenge him of the Midianites, who had so provoked him. On Which Commillion Moses called out 12000 men, and sent them under Phineas against the Midianites: by whom all their Princes were slain, their Cities and goodly Castles burnt with fire, their men, women and male-children put unto the sword, as is related in the one and thirtieth Chapter of the Book recovered their former power, if not a greater; and after the death of Barak the Judge of Israel, did for the space of four years so afflict that people, that they were fain to hide themselves in the Caves and strong holds of the mountains, as is said Judg. 6. 2. their enemies having left them v. 4. But Gideon being raised up by God for their deliverance, encountered with their four Kings, and put them to flight: of which four Oreb and Zeeb were taken and slain by the Ephraimites at the passage of Jordan; Zeba and Zalmunna taken by Gideon himself, and War there are said to have perished of this people and which so weakened that we hear no more of them from name and Country being first incorporated into that of the Edomites, and after into that of the Israelites, and of the Inhabitants of Arabia Petraea.

The MOABITES possessed all the Country, from the Midianites in the South, as far as to Esbon in the North, on both sides of the River Arnon: having Jordan on the West, and the Hills of Abarim on the East. Possessed at the first by the Emmins, a race of these being vanquished and broken by Chedorlaomer and his Associates, of which see Gen. 14. 5. their former fears were taken up by the Moabites, descended from Moab, one of the sons of Lot; who lived here in great prosperity till the time of Yabeh, Grand-father unto Balaam, the son of Zippor; from whom Sehon King of the Amorites had taken all the parts of Moab on the North of the River Arnon, and made that River, which before was the middle of Moab, to be the North Bound or border of it. In which estate it stood in the time of Moses.

Chief Cities of it at that time, were 1 Rabbat, the Regal seat of Balaam the King of Moab, the Rhabmabum of Ptolemy. 2 Diblatam, destroyed with the rest of Moab, by Nebuchadnezzar, as is said Jer. 48. 22. 3 Gallim, the Principality of Phadai the Son of Lasib, to whom Saul gave his Daughter Michal, formerly married unto David, 1 Sam. 25. 44. 4 Muthana and 5 Nababiel, thorough called Beer. 6 Banath, where Moses was encamped when he sent to Sehon to demand a passage through his Country, Numb. 21. 19. &c. 7 Mispah, the City of Refuge troubles under Saul, the Mother of David, in the time of his meddled with by Moses in his march this way, the Lord himself forbidding him to touch upon it, or distress it, because it had been given by him for an inheritance to the children of Lot, Deut. 2. 9. Which prohibition was not only for this place particularly; (though this Territory then in their possession) but for all the Lands and chief note for the barbarous and inhumane fact of Michal

the Moabish King, who being besieged herein by the Kings of Judah, Israel, and Edom, without hope of escape, sacrificed his own Eldest Son on the wall thereof; forsook the King of Israel whole the quarrel was. So the siege was raised, 2 King. 3. 17.

Now as Moses did not at the present disobey God's Order, in leaving the Moabites in quiet; so neither did the Moabites on their parts provoke him to any hostile act, giving him a free and open passage in his march for Canaan; out of an hope that when the Amorites were subdued, they should be put into possession of their lost Estates. And though they were deceived of that expectation, the Israelites looking on that Country which they had conquered, as the spoils of the Amorites, and giving it for a possession to the Tribe of Reuben: yet durst they not do any thing in the way of arms, but sent for Balaam the false Prophet, to call them by his Curses and Incantations into some Disasters; whereby their strength and courage might be taken from them. Balaam the son of Zippor was at this time King. After whom we find not the name of any other, till we come to Egdon, who with the help of Ammon and Amalek, overmastered Israel, and for the space of 18 years tyrannized amongst them: when slain in his own House, and afterwards 10000 of his people by the hand of Egdon. But this indignity was in the times succeeding that; but more by David, who subdued them, and made them Tributaries: and not only, but subjected them to the vilest Offices as is imagined in that form of Speech, Moab is my wash-pot, Psal. 68. 8. Taking their opportunity, they withdrew themselves from the House of David, and put themselves under the command of the Kings of Israel, to whom they paid for Tribute in the time of Abah, 100000 Lambs, and 200000 Rams, with their fleeces on: but quickly weary of those payments, and revolting from the House of Abah also, they were invaded by Yehoram, aided herein by the Kings of Judah and Idumea; by whom being vanquished, Michal their King was slain: so shut himself up in Kir-hazareth, as was said before. After this joyning with the Ammonites and the Idumeans or sons of Edom, they invaded Jehoshaphat King of Judah, to whom God gave a memorable and signal Victory, without blood or Battel: the Ammonites first setting upon the Edomites, and after upon one another, till they were almost all destroyed, 2 Chron. 20. 23. From this time we hear nothing of them; but probably they recovered some part of their former Dwellings, when that two Tribes and a half on the East of Jordan were carried away captive by Tiglah Pileser. Possessed herof, and of other their habitations, till the reign of Zedekiah King of Judah; when vanquished, with the rest of these Nations, by Nordin we any mention of them in the Ages following; the name of Moab being forgotten, or grown out of use: the South parts of their Country laid to Arabia Petraea, as the East parts were to that of Arabia Deserta; and all the rest, as well as that which had been conquered by the Jews, swallowed up in the general name of Palestina.

3 The AMMONITES inhabited on the North-East of the River Arnon, and possessed all that Tract from Arnon, on the Head of the River, to the City of Rabbah; and on both sides of the River Jabor, as well within the Mountains of Galaad as without the Sea. The Seat in elder times of the Rephaim, and Zamzummim, a Giant-like Race of men, as the Emmins were; but vanquished also, as the others, by Chedorlaomer.

Chedor-Neuser, Ashurath and Heth being then the principal of their Habitations. Succeeded too in their desolate and forsaken dwellings, by the children of Ammon, the other Son of Lot, and the Brother of Moab; both Houses running the same fortune; These Ammonites being conquered, and deprived of the best part of their Country on the South-side of Jabob, by Og King of Basan; as the Moabites, at the same time, of theirs by Sehon. A Monument of which subjection was the Bed of Og, found in the City of Rabbah, the chief City of Ammon, there to be seen when Moses had subdued the Kings of the Amorites, as appeareth in Deut. 3.

Chief Cities at such time as the Israelites first conquered the Land of Canaan, were 1 Rabbah, the Regal City of their Kings; taken by Og of Basan as is said before; but again quitted as it seemeth on the coming of Moses, that he might be better able to keep the Field. Memorable in succeeding times for the death of Uriah, slain here by a design of David's when belied by Joab. Who having brought it to terms of yielding, sent for the King to come before him, that he might have the honour of taking a place so defensible, environed in a manner with the River Jabob, and therefore called the City of Waters; 2 Sam. 12. 27. Afterwards repaired and beautified by Ptolemy Philadelphus, King of Egypt, who having made himself Master of those parts of Arabia, which lay near unto it, and liking the conveniency of the situation, honoured it with the name of Philadelphia; 3 Darbema, supposed to be Rishma, by the Learned Junius, mentioned Numb. 33. 18. (the Hebrew Letters D and A being much alike) a place of great strength among the Ammonites. 3 Mimeth, in the South Border, and 4 Abel-vinorum in the East Border of Ammon; both mentioned in the pursuit of that People when subdued by Jephthe. 5 Mispa, sometimes one of the Cities of the half Tribe of Manasse, and at that time honoured with the residence of Jephthe; but afterwards recovered by the Children of Ammon; in whose hands it was, when utterly destroyed and burnt by Judas Maccabeus, 1 Macc. 5. 35. 6 Magog, and 7 Bor, two other strong places of the Ammonites, there also mentioned; but said to be in the Region of Galaad, by which name, or by that of Gileadites, all the Country of the Ammonites lying on this side of the Mountains was at that time called.

As for those Ammonites, they had nothing at all to do with Israel as they passed towards Canaan; neither provoking them, nor being provoked by them, to any acts of hostility. Afterwards not well pleased that they were not reforested to the possession of those Lands which had been taken from them by Og of Basan, (conferred by the Decree of Moses on the Tribe of Gad) they joined with the Midianites in their Expedition. But wearied by the pusillane and good fortune of Gideon; they lay still a while, till stirred up by some secret motion from Almighty God, to avenge him on that sinful and Idolatrous People, who by worshipping the gods of the Heathen, had provoked him to anger. Prosperous in it for a time, till his wrath was pacified; who having made use of them to chastise his People, delivered up his Rod to be burnt by Jephthe, vanquished and driven home by him with a very great slaughter. Not so much crushed by the unsuccessfulness of this attempt, but that in the time of Saul they brake out again and besieged Jabesh Gilead; Nababli, a cruel Tyrant, being then their King, who having brought the City into great extremity, would give them no other conditions than the loss of every man's right eye: to the end that using to carry a great Target on their left Arms, where-with the eye on that side was wholly shadowed, they might by this means be disabled from all future service. But Saul came time enough to save them from that shame and loss; from that cause so offensive to Nababli, that to despight him, he shewed friendship to David in the time of his trouble. A courtship which David was so mindful of, that he sent Embassadors to Hanan the Son of Nababli, to make acknowledgment of it, and to confirm the amity which he had with his Father: but found so ill requital from him, that instead of thanks and kind acceptance, his Messengers were despitfully handled, their Beards half shaven, and their Garments cut off by the knee. Incensed therewith he sent Joab against them; by whom the Country was laid waste, and Rabbah their chief City taken; their Kings Crown weighing a Talent of Gold, set on David's head, and all the Prisoners executed with great severity, some of them being cast into Lime-kilns, and the rest torn in pieces with Saws and Harrows. Quiet a long while after this, we hear no great news of them till the reign of Jehoshaphat, against whom confederated with the Edomites and Moabites, they made open War; but fell by one another's Swords, as was said before. Not well recovered of this blow, they were subdued and made Tributaries by Ozias King of Judah, and so continued in the time of Joatham his Son; who so increased the tribute laid upon them by his Father, that it amounted to an hundred Talents of Silver, ten thousand measures of Wheat, and as many of Barley. Taught by this Lesson how to value the Kings of Judah, they continued either quiet Neighbours, or obedient Subjects, though much improved in power and reputation, by regaining the greatest part of their ancient Dwellings, on the removal of the two Tribes and an half, on the East of Jordan, to the Land of Affria, by Tiglah Pilser. For after this (with reference to the common danger) Baalis their King was so strict a Confederate with Zedechias, that when Nebuchadnezzar had taken Zedechias with him unto Babylon, and left Gedaliah as his Deputy to command the Country, Ismael, one of the blood of the Kings of Judah, was sent by Baalis to slay him. But he paid dear for his attempt; his Country being shortly conquered by the Babylonians, and the name of Ammonite forgotten: changed by the Gracians when they came to Lord it over them, to those of Gileadites and Philadelphia; according to the new name of their Principal City; and the old one of the Mountains and Hills adjoining.

4 The REUBENITES took name from Reuben, the eldest of Jacob's Sons by Leah; of whom, in the first Muster which was made of them at Mount Sinai, there were found 46000 fighting men; and 43700 at the second Muster, when they passed over Jordan. Their dwelling was on the East of that famous River, having the Gadites on the North, the Desart Arabia on the East, and the Land of Moab on the South, from which parted by the River Arnon.

Places of most observation here, Abel-Sittim, seated in that part of the Country which is called the Plains of Moab; the last incamping place of Moses: afterwards by the Jews called simply Sittim: Memorable for the Wood so often mentioned in the Scriptures, of which the Ark of the Lord was made. In after-times by some Greeks and Romans it was called Abila, mistook by some for that Abila or Abilene wherof Lysanias was Tetrarch: that Town and Territory, as Josaphus doth ascribe expressly, being situate amongst the spurs and branches of Libanus, far enough from hence. 2 Beth-barah, or Beth-Bara, where John baptized, and Moses made his last and most Divine exhortations to the Tribes of Israel contained in Deuteronomy. 3 Macbarn, the strongest in-land City and Castle in those parts of the World, standing aloft upon a Mountain every way unaccessible: first fortified by Alexander Jannaeus King of the Jews, as a frontier Town against the Arabians; and afterwards demolished by Gabinus, one of Pompey's Lieutenants, in the War against Antipater. Unfortunately remarkable for the death of John Baptist, where murdered by the command of Herod the Tetrarch of Galilee, and Lord of this Country of Perea. 4 Lafsa, or Lejab, of which Gen. 10. 19: by the Greeks called Callirhoe, by reason of the fair Fountains rising from the Hills adjoining, out of which issue Springs both of hot and cold Waters, as also bitter and sweet; all which soon after joined into one stream, make a wholesome Bath, especially for Convulsions and contraction of Sinews. 5 Medeba, famous for the defeat given to the Syrians and Ammonites by the conduct of Joab, 1 Chron. 19. 7. In the time of the Greeks laid with some other Towns of this Tract unto Cela-Syria; but in the declining times of the Seleucian Family, regained unto the Crown of the Jewry by Alexander, the second King of the Race of the Maccabees; and finally, with eleven others in those parts, delivered by Antipater the Father of Herod into the hands of Aretas King of the Arabians, hoping thereby to gain him to the side of Hyrcanus the Son of Alexander, whose cause Antipater most favoured. 6 Bor, or Bozra, a City of Refuge, and one of those that were assigned unto the Levites on that side of the Water. 7 Livias, a Town new built by Herod, in honour of Livia, the Mother of Tiberius Caesar: different from that which the Geographers call Libia (though by some confounded) the same with Laban, mentioned Deut. 1. 1. 9 Kedemoth, another City of the Levites, giving name unto the adjoining Desert, from whence Moses sent his Ambassage to Sehon King of the Amorites. 10 Banath-Baal, the chief City of the Worshipers of Baal, to which Balaam was brought by Balaac to curse the Israelites. 11 Heshbon, the Regal City of Sehon King of the Amorites. 12 Adam, or the City over Jordan, opposite unto Gilgal in the Tribe of Benjamin. Within this Tribe is the Mountain Nabo, from which Moses took a view of the Land of Canaan: an eth towards Jericho, is called Pisgab: that which looketh toward Moab being called Hur. Here is also a high shipped also, who hath hence the addition of Baal-Peor.

5 The GADITES were so called from Gad the seventh Son of Jacob, begot on Zilpah the Hand-maid of Leah; of whom were found at the first Muster hundred and fifty fighting men; and at the second, when they entered the Land of Canaan, forty five thousand bearing Arms. Their situation was betwixt the Reubenites on the South, and the half Tribe of Manasse upon the North; the River Jordan on the West, and the Mountains of Arnon on the East; by which last parted from the dwellings of the Children of Ammon. Cities of most observation; 1 Aroer, on the Banks of the River Arnon, the principal City of the Gadites. 2 Dibon, more towards Jordan; of great note in the time of Josiah, and of no small account in the time of Saint Hierom. 3 Beth-nimrah, of which Esey prophesied that the Waters thereof should be dried up; feared upon the Arnon also. 4 Natowah, more in the body of the Tribe. 5 Beth-haram, mentioned by John, chap. 13. v. 27. by Josaphus called Betaramphus; new built by Herod Antipater, and called Livias, in honour of Livia the Wife of Augustus Caesar, translated into the Julian Family; who also laid out its fourteen Villages, to make it of the greater Power and Jurisdiction. 6 Beth-zabab, by Josaphus called Vatcedra, the habitation of Miriam, who in the Siege of Jerusalem, when destroyed by Titus, was compelled by Famine to eat her own Son. 7 Succoth, not far from the River Jordan, so called from the Tents or Booths which Jacob set up there, in his passage from Mesopotamia to the Land of Canaan: the People of which Town having denied relief to Gideon, as he followed the chase of Zebah and Zalmunna, were by him miserably tortured at his return, under a Tribulum or Threshing-Car, wherewith he tore their flesh, and bruised their bodies. 8 Jabaz, another of the Regal Seats of Sehon King of the Amorites; first taken by Moses, after recovered by the Moabites (as appeareth Isa. 16. 8) then possessed by the Ammonites; and finally from thence regained by Judas Maccabeus, 1 Macc. 5. 8. Maonaim, so called from the Army of Angels which appeared to Jacob (Gen. 32. 2) as ready to defend him against all his Enemies, the word very great strength and safety. A place of very great strength and safety, and therefore made by Abner the Seat Royal of Israhel, the Son of Saul, during the War he had with David; as afterwards the retiring place of David, during the Rebellion of his Son Abishalom. 10 Regelim, the City of Barzillai the Gileadite, so faithful to David in that War. 11 Ramoth, or Ramoth Gilead, so called from the situation of it near the Mountains of Gilead; a Town of special note in the Book of Rod: particularly, for the Facilitation here made between Jacob and Laban; for the death of Abah King of Israel, who lost his Life in the recovery of it from the hands of the Syrians; and finally, for the Election of Jehoi to the Crown of Israel. Anointed at the Siege hereof, by a Son of the Prophets. 12 Penuel, so called from the interview which the Lord pleased to bestow there on his Servant Jacob, at his return out of Mesopotamia, the place of the face or vision of God: defaced by Gideon for their churchful usage of him, when he craved relief of them against the Midianites; to whom, together with pertaining to these two Tribes, did once belong. But King of the Amorites, it came by the overthrow of those to the Tribes of Gad and Reuben, for their habitation. Continuing theirs till the fall period of the Kingdom of Israel began to approach; at what time these two Tribes, with the half Tribe of Manasse lying on the East of Jordan, being carried captive unto Affria, by Tiglah Pilser, the Moabites and Ammonites recovered a great part of their ancient dwellings. Of which possessed, till their subversion by the Babylonians. Afterwards this whole Country coming into the hands of the Kings of Syria, had the name of Perea, for the reason formerly delivered. And being won piece-meal by the Maccabees, came with the rest of the Kingdom of Judah, to the possession of Herod the Great; by whom bequeathed at his death unto Herod Antipater, one of his Sons, who held, together with both Galilee, under the name of Tetrarch of Galilee and Perea, as Josaphus; or of Galilee only, as Saint Luke; who being dead, it was bestowed on Agrippa King of the Jews, of whom more hereafter.

2 ITURÆA.

ITURÆA hath on the East and North, Calo-Syria; on the West, the River Jordan and on the South, Peera. So called from Itur one of the sons of Ymael, seated in this Tract; though lost by his Posterity to the Ammonites; and by them made the Patrimony of the Kings of Basan. The Race of which King ending in Og, the wealthiest and best parts hereof, were given by Moses to the half Tribe of Manasse; such parts of it as lay towards Damascus being seized on by the neighbouring Aramites, and made a Kingdom of it self, called the Kingdom of Gessur; and the more mountainous and unpleasant left to the first Inhabitants, as not worth the conquering. But both the Kingdom of Gessur, and those of the half Tribe of Manasse, shifting from one Lord to another, till they came into the hands of the Greeks; the name of Ituræa revived again and grew into very good esteem: the Ituræans being reputed for good Soldiers, especially at his Bow and Arrows; of which thus the Poet in his Georgicks, lib. 2.

—Ituræas raxi torquentur in Arcus.

Of the best Bows that can be had

The Ituræan Bows are made.

The whole Country in the times of the Greeks and Romans, divided into Trachonites and Ituræa, specially so called: this last again being subdivided into Batanea, Gaulonitis, Auranitis, and Pamæa. For whereas it is said in St. Luke's Gospel, that Philip the Brother of Herod was Tetrarch of Ituræa, and the Region of Trachonitis; and by Josephus, that for his Tetrarchy he had the Provinces of Trachonitis, Batanea, Gaulonitis, Auranitis, and Pamæa: it must needs be that the four last mentioned Provinces make up that one, which by St. Luke is comprehended in the name of Ituræa, distinct from that of Trachonitis, though a part thereof. Inhabited in the time of Josephus, as in those of John and David, both by Jews and Syrians; the Syrians dwelling in the mountainous and more barren parts, the Jews in that which was assigned them in the time of Moses; the whole not yielding unto Galilee for extent of ground, but far inferior to it for wealth and fruitfulness; not well inhabited where best, and in some places which are desert and very barren, hardly inhabited at all, or bearing any thing but wild fruits. Such was it in the time of Josephus, and not bettered since.

TRACHONITIS is that mountainous and hilly Country, which beginning at the borders of the Ammonites, where the Hills are called the Mountains of Gilead, extendeth it self Northwards as far as Libanus: the Hills in those parts being by the Jews called Galeed, Syrian, and Hermon; but by the Greeks, for the craggy and roughness of them, by the name of Trachones. The people mischievously bent and much given to Witchcraft, as we find in Strabo. Montanum regimen incolum Iurel & Arabes, malefici omnes. So he, or his Translator rather, for I have not the original by me. Where by Arabians he meant those of Trachonitis, which every where he maketh to be the same with Ituræa, though differing from it as the Cotivold Countries do from the rest of Gloucestershire, or as a part doth from the whole, because united by that name into one Estate, at the time he lived in. Solet & Trachonitis Ituræa nomine appellari, faith the learned Grotius, according to the general consent of the ancient Writers. A people generally addicted to spoil and robbery, living especially on the spoil of those Merchants which traded to and from Damascus: till with some difficulty restrained to a more orderly life by Herod, on whom Augustus Cæsar had bestowed the Country, to the end that by the strong hand he might hold them in.

The People and the Country by Josephus are thus described. "The Trachonites (faith he) have neither Towns, nor Lands, nor Heritage, nor any other possessions, but only certain Retreats and Caves under the ground, where they lived like Beasts: and having made abundant provision of water and victuals, were able to hold out a long time against any Assailant. For the doors of their Caves were made so narrow, that they could be entered but by one at once; and the way to them not direct, but full of turnings and windings, not possibly to be found out but by the help of a Guide: The whole Country naturally consisting of craggy Rocks.

The passages of the Caves once entered, they were found to be very large and spacious; sufficient to contain great multitudes of those Thievish people, who when they had not opportunity to spoil their Neighbours, would rob one another, and omitted no kind of wickedness, being so accustomed to theft, that they could not live otherwise. So he. But I conceive this is not meant generally of all the people, but only of some body of Thieves or Out-laws, which possessed themselves of the streights of the Mountains; and from thence issued to assault and spoil the Passengers. For it is afterwards expressed, that revolting upon the news of Herod's death, and committing new outrages; they no sooner heard of his recovery but they fled the Country, and betook themselves unto a strong Castle in Arabia, where they increased to the number of a 1000 persons, so that there is no question to be made at all, but they had Villages & Lands, and Heritages, in the more civil parts hereof, though not amongst those Mountainers which Josephus speaks of. And amongst those, I reckon, 1. Gerra, 2. Elera, 3. Nalasa, 4. Adrama; all named by Ptolemy, and all placed by him in the Longitude of 70 degrees or upwards: more towards the East than well agreeeth with the position of this Country, or with any part of Batanea, lying more towards the West than Trachonitis, though to the part of Ituræa, by him ascribed. Hither also I refer the City of Ysbythe, the Country of old Tobit, and of the Prophet Elihu. 6. Tob, where Japheth lived in exile, when oppressed by his brethren, till the necessities of his Country called him to the publick Government. 7. Hippus, at the foot of those Mountains, reckoned amongst the Cities of Calo-Syria, differing in soil as well as Etymology from another of the same name in Batanea: this being so named from the Mountain Hippus, under which it standeth; that from a Garrison of Horse there placed, as shall there be shewn. 8. Bathina, on the borders of this Country towards Batanea, built there by Herod, and planted with a Colony of the Jews which came thither from Babylon; the better to suppress the infolencies, and prevent the Robberies of this thievish people, accustomed (as before is said) unto spoil and rapine.

BATANEÆ is that part of Ituræa which anciently made up the best and greatest part of the Kingdom of Basan, whence it had this name: the changing of S. to T. as Assyria into Atyria, and the like, being usual among the Greeks. But that Kingdom being brought to an end by Moses, it was given to the half Tribe of Manasse, so called of Manasse the son of Joseph; of whom there were found at the first muster near Mount Sinai, 32200 men able to bear arms; which though consumed in the Deserts, yet were they of such a swift increase, that there were found 52700 fighting men of them, when they passed over Jordan. Their Territory on that side of the River, stretching from Jacob on the South, to the Realm of Gessur on the North; and from the Mountains unto unto Jordan, East and West, was exceeding fertile: replenished with all sorts of Cattel, and adorned with the goodliest woods in that part of the world, the Oaks of Basan being celebrated in the holy Scriptures.

It had in its fixty fenced Cities when first conquered by those of this Tribe. The principal of which, 1. Pella, formerly called Buith, but being rebuilt by Selaucus, the great King of Syria, was by him called Pella; with reference to a City of that name in Macedon, the birth-place of Alexander, to whom Selaucus owed his greatness and whole estate. Destroyed by Alexander Jannæus King of the Jews, because not willing to admit of the Law of Moses; it was afterwards restored by Pompey to its former lustre. Memorable in Church story for the Admonition or premonishment, given by a voice from Heaven, to the Christians dwelling at Hierusalem, to remove thence and dwell at Pella, that so they might escape that destruction, which the Roman Army under Titus was to bring upon it. 2. Edrey, the Seat-rory of the Kings of Basan. 3. Carnaim, on the banks of Jaboc, taken by Judas Macabæus, who set fire on the Temple of the idols there, and burnt therein all such as fled thither for Sanctuary. 4. Ephron, a strong City upon Jordan, taken and burnt by the same Judas Macabæus, for refusing to give a passage to his Army. 5. Japheth Gilead, more near unto the Mountains, whence it had that Adjunct; memorable in the Scriptures, for the siege of Nabab King of the Ammonites, the raising of that siege by Sand, and the gratitude of the people towards him again, in taking down, emfons, which the embombing the bodies of him and his on the walls of Bethlaim. 6. Ashtaroth, a City of great note in the elder times: the seat of the Rephaim, a Giant-like Race of men, of whom defended Og of Basan, from whence the Country adjoining had the name of the Land of Giant. 7. Ashtaroth, the Goddesses of the Sidonians, had here her Worshipers. 8. Gadon sometimes possessed by Og of Basan, and afterwards made one of the Cities of Refuge; of such esteem in the times of the Greeks and Romans, that the North part of Bataneæ or Batanea was called Gaulonitis; divided into Superiour and Inferiour, so often mentioned by Josephus. And of this City or Country was that Judas of Galilee, spoken of in the fifth of the Acts, the Founder of the Gaulonites, or Anti-Herodians. 8. Gannala in the lower Gaulonitis, so called because the Hill upon which it stood was fashioned like the back of a Camel: invincibly situate, strengthened both by Art and Nature; and at the last with so great difficulty and hazard of Peppab's person, stormed by Titus, that the Roman in the heat of the execution, spared neither Women fled, except some few women which had hid themselves. 9. Gadara, after ten months siege, taken and destroyed by Alexander Jannæus King of the Jews; repaired by Pompey, and by Gabinus made one of the five Seats of Justice for the whole Country of Palestine: the other four being Hierusalem, Jericho, Hamath, and Sypharab. 10. Gese, or Gese, the chief City of the Gese, the people whereof on the loss of their Swine intreated our Saviour to depart out of their Coast, as St. Matthew hath Gadara. Not that the Cities were both one, or the Evangelists at odds in their Relation; but because they were two neighbouring Cities, and their fields lay in common pour cause de voisinage, as our Lawyers phrase it; and so far from the River Jordan, so called from a Garrison of Hippus, as some suppose, which is too far off to have any influence upon it. 12. Julias, built by Philip the Tetrarch of Ituræa in the Southern border of his estate, in imitation of the like work of Herod the Tetrarch of Galilee and Tiberias Cæsar. 13. Abel, by Josephus called Abel Machaba, besieged by Joab, and the City brought into some danger, had his head cut off, and thrown over the Wall, at the periwallow of a wife Woman of the Town. So the rebellion ended, and the City was saved.

North of Bataneæ, or Batanea, lieth the Kingdom of GESUR, by a latter name called AURANITIS, from Hawan, a Chief City of it, mentioned by the Prophet Ezechiel, chap. 16. 18. "A Kingdom spoken of by Moses as the Northern bound of the half Tribe of Manasse on that side of Jordan, Deut. 4. 14. by Josephus as the Northern border of the Kingdom of Basan, Chap. 12. 5. but reckoned as a part of Syria because held by the Aramites, 2 Sam. 15. 8. "A Kingdom though of no great Territory, yet of some consideration in the eye of the World: David effecting the alliance of the Kings hereof of some use unto him; and therefore marrying he had Abisalom the daughter of Talmi, King of Gessur, by whom he had Abisalom and Tamar. And to this King it was three years as the story telleth us.

Conterminous to this, or at least not very much distant from it was the petty Kingdom of Ik-tob, which sent 12000 men to the aid of the Ammonites against David: and not far off, but more towards Palmire, or Aram-Zobab, that of Beir-Rehob, Confederate in the same War also with the other Syrians, mention whereof is made in the second Book of Samuel, Chap. 10. 6. Which whether is they belonged to Syria, or to those North parts of Ituræa, is of no great certainty, and as little consequence. For news of them, I swallowed up not long after (as it seems) by the Kings of Damascus.

To return therefore into Gessur, as more certainly lieth in the limits of Palestine, the places of most observation in it, were 1. Gessur, then the chief City of it, and giving name unto the whole. 2. Mahaneh, or Macut, as some call it: conceived to be that Mancha mentioned in Chron. 19. 6. But of this we have already spoken in Comagend. 3. Chauran, or Hauran, mentioned by the Prophet Ezechiel, Chap. 47. whence these Northern parts of Palestine were called Auranites. 4. Chastar-Herem, there mentioned by that Prophet also. 5. Ys, near the borders of Damascus, the first habitation of Ys the son of Aram, and Grand-child of Sem, by whose name so called: supposed to be the Founder of Damascus also, and that more probably, than that the Country thereabouts should be the Land of Hus ennobled by the dwelling and story of Job. 6. Sutera, mentioned by Bochart, and by some conceived to be the habitation of Baldad, firnamed the Shuabite, one of Job's three Friends, mentioned in that story: but both of him, and Job himself, and the Land of Hus, we shall speak more at large when we come to Arabia. More certainly remarkable for a Fort of great strength and use, for the commanding of the Country; recovered from the Turks in the time of Baldwin the second, by digging with incredible labour through the very Rock upon which it was seated.

As for the fortunes of this part, after the Tribes on that side of Jordan were led captive into Assyria, and the Kingdom of Damascus subverted by Tiglab-Pileser; it followed the fortune of the Babylonian and Persian Empires; together with which it came to the Macedonian Kings of the Race of Selaucus. In the declining of which House it was conquered (or at least the greatest part thereof) by Alexander the second, King of the Jews of the Place of the Maccabees; but lost again for the most part in the time of Hircanus the Son of Alexander; yet afterwards made up the greatest part of the Kingdom of Chalchis, possessed by Ptolomy the Son of Meneus, in the beginning of Herod's greatness: who dying left it to Lysanias his eldest son, murdered about seven years after by Marc. Antony on the suggestions of Cleopatra, who presently seized on his Estates, but Antony and Cleopatra, having left the Stage, Lysanias a son of the murdered Prince entereth next upon it, by the permission of Augustus. During whose time Zenodorus, Lord of the Town and Territory of Panais, farming his Demefies, and paying a very great rent for them; not only suffered the Trachonites to play the Robbers, and infect the Merchants of Damascus, but received part of the booty with them. Augustus, on complaint hereof, giveth the whole Country of Trachonitis, Batanea, Golanitis, and Auranitis, to Herod the Ascalonite, before created King of Jenny; that by his puilliance and power he might quell those Robbers, and reduce the Country into order: Leaving unto Lysanias nothing but the City of Abila, (of which he was the natural Lord) whereof and of the adjoining Territory, he was afterwards created Tetrarch, by the name of the Tetrarch of Abilene, mentioned Luke 3. Nor did Herod's good fortune end in this. For presently on the death of Zenodorus, not long after following, Augustus gave him also the District of Panais (of which we shall speak more when we come to Galilee;) which with the Countries formerly taken from Lysanias, made up the Tetrarchy of Philip his youngest Son; affording him the yearly Revenue of 100 Talents, which make 37500 l. of English money. On Philip's death, his Tetrarchy was by Caius Caligula conferred on Agrippa the Nephew of Herod by his Son Archibolus; whom he had also dignified with the title of King: after whose death, and the death of Agrippa Minor, who next succeeded, his estates ccheated to the Romans, and have since had the same fortune with the rest of Palestine.

3 GALILEE.

GALILEE is bounded on the East, with Batanea, and part of the half Tribe of Manasse on that side of Jordan; on the West, with the Sea-coast of Phoenicia, on the Mediterranean; on the North, with Anti-Libanus; on the South, with Samaria. So called as some say, from Gallath, a Phoenician word signifying as much as borders; because the bordering Country betwixt them and the Jews.

The Country not so large as that on the other side of the River, but far more fertile; naturally fertile of it self, every where producing excellent fruits without much pains to the Husbandman, and so well cultivated in old times, that there was hardly any waste ground to be found in it. Thick set with Cities, Towns, and Villages, in the time of Josephus, and those so populous and rich, that the smallest Village in it is affirmed by that Author, to comprehend no fewer than 15000 Inhabitants. A number beyond all parallel, if reported rightly, and not mistaken in the transcripts. The people from their childhood very stout and warlike, not daunted for fear of want, or dread of penury: which seconded by their valour and almost incredible numbers, made them experimentally known for a tough piece of employment when subdued by Titus. And this, together with their zeal to the Jewish Religion, makes it more than probable, that there was something in them of the ancient Israhelites; and that they were not merely of an Affryan, either stock or spirit, but intermixt with such remainders of the Tribes as had saved themselves, either by flying to the Mountains or hiding themselves in Caves and Defarts, or otherwise were inconsiderable for strength and numbers, in the great transplantation of them made by Salmannasser. And in this I am the more confirmed by their speech or language, which was the same with that of the natural Jews, differing no otherwise from it than in tone, and dialect; as our Northern English doth from that which is spoke in London: as appeareth by the communication which the Damofel had with St. Peter, in the High-Priests Hall; in which the plainly understood him, but so, that the pronounced him for a Galilean. For had the Transplantation been so universal, as some think it was, and that both sick and sound, old and young had been carried away, and none but Colonies of the Affryans to fill up their places; it must needs be that those Norcomers would have planted their own language there, as the Saxons did on the extirpation of the Britons, on this side of the Severn. The like may be affirmed of the other Tribes on this side of Jordan, especially Simeon and Dan, which either bordering upon Judah, or having their Lands and Cities intermingled with it, continued in great numbers in their former dwellings, under the Patronage or subjection of the Kings thereof.

Divided it was anciently into the Higher and Lower. The Higher so called from its situation more amongst the Mountains, had also the name of Galilee Gentium, or Galilee of the Gentiles; and that either because it lay betwixt the Gentiles and the rest of the Jews; or because a great part of it had been given by Solomon to the Kings of Tyre. But for what cause soever it was called so first, certain it is, it held this name unto the last; known by it in the time of the Apostles, as appeareth by St. Matthew's Gospel, Chap. 4. 15. The Lower Galilee is situate on the South of the other, memorable for the Birth and Education of our blessed Saviour, whom Julian the Apostate called for this cause, in scorn, the Galilean: as for the same, the Disciples generally had the name of Galileans imposed upon them, till that of Christians, (being a name of their own choosing) did in fine prevail. Both, or the greatest part of both, known in the New Testament by the name of Decapolis, or Regio Decapolitana, mentioned Mat. 4. 25. Mark 7. 31. So called from the ten principal Cities of it, that is to say, 1. Cesarea Philippi. 2. Afr. 3. Cedes-Niphtalim. 4. Seiphet. 5. Chorazin. 6. Capernaum. 7. Botphida. 8. Togata. 9. Tiberias. And 10. Seythopolis. By which account it stretched from the Adiditramen to the head of Jordan, East and West; and from Libanus to the hills of Gilboa, North and South; which might make up a square of forty miles. With reference to the Tribes of Israhel, the whole Galilee was to be disposed of, that Aser, Nephthali, and a part of the Tribe of Dan, had their habitation in the Higher; Zabulon, and Issachar in the Lower: according to which distribution we will now describe them.

The Tribe of NAPHTHALI, was so called from NAPHTALI the sixth Son of Jacob, begotten on Bilhah the hand-maid of Rachel; of whom at their first multer were found 53400 fighting men, and at the second 44540 able to bear arms. The Land allotted to them lay on the West side of the River Jordan, opposite unto the Northern parts of Issachar; where before we left: having on the West, the Tribe of Aser; and that of Zabulon on the South. Within which Tract were certain Cities which they never conquered; and one which we pertained to the Tribe of Dan: the chief of those which were with-held by the Gentiles, being Chalcis, Abila, Heliopolis, Cities accounted of as belonging to Celestia; where they have been spoken of already.

That which had appertain to the Tribe of DAN lay on the North-East part hereof, confronting the most Northern

Northern parts of Issachar, as before was said; where the Danites held one Town of moment, besides many other of less note. And it seemed destined to this Tribe by some old Prefage; the Eastern Fountain of Jordan (which hath its original in this Tract) being called Dan, at the time of the defeat which Abraham gave to Chedorlosomer and his associates, hundreds of years before this Tribe had ever a possession in it. Of which see Gen. 14. 14. The Town of moment first called Lehem, by some Writers Laish: afterwards subject or allied to the Kings of Sidon, and upon strength thereof made good against those of Naphthali; but taken by some adventurers of the Tribe of Dan. Of whom it is said Josh. 19. 47. That finding their own Country too little for them, they went up and fought against Lehem, which they took, and called DAN. Accompted after this exploit, the utmost bound Northward of the Land of Canaan, the length thereof being measured from Dan in the North, unto Beerseba in the South: was remarkable for one of the Golden Calves which was placed here by one of the for the two spring heads of Jordan, rising near unto it. When conquered by the Romans it was called Panais, from a Fountain adjoining of that name: which with the Territory about it, after the death of Zenodorus, was held it of the Roman Empire, as before was said, was given by Augustus Cesar unto Herod the Great: and by him at his decease to Philip his youngest Son, with the Tetrarchy of Issachar and Trachonitis. By him repaired and beautified, it was called Cesarea Philippi, partly to curry favour of his own name: partly to preserve the memory of other Cesarea situate on the shore of the Mediterranean, and called Cesarea Palmyra: and being so repaired by him, it was made the Metropolis of that Tetrarchy. Mentioned by that name, Mat. 16. 13. when St. Peter made that confession or acknowledgment of his Lord and Master, that he was CHRIST the Son of the living God. By King Agrippa, who succeeded him in his Estates, in honour of the Emperor Nero, it was called Neronia. But that, and the Adjunct of Philippi, were of no continuance: the Town being called Cesarea Panais in the time of Ptolomy, and simply Panais, as before, in the time of St. Hierom. Of this Cesarea was that Woman whom our Saviour cured of the bloody Flux, by touching but the Hem of his Garment: who in a pious gratitude of so great a mercy, erected two Statues in this place, representing CHRIST, and her self kneeling at his feet; remaining here entire till the time of Julian the Apostate, by whose command it was cast down, and a Statue of his own set up in the place thereof, miraculously destroyed by a fire from Heaven. The City being at that time, and long before, an Episcopal See. Of less note there were, 1. Haleb, and 2. Recabath, both situate in the confines of it. And not far off the strong Town and Castle of 3. Magdala, (the habitation, as some say of Mary Magdalen) where the Pharisees desired a sign of our Saviour CHRIST, as is said Mat. 15. 39. & 16. 1. reporting the same part of the Story called Dalmatiana, Chap. 8. 10. 11. But whether this Castle did anciently belong to these Danites, or to those of Naphthali, or to the half Tribe of Manasse beyond the River, I am not able to determine.

Of those which were in the possession of the Tribe of NAPHTHALI, the Cities of most eminent observation were, 1. Hazor, or Azor, by Yunus and Tremilium called Chazar, the Regal City and Metropolis of all the Canaanites: memorable for the Rendezvous, of 24 Canaanite Kings in the War with Joshua; by whom it was taken notwithstanding, and burnt to ashes. But being afterwards rebuilt, it became the Regal Seat of Jabin the King of the Canaanites, who so grievously for the space of 20 years, afflicted Israhel; till vanquished by Deborah and Barak. Destroyed in that War, and repaired by Solomon, it continued in so good estate in our Saviour's time, that it was then one of the ten Cities of Decapolis; it being so still, but known by the name of Asiopolis, 2. Capernaum, seated on the River Jordan, where it falleth into the Sea of Galilee; of which Country it was accounted the Metropolis, in the time of our Saviour, with whose presence and preaching often honoured, and one of the principal of the Decapolitan. Some marks of its former greatness it retained when St. Hierom lived, who conselleth it to be a Town of some good capacity, but so decayed in the time of Breidenbach and Brochardus, that it consisted but of six poor Fishermen houses, 3. Hamat, so called from Hannabi the Son of Canaan, planted in these parts; a Town of such esteem in the elder times that it was reckoned to be one of the Gate of the Land of Canaan; and therefore called in Scripture, Introitus Hamathi, or the entrance of Hamat; as Numb. 34. 8. Josh. 13. 5. Judg. 3. 5. &c. Mistaken by St. Hierom for another of the same name in Syria, by the Greek and Roman writers, called Epiphania. And in this I lay he is mistaken; Epiphania being placed by Ptolomy two degrees more Eastward than Cesarea Philippi, the most Eastern City of all Galilee; & two degrees more North than that, though the most Northern City of all Palestine. The ground of Damascus, it was again recovered to the Crown of Israhel, by Jeroboam the second Son of Jon; and after added by the Romans (as were Seythopolis, Tella, Gadara, and some others of this tract) unto Celestia, 4. Kadshi, to difference it from others of the same name, called Kadshi-Naphtolim, high seated on the top of an Hill, as is said, Josh. 20. 7. The King whereof being taken and slain by Joshua, it was made one of the Cities of Refuge, and given to the Levites. Most memorable for the Birth of Jabin before mentioned, in the infancy of the Jewish State; one of the ten Cities of Decapolis, in the time of the Romans; and an Episcopal See in the first ages of Christianity, 5. Riblah, watered with the fountain of Danphais, a little Rivulet, which hereabouts falleth into Jordan: so which City, as some say (but I think erroneously) Zedechias the unfortunate King of the Jews was brought Prisoner unto Nebuchadnezzar who caused his children to be slain before his face, & then put out his eyes. But this I look on as an Error in them that say it. The scene of this Tragedy being by Josephus laid in Riblah (or Riblah) a City of Syria; the same which in succeeding times had the name of Antioch. And certainly Josephus, who for so long was Governor of both the Galilees, cannot be conceived to be so ignorant of the State of this Province, as to transfer that bloody execution to a City of Syria, if it had been acted in this Country. Nor can I think that this Riblah, none of the greatest Towns in the Tribe of Naphthali, should be capable of the Court and Train of that mighty Monarch; especially for so long a time, as he is said to have attended in that place, the success of his forces then before Hierusalem, and the disposal of the State when the Town was taken. 6. Sopet, another of the Decapolitan Cities, strongly if not impregnable seated; one of the strongest Fortresses of the Western Christians, as it was after their expulsion of the Turks and Saracens; who from hence watched and subdued all the neighbouring Country, as far as to the very Sea. The only place, not of this Country only but of all the East, in which the Jews (who possessed a third part of this Town) have any shew or shadow of a Common-

Common-Wealth. 7 Bethlehem, mentioned Jos. 19. 38. made tributary unto those of this Tribe; though otherwife possessed by the Canaanites who held out against them. 8 Carthar, or Kiriathaim, situate near the Mountain; which in following times was called Mont Chirif because much frequented by our Saviour; who here made choice of his Apostles, as is said Mark 3. 13. and where he made also that Divine Sermon, recited in the 5. 6. and 7. Chapters of St. Matthew's Gospel. 9 Masothoth, a place of a great strength, but forced by Bacchides, General of the Armies of the Kings of Syria, in the time of the Maccabees. 10 Cimmereth, a strong City, after called Gensafareth; whence the Lake or Sea of Tiberias, neighbouring near unto it, is sometimes called the Lake of Gensafareth, as Luke 5. 1. &c.

2 The Tribe of ASER, was so called from Aser, the eighth Son of Jacob, begotten of Zilpah the Handmaid of Leah; of whom at their first Murther when they came out of Egypt, were found 41,500 persons able to bear arms, all above twenty years of age; and at the second Murther when they entered the Land of Canaan, 53,400 fighting men of the new increase. The portion of the Land allotted for their habitation was plentiful in Wine, Oyl, and Wheat, with great store of Balsam; extending from the Coast of Sidon, to Prothomai, thirty miles in length; and from the Mediterranean Eastward to the Tribe of Nephthali, some twelve miles in breadth. And though they never were of power to reduce the maritime Cities of Prothomai, Tyre, Sarepta, and Sidon, under their command; yet had they in this narrow compass many beautiful Cities and Towns of note; which they were quietly possessed of, till their subjugation by the King of Affria.

The principal of those, and others which have since been founded, 1 Aphok, memorable for the great slaughter there made of the Syrians when besieged by Ben-hadad; of whom 100,000 were slain by the Israelites under the leading of Ahob, and 27,000 killed by the fall of a Wall. 2 Gabala, mentioned by Prothomy amongst the mid-land Cities of Phoenicia; but belonging properly to this Tribe: one of those twenty which were offered by Solomon unto Hiram, and upon his refusal peopled by the Israelites. Fallen to decay, it was afterwards rebuilt and strongly fortified by Herod the Great. 3 Gifala, a Town of Great strength and consequence; the birth-place of John or Jehocanan, one of the three seditious in Hierusalem when besieged by Titus, where he did more mischief than the Enemy. Attempting to betray this City to the power of the Romans, he gave the Tyrians an opportunity to be Masters of it, by whom it was burnt unto the ground. But being rebuilt by the authority of Josaphus, then Governour of Galilee for the Jews, it was afterwards yielded to Titus upon composition. 4 Cana, for distinction sake called Cana-Major, to difference it from another of that name in the Lower Galilee, affirmed for the dwelling of that Woman, whose Daughter Christ delivered of an evil Spirit; called by St. Matthew a Woman of Canaan, chap. 15. a Syro-Phoenician by Saint Mark, chap. 7. the Syro-Phoenician of this Tract, being originally of the Race of Canaan, as was said before. 5 Herblin, or Cerblan, the furthest City of the North; as 6 Misfat, or Malsab, to the South, of the Tribe of Afer. Of later date there are 7 Thoron, a strong piece, built by the Christians on the Hills near Tyre, to hinder the excursions of the Turks, when they held that City. Situate in a pleasant and fruitful Soil, of great importance in the Wars of the Holy-Land, and giving name to the Noble Family of the Lords of Thoron; one of which being Confitable to King Baldwin the third, lieth buried in the Chappel adjoining to it, a curious piece of workmanship, and dedicated by the name of the Blessed Virgin. 8 Belford, so named from the strength and beauty of it; seated on the high grounds near the River Nabar, and memorable for the great repulse which Saladin the victorious King of the Turks received before it; being forced to raise his Siege with dishonour and loss, on the coming of the Christians Armies. Some others Forts here are of the same erection, as 9 Mount-fort, and 10 Mount Royal (or Capitium Regium) belonging to the Dutch Knights (of whom more hereafter) and by them valiantly defended against the Infidels.

3 The Tribe of ZABULON, was so called from Zabulon the tenth Son of Jacob, by his Wife Leah; of whom there mulctured near Mount Sinai 57,400 able men; and 65,000 at their second Murther, when they came into Canaan. Their Territory lay on the South of Afer and Naphthaim, and the North of Zabulon, extending from the Lake of Tiberias to the Mediterranean.

Places of most observation in it, 1 Johnham, the King, whereof was slain by Josaphab, and the City given unto the Levites. 2 Zabulon, or the City of Men; a stately and magnificent City, till burnt to the ground by Cestius a Roman president. 3 Cana-minor, so called to difference it from the other in the Tribe of Afer, the birth-place of Nathaniel, and as some say of Simon Zelotes: memorable for the Marriage at which our Saviour wrought his first Miracle, of turning Water into Wine: Called in Saint John's Gospel Cana of Galilee. 4 Bersabe, standing in the Border between both Galilee, and therefore strongly fortified by Josaphus against the Romans. 5 Dabban, where Josaph found his Brethren as they fled their flocks; and where the Prophet Elisha strook blind the Syrians, who besieged him in it. 6 Beh-Jaida, situate on the Sea of Galilee, one of the ten Cities of Decapolis, the birth-place of Peter, Andrew, and Philip; but most renowned for the Miracles and Preaching of our Lord and Saviour. 7 Nazareth, now a small Village, seated in a Vale between two Hills, not far from Ptolemais or Acon; upon one of which two Hills it was formerly built, where still are to be seen the ruins of many Churches here founded by the Christians; it being in the flourishing times of Christianity an Archbishop's See. Of great esteem for being, if not the birth-place, yet the habitation of the Virgin Mary; who was here saluted with those joyful tidings by an Angel, as the fate in her Chamber. Of which Chamber it is said in the Popish Legends, That it was after the Virgin's death had in great reverence by the Christians, and remained in this Town till the Holy Land was subdued by the Turks and Savacens, Anno 1291. Then most miraculously transported into Scalovania; but that place being unworthy of the Virgin's divine Presence, it was by the Angels carried over into the Sea-coast of Italy, Anno 1294. That place also being infested with Thieves and Pirates, the Angels removed it to the little Village of Loretto, where her Miracles were quickly divulged; insumuch that Paul the second built a most stately Church over this Chamber, and Xistus the fifth made the Village a City. And thus we have the beginning of our famous Lady of Loretto. Here did our blessed Saviour spend a great part of his Life before his Baptism; from whence both he and his Disciples had for many years the name of Nazarenes. 8 Jocopana, strongly seated on the top of a Mountain near the Lake of Gensafareth, fortified by Josaphus in the War with the Romans, but after a long Siege taken by Vespasian, and in it Josaphus the Historian, chief Governour of the City, and of both the Galilees. 9 Tiberias, raised out of the

the ground by Herod the Tetrarch, and named thus in honour of Tiberius Cæsar. Situate in a fruitful Soil, on the edge of the Lake, which afterwards took the name of the Lake or Sea of Tiberias; This City being held to be the greatest of the Lower Galilee, and the Metropolis of the Decapolis Region. In this City it was that our Saviour CHRIST called Saint Matthew from the Receipts of the Custom-house; and near unto it, that he raised the Daughter of Jairus. 10 Bethulia, more within the Land, seated on an high Hill, and of very great strength, as appears by the story of Judith and Holofernes. 11 Japha, a place of like strength, but forced by Titus; who in the fury of the storm slew in it above 15,000 persons, and carried away with him 2000 Prisoners. 12 Sepphoris, or Sippora, the habitation of Jochan and Anna, the Parents of the blessed Virgin; fortified with strong Walls by Herod the Tetrarch, who made it his Regal Seat for the Lower Galilee. Before that time, it had been made by Gabinus, one of the five juridical Reforts for the Palestinians: after that not without great difficulty forced by Vespasian; and is nothing now but a Castle known by the name of Zaphet, or Saffet. The ordinary Residence, for the most part, of the Turkish Sanziak who hath the Government of this Province; and lately, if not still, of the Emirs of Sidon; Faccardine the late Emir having been made the Sanziak of it, before his falling off from the Turks. Not far off is Mount Tabor, famous for the transfiguration of our Saviour; for a sumptuous Chappel built on the top of the Hill in memory of it, by the Empress Helen, Mother of Constantine the Great; and for the Fountain of the Brook Chifon, which presently divided into two Streams, runneth Eastward with the one to the Sea of Tiberias; and Westward with the other to the Mediterranean.

4 The Tribe of ISSACHAR is so called from Issachar the ninth Son of Jacob, by his Wife Leah, of whom were found at the first Murther 54,400 fighting men, and 64,900 at the second Murther. Their Lot, in the partition of the Land amongst the Tribes, fell betwixt Zabulon, and the half Tribe of Manasse on this side Jordan, North and South; extending from that River to the Mid-land Sea. A Territory not so well replenished with strong and eminent Cities, as was that before; nor yielding so much matter of observation in the course of business.

Those of most note in it, 1 Tarichæa, on the side of the Lake, about 8 miles from Tiberias, of great strength both by Art and Nature; as witnessed the notable resistance which Vespasian found when he besieged it, by whom taken with great difficulty and incredible slaughter. 2 Cishion, a City of the Levites. 3 Remeth, called also Jarmuth, another City of the Levites; where the Hills of Gilboa take beginning, and thence range as far as the Mediterranean Eastward, and the City of Tyre towards the East. 4 En-hadda, near which Saul being discomfited by the Philistines, flew himself for grief; or else for fear of falling into the hands of those merciless Enemies, against whom he had so often returned victorious. 5 Naim, on the Banks of the River Chifon, where CHRIST raised to life the Widow's Son. 6 Ephraim, or Aphraim, on the banks of the same River also. 7 Endor, of chief note for the Witch with whom Saul consulted; and the discomfiture of the Midianites by Gideon, who perished at Endor, and became as the dung of the Earth, saith the Royal Psalmist. 8 Dabarath, one of the Cities of Refuge. 9 Arbelat, not far from the Cave of the two Thieves, which so greatly infested Galilee in the time of Herod. And 10 of a later date the Castle of Pilgrims (Capitrum Peregrinorum in Latine Writers) built by Raymond Earl of Tholouse, and after fortified by the Templars; for the security of such as travelled to the Holy-Land; and for long time the Magazine or Store-house of the Western Christians, now called Tortora. Situate on the Shores of the Mediterranean, near a spacious Bay; on the North-side whereof Mount Carmel, described already.

As for those Galileans which succeed in the place of these Tribes, they were for the most part originally such as were sent hither by Salmanassar to inhabit there, when the Israelites were led away into endless thralldom, but intermixed with some Remainers of the ten Tribes, as was said before. And yet as if they had been wholly of the same extraction, with the rest of the Samaritan Nations, they were as much despised by the Jews (as witnesseth that scornful by-word, Cân there any good came out of Galilee?) as the others were: though these as Orthodox in Religion as the Jews themselves. In which he zealously affected, that neither threats nor force could make them offer Sacrifice for the health of the Roman Emperours, whom they looked on as the Enemies of their Law and Liberty. Brought under the command of the King of Jewry by the Maccabæans; and with the rest of that Kingdom bestowed on Herod by the Romans. Left by him at his death to Herod surnamed Antipater, the second of his Sons then living with the Title of Tetrarch, which he joined till the death of our Saviour; and on his deprivation (being banished to Lyons in France by the Emperor Caligula) bestowed upon Agrippa his Brothers Son, the first King of the Jews so named. Under him, and his Son Agrippa the second, it continued till the general Revolt of the Jewish Nation. Subjected by the Sword of Titus to the Power of the Romans, it hath since followed the same Fortune with the rest of Palestine.

4 SAMARIA.

SAMARIA is bounded on the East with the River Jordan; on the West, with the Mediterranean Sea; on the North, with Galilee; and on the South with Judea. So called from Samaria, the chief City of it: of which more hereafter.

The Country interchangeably composed of Fields and Mountains, excellent good for Tillage, and full of Trees; yielding variety of Fruits: watered both with the Dew of Heaven, and many fresh Springs which the Earth affords it; occasioning thereby abundance of Grass; and consequently of Milch-beasts exceeding plenty. Heretofore very wealthy, and no less populous; but now famed for neither.

The People for the most part were originally the descendants of those Affrians whom Salmanassar sent hither to possess the dwellings of the captive Israelites: Gentiles at first, till better instructed by the Lyons whom God sent amongst them, and after by the Priest sent hither by the Kings of Affria; they entertained the five Books of Moses, and out of them learned the manner of the God of the Land, 2 Kings 17. Further than this they would not go, rejecting all the rest of the Sacred Canon; and no strict Observers of this neither. And though at first they so embraced the Worship of God; as that they still adhered to the gods of the Nations where before they dwelt, as Nergal, Ashmah, Nibhaz, Tarshak, and the rest of that rabble, mentioned 2 Kings 17; yet were soon taken off from those impieties, and became zealous in the worship of one only God: enormous chiefly in the place which was destined to it. The wicked policy of Jeroboam the Son of Nebat, was as natural to them, as if they could not have possessed his Estates without it; and therefore would no suffer their people to go up to Hierusalem to worship, as the Law required. More pious in this than their Predecessors, that they erected no Golden Calves in Dan and Bethel, or any other parts of their Dominions: though to divert the People from the Temple of God, they would have a Temple of their own. Mount Garizim, and the Temple there (of which more anon) as sacred unto them, as that of Solomon to the Jews. Schismatical enough in this, but not Idolatrous and Schismatical too as the others were; yet so conceited of themselves, and their own perfections, that they imagined themselves defiled by any company but their own. If therefore they had visited any of their neighbour Nations, at their return they used to sprinkle themselves with Urine: but if by negligence, or the necessity of business, they had touched any not of their own Sect, they drenched themselves, cloaths and all, in the next Fountain. But in this the Jews cried quittance with them, not so much as eating or drinking with them, nor having with them any kind of commerce or dealing, as appeareth John 4. 9. but loading them, on the other side, with all the bitterness of reproach and hatred. There are two manner of people (saith the Son of Sirach) which mine heart abhorreth, and the third is no people: they that sit on the Mountains of Samaria, the Philistines, and the foolish People that dwell at Sichem, Eccles 50. And this continued to the times of our blessed Saviour, whom when the Jews endeavoured to reproach with their heaviest calumnies, they could find out none so great, as to say that he was a Samaritan, and (which they thought came all to one) a man that had converse with Devils and familiar Spirits.

Of these there were some Sects also, as amongst the Jews. 1 The Dofibians, so called from Dofibius or Dofibai, supposed to be the first Priest who was sent thither by the King of Affria: agreeing with the Jews in Circumcision, and the Sabbath, and the Doctrine of the Resurrection, (in which last they differed from the common Samaritans, who was a Sadducee in that point) but differing from them in some points of as signal consequence. For they rejected the Writings of all the Prophets, as not divinously inspired by the Holy Ghost; they ate of nothing that had life, like the Pythagoreans; abstained from Marriage like the Essenes; and in the point of Sabbath-keeping out-went the Pharisees; it being resolved upon amongst them, That in what posture soever a man was found on the Sabbath day morning, in the same he was to continue without alteration the whole day after. 2 The Servians, so called from Servus, or Servaius, one of the Companions of that Dofibai; who though they kept all the publick Festivals, as the Jews and the other Samaritans did, yet they kept them not at the same time: transferring the Passover to August, the Pentecost to Autumn, and the Feast of Tavernacles to the time of the Passover; not suffered for that cause to worship in the Temple of Garizim. 3 The Garibians, who kept the same Festivals, and observed the same times of those Solemnities, as the Law required; but kept only one of the seven days of those great Festivals, and laid by the rest, as days of ordinary labour. In other points not differing from the other Samaritans, who though at first possessed of all the Land belonging to the Ten Tribes of Israel, were yet reduced at last to a narrower compais: shut up betwixt Galilee and Judaea, within the ancient Territories of the Tribe of Ephraim, and the other half Tribe of Manasse, on this side of the Water.

1 The half Tribe of MANASSES on this side of Jordan, was situate betwixt Issachar on the North, and the Tribe of Ephraim on the South; extending from the Mediterranean, to the Banks of that River. In which the places of most consequence and consideration, 1 Beth-jan, environed almost with the Land of Issachar, situate near the Banks of Jordan, where it beginneth again to frighten and be like it self, having been almost lost in the Sea of Galilee; first called Nissa, and so called by Bacchus, or Liber Pater, the Founder of it, in memory of his Nurle there buried; but the Children of Manasse not being able to expel the Natives out of it, as in other places, gave it the name of Beth-jan, or the House of an Enemy. Afterwards when the Scythians invaded those parts of Asia, and compelled some of the Jews to serve them against the rest (whom notwithstanding their good Service they put all to the Sword) they new-built this City: called therefore by the Greecians, Scythopolis, or the City of Scythians; and by them reckoned as a City of Celo-Syria. Memorable in the Old Testament for the hanging of the dead bodies of Saul and his Sons on the Walls hereof, by the barbarous Philistines; in the time of our Saviour, for being the greatest of all the Decapolis Region; as afterwards in the flourishing times of Christianity, for being the See of an Arch-bishop: now nothing but a desolate Village and an heap of Rubbish, out of which many goodly Pillars, and other pieces of excellent Marble, are often digged. 2 Terzah, used by the Kings of Israel for their Regal Seat, till the building of Samaria, and the removal of it thither. 3 Acrabata, the Territory whereof called Acrabata, was afterwards made one of the Trochades of Judaea. 4 Thebes, not far from Samaria, where the Bastard Abimelech was wounded with a Stone, which a Woman threw at him from the Wall; and perceiving his death to be drawing on, commanded his Page to slay him, that it might not be said he perished by the hands of a Woman. 5 Ephra, or Hophra, in which Gideon dwelt: near whereunto there stood an Altar consecrated to Baal, defaced by Gideon: and not far off the fatal Stone on which Abimelech flew 70 of his Brethren. An Heathenish cruelty, and at this day practised amongst the Turks. 6 Asphon, an ignominious Village, made famous only for the great and notable defeat which Ptolemy Lathurus here gave to Alexander the King of the Jews: which Victory he used with so great barbarity, that he slew all the Women as he passed along, and caused young children to be sold in Calderas. 7 Bezek the City of the bloody Tyrant Adram Bezek, whose Story (touched upon before) see at large in Judges, chap. 1. By Josephus it is called Bala, and seemeth to be the place in which Saul assembled the chief strength of Israel & Judah, to the number of 33000 men, for the relief of Jahel-Gilead, then distressed by the Ammonites. 8 Jezreel, the Royal City of Ahab, and the Kings of his Race, situate on the foot of the Mountains of Gilboa: so near unto the Borders of Issachar, that some have placed it in that Tribe. Memorable in sacred Story for the stoning of Naboth by the procurement of Jezabel, and the breaking of Jezabel's neck by the command of Jehu. A City which gave name to the Plains adjoining, called the Valleys or Plains of Jezreel (but by the name of Campus Magnus in the Book of Macabees, lib. 1. cap. 10.) extending from Scythopolis to the Mediterranean: famous for the great and many Battels which have been fought in it; as namely, of Gideon against the Midianites, of Saul against the Philistines, of Ahab against the Syrians, of Jehu against Jehoram; and finally, of the Christians against the Saracens. 9 Megiddo, unfortunately observable for the death of the good King Josiah, slain hereabouts in a Battel against against Pharaoh Necho King of Aegypt; and before that of Ahabaz King of Judah, who received his death-wound at Gaber, a Town adjoining, when pursued by Jehu. 10 Dora, or Dor as the Scripture calls it, on the Mediterranean, not far from the Castle of Pilgrims in the Tribe of Issachar. A very strong and powerful City, and therefore chose by Tryphon for his City of Refuge, who having first treacherously taken, and barbarously murdered Jonathan the Macabean, after he had received 200 Talents for his Ransom; and no less villainously slain Antiochus the sixth of Syria, his Lord and Master whom he succeeded in his Throne, was by Antiochus the seventh, with an Army of 120000 foot, and 8000 horse, besieged in this City, and most deservedly put to death.

11 Cesarea, anciently called the Tower of Siraton, from Siraton a King of the Zidonians; newly built by Herod, and by him not only beautified with a large Theatre and Amphitheatre, both of polished Marble, with a fair and capacious Haven; which with incredible charge and pains he forced out of the Sea. And having in twelve years brought it to perfection, in honour of Drusus Caesar, Son-in-law of Augustus, he caused one of the chief Towers thereof to be called Drusus, the City it self to be called Cesarea Palestine. The stateliness and magnificence of which City (when same described at large by Josephus the Jew, in the 15th Book of Antiq. cap. 13. In this City was Cornelius baptized by St. Peter: Here did Paul plead in defence of Christianity before Festus then the Roman President: and finally, here Herod Agrippa was smitten by an Angel, and devoured by Worms, after his Rhetorical Oration, which his Parasites called the voice of God, and not vice only; as afterwards of Palestina prima, when by three: the first Bishop hereof being said to be that Cornelius, whom Saint Peter here initiated in the Faith of CHRIST, 12 Antipatris, another City of Herod's building, in the place where Kapharsalama, mentioned 1 Macab. 7. 31. had sometimes stood; who in honour of his Father Antipater, gave it this new name. Near hereto did Judas Macabeus overthrow a part of Onias the Steward of Ahab hid the hundred Prophets, whom he preserved against the fury of Jezabel: Finally, to this City it was that Saint Paul was conveyed by the command of Lysias to save him from the Jews, wholay in wait to destroy him.

2 The Tribe of EPHRAIM was so called from Ephraim, the second and youngest Son of Joseph; of men, and 32500 in the Land of Canaan; lighting Lot fell betwixt this half Tribe of Manasse, on the North; and the Tribes of Dan and Benjamin, upon the South, extending from the River Jordan to the Mediterranean.

Places of most consideration, 1 Saron on the Mediterranean, to the South of Antipatris, mentioned Acts 9. 35. and giving name unto that fruitful Valley which reacheth from Cesarea Palestine, as far as Joppa. 2 Lydda, upon the same shores, where Saint Peter (virtute Christi, non sua) cured Aneas of the Palsy. By the Gentiles it was called Difopolis, or the City of Jupiter; but by the Christians, in the time of the Holy Wars, it had the name of Saint George's; partly from a magnificent Temple which the Emperor Justinian there erected to the honour of that blessed Martyr; but principally from an opinion which they had amongst them, that he suffered Martyrdom in that place. An opinion founded on mistakes, first of a Cenotaphium, or an empty Monument erected in this City to preserve his memory, for the Grave in which he was interred; the other, in the place of his suffering, which is meant only of the Story or Celebration. But howsoever they entitled it by the name of Saint George's, as was said before, and made it on that account also an Episcopal See. 3 Ramatha, or Arimatea, a City of the Levites, supposed to be the dwelling of Joseph, who begged of Pilate the Body of CHRIST. 4 Feloz, or Ajalon, a City of the Levites also; by some placed, and perhaps more truly, in the Tribe of Dan, and there we shall hear further of it. 5 Themath-Cares, given by the Israelites to Josiah, who enlarged the fame, and made it a strong and goodly City; honoured with the Sepulchre of that brave Commander, one of the Nine Warriors of the World; and afterwards made one of the Presbiteries of Judaea, by Judas Macabeus with 3000 Jews overthrew the Army of Nicanor. 7 Jeftri, called otherwise Pelchi, which gave name and birth unto the Peletites, part of David's Guard, under the governance of Benaiah. 8 Silo, situate on the top of a lofty Mountain; the receptacle of the Ark, till taken and carried thence by the Philistines. 9 Micmash, the habitation of Jonathan, one of the Macabeans Brethren, situate in the middle way from Samaria to Hierusalem, now called Byra. 10 Naiath, where Saul prophesied, 11 Bezonon, a City of the Levites, beautified by Solomon, but made more famous by the great and notable overthrow which Judas Macabeus here gave to Lysias, 12 Pirhaton, on the Mountain Amele, the City of Abdon the Judge of Israel. 13 Sichem, called also Siclor, the habitation in the old times of Sichem the Father of that Hamor, who defoured Dinah the Daughter of Jacob; the City for that cause destroyed by Simeon and Levi; repaired again, and afterwards by Abimelech levelled with the ground; a third time re-edified by Jerobam the Son of Nabat, & a third time ruined by the Kings of Damascus: yet notwithstanding these blows, it was of good esteem in the time of our Saviour, who abode in it two days; and converted many. Memorable for Jacob's Well, which was very near it; more for his neighbourhood to Mount Garizim, where the blessings were to be read to the people (of which see Deut. 11. 27. and Josh. 8. 23.) and where afterwards was built a magnificent Temple for the use of the Samaritan Nation, at the cost and charge of Samballai, a great Prince amongst them. Who having married his daughter to Manasse, brother of Jaddai the High Priest of the Jews; and fearing he would put her way, to avoid the sentence of Excommunication, which he was involved in for that Match, promised him, that if he would retain her, he would build a Temple answerable to that of Hierusalem, and make him the High Priest thereof, which was done accordingly. But this Temple had not stood above two hundred years, when destroyed by Hircanus the Macabean; the place remaining notwithstanding a place of worship, as appeareth John 4. 20. As for the City of Sichem, or Siclor, it was by the Greecians called Nicopolis, afterwards made a Colony by the Emperor Vespasian, who caused it to be called Flavia Cesarea: of which Colony was that renowned Justin Martyr. 14 Samaria, the Metropolis of the Kingdom of Israel, founded by Omri one of the Kings thereof, on the top of the Mountain Samron (which overlooketh all the bottom as far as the Sea-coast) whence it had the name. A stately and magnificent City, conjectured by Brocardus, who had traced the ancient Ruins of it, to be bigger than Hierusalem. Destroyed by the Affrians when they carried carried away the Ten Tribes; but afterwards repaired again, and again beaten to the ground by the Sons of Hyrcanus above-mentioned. But Herod the Great, who was pleased with the situation of it, did again re-erect it, in more stately manner than before; as appeareth by the great store of goodly Marble Pillars, and other carved Stones, in great abundance found amongst the rubbish: and having rebuilt it to his mind, inclosed it with a strong wall, and beautified it with a goodly Temple; in honour of Augustus Caesar, whom the Greeks call Sebastos, he caused it to be called Sebaste. Memorabie after this new erection from the Sepulchre of John Baptist, and being made the Metropolis of Judaea Secunda, (by consequence an Archbishop's See) now nothing but a few cottages filled with Grecian Monks.

Nor were the Samaritans themselves (so called from this their principal City) left subject to the vicissitudes and change of fortune, than the City was. Defended for the most part from the Assyrians, and such other Nations as were sent thither to fill up the empty places of the captive Tribes: but called Cathene by the Jews, either because most of them were of Cath, a Region of Perfians, as Josephus telleth us, which is now called Chuzestan; or else by way of scorn, for Chusites, as being of the Posterity of the accursed Cham, by Chus his son. Having embraced the Law of Moses, they began to think better of the Jews than the other Nations, but fitted their affections to the change of times: it being the observation of the said Josephus, that as often as the Jews were in any prosperity, then they called them Cozins, and would be of the same Nation with them; but when their fortunes were on the declining hand, then they were strangers which came thither out of foreign Nations, and no kin at all. Nor doth he wrong them in this Character. For when Alexander the Great had granted the Jews a release of the seventh years Tribute, the Samaritans desiring the like exemption, pleaded for themselves Ἐγγιστοὶ αὐτοῖς &c. that they indeed were very Hebrews, though it pleased the Sidonians to call them Sichemites. But when Antiochus raged against them with fire and sword, the Samaritans sent Letters to him, disclaiming all relation to those of Judah, and challenging their descent from the Medes and Perfians. Nor were they content only to disclaim all kindred with the Jews, in the times of trouble, when any persecution rose against them for the Law of God; but did them also all ill Offices, and joined with their Enemies to their destruction: especially after the Jews had refused to admit of their assistance, in the re-building of the Temple; which after that they hindered with great malice, and no less perverseness. But the fortune of the Jews did at last prevail, the whole Nation being subdued by Hyrcanus the Maccabean, who destroyed their Schismatical Temple also, and levelled Jamaria it self to the very ground. After this, subject to the Jews, who possessed themselves of most of their Cities, and contracted them into a narrow compass than they were in formerly: but still so hated and contemned, that nothing was able to appease that inveterate malice, which they had conceived, till both Nations were extirpated in the time of Adrian, and made to seek their dwellings in other Countries. Made afterwards a Province of the Roman Empire, by the name of Palestina Secunda, successively subject with the rest to the Perfians, Saracens, and Turks, who do now possess it.

JUDAEA.

JUDAEA is bounded on the East with the Dead Sea, and the River Jordan; on the West with the Mediterranean; on the North with Samaria; and on the South with Idumea. So called from the Jews, or people of the Tribe of Judah, who after their return from the captivity of Babylon, communicated the name of Jew unto all the Nation, as they did that of Judaea to this part of the Country.

The Soil of the same nature with that of Samaria, before described; but that it is more swelled with Hills, and more stored with Rivers, though of no great fame. And therefore we shall say no more, as to the general character and description of it; but look on the particular parts as it stood divided betwixt the Philistines, the Tribes of Dan, Simeon, Judah and Benjamin.

And first, the PHILISTINES commanded all the Sea-coasts from the South of Phoenicia, to the North of Idumea; or from the Castle of Pilgrims, to the City of Gaza, taking both into the accompt. But Jeppa, and all the Towns on the North of that, being taken in by the Israelites, they held no more than six Towns of any importance, with the Countries and Territories adjoining to them: but those few populous and strong, that by their own power, and the assistance of the Edomites, and the rest of their Neighbours, not well affected to the Tribes, they kept them under terms, and lay more heavy on them than all the Canaanites together; as will appear when we sum up the story and success of their affairs.

In the mean time let us survey the Country which was holden by them, notwithstanding all that could be done against them by the Kings of Israel: and therein we shall find worth our observation, 1. Gath, or Gathy, the birth-place of the huge Giant Goliath, slain by David; as also of many others of the like Gigantine proportion, slain by David's Worthies. Destroyed by David, or rather slighted and dismantled, it was rebuilt by Rehoboam the Son of Solomon; but again razed by Ozias King of Judah, who found the Philistines there garrisoned but ill neighbours to him, and finally laid waste by Hazael the King of Syria. Not much regarded after that, though it kept the name of Gath in St. Hieron's time; till in these last ages Fulk the King of Hierusalem erected there a new Castle, from the ancient ruins. From hence, as I conceive, the Idol Dagon, so much worshipped by these Philistines, was by the Syrians and Phoenicians called Ater-Gath; and not from Gath a Syrian Queen, as is said by many. 2. Accaron, on the South of Gath, of great wealth and power, and one that held out notably against the Danites and Judeans. Much spoken of in the holy Scriptures, but for nothing more than their Idolatrous worship of Idolzebub, that is to say, the Lord of Flies: so called by the Jews, either in contempt of the Idolatrous Cities committed to him, or because of that great multitude of Flies which attended his Sacrifices, whereof some say, the Temple of Hierusalem was wholly free. But whatsoever he was, or for what cause so named, certain it is that he was held in special honour, and therefore called in Scripture the god of Accaron: and thither Abimelech the King of Israel sent his Messenger, to enquire of this Idol, concerning his health. 3. Asdod, (by the Grecians called Asoton) memorable in Holy Writ for the Temple of Dagon, into which the Ark of the Lord was brought; that Idol falling down before it, as not able to stand up when the Ark bore near. Near to this Town was Judas Maccabeus overcome & slain by Bacchides, Lieutenant to Demetrius the King of Syria; and not long after the Town itself was taken by Jonathan the brother of Judas, who put the Citizens to the sword, and burnt all such as fled to the Temple of Dagon, together with the very Idol, consumed in the same fire with the Idolaters. Rebuilt by Gabinus a Roman General, in the times of Christ's infancy it was made an Episcopal See; and continued a fair Village till the days of St. Hieron. 4. Asdalon, on the Sea-side also, said to be built by Asdalon a noble Lydian, employed by his King in a war against the Syrians; but this very uncertain. One of the chief and strongest Cities of the Philistines, of great note amongst the Gentiles for a Temple dedicated to Diretus, the Mother of Semiramis, here worshipped in the form of a Mermaid: & for another of Apollo, wherein Herod the Father of Antipater, and Grand-father of Herod the Great (from his birth in this City called Herod the Asdalonite) is said to have served as the Priest. It had in the first times of Christianity an Episcopal See; and in the course of the holy Wars by King Richard the first, & Gaza, more within the Land, on the River Bezor; a fair and strong Town, formerly called Asht, from whence perhaps the name of Gaza was derived by the Heathens; or else it was so called by the Perfians, in regard that Cambyses here laid up the Treasure which he had provided for the War of Egypt, the word Gaza in the Perfian Language signifying Treasures. Of which Cambyses it is said by Pomponius Mela, Cum armis Egyptum pereret, hic belli opes & pecuniam inibi aravit. After which it was made the Receipt of Treasury, in which the Perfians laid the Tribute of the Western Provinces, whence all riches had in time the name of Gaza. Once Caleb took it, but not able to hold it against the Philistines, he again deserted it. Destroyed by Alexander the Great, and re-built again, it made notable resistance against the Maccabees; till at last forced by Simon the brother of Judas, who liked the place so well that he intended to have made it his place of residence: not so decayed in length of time, but that it was a goodly City in the days of Brochardus, and it is still the best of all this Coast, built on an hill encompassed with rich and pleasant Vallies; the buildings low and mean, as in other places: but some of them adorned with pillars of fair Parian Marble digged out of the remaining ruins. 6. Maïma, the Port Town of Gaza, but made a City of it self by Constantine, by whom called Constantia: but re-holden again by Julian unto those of Gaza, and by him commanded to be called Gaza Maritima.

These were the chief places holden by the Philistines, a strong and Giantlike race of men, such as the Scripture calls by the name of Anaks, or the Sons of Anak. Originally descended from Casubim and Caphorim, of the race of Mizraim the Son of Cham: as appeareth both by the common consent of ancient Writers, and plain Texts of Scripture, Jer. 47. 4. and Amos 9. 7. These being settled first in the borders of Egypt and Idumea, where the Casubim gave name unto the Province of Casotis, and the Mountain Casius; proceeded Northwards and subdued the Avims, a Canaanitish people, planting themselves in their habitations, as is said expressly Deut. 2. 23. Here Abraham found them in his time, and here they were when Isaac went down to Gerar. Governed at first by one Kin, whom they called always by the name of Abimelech, as the Egyptians theirs by the name of Pharaoh; sometimes by five, according to the number of their principal Cities; but still united in the times of approaching dangers. Too strong to be subdued by the Tribes of Israel, they made head against them, and mazzing over them, till broken by Samsophon, and for a time the Israelites in the time of Saul, whom they discomfited, and hanged his dead body barbarously on the walls thereof. But David, a more fortunate Prince, overthrew them in many set battels, and at length took the Town of Gath, one of the strongest Towns they had;

and by that means so weakened them, that they durst not stir all the time of David, nor a long while after. Beginning to be troublesome in the days of Ozias King of Judah, they were warred on by him, their Army overthrown, Isa and Amcia, two of their strong Forts, took in the time of the Idolatrous Achaz, allocating with the Edomites, (who evermore attended the destruction of Judah) they brake out again; took Bethsames, Ajalot, Prisoners, and slew much People: But the good King Ezekiah made them pay dear for it, taking from them, Which notwithstanding, they recovered to so great esteem, that the whole Country had from them the name of Philistia. But broken by degrees by the Maccabees, they lost both their power and reputation, passing in common estimate as a part of Jewry; the fortunes of which it followed for the time succeeding.

2. The Tribe of DAN is so called from Dan the fifth Son of Jacob, by Bilhah the Hand-maid of Rachel, of whom were muliered at Mount Sinai 62700 fighting men; and 66400 at the second mulier, in the Land of Canaan: where their lot fell betwixt Ephraim, on the North, Simeon on the South, the Tribe of Benjamin on the East, and the Mediterranean on the West.

Places of most note in it, 1. Joppa (now called Jaffa) once a famous Mart-Town, and the only Haven of Judaea in foregoing times: the Town where Jonah took ship to fly unto Tyr and Tarsish, where Peter raised Dorcas from death to life; & where he lying in the house of one Simon a Tanner, was in a Vision taught the conversion of the Gentiles. This City they report to have been built before the flood. And here they say reigned Cephus, whose Daughter Andromeda was by Perseus delivered from a Sea-monster, some of whose bones the people used to shew to strangers, even to the flourishing of the Romans. Just as our citizens of Coveentry and Warwick shew the bones of the Din-Cow of Dunstan heath, and the bones of I know not what Giant, slain by Gay Earl of Warwick. In the time of the Maccabees it was garrisoned by the Syrians, who having in the Port a Fleet of good power & strength, invited 200 of the chief citizens to go aboard with them, & there drowned them all: for which their Fleet was fired by Judas, and such as did escape the fire, fell upon the sword. Twice taken by the Romans, & the second time burnt unto the ground: new walled, and fortified with Towers by King Lewis of France, in the year 1250. the holy Wars then drawing to their final end. Now nothing standing of it but two little Towers where are certain Harquebuses for defence of the Haven, none of the best; defended from the South & West winds with eminent Rocks, but exposed to the fury of the North; which makes it more unsafe than the open Seas when enraged by Tempests. Nor much frequented by the Merchants, who trade here but for Cottons only, & hold their Factory not far off in a Town called 2. Ras, by the Moors called Ramula, situate in a sandy plain, on the rising of a little Hill; built of Free-stone, but more beautiful in the ruins of some Christian Churches, and a Monastery built by Philip the Good of Burgundy, where the House of Nicodemus stood, than in any of the remaining Edifices. 3. Jamnia, near Jeppa, where Judas burnt the rest of the Syrian Fleet, the flame whereof was seen to Hierusalem, 240 furlongs off: mentioned by Ptolomy, and in the times of Christianity an Episcopal See, now not discernable in the ruins. 4. Cedar or Cedron, fortified against the Jews by Cendeban one of the Lieutenants of Antiochus, who hercabouts was overthrown thrown by the Maccabees. 5 Modin, a small Town, but honoured with the birth and Sepulchre of those Maccabees; the Sepulchre being seven Marble Pillars of so great an height, that they served as a mark for Sea-men. 6 Gibbethon, in the Country called Makatz, a City of the Levites, but afterwards possessed by the Philistines, at the siege whereof Nadab, the Son of Jeroboam King of Israel, was slain by Baalha, who succeeded; and Omri chosen King on the death of Zimri. 7 Carthiathurim, where the Ark of the Lord was kept for 20 years, in the house of Amiadab; that is to say, from the sending it home by the Philistines, till brought to Hierusalem by David. 8 Beth-Jemes, to which the Ark was brought by a yoke of Kine, turned loose by the Philistines: for irreverent looking into which there were slain by the immediate hand of God, no fewer than 50070 persons of this City. 9 Tzarah, near which is a Fountain, called the Fountain of Ethiopia, because Philip there baptized the Ethiopian Eunuch. 10 Capfen, taken with great laughter by Judas Maccabeus. 11 Lachis, remarkable for the death of Amaziab King of Judah. 12 Ajalon, a City of the Levites also, touched upon before in the Tribe of Ephraim; in the borders whereof we find it situated; and therefore by some Authors reckoned to the same Tribe, and by some to the other, in the Valley whereof the Moon is said to have stood still at the prayers of Johshua, as the Sun did over the City of Gibeon: the motion of the Heavens being staid, that he might have the more time for execution on the Kings of the Canaanites. To this Tribe also belonged the Town and Territory of Dan, or Lehem, afterwards called Cafarna Philippi, in the Tribe of *NEPHTHALI*M, whereof we have there spoke already.

3 The Tribe of SIMEON was so called from Simon the second Son of Jacob by his first Wife Leah: of whom were found at the first muster 59300 able men, and but 22200 at the second muster, when they came into Canaan. Where they enjoyed but a small Territory to themselves, their Lot falling amongst the Philistines, whom they were not able to expel: and therefore they were taken into the Tribe of Judah, where they were permitted to enjoy some Towns and Villages, intermixed with that more potent Tribe. Afterwards in the reign of King Hezekiah, some of them possessed themselves of Gedar, belonging to the Children of Ham; and others passing South-wards into Idumaea, smote the Amalekites which inhabited in the mountains thereof, & dwelt in the places by them conquered. But for all this, wanting room for themselves and their children, many of them undertook the Office of Scribes or Scriveners, and dispersed themselves amongst the rest of the Tribes, teaching their Children to write, and giving themselves to the employment of Publick Notaries: God herein verifying the Curse which Jacob had denounced on Simon, that he should be divided and scattered in Israel. But for their fixed habitation which fell to them by Lot, it lay betwixt Dan upon the North, and Idumaea on the South; the Tribe of Judah on the East, and the Philistines upon the West.

Places of most observation in it, 1 Gerar, the Royal Seat of the two Abimelechs, Kings of the Philistines, with whom Abraham and Isaac had to do; and probably of some other of their Kings and Princes, till subdued by the Israelites. Situate in the South border of Canaan, not far from the Wilderness of Beerseba, but in a very healthful air: called therefore Regio Salutis in the times succeeding. 2 Sieclez, or Ziglag, belonging to the Philistines till the time of David, to whom given by Achish King of Gath, for his place of retreat, when persecuted by Saul, from whom flying he lodged here all his goods and carriages; sacked by the Amalekites, but the booty recovered from them speedily by the diligence and good fortune of David. 3 Hain, a City of the Levites. 4 Cariah-Sepher, that is to say the City of Books, feared within the bounds of Simon, but belonging to Judah: which some hold to be the University or Academy of old Palestine. A City of the Levites also, and at first possessed by the Sons of Anak, or men of a Gigantic stature, but taken by Ornuid the Son of Konan; on the promise and encouragement which was given by Calab, that whoever took it should have his Daughter Aschab to Wife. Afterwards it was called Debir, Judg. 1. 11. known in the time of St. Hieron by the name of Daana, 5 Choraz, conceived by some to be that place mentioned Num. 14. 45. to which the Canaanites and Amalekites pursued those of Israel. 6 Beerseba, or Putens juramenti; so called of the Well of waters, and the Oath which was there sworn betwixt Abraham and Abimelech, Gen. 21. 31. Memorable in the Scripture for the Grove which Abraham there planted, the wandering of Hagar thereabouts, when he was cast out of Abraham's household with her young Son Ismael; and the dwelling of Isaac, for which cause called the City of Isaac. Situate in the extreme South border of the Land of Canaan, the length whereof is often measured in the Scripture from this Town to Dan; and for that cause well fortified by the Western Christians, when they were possessed of this Country; as standing on the borders of Idumaea, and the Defarts of Arabia, in the way from Aegypt.

4 The Tribe of JUDAH was so called from Judah the fourth Son of Jacob, by his Wife Leah: of whom there were numbered at the first general muster taken near Mount Sinai, 76600 fighting men; and no fewer than 76500 at their entrance into the Land of Canaan. The greatest Tribe, and therefore answerably fitted with the largest Territory, bordering on the Dead Sea, East upon Simon West; the Tribe of Benjamin on the North; and the Idumaeans on the South. Comparatively large, with reference to the other Tribes; but otherwise unable to contain or feed those infinite multitudes, without the extraordinary providence of Almighty God, which are recorded to be in it: King David murthering 47000 fighting men of this Tribe alone; which was more than half the number found in the rest of the Tribes. A Tribe which had a native Sovereignty over all the others; the Scepter, the Legislative power, and the World's Messiah being all promised to them.

Places of most observation in it, 1 Anak, situate in the entrance of Judaea, in the way from the Wilderness of Edom. 2 Hebron, one of the ancientest Cities of Canaan; the Seat of the Giants called Anakim, or the Sons of Anak. This word Anak signifieth a Chain worn for Ornament, and it seemeth that this Anak enriched with the spoils of his enemies, wore a Chain of gold, leaving both the custom and name to his posterity. We read the like of Adanias Torquatus in the Roman Histories. This Town did Abraham buy for a burial-place for his dead; in which his Wife Sarah was first buried, and after her four of the Patriarchs. Adjoining to this Town is the Plain of Manure, where Abraham, the Father of the Faithful, sitting in his Tent, was visited from Heaven by God in the shape of a man. Here David kept his Court before the winning of Hierusalem, to this place came the Tribes to anoint him King over Israel; and hither came Abraham, under the pretence of paying his vows, to usurp the Kingdom of his Father. 3 Tecoa, the City of Amor the Prophet; and also of that Woman, who by the words which Joab put into her mouth, persuaded the King to call Abraham from exile. In the Wilderness of this Tecoa there absembled the Inhabitants of Moab, Ammon, and

Mount Seir, to overthrow Judah. But the Lord being appealed by the publick Feast, proclaimed and kept by Jehoshaphat and the people, fowed diffusions amongst them: So that the children of Ammon and Moab stood up against the Inhabitants of Mount Seir, utterly to slay and destroy them; and when they had made an end of the Inhabitants of Mount Seir, every one helped to destroy one another. 1 Cariorh, or Caripih, the birth-place of Judas, hence surnamed Scario (or the man of Cariorh) who betrayed our Saviour. 5 Jeber, or Tater, in the North border of this Tribe, towards Eleutheropolis, a City anciently of the Levites, and called in St. Jerom's time Tzabira, and then altogether replenished with Christians, now nothing but the name remaining. 6 Maresa, the native Soil of the Prophet Micah, near whereunto first Asa King of Judah discomfited the vast Army of Terah the Arabian or Ethiopian, consisting of above 4 Million of men; and afterwards Gorgias was overthrown by Judas Maccabeus. 7 Emaus (after called Nicopolis) memorable for the third overthrow which Judas gave to the said Gorgias; for our Redeemers shewing himself after his resurrection to Cleophas and another of his Disciples; and for the hot Bathes hereabouts, which gave the name of Salutaris to this part of Palestine. The Sovereign vertue of which Waters Socorum, a Christian, attributes to the washing of Christ's feet in them, as he passed by at that time; but Josephus a Jew, ascribes (as is most likely) unto natural caldres. 8 Hafor, or Chasfor, one of the frontier Towns towards Idumaea. 9 Odala, or Hadullan, an ancient & magnificent City taken and destroyed by Joabna, and long after much enlarged and beautified by Jonathan, one of the Maccabees. 10 Ceila, or Keila, where David sometimes hid himself when he fled from Saul; by him delivered afterwards from the assaults of the Philistines. 11 Eleutheropolis, or the Free City, not far from Hebron; a City of later date than any of Judah, mentioned by Prologus, and much remembered by St. Hieron. 12 Azela, not far from Emaus, to which Joabna followed Dabir the King of Eglon, and his four Associates, whom he discomfited in the cause and quarrel of the Gibonites; molested by them for submitting to their common Enemy. Seized in the Valley of Terebim, and of very great strength; presuming upon which, it revolted from Joram King of Judah, at the same time that Libna and the Edomites had revolted from him. 13 Beth-Sur, or (Beth-Sora) that is to say, the house on the Rock, so called from the situation on a rocky hill, one of the strongest places of Judah: Fortified first by Rehobam the Son of Solomon, after by Judas Maccabeus; and finally made impregnable by his Brother Simon. 14 Adram, bordering on the Dead Sea, beautified also by Rehobam. 15 Zoar, in former times called Bela, but took its name from the words of Lot, alleging that it was but a little one. Gen. 19. 20. as the word Johor does import, in whose escape it was preserved, being otherwise one of the five Cities of the Region called Pemopolis, doomed unto destruction; the other four Sodom, Gomorrah, Adama, and Seboim, being at the same time destroyed by fire and brimstone. 16 Masfada, frequently mentioned by Josephus, as a place of great strength both by art and nature, and as it is by him described (in the seventh Book de Bello Jud. cap. 28.) to be thought impregnable; and therefore made by Ezerod (in the time of his troubles) the place of refuge, in which he disposed of Marianne his betrothed Wife, her Mother Alexandra, with divers honourable Ladies; and where they were preserved in safety against all his Enemies, till he came armed with power from Rome, to dislodge their Forces, which was done accordingly. First built by Jonathan the brother of Judas Maccabeus, as a sure place of Refuge against the Syrians; and afterwards so esteemed by Herod for the reason above mentioned, that he not only much enlarged it, with all the requisite additions of strength & beauty, but built within the square thereof a magnificent Palace. The whole environment with a wall of 7 furlongs compass, 12 cubits high, & 8 Mountain broad, built of white stone, and situate on a high place called Collis Asblita, wallied on the East-side by the Dead Sea, or Lacus Asphaltites, and by that secured; on the other sides fenced with such deep ditched that it was a terror to any man to look down into them: besides which natural situation; it was fortified by Herod with 27 Turrets, who left therein as in a place impregnable and inaccessible, a Magazine of Arms and all warlike furniture for an Army of 10000 men, all sorts of Victuals to sustain them, and ground enough within the Walls to yield corn sufficient, when time and a long siege should consume those Victuals. A place of such strength and so great concernment, that it held out against the Romans (when Vespasian and his Son Titus managed that great War) after all the rest of Judaea had been conquered by them. 17 Libna, a strong City seated in a corner of Judaea, running between the Tribes of Dan and Benjamin. This City revolted from Joram King of Judaea at the same time the Edomites did, and continued a Free State, even as long as Judaea continued a Kingdom. 18 Ziph, in the Wilderness, wherein David hid himself from the fury of Saul. Hither, when Saul pursued him, David came into his Camp (the Watch being all asleep) and took thence his Spear and a Cruise of Oyl, and departed. Abishai indeed would fain have killed him: but David, though he knew that Samuel had by God's command abdicated Saul from the Kingdom, and that himself was appointed in his stead, would not touch him; but left him to the judgment of the Lord; who anointed he was. 19 Bethlehem, or (to distinguish it from another of this name of Zabulon so called) Bethlehem-Judaea, where Christ was born; and the Innocents suffered for him before he had suffered for them. In this general Massacre of young Children, a son of Herod's, which was at nurse, was also slain; which being told unto Augustus, he replied, He had rather be Herod's Swine than his Son. His Swine being safe in regard the Jews were forbidden hog-meat; but his Sons frequently made away, upon fears and jealousies. A Town for this cause had in great respect by the primitive Christians, beautified by Helena with a stately Temple, which yet standing entire, by the Lady Paula (much extolled by St. Hieron) with some goodly Monasteries, in one of which the body of that Father lieth; and by the Western Christians, with a See Episcopall. On the Frontier of this Country towards the Philistines, was that strong Castle which Herod repairing, called Eleutherodim, seated on a Hill, the ascent into which was made with 200 steps of Marble, exceeding fair and large. In this Country also are the hills of Engaddi, in a Cave of which David cut off the Lap of Saul's Garment; and all along the bottoms whereof were the Gardens of Balsamum or Oydalamum, the trees of which were by Cleopatra (at such time as she governed M. Antony and the East) sent for to be replanted in Heliopolis of Aegypt; and Herod, who durst not deny them, plucked them up by the roots, and sent them to her.

5 The Tribe of BENJAMIN took name from the twelfth and youngest Son of Jacob, by Rachel his best beloved Wife, who dyed in that Child-birth: of which at the first muster near Mount Sinai, were numbered 35000 able men; and at the second muster, when they entered the Promised Land, there were found of them six for Arms 45600 persons. A Tribe in great danger to have been utterly cut off, by the folly of the men of Gibeon, all Israel arming against it as one man. For besides those that perished in the former Battels, there fell in one day 25000 men that drew the Sword: the fury of the Conquerors after that great Victory sparing neither man nor beast, nor any thing that came to hand, and burning down all their Cities also which they came unto. So great an havoc was there made of innocent Maidens, that when the edge of this displeasure was taken off, there were not Wives enough found for those young men who had escaped: The other Tribes having bound themselves by a solemn Oath, not to bestow their Daughters on them: inasmuch that they were fain to provide themselves of Wives of the Daughters of Jabesh-Gilead, a Town of the Manassites beyond Jordan, whom they took by assault; and of the Daughters of Shilo, whom they took by stratagem. The whole Story see at large in the Book of Judges, c. 19, 20, 21.

The Territories of this Tribe lay betwixt those of Ephraim on the North, and Judah on the South; having the Dead-Sea to the East, and the Tribe of Dan to the Westward of them. The chief of their Towns and Cities were, 1. Michmas, the incamping place of Saul, 1 Sam. 13. 2. and the abiding place of Jonathan, one of the Maccabean Brethren, 1 Macc. 9. 73. 2. Misphah, famous in being the ordinary place of assembly for the whole body of the People, in matters of War and Peace: as also in that standing in the midst of Canaan, it was (together with Gilgal) made the Seat of Justice, to which Saul went yearly to give Judgment to the People, 3. Gebah, the North border of the Kingdom of Judah toward Israel. 4. Gebath, the Country of Saul, the first King, where the abusing of the Levite's Wife by the young men of this Town, had almost rooted the Tribe of Benjamin out of the Garden of Israel. 5. Asi, a great and strong City, in the Siege of which the Israelites were first discomfited: but when by the death of Achan, who had sinned the accursed thing, the Camp was purged, Jehovah by a warlike Stratagem surprised it. 6. Gibeon, the mother-City of the Gibeonites, who prefiging the unrefutable Victories of the Israelites, came to the Camp of Jehovah, and by a wile obtained peace of him and the People: Employed by them in hewing Wood, and drawing Water for the use of the Tabernacle, after the fraud was made known unto them, called Nethinims, Ezra 4. 3. from Natham, which signifies to give, because they were given to the service of the Tabernacle first, of the Temple after. Saul about four hundred years after, slew some of them, for which fact the Lord caused a Famine on the Land; which could not be taken away till seven of Saul's Sons were by David delivered unto the Gibeonites, and by them hanged. This Famine did God send, because in killing those poor Gibeonites, the Oath was broken which Jehovah and the Princes swore concerning them. In defence of those Gibeonites it was that Jehovah waged War against the Kings of the Canaanites, and stayed the motion of the Sun by his fervent Prayers. 7. Jericho, destroyed by the found of Rams-Horns, was not only levelled by Jehovah to the ground, but a Curse inflicted on him that should attempt the re-building of it. This Curse notwithstanding, at the time when Abab reigned in Israel (which was about five hundred years after the ruin of it) Hiel a Bethelite, delighted with the pleasantness of the place, re-edified it. But (as it was foretold by Jehovah) as he laid the foundation of the Walls, he lost his eldest Son; and when he had finished it, and was setting up the Gates thereof, he lost also the younger. It may be Hiel when he began this Work, minded not the Prophecy, it may be he believed it not: peradventure he thought the words of Jehovah not so much to proceed from the spirit of Prophesy, as from an angry and vexed heart; they being spoken in way of wifdom, or execration. And it is possible, it may be, he chose rather to build the eternity of his name on so pleasant and beautiful a City, than on the uncertain lives and illuses of two young men. 8. A-mahobah, the birth-place of the Prophet Jeremy, and the Patrimony of Abiathar the High-Priest, sent hither by the command of Solomon, as to a place of his own, when deposed from his Office by that King. 9. Nob, called 1 Sam. 22. 19. the City of the Priests, destroyed by Saul, for the relief which Abimelech the High-Priest had given to David; the Ark of the Lord then residing there, 10. Gilgal, upon the bank of Jordan, where Jehovah did first eat of the Fruits of the Land, and kept his first Paschover; where he circumcised such of the People as were born during their wandering in the Wilderness; and high to which he set up twelve Stones, for a Memorial to Posterity that the Waters of Jordan did there divide themselves, to give passage to the twelve Tribes of Israel. Here Agag, King of the Amalekites, was hewn in pieces by Samuel, and here Samuel once every year administered Justice to the People. For being seated in the middle of the Land of Israel, betwixt North and South, and on the East-side of the Country near the Banks of Jordan, it served very fitly for that purpose: as Misphah also did, which stood in the same distance, in regard of the length of the Land of Canaan, but situate towards the West-Sea, near the Land of the Philistines: used therefore interchangeably for the ease of the People. 11. Bethel, at the first called Luz, but took this new name in remembrance of the Vision which Jacob saw here, at going towards Mesopotamia, as is said Gen. 28. 19. It signified the House of God, and was therefore chosen by Jeroboam, for the setting up of one of his golden Calves; though there (as the Prophet said) he made it to be Beth-aven, the House of Vanity, Hof. 3. 15. & 10. 5. For then it was a part of the Kingdom of the ten Tribes, and the Southern border of that Kingdom on the Coast of Ephraim: but taken from it by Abijah the King of Judah, and after that accounted as a member of his Kingdom, till the destruction of it by the Chaldeans. Called with the rest of those parts, in the time of the Maccabees, by the name of Apharema, which signifieth a thing taken away; because taken away from the ten Tribes, to which once it belonged, 1 Macc. 11. 34. where it is said, to have been taken from the Country of Samaritis, and added unto the borders of Judea. 12. Ramath, another place there mentioned, and said to have been added to the Realm of Judah, having been formerly the South border of the Kingdom of Israel; and therefore strongly fortified by Basaiha, in the time of Afa King of Judah, 13. Chadai, or Hadid, one of the three Cities (the other two being 14. Lod, and 15. Om) which were inhabited by the Benjaminites after the Captivity. Destroyed in the Wars with the Kings of Syria, and afterwards re-built by Simon the Maccabean.

But the chief Glory of this Tribe, and of all the rest, and not so only, but of all the whole World besides, was the famous City of Hierusalem; seated upon a rocky Mountain, every way to be ascended with steep and difficult Ascents (except towards the North) environed on all other sides also with some neighbouring Mountains, as if placed in the middle of an Amphitheatre. It consisted in the time of its greatest flourish of four parts, separated by their several Walls, as if several Cities; we may call them, the Upper City, the Lower City, the New City, and the City of Herod: all of them but the Lower City, seated upon their several Hills. Of these, that which we call the City of Hierusalem, had formerly been beautified with the Houses of many of the Prophets as in our Saviours time with that of Mary the Mother of John Mark, mentioned Acts 15. 37. converted to a Church by the Primitive Christians: the Western part whereof was wholly taken up by the Palace of Herod, (a wicked but magnificent Prince) for cost excellent, and for strength invincible; containing Gardens, Groves, Fillpounds, places devised for pleasures, besides those for exercise. Fortified with three Towers at the corners of it. That on the South-East of the Wall, fifty Cubits high, of excellent workmanship, called Marianne's Tower, in memory of his beloved but insatiable Wife, rashly murdered by him. Opposite to which, on the South-West corner, stood the Tower of Phasaelus, so called by the name of his Brother, seventy Cubits high, and in form resembling that so much celebrated Aegyptian Pharos: and on the North Wall, on a high Hill, the Tower of Hippick, exceeding both the rest in height, by fourteen Cubits, and having on the top two Spires; in memory of the two Hippick, his very dear Friends, slain in his service in the Wars.

2. On the South-side stood that part which was called the Old City, possessed if not built by the Jehusites, and therein both the Mountain and Fore of Sion: but after called the City of David, because taken by him; who thereon built a strong and magnificent Castle, the Royal Court and Mansion of the Kings succeeding. In the Palace built by Herod, the one part whereof he named Agrippa, and the other Cesar, composed of Marble; and every where interlaid with Gold; and not far off, the House of Anna and Caphana, to which the Conspirators led our Saviour to receive his Trial.

3. That which was called the Lower City, because it had more in it of the Valley, was also called the Daughter of Sion, because built after it, and did in Majesty and greatness exceed the Mother. For therein upon Mount anion and betwixt it and Mount Sion, on another part of Aegypt; and that which he founded for himself, Temple, stood hereof, on a lofty Rock over-looking the City, stood the Royal Palace of the Princes of the Maccabees, re-edified and dwelt in by King Agrippa, Herod's building, adorned with admirable Pictures, expressing the many Victories and Triumphs of Augustus Caesar. In this part stood also Mount Acra, and on that once a Citadel built by Antiochus King of Syria; but razed by Simon one of the Maccabean Brothers, because it over-topped the Temple; the House of Helenus Queen of Adiabene, who converted from Paganism to Judaism, had herer dwelling, and here died: and finally, Herod's Amphitheatre, capacious enough to contain Shows and Spectacles, as were in use amongst the Romans. And in this part also, on a high and craggy Rock, not far from the Temple stood the Tower of Barris, wherein the same Herod built a strong and impregnable Citadel, in honour of Mark Antony, whose Creature he first was, called by the name of Antonias, having a fair and large Tower at every corner, two of them fifty Cubits high, and the other seventy; afterwards garrisoned by the Romans, for fear the Jews presuming on the strength of the Temple, might take occasion to rebel.

4. As for the New City, which lay North to the City of Herod, it was once a Suburb only unto all the rest; inhabited by none but mechanical persons, and the meanest Tradesmen; but after incamped by Agrippa with a Wall of 25 Cubits high, and fortified with ninety Turrets. The whole City fenced with a wonderful circumvallation on all parts thereof; having a Ditch cut out of the fame Rock, as Josaphus an eye-witness writeth, sixty foot deep, & no less than two hundred and fifty foot in breadth. First built, say some, by Melchisedech the King of Salem; by the Jehusites themselves say others: by whomsoever built, called at first Jehusalem, afterwards Jerusalem, with the change of one letter only: enlarged in time, when made the Royal Seat of the House of David, to the magnificence, and greatness before described, till it attained unto the compass of sixty furlongs, or seven miles and an half. Unconquered for the first four hundred years after the entrance of the Children of Israel; and when David attempted it, the people presumed so much on the strength of the place, that they told him in the way of scorn, that the blink and the lame which they had amongst them (as the Text is generally expounded) should defend it against him. But as I think, the late learned Mr. Gregory of Christ's Church in Oxon, hath found out a more likely meaning of the Text than this, who telleth us, That the Jehusites called Blind and Lame (as they knew well what the Tutelar Idols, on whose protection they relied (as the then the meaning must be this, Those gods whom you of Israel, can blind and lame, shall defend our Walls. Why else should David say, (had they meant it literally) that his foul hated the lame and the blind? 2 Sam. 5. 8. to say, That the blind and lame should not come into the House (or the Temple of God) were it meant no otherwise? But notwithstanding their vain hopes, the Town was carried under the conduct of Joab, that fortunate and courageous Leader; and made the Royal Seat of the Kings of Judah.

Proceed we now unto the Temple built by Solomon, in providing the Materials whereof there were in Lebanon Month, 70000 Workmen, which wrought by 10000 every 80000 Quarry-men, that hewed Stones in the Mountains; and of Officers and Overseers of the Work, no less than 3300 men. The Description of this stately Fabric, we have in the first of Kings, cap. 6. 7. In the year of the World 2350. it was destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar at the taking of Hierusalem: re-built again after the return from the Captivity; but with such opposition of the Samaritans, that the Workmen were fain to hold their Tools in one hand, and their Swords in the other, to repulse if need were, those malicious Enemies. But yet this Temple was not unanswerable to the magnificence of the former; so that the Prophet Haggai who had good occasion to lay to the People, chap. 1. ver. 3. Glory? is it not in your eyes as nothing, in comparison of it? Nor fell it short thereof only in the outward Structure, but some inward Additaments: For it wanted, 1. The Por of Manna, which the Lord commanded Moses to lay up before the Tefimony for a memorial, Exod. 16. 32, &c. 2. The Rod of Aaron, which only budded of all the Rods of the Princes of Israel, and was commanded to be kept before the Ark of the Tefimony, for a token against Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, Num. 17. 10. 3. The Ark of the Covenant, the making whereof we have Exod. 25. 10. and the placing of it in the Oracle, or Sanctum Sanctorum, 1 Kings 6. 19. 4. The two Tablets of the Law, writ by God's own finger, and by Moses laid up in the Ark of the Covenant; Exod. 40. 20. and Deut. 10. 5. And 5. The Fire of Sacrifice, which came down from Heaven, mentioned Lev. 9. 24. 2 Chron. 17. 1. which which by the Priest, was to be kept continually burning never to go out. This second Temple, partly because it was grown ruinous, partly because it seemed not magnificent enough, but principally to curry favour with the Jews, Herod the Apolonite pulled down, and set up another in the place; making it not much inferior (if at all) unto that of Solomon, but far superior to the other Annea's opulentia Templum, as Tacitus most truly called it. And this was it to which our Saviour did sometimes vouchsafe his presence.

But here we are to understand, that by the Temple it is not meant the Fabric only, or the House it self; but also all those several Courts with which encompassed, being four in number. That is to say, Atrium Sacerdotum, or the Priests Court, which was next unto the Temple; wherein stood the Brazen Altar for the daily Sacrifice, and the Laver for the washing of the Priests and the Sacrifice also: into which Court might none enter but the Priests alone. 2. Then there was Atrium Populi, or the Peoples Court, separated from the other by a Wall of three Cubits height; to which the People did repair to perform their Sacrifices, to say their prayers, and to make payment of their vows. In the middle of this Court, did Solomon make a brazen Scaffold for the Kings his Successors, 2 Chron. 6. 13. and afterwards in imitation of his Porch built before the Temple, were many Porches built about it for the people to repair in rainy weather; which gave to this whole Court the name of Solomon's Porch, whereof see John 10. 23. Acts 3. 11. Without that stood Atrium Faminarum, or the Womens Court, divided from the other, as is collected out of 2 Chr. 20. 5. in the time of Jeioaphat King of Judah; in which stood the Treasury, or poor mens Box, mentioned in the one and twentieth Chapter of St. Lukes Gospel: from whence this whole Court had sometimes the name of Treasury, as appeareth John 8. 20. where it is said, that these words spake JESUS in the Treasury, that is to say, in the Womens Court, where the Treasury or Alms-box stood. Betwixt these last was an ascent of 15 steps, on which the Levites used to sing those 15 Psalms, which do immediately follow the hundred nineteenth Psalm; upon each step one: from whence they had the name of Psalm Graduales, or Cantica Graduum, i. e. the Psalm or Songs of degrees. And so far all was counted holy ground, upon which none might tread but either natural Jews, or circumcised Proselytes, whom they called Proselyti fidei, as before was said; or of such of the other Sex (not natural Jews) who having received all outward initiations, had bound themselves unto the observation of the Law of Moses. 4. So was it not with the fourth and last Court, called Atrium Gentium, or the Court of the Gentiles, designed for the use of those Gentiles, whom they called Proselyte Porta, bound only unto the keeping of the Precepts given to the Sons of Noah, for in that, as unanctified ground (though counted part of the Temple also) did they permit a Market of Sheep and Oxen, the Sale of Doves and Pigeons, and the Tables of Money-changers, for the Oblations of the People: stabling the poor Gentiles amongst their Cattle, and ranking them with the worst of them. And out of this Temple, or Court of the Temple did CHRIST our Saviour call the buyers and sellers and overthrow the Tables of the money-changers; asserting it to its primitive original use, which was to be an house of Prayer for all Nations. This last Court separate the other by a wall of three cubits height, adorned with certain pillars of equal dimension, bearing this inscription, Μη δει διαβαιναι οψη; Thou shalt not pass over, i. e. Let no Alien (or one that is no Jew) enter into the Holy place: and to this wall it is that the Apostle alludeth, saying, He hath broken down the middle-wall of partition between us (i. e. between the Jews and Gentiles) making one of twain, Ephes. 2. 14. 15. inferring hereupon, that the Gentiles are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-Citizens with the Saints; and of the humble of God, v. 9.

But to go forwards with the Temple, having continued in the glories of which Herod brought it, not above 83 years, it was finally destroyed by Titus the Son of Vespasian, in the 69 year of Christ's Nativity. At what time the Temple of Delphos was utterly overthrown by Earthquakes and Thunderbolts from Heaven; neither of them ever since repaired, though much endeavoured. The concurrence of which two Miracles evidently sheweth, that the time was then come in which God would put an end both to the Jewish Ceremonies and Heathen Idolatries, that so the Kingdom of his Son might be all in all. For this destruction of the Temple of Hierusalem I may call a miracle, in regard it was done against the command of Titus; who was not only careful to preserve it, before his Soldiers had put fire to it, but did all that possibly might be to quench it. His reason was, Παυλος ος ενος η βαβυλων, as Josephus hath it, because thereof would redound so highly to the prejudice, of the Roman Empire, in being deprived of such a glorious and magnificent structure. But do he what he could with his utmost industry, there was no quenching of it till it was consumed. And it adds somewhat to the marvel, that this should happen on the tenth day of August, on which day the first Temple had been burnt by Nebuchadnezzar. And certainly it is worth the noting (I hope I shall not be accounted superstitious for this observation) to see how happy or unfortunate, one or the same day had been found unto divers persons. In the Wars betwixt the French and Spaniards for the Realm of Naples, Friday was observed to be very lucky to that great Captain Gonsalvo; he having on that day given the French many notable overthrowes. Wednesday is said to have been fortunate to Pope Sixtus the Fifth, for on that day he was born; on the same made a Monk; on that day created General of his Order; on the same day made a Cardinal, then chosen to be Pope; and finally on the same inaugurated. To Henry the Seventh of England, Saturday was observed to be very fortunate in all his actions; as was the 24. of February unto Charles the Fifth, on what day forever: for on that he came into the world, and in that he took the King Francis prisoner at the Battle of Pavia, and on the same received the Imperial Crown. But to return unto the Temple, we find that on the Sabbath, or Saturday, it was taken by Pompey, on the same day by Herod, and on that also by Titus.

But go we forwards to Hierusalem as now it standeth, it lay in rubbish and unbuild (after the destruction of it by Titus) till repaired by Adrian: and then the Temple not so much as thought of, till out of an ungodly policy, in the Reign of Julian, that Politick Enemy of the Church; who to diminish the infinite number of Christians by the increase of the Jews, began again to build this Temple. But no sooner were the foundations laid, but a terrible Earthquake cast them up again; & fire from Heaven consumed the Tools of the Workmen, together with the Stones, Timber, and other materials. As for the City it self after the desolation in it which was made in Titus, it was re-edified by the Emperor Alis Adrianus, who named it Adia, gave thence the Jews, and gave it to the Christians. But this new City was not built in the place of the old. For within this, Mount Calvary is comprehended, which was not in the old before. As on the other side, a great part of Mount Sion, part of the City of Herod, and the foyl where the New City stood, are left out of this: the ruins of the other still remaining visible, to shew the ancient greatness and magnificence of it. To look upon it then as it stands at present, it is now only famous for the Temple of the Sepulchre built by Helena (whom most report to have been daughter to Constantine a British King) Mother to Constantine the Great. Much ado had the good Lady, to find the place where the Lords body had been laid; for the Jews and Heathens had raised great hillocks on the place and built there a Temple of Venus. This Temple being plucked down, and the Earth digged away, she found three Crosses, whereon our blessed Saviour, & the two Thieves had suffered. To know which of those was the right long visited with sickness, and now lay at the point of death. The Crosses of the two Thieves did the weak woman no good, but as soon as they laid her on the Cross to her former health: the occasion of the Festival on the third of May, by the Latins called Inventio sancte Crucis. This Temple of the Sepulchre called Inventio sancte Crucis, was highly revered and esteemed by the Christians of these parts. And even until our days, it is much resorted to, both by Pilgrims from all the parts of the Romish Church, who fondly and superstitiously hope to the merit by their journey; and also by divers Gentlemen for curiosity, partly for love to the antiquity of the place, and partly because their generous spirits imitate the sight of this Sepulchre, payeth nine Crowns to the Grand Seigneur, to use this tribute only is worth to the other building generally very mean and poor, if not con-high; flat on the top for men to walk on, and fenced with Battlements of a Yard in height to preserve them where they repose themselves in the heat of the day. Some houses near the Temple of Solomon, and the Palace of Herod, adorned with Arches toward the Street; where many such, nor any thing but the ruins left of the ancient buildings. The whole circuit of it reduced to two or three miles; and yet to those that take a survey thereof from some Hills adjoining, where the ruins are not well discerned from the standing edifices, it affordeth to the eye no unpleasing prospect. And as the place is, such is the people, inhabited for the most part by Artizans of the meanest quality, gathered together of the Cum of divers Nations: the greatest part consisting of Moor, and Arabian; a few poor Christians, of all the Oriental Sects, which dwell there for devotion; and some Turks, who for the profit which they make of Christians, are content to stay in it. Inasmuch that when Robert Duke of Normandy; being then not cured of his wounds, was carried into this City on the backs of some of this rascal people, he called to a Gentleman of his, who was going for England, and bad him, say, that he saw Duke Robert carried into Heaven on the backs of Devils.

Come we now to the Tribe of LEVI, though indeed not reckoned for a Tribe, because not planted close together as the other were, nor had whole Provinces to themselves, but mingled and dispersed amongst the rest of the people, having forty eight Cities assigned them for their habitation, proportionably taken out of the other Tribes. So was it ordered by the Lord, partly that they place to instruct the people, and partly to fulfil the Prophecy which he had spoken by Isaiah, who had fore-signified to Levi at the time of his death, that he should be divided in Jacob, and scattered in Israel. The like fortune he had prophesied of Simons also. The accomplishment whereof, so far as it referred to the dispersion of this Tribe, we have spoken before. Now to make up the number of the twelve Tribes, Joseph was divided unto Ephraim and Manasse; and the Levites were reckoned to belong unto that Tribe, within whose Territory, that City which they dwell in, stood. Their maintenance was from the Tenth or Tithes, the first Fruits, Offerings, and Sacrifices of the people: and as it is in John 11. 17. The Priests of the Lord were their Inheritance. There were of them four kinds: 1. Punies or Tyrones, which from their childhood, till the five and twentieth year their age, learned the duty of their Offices. 2. Graduates called, which having spent four years in the study of the Law, were able to answer and oppose in it. 3. Licentiate, apostol, who did actually exercise the Priestly Function. And 4. Dollors (Rabins they use to call them) who were the highest in degree. For maintenance of whom, they had (as before is said) the Tithes, the first Fruits, and Offerings of all the rest of the People be-lift, with the several Territories appertaining to them, which extending every way for the space of two thousand cubits, seem to have been a greater proportion of it self, than any of the other Tribes, with reference to the small number of Levites had in their possessions. Then for the Tithes, there was not only a full tenth part of all kinds of increase, but such an imposition laid upon all sorts of grain, as came to more than a sixth part of the Crop it self. For first, out of six thousand bushels (and so accordingly in all after that proportion) a sixtieth part at least, (and that they termed the Therimah, or the evil eye, or the miggards first tithes) was to be set forth as the first of the threshing floor; which was an hundred in the total. Out of the residue being five thousand and nine hundred bushels, the first Tithes paid unto the Levites, came to five hundred and ninety bushels; and of the residue, being five thousand three hundred and thirty bushels, five hundred thirty and one were paid for the second tithe, unto the Priests, which ministered in the holy Temple; yet so, that such as would decline the trouble of carrying it in kind unto Hierusalem, must pay the price thereof at the Priests own estimate. Lying which sums together, it appears demonstrably, that of six thousand bushels (or six sesteris) there will accrue one Priests and Levites; and one bushels to the hundred twenty and nine to the Lord or Tenant; which is the first born of mankind, and all unclean beasts, redeemed not fully a sixth part, as was said before. Then had they a certain rate, and all unclean beasts, redeemed Wool; the first fruits of the dough, and of the firstlings and the fat offered for a burnt offering; the flesh remained unto the Priests. They had also the meat-offerings, the heave-offerings, the shake-offerings, the Eucharistical Sacrifices the breast and the shoulder; of others the shoulder, the two cheeks, and the inward; besides the free Gifts of the People, appearing thence yearly before the Lord: and all this brought in them without charge or trouble. Which makes it evident, that they were far more liberally provided for, than the rest of the Tribes, though they had no whole Country allotted to them, as others had. And so much for such parts of the Land of Palestine as were possessed in part, or wholly by the Sons of Jacob; & proceed we now to the Inheritance, of the Sons of Esau.

Jehophat: and instead of a Vice-Roy sent unto them from the Court of Hierusalem, set up a King of their own Nation; never returning after that to the House of David. For though Soram made War presently upon them, and got the Victory; yet he did not prostrate it unto any effect, nor beat them out of any of their strong Holds, nor reduce any of their Cities unto his obedience: as if he had got honour enough in the eye of the world by being Master of the Field; or shewing his abilities in command of a greater Army, than the Edomites could bring against him. The like error was committed by Amaziah, who by a vast Army of 300000 fighting men, did no greater wonders than the killing of 10000 and the taking of as many Edomites; but neither left Garrisons in any of their defensible places, nor reduced any part of their Country under his obedience. And for the latter part thereof, it was as punctually fulfilled in the time of Antipater, an Idumean, Herod the Afcalonite, his Son, and their Successors; who in the decrepit age of the House of Jacob, became King of the Jews, and Lorded over them with infolence and contempt enough.

Mean time to look upon the intermediate passage of their State and Story. It seemeth that at first they were governed by Dukes, each having the command of those several Families, of which they were the Heads or Princes. But as Ambition and Power did prevail among them, the more potent having vanquished or awed the rest, took to himself the name of King: which by the names of their Fathers, and their several Cities in which they reigned, seem to have been chosen by Election; or otherwise to come in by strong hand, as the Sword could carry it. The names of which are thus set down in the Book of Genesis.

THE KINGS OF EDOM.

- 1 Bela, the Son of Beer.
- 2 Jehobab, the Son of Zerah.
- 3 Husham, of the Land of Temaim.
- 4 Hidada, the Son of Bedad, who warred against the Midianites, and vanquished them in the Fields of Moab, Gen. 36. 35.
- 5 Samlab, or Mafseckh.
- 6 Saul of Rebubah, by the River Euphrates.
- 7 Bahab-Hanan, the Son of Abbor.
- 8 Hadar, the Son perhaps of Baal-Hanan, for I find no mention of his Father. After whose death the Heads of the several Families resumed the Government again; ruling over their own Tribes, without any one Sovereign or Supreme. And all these Kings had before them reigned any King in Israel, Gen. 36. 31. that is to say, before any form of Supreme Government was established amongst them in the person of Moses, called by the name of a King in the Book of Deuter. chap. 35. v. But this distracted Government did not long continue, the Edomites being under a King again, at such a time as the Children of Israel came out of Egypt: for it was unto the King of Edom that Moses sent Messengers from Kadesh, to desire a passage thorow his Country. Which being denied, and the Edomites in Arms to defend their Passes, Moses forbore to force his way, though the nearest for him: partly because he had no mind to spend those forces in fighting with Hills and Deserts, which were designed for the conquest of another Country; but principally, because God commanded him not to meddle with them, or to take so much as a foot of their Country from them, Deut. 2. 5. But David, upon whom lay no such obligation, having vanquished the Syrians, and other Nations round about him, followed his fortunes unto Edom, whom he overcame, and put Garrisons into all their Cities, and the Edomites became his Servants. Governed from thenceforth by a Deputy or Vice-Roy (as is said before) till the time of Soram the Son of Jehophat King of Judah; in whose Reign they revolted, as before was said. Never regained to that Crown, and but twice endeavoured; that so the Word of God might be all in all. Only the Simoonites in the Reign of Hezekiah, wanting Pasture for their Cattel, and room for themselves, seized on the parts that lay nearest to them, destroyed the Inhabitants thereof, and dwelt in their Habitations; because there was pasture for their Flocks, 1 Chron. 4. 39. Provoked wherewith, and with the natural Antipathy which was between them, no People were more michievously bent against Judah, than these Edomites: no men so forward of themselves, to assist Nebuchadonzer against Hierusalem, none that so vehemently cried, Down with it, down unto the ground, none half so ready to set fire unto the Holy Temple. But they got little by this Service to the Babylonians, their own thralldom following close upon that of Judah, with whom made fellow Subjects to the Chaldeans; as afterward to the Persians, and Kings of Syria, of the Race of Selencus. In the declining of that House, subdued by Elyseus the Son of Simon, the fourth of the Maccabaean Princes; by whom they were compelled to be circumcised, and to receive the Law of Moses: not only reckoned after that, as a Province of the Jewish Kingdom, but as natural Jews. Which notwithstanding, and after the setting of that Crown on the head of Herod and his House, being originally Idumeans, might in all reason have extinguished their inveterate malice: yet was their hatred of that Nation as great as ever. Forgetting therefore how they had been rewarded by the Babylonians they would needs aid the Romans against them also: putting themselves into Hierusalem, when besieged by Titus, only of purpose to betray it; joyning with the seditious there, doing more mischief in the City than the Enemy had done without; and finally, setting fire to the second Temple, as they had done unto the first. Subjected afterwards by the Romans, they followed the same fortune with the rest of Palestine.

Having thus gone thorow with the story of those neighbouring Nations which encompassed Canaan, it will be seasonable to look on the affairs of the Canaanites first, and after on the House of Jacob, who possessed their Country. First for the Canaanites, they descended from Canaan the Son of Cham, who with his eleven Sons were here settled immediately after the Confusion of Babel. Of those twelve (taking in the Father) five planted in Phoenicia, and the Coasts of Syria; that is to say, Sidon, Harky, Arvad, Semari, and Hanathi: the other seven in those parts which we now call Palestine, though not all of that; the Edomites, Moabites, Midianites, Amorrites, and Iuwans, being Occupants or Tenants with them. And of those seven came those seven Nations which by Gods appointment were totally to be rooted out, viz. the Canaanites, the Amorites, the Hittites, the Jebusites, the Eivites, the Gergeshites, and the Perizzites. But from which of the Sons of Canaan these last descended, is not agreed on; unless perhaps they were descended of the Shinites (not otherwise reckoned in this Muller) and got the name of Perizzites on some new occasion. Governed at first by the chieftest of their several Families, with the names of Kings; the number of which increased, as their Families were subdivided into smaller Branches: inasmuch as Jeshub founded 31 Kings of the Canaanites only, besides what might descend from those who were settled in Phoenicia, and the Borders of Syria. The most potent of these Nations were the Amorites, the Jebusites and the Canaanites properly so called. Of which the Amorites had not only enlarged their Borders beyond Jordan, but in the Reigns of Or and Sihon, ruling at the same time at their several parts, had thrust the Iuwans, Amorrites, and Moabites out of most of their Countries; and so restored the same again to the Race of the Emmins and Zanzunims (of which line Or and the Kings of Basan were.) These vanquished in the time of Moses and their Labitations aligned over to the Tribes of Reuben, Gad, and the one half Tribe of Manasse. The Canaanites properly so called, as they were the first which fought with the House of Jacob; so they were the last of all with them under the Conduct of Arad their King, the Enemy in another mans Country, than to expect farts of Moab; and having cut off some of the out-parts home again. But Jabin, under whom they make their second on-set, went to work more resolutely, and taking for vengeance, so prevailed against them, that he tyrannized over them for the space of twenty years. After the time of Deborah, Sifra, his great Captain, slain by Jael the Wife of Heber the Kenite, and most of his Cities taken and possessed by the Isralites, he perished himself in the clove of that War; for it is said, That they prevailed against Jabin the King of Canaan, till they had destroyed him, Judg. 4. 24. As for the Jebusites, they were grown so formidable (at the time of the coming of the Hebrews) to the rest of their Neighbours, that their King Adonibezek bragged, that he had cut off the Thumbs and great Toes of 70 Kings, and made them eat the crumbs which fell under his Table. But being vanquished by Judah, he was served in the same kind himself by Judah and Simoon, and carried to Hierusalem, where he died: the whole Country of the Jebusites, and the City of Hierusalem it self, the Fortrefts of Mount Zion excepted only, being made a prey unto the Victor. And though yet being they were only on the defensive side, and made naamites as the last which did contend with them for the chief Command.

The Canaanites thus conquered and for the most part worn out of the Country, the Isralites succeeded in their Possessions; according to the promise of God, Jacob. Governed after the death of Moses and Jeshub, by the Congregation of the Elders, as appears by many pure calleth them (not being the ordinary Magistrates, pose, according to the exigence of their affairs, Car of Rome. So that the Government at first was an Ar as the Fathers call it; that is to say, a Government wherein G O D preided more immediately, than in o- to Samuel to have a King, God said unto him, Hearken unto the voice of the People, for they have not re- vored them; I Sam. 8. 7. God was their King, and he had mightily reigned over them since they came out of E- Egypt; but they desired to have a King like other Nations, to go in and out before them, and to fight their Batrels; a King whom they might fee with their bodily eyes, and converse with him in such manner as the People did, which dwelt round about them. And so came in the confirmed in David; the first a Benjaminite, the second of the Tribe of Judah; of which Jacob had foretold at the time of his death, that the Kingdom of his People should be vested in it. But there were only three in all, reckoning Saul for one, who had Dominion over the whole House of Israel; the Kingdom after Solomon's death, being rent in twain: ten of the twelve Tribes revolting unto Jeroboam the Son of Nebat; and only Benjamin and Judah, and so much of the Tribes of Dan and Simoon as lay intermingled with and in the Tribes of Judah, remaining firm to Rehoboam the Son of Solomon, who misgued by some evil Counsellors which breach that could never be soldered nor made up again, notwithstanding the fair opportunities which were after offered of uniting Judah unto Israel (for so the two joyning Israel to Judah, in the time of Jos; & reuniting offered to Asa King of Judah, for regaining the fallen out amongst them, by several Factions; each chad- lenging the privilege of making a King unto it self: Nab of Basila murdered by Zimri, Zimri deposed by Omri the Father of Abah, and Tibni a Competitor against Omri also, During which time, as the People must needs suffer many great oppressions, which might make them think of their Allegiance to the House of David: (had he made his best use of them) of working on that But there were two reasons which prevailed more to invite them to it. First, the imperiousness and arde- death, without formality of Law, those that did dis- nish, in the days of Solomon: and raising on the Sub- ject what fums they pleased, though more for offensa- the State. Of which exactions Rehoboam the Son of Solomon was so far from promising a release or some miti- gation at least, that he threatened to make them more than double to what they had been formerly: And how knew they but that Asa, and all such as descended from him, might be of the same temper also, and act accord- ing to those Principles which their Fathers left them. Whereas the Kings of Israel holding by no other Title than the love of their People, and the moderate and regular form of their Government over them, had put- ty, and made them so much Masters of their own Lib- Lives and Fortunes, that Naboth durst deny his Vine- yard to Abah, though offering full compensation for it; Abah durst not question full compensation for it; suborning Witnesses to accuse him of Blasphemy. So by the change and violent death of so many Kings one after another, being only temporary, and not likely to continue long, were no persuasions unto them to accept of Asa, and much less to offer themselves unto him who conceived all adversity to be far more tolerable, than the weighty Scepter of that House. And there was something also of preceding profit, which swayed the business. The people were obliged by the Law of Moses to make three chargeable Journeys yearly to Hierusalem, to worship there in the Holy Temple; and to pay a double Tenth yearly out of their Estates (besides Offerings and other Casualties) to the Priests and Levites. Jeroboam out of an ungodly policy, fearing these frequent Journeys unto Hierusalem might be an occasion of reducing them to the House of David, released them of that charge and trouble, by setting up a new form of Worship, erecting golden Calves for them in Dan and Bethel; and leaving every man unto the liberty of his own opinion, so it tended not to the Establishment of the old Religion. And on the other side, the Levites which dwelt amongst them, and received their Tithes, not willing to conform to these new impieties, and finding that their Ministry was no longer useful, withdrew themselves into the Kingdom of Judah, and left the ancient places of their Habitations: by means whereof, the people were released of those payments also. If they returned again to their old obedience, and accepted Asa for their King, they must return again also to their old Religion; the golden Calves of their own Imaginations and Inventions, must no more be worshipped: and (which no doubt prevailed most on the common people, who like that Religion best which costs them nothing) the ancient payments to the Priests and Levites must come up again. Rather than so, they were resolved to suffer yet a little longer, to please themselves in expectation of more fated times: and so no falling off to Asa, though as moderate & religious a Prince as they could have wished for, had they had power of fashioning a King to their own desires. Now as this opportunity of rejoicing Israel unto Judah, proved unsuccessful unto Asa; so did the like of uniting Judah unto Israel, prove as unprofitable unto Joas the Son of Jehoshaphat, and Grand-child of Jehon King of Israel, who being provoked by Amaziah King of Judah, made War upon him; and not only discomfited him without Battel, and took him Prisoner without blows, but led him captive to the very Wall's of Hierusalem; and by his Authority got the Gates thereof to be opened to him. But not contented with this honour (greater than ever had befallen to the Kings of Israel) he caused 400 Cubits of the Wall to be broken down; through which breach he entered triumphantly in his Chariot, carrying the unhappy Prince before him: and being entered, sacked both the Royal Palace and the Holy Temple. This was the opportunity which was given to Joas, of uniting Judah unto Israel; and this the loss of it. For the People, otherwise like enough to have accepted him for their King, as a Prince of whose noble acts they had heard much speech, were so exasperated by these rash and unseasonable outrages, that they looked upon him as a Sacrilegious Church-Robber, whom the Holy Altars were not safe from; and as a covetous and ungoverned Tyrant, not able to conciliate the fulness of his own prosperities. If he were thus unfatiable in his covetousness, and unsupportable in his pride, when he was a Candidate for their Kingdom; when in all common prudence he would have fought their love, and insinuated into their good opinions, by easing them of former Taxes, and shewing them fair hopes of his moderate Government: what must they look for when their Towns were filled with Garrisons, Hierusalem stuffed with armed Troops, and all the Princes of the House of David, from whom they might expect Redemption from cruel Bondage, destroyed or banished, or otherwise made unable to afford them succours? Rather than so, they were resolved to rise as one man against him, and let him see, that neither their Army was so scattered, nor themselves so cowed, but that they durst adventure it to a further trial. The fear of which made Joas sensible of the loss of his opportunity: and so content with Hostages for his safe retreat, he returned home again without other benefit of his Victory, than the spoil and honour. And that this possibly might be the motive of his going back, without putting the success of the affair to a further hazard, may be made probable by the like occurrence in the Story of Guicciardine, which in brief is this; Peter de Medici had very weakly opened the Gates of Naples to Charles the Eighth, then in his passage towards Naples. Charles entrench himself triumphantly as a conquered City, armed in compleat manner, and his Lance on his Thigh; his whole Army with him. Many insolencies being committed by the French, the Citizens prepare to fight in defence of their Liberties. Charles willing to go forwards on his march towards Naples, propounds Conditions in writing: but so intolerable, that Peter Capponi, one of the chief Citizens, catching the Papers out of the King's Secretaries hands, and tearing them before his face, Do you (faith he) found your Trumpets, we will ring our Bells, and see what will follow. Which stout and peremptory dealing did so daunt the French, that they descended upon very easie terms to abandon the City, and restore all the places appertaining unto their Estate, which were then in his power. The like consideration probably might prevail with Joas, as did then with Charles; and prompt him not to fight with an enraged multitude in the streets of a City, where he could make no use of his Horle; and where he might be more galled with Women and Children, throwing Stones or Darts out of their Windows, and from the tops of their Houses; than with an armed Enemy in the open Field. Nor wanted Joas an example of this kind, in the times before him; even that of Abimelech, in the Book of Judges: who having taken the Town of Thebes, and forced all the Men and Women into the Cattle, was slain there by a piece of Mill-stone, thrown at his head from one of the Towers of it by the hands of a woman.

To proceed further in the Story of these several Kings or recapitulate the sum of their principal Actions (as in other places we have done) may be thought unnecessary: the Scripture being in the hands of all sorts of persons, in which their Actions and Successions are at large contained. So that I only shall subjoin their names, with the time of their Reigns, and the year of the World in which they did begin their Empire: leaving the rest unto industry and search of the Christian Reader, of whose acquaintance with the Scriptures I dare make no question. This only I premise as concerning the Judges. That the time of their continuance in that authority, is not to be measured from the time of their coming to it, till the entrance of the next Successor, as in that of the Kings: these being occasionally raised by Almighty God, for some present Service, and no standing or established Magistrates; except Moses and Joshua only, who held the Government during life, and managed it as absolute Princes.

2993 2 Nadab, the Son of Jeroboam. 2.
2995 3 Baasha, of the Tribe of Issachar, having slain Nadab, reigned in his stead. 24.
3019 4 Eli, the Son of Baasha. 2.
3021 5 Zimri, a King of 7 days only, the murderer of Eli, and his own Executioner.
3026 6 Omri, the Captain of the Host, who removed the Regal Seat from Tirzah to Samaria. 8.
3029 7 Ahab, the Son of Omri, and Husband of Jezabel, a Phoenician Princess.
3051 8 Abaziah, the Son of Ahab. 2.
3053 9 Jehoram, the Brother of Abaziah. 12.
3065 10 Jehu, the Captain of the Host, vanquished and slew Jehoram, reigning in his stead. 28.
3093 11 Jehoshaphat, the Son of Jehu. 17.
3110 12 Joash, the Son of Jehoshaphat. 16.
3126 13 Jeroboam II, the Son of Joash. 41.
3178 14 Zachariah, the Son of Jeroboam the Second, after an Interregnum of eleven years, succeeded in the Throne of his Father: slain at the end of six Months by 15 Shallum who at the Month's end was slain by 3178 16 Atenahem, the Son of Gadi. 10.
3188 17 Pekahiah, the Son of Menahem, slain by 3190 18 Pekah, the Son of Remaliah; served in the same kind, after a Reign of twenty years, by 3210 19 Hosiah, the Son of Eli; in the fifth year of whose Reign, and the eighteenth year from the death of Pekah, Salmannasser King of Affryia, having by a Siege of three years carried the City of Samaria, destroyed the Kingdom of Israel, and led the greatest part of the people into Captivity.

he was slain by a Conspiracy of his Servants, when he had reigned but two years only.

3310 16 Jofabab, the Son of Amor, a right godly King; unfortunately slain by Pharab Necho King of Egypt, at the Battel of Megido. 31.

3311 17 Jehobabaz, the Son of Jofabab, a King of three months only; depofed and fent Prifoner by Pharab Necho, to Riblah in the Land of Hamath, fince called Antiochia.

18 Jehoiakim, the Son of Jofabab, and half Brother of Jehobabaz, advanced unto the Throne by Necho, who changed his name from Eliakim, by which he formerly was called, into that of Jehoiakim. 11.

3351 19 Jehoiachin, or Jehoniab, the Son of Jehoiakim, at the end of three Months led captive unto Babylon, with his Wives and Mother, and the Great Officers of the Realm, by Nebuchadnezzar.

20 Zedekiah, another of the Sons of Jofabab, and Brother by the whole blood of Jehobabaz, made King by Nebuchadnezzar in the place of Jehoiachin, or Jehoniab; his name being changed from Mattaniah, by which called before. But rebelling againft his Benefactor, contrary to the counfel of the Prophet Jeremy, he was taken Prifoner in the eleventh year of his Reign, Hierufalem destroyed, the Temple ruined, and the People carried captive to the Land of Babylon, A. M. 3362. where they lived in exile 70 years. Which time expired, Cyrus the King of the Persians gave them leave to return to their Country, and to re-edifie their City and Temple. Which work being finifhed, by the encouragement of Ezra, Nehemiah and Zorobabel, and the Nation again fetled in fome part of their old Poffeffions, they were after governed by their High-Priefts, and the Council of their Elders, which they called the Sanhedrim, the High-Priest bearing the chief ftroke, and being looked on as a man of the greateft Power. And therefore I will here fubjoin the Catalogue of fo many of them as governed the Affairs of this Country, from the Return of the People from the Captivity of Babylon, till the time of the Maccabees; who managed the Elitae thereof both as Priefts and Princes, till their Subjection by the Romans.

The High-Priefts of the J E W S after the Captivity.

A. M.

- 3427 1 Jofubab, the High-Priest at the time of the Return, affiftant to Zorobabel in re-building the Temple, which he lived not to finifh; though continuing (as fome fay) in the Government 100 years. But I believe rather, that the Names of his Successors being loft, the whole time is afcribed to him.
- 3330 2 Jehoiakim, faid to be the Son of Jofubab, in whole time, by the diligence of Ezra and Nehemiah, the Temple was finifhed, and the Worship of God reftored.
- 3380 3 Jonathan, or Johanan. 30.
- 3610 4 Jaddus, who entertained Alexander the Great coming to Hierufalem, (of whom more anon) the Brother of that Manaffes, for whose fake, and on whose occafion, the Temple on Mount Gerizim was built by Sanballat, with the leave of Alexander. 20.
- 3630 5 Anan fucceeded Jaddus, as Jaddus had done Jonathan; not by Birth (as formerly) but by Election of the People.

- 3651 6 Simon, firnamed Jufim. 9.
- 3660 7 Eleezer, the Brother of Simon. 32.
- 3692 8 Menelaus, the Brother of Eleezer and Simon.
- 3718 9 Onias II. 14.
- 3732 10 Simon II. 10.
- 3742 11 Onias III. the Son of Simon the 2d.
- 3787 12 Jafon, the Brother of Onias the 3d.
- 3789 13 Menelaus II. the Brother of Jafon, in whose time the Temple was prophaned by the Syrians, at the Command of Antiochus Epiphanes.
- 3794 14 Alcimus, under whose Government the Maccabees began to appear in defence of their Country and Religion, by whom fucceeded in the Office of High-Priest, after his deceafe. Among these none of greater note than Jaddus, High-Priest at fuch time as Alexander the Great having conquered Syria, marched towards Hierufalem, and was encountered by this Jaddus in his Prieftly Veftements; affuring him in the Name of the Most High God, and making it demontftrable from the Prophecie of Daniel, That he fhould prosper in his Enterprize againft the Persians. An hope which Alexander did embrace with the greater confidence, b.cause (as he affirmed to Parnenio his chief Commander) he had once at Din, a City of Macedon, feen in a Dream or Vifion fuch a Perfon as Jaddus was, fo habited, and profelling the fame one God; by whom he was encouraged to purfue the Action which he had in hand with affurance of Victory. And upon this the Jews were fo much favoured by him, that he gave them leave to live according to their own Laws, and to enjoy with Freedom their own Religion. But it held only for his own time: For fhortly after his deceafe, they were on both fides plagued by the Kings of Egypt and Syria, who ransacked their Cities, flaugtered their People, made havock of their Goods, and compelled many of them both to eat of forbidden Meats, and offer Sacrifice unto Idols. At the laft God raifed up Mattathias (defended from Simon a Priest of the rank of Jearib) and his five Sons, to refist these Infolencies; who in the Reign of Antiochus Epiphanes King of Syria, undertook the Protection of the People, and gave unto the Syrians many notable overthrows; infomuch that the Jews made choice of Judas firnamed Maccabaeus (the eldeft of the five Brethren) for their Prince or Governor.

The AS MON E A N Princes of J E W R T.

- A. M.*
- 3799 1 Judas Maccabaeus, the third Son of Mattathias above-mentioned, one of the nine Worthies, vanquifhed three great and puiffant Armies of the Syrians, conducted by Apollonius, Gorgias, and Lysias, men of great renown, being Commanders of the Forces of Antiochus Epiphanes, before mentioned.
- 3803 2 Jonathan, the Brother of Judas, vanquifhed the Forces of Bacchides and Alcimus, Captains of Demetrius King of Syria; and after many notable exploits and deeds of Arms, was treacheroufly murdered by Tryphon, afpiring at that time to the Syrian Diadem.
- 3823 3 Simon the elder, brother of Judas and Jonathan, fubdued the Cities of Gaza, Joppa, and Jamnia, and cleared Judea of the Syrians; perfidiously flain in the course of his fortune, by his Son-in-law Ptolemy. 8.
- 3831 4 Johannes Hircanus, the third Son of Simon (his two two other Brethren being in the power of Ptolemy) fucceeded in the Government. He destroyed the Temple on Mount Gerizim, conquered Assanania, and fubdued the Idumeans, compelling them to be Circumcised; transferred the War into Syria; and dying, left the Sovereignty to his eldeft Son Aristobulus.

The AS MON E A N Kings of J U D A H.

- 3862 1 Aristobulus, caufed himself to be Crowned, and was the first King of Judea after the Babylonian Captivity; he ftarved his Mother, and flew Antigonum his Brother.
- 3863 2 Alexander, the Brother of Aristobulus, exceedingly enlarged the Kingdom of Jury by the conquest of Iurra, and fome parts of Syria; but was wital fo great a Tyrant, that he caufely flew of his own Subjects fifty thousand in Battel; and commanded 800 of his principal enemies to be hanged before his face. He left behind him two fons, Hircanus who was at laft flain by Herod after all his troubles, leaving no Ifue Male behind him; and Aristobulus the father of Alexander, and of Antigonum, of whom more anon: of which two Alexander was the Father of another Aristobulus, the most beauful Prince of all his time, and of Mariamne the wife of Herod, by whose command they were most villainoufly murdered.
- 3890 3 Alexander, by fome called Salome, the wife of Alexandra, and following the counfel of her husband at the time of his death, committed her self and her Children into the hands of the Pharifees, then in great power and credit amongst the people; by means whereof the procured an honourable burial for her husband, obtained the Kingdom for her self, and finally left it to her Children, whose difagreements caufed the ruine of this famous Family.
- 3899 4 Aristobulus II. the younger Son of Alexander, an active Prince, and beloved of the Military Men, having prefently after the death of his Mother poffeff himself of the greateft part of the Ports and Castles, by the forced confent of Hircanus his elder Brother fucceeded in the Kingdom and High-Prieft-hood alfo; both which he held with great trouble and opposition both from his Brother and the Romans, whom most imprudently they called in to decide the Controverfie. By Pompey fent Prifoner unto Rome (with Alexander and Antigonum his two Sons) he efaped thence and raised a new Army for the recovery of this Kingdom; but being forced to yield himself to Gabinus one of Pompey's Lieutenant, he was fent back again to Rome, where he died in Prifon, having reigned three years and fix months.
- 3903 5 Hircanus II. a Prince of weak parts, and not fit for Government, was made High-Priest in the first year of his Mothers reign, but difpoffeff of that dignity by Aristobulus his younger Brother. Restored again by the favour of Pompey, he was again difturb'd in his poffeffion by Alexander the eldeft Son of Aristobulus; who efaping out of Rome, had raised fome Forces; and began to difpute the Forces with him: but was foon after difcomfited by Gabinus afore-mentioned, and flain by Scipio, another of Pompey's Captains. After the death of Aristobulus, which hapned in the year 3903, Hircanus was lookt on by the People, not only as their High-Priest, but as their Prince and King, commonly called fo by Jofephus in the course of his History. His affairs managed for the most part by Antipater (an Idumean born, and the Father of Herod) his conftant and most faithful friend in all his troubles, who governed the Elitae with great care and prudence. But he being made away by Poifon, Antigonum the younger Son of Aristobulus, fet on foot his Title to the Kingdom, and drew in an Army of the Parthians to make it good; by whose aid, having treacheroufly inflamed Hircanus, he cut off his ears (to make him incapable of the Priefthood for the time to come) and fent him Prifoner to Babylon; taking upon himself the Title of King, though never acknowledged for fuch by the Jewish Nation. But long he did not please himself with that Title neither, for being befieged in Jerufalem by Herod, then newly created King of the Jews by the Roman Senate; and by him taken Prifoner in the fack of that City, he was fent in bonds to Mark Anthony, and by him beheaded. As for Hircanus the rightful Prince of his Country, he remained Prifoner for a time amongst the Parthians, till hearing of the death of Antigonum, he returned into Jewry, and lived contentedly under the Government of Herod, of whose greatness he had laid the first foundation, and was by him in fine wickedly murdered.

The Idumean Kings and Princes of Jewry.

A. M.

- 3940 1 Herod the Idumean, firnamed the Great, Son to Antipater the Idumean, was by the power of Mark Anthony created, and by Aurelius confirmed King of Jewry; under whom that Kingdom was more enlarged, and in greater fplendor than ever it had been in fince the time of David. A Prince of great Magnificence, but of greater Vices. During his reign, the Scripter being now departed from Judah, the Lord C H R I S T was born.

A. Christi.

- 2 Archelaus, eldeft Son of Herod at the time of his death, fucceeded with the Title of King; but in Truth and reality poffeffed only a Tetrachy, or fourth part of the Kingdom, though the best and largeft of the four, containing Judea, Samarita, and Idumea. The reft of Herods Kingdom was divided into three other Tetrarchies, i. e. the Tetrarchy of Galilee and Petrea, given to Herod Antipas; Secondly, That of Iurra, given to Philip, another of the Sons of Herod; And thirdly, that of Abilene, conferred on Lysanias. Banifhed unto France, his Tetrachy was made a Province of the Roman Empire; governed by Pontius Pilate, at our Saviour's Paffion.
- 16 3 Herod II. firnamed Antipas, Tetrarch of Galilee and Petrea, on the banifhment of Archelaus, fucceeded him, as chief of the Herodian Family, but not in his Tetrachy; and at laft followed him in his banifhment alfo. This is he who murdered John Baptift, and in whose time C H R I S T fuffered.
- 40 4 Herod III. firnamed Agrippa, in honour of Agrippa the Son-in-law, and most truly Favorite of Augustus Caeſar, Nephew to He- rod the Great, by his Son Aristobulus begotten Maridime of the Race of the Asmonets, was by Caligula first invested in the Tetrarchy of his Uncle Philip, with the Title of King; and next, in that of Asipar allos; and finally by Claudius, in that also of Lysanias, some part of the Tetrarchy of Archelaus being added unto his Dominions. This was the man that murdered James, and imprisoned Peter; and in the end was stricken by an Angel, and devoured by Worms.

- 47 5 Agrippa Minor, Son of Herod Agrippa, was he before whom St. Paul pleadeth in defence of the Gospel; and the last which had the Title of King of the Jews: for in his time the City of Jerusalem was destroyed by Titus, and the whole Kingdom made a Province of the Roman Empire Anno 73.

And here it is to be observed, that when Salmanassar had subdued and captivated the ten Tribes of Israel, he sent new Colonies of his own to plant this Country; that so fruitful and well-situate a part of his Empire might yield its full tribute, and not lie open to the fury of the next invader. But the Romans not having (it seemeth) so much policy or providence as those whom they counted barbarous; having laid the Country desolate, left it unfurnished of new Colonies: whereby the Perfians, next the Saracens, and after them the Turks, entering the Roman Empire at this door, have successively driven the Romans out of the whole house. Now that we may the better perceive how the Romans had weakened and almost utterly rooted out the Jewish Nation, we will relate some of their particular Misdeeds, which were not more cruelly inflicted on them by the Enemy, than justly deserved by themselves; they willing though (I suppose) not desiring, that the innocent Blood of our Saviour should be on them and their Children. First then the Inhabitants of Cesarea slew of the Jews in one day, about 20000, and such as fled were took and imprisoned by Florus the Roman Lieutenant of Judea. To revenge this slaughter, the Jews set upon the Syrians; in which skirmish 13000 of them were slain. The people of Alexandria put 50000 of them to the sword; the people of Damascus, 10000; Antonius, a Roman Captain, slew in Afcalon 10000 of them, and Cestius another Captain, 80400 persons. Now to come to the Wars here managed by Vespasian; This Vespasian in the siege of Abdela, slew by Vespasian, 17150 persons; in Samaria, 11600 persons; in Isotopata, 42200 persons; in Yappa, so many killed and drowned themselves, that the sea threw up again 4200 dead bodies; and the rest so totally perished, that there remained none to carry tidings unto Jerusalem of the loss of the Town. In the City of Tarichea, were slain, and made captives, 45000 persons, besides those which were given to the King Agrippa. In Gamala there perished 90000, and none left alive but only two women; in Cesarea 5000 men died by the Sword; in the City of Gadara there were slain 32200, besides an infinite number which had drowned themselves. In Jerusalem itself, there died 100000 of them, partly by the Sword, and partly by the Famine; the worse Enemy of the two; there were found 2000 in Privies and Sinks; and 9700 taken prisoners; inasmuch that 30 Jews were sold for a Penny. So punctually was the Divine Justice in retaliaing to this wretched people, according to the measure of their Iniquities that they who bought their Saviour for 30 pence, should be sold at thirty for a penny in the open Market.

Now that Jerusalem was able to contain such a number of people, is evident, in that when Cestius was Lieutenant of Jewry, the High-Priest did at his request, number the People which came thither to eat the Paschal Lamb; and found them to be two millions and seven hundred thousand living Souls, all found and purified: For to Lepers, or men having a flux of Seed, or women in their monthly terms, or to strangers, it was not lawful to eat of it. And when Titus laid Siege to the City, it was in the Feast of the Paschever, when most of the People were there assembled; God (as it were) having thus imprisoned them. All these Maltresses, besides divers others which I have omitted, and infinite numbers which were slain in the Fields and Villages, which drowned themselves, & which were privately made away, amounting all to almost 2000000 of people, happened in the compass of four years; beginning at the 12th of Nero, and ending at the 2d of Vespasian; yet was not the whole Nation rooted out, till the year 136. For then this miserable people having stirred two notable rebellions; the one under Trajan, and the last under Adrian the Emperors, were generally banished their native Country; and never again permitted to inhabit it, otherwise than as strangers. After this dissolution, the Jews were dispersed all over the World, and especially in Spain where Adrian commanded many of them to dwell; yet they found every where so little favour, that having divers times been put to grievous mulcts and ransoms, they were at last thrust out of most of the Kingdoms of Europe. They were banished out of England by Edward the first, Anno 1290. Out of France by Philip the Fair, 1307. Out of Spain by Ferdinand the Catholicus, 1492. Out of Portugal by Emmanuel, 1497. Out of Naples and Sicily, by Charles the Fifth, 1530. Yet are they found in great numbers in the Romish parts of Germany and Poland; in most Cities of Italy, especially Rome it self, where are no less than 15000 or 20000 of them; and also in the Popes Country of Avignon. The reason why they are permitted to live thus under the Popes nose, is pretended to be an expectation of their Conversion, which is a mere pretence indeed; the true reason being the benefit here arising to his Holiness Coffers; the hopes of their Conversion being very small, and the means less. For besides the scandal, Datum & acceptum, by the Papists for worshipping of Images, so peremptorily contrary to the first Table of the Law: they are not permitted to see any Book of Christian Religion, no not so much as the New Testament. And (which worketh much upon men of their metal) because at their Conversion they must quit all their goods unto the Church, as being ill gotten, and by consequence the works of the Devil, which in their Baptism they promise to renounce. They have also a Synagogue at Amsterdam, and are pretty thick spread over the Dominions of the Turks: who, notwithstanding so hate them for crucifying of CHRIST, that they used to say in the detestation of a thing, I would I might dye a Jew. Neither will they permit a Jew to turn Turk, unless he be first baptized. And though their multitudes be so great both in Theffalonica & Constantinople, that it is conceived they do amount to the number of 160000 persons; yet they are not only contemned but hated: but there, and in all other places of their habitation, upon every tumultuous assembly of the Common people, and constantly every Easter, whereforever they be, in danger of death. Inasmuch that if a Jew do but stir out of doors betwixt Munday Thursday at noon, and Easter Eve at night, the Christians of the Balk amongst whom they dwell (though far fewer in number) will be sure to stone them; because at that time, they were detested, and in fine, crucified their Saviour. Hated in all the parts of the Turk Dominions, because employed as Publicans in gathering and enhancing the publick tributes, which they exact with all severity that may be, and improve unto the moft. And no less hated in all parts of the Christian world, as Enemies to the Cross of CHRIST: so unclambly addicted to their ancient Judaifms, and so abhorring from the conversation of other men; that it is not possible they should reap any other harvest, than contempt and scorn from those amongst whom they dwell.

To give you their Character in brief; They are a people which know how to comply with the times, and the condition which they live in; especially if their profit be concerned in it: reviled like Dogs, and used like Slaves, yet never shew so much as an Angry countenance. A Nation which will thrive whereforever they come, but most by Usury and Brokeage; not lending any thing but on pawns, and those once forfeited, never more redeemable. The best of both Sexes said to have an unfavourable rank, not incident (if not caused by slothfulness) to other people: from whom as different in their habits, as in their Religion. And as for that, they retain still Circumcision, as the badge and cognizance of their Nation; but mingled with many Ceremonies not prescribed by the Law, nor observed by the Ancients: placing a void Chair for the Prophet Elias, whom they believe to be present, so detested, that they conceive the Female Sex incapable of eternal life, because not capable of Circumcision; and therefore use to name them with no other Ceremony, up the Cradle with the Child in it, which she standeth at the head, giveth the name unto. Of their Sabbath so extremely doating, that they have added to the Jepsefians left them by the Pharisees: And herein they are so precise, that if a Jew travel on the Friday, and in the Evening fall so short of his Journeys end, that it amounts to more than 2000 Cubits, or six Furlongs, which they account a Sabbath-days journey, there must he fit him down and keep his Sabbath, though in a wood, or field, or the high-way side, without fear of wind or weather, of Thieves or Robbers, and without taking order for meat or drink: Periculo latrum pradamque omnis periculi item omni cibi priusque neglectis, as Rustoribus hath it. And so far have they gone in despite of Christ, as to declare it unlawful to lift the Ox or Ass out of a ditch; permitted in the strict times of Pharisaism and drink, that they will by no means sit at the Table with other men, and so precise in the dressing of it, that they will eat of no flesh but of their own killing; and that too with such fustian customs and reservations, that if any of the entrails be corrupt or dislocated, they will fill the whole beault to the Christians for a very trifle. Beneficial in that only to the neighbouring Christians. Wine they forbear except it be of their own planting, not so much out of dislike of that Liquor, for they are generally good fellows, and love their bellies, as for fear the Wine should be baptized: a Ceremony much used in the Eastern parts. Of the coming of their Messiah so full of hopes that there is no great Warriour stirring, but they look upon him as the man; till some sad Tragedy or other, their error promising to themselves whensoever he cometh, a restitution of their Kingdom: and such felicities therein, in the literal sense of some Texts of Scripture, which carry in them a more mystical and sacred meaning, made part good time (but Gods, not theirs) they shall be do speak of, is both the hope and wish of all pious men; who cannot chuse but grieve to behold the natural branches, so long dismembered and cut off from the tree of life.

And this they neither hope nor wish for but on some fair grounds, presented to them by St. Paul: who said expressly, that when the fulfms of the Gentiles is once come in, that then all Israel shall be saved, Rom. 11. 25, 26. The words are so plainly positive that they need no Commentary. Or if they did, we have the general consent of the Ancients, besides the constant current of most modern Writers; who cherish the glad hopes of their conversion to the Gospel; which the Apostle doth there aim at. Origen, Abrahamus, Elerius, Augustine, Chrysostome, for the primitive times; Beda and Flugdo Cardinalis, in the times succeeding; Gorran, and Thomas Aquinas, for those of Rome; Calvin, Beza, Bullinger, and Peter Martyr for the Reformed Churches; besides divers others of great note, to expound that Text. Not want there other Texts of Scripture to affirm as much; which he that doth desire to see, may find with the Expositions of most Christian Writers, in a Book writ by Doctour Wiler, Entituled, De generali & novissima Judaeorum vocatione; and thither I refer the more curious Reader. Out of all I shall take these words of Peter Martyr, written on that passage of St. Paul to the Romans, viz. Non ita Judaei perierunt ut nulla de illorum salute spes superest. The Jews (saith he) are not so wholly fallen from the favour of God, but that there still remains some hopes of their salvation. Of their Salvation the Gentiles is once come in, we conceive good hopes: but whether there be any of their restitution to their temporal Kingdom, is a further question; and not so clearly evidenced in the Book of God, though there be some opinion offering restored to the Messiah, so that Temporal power which was taken from them by the Romans, rest of the Jews, is, I take it, clear enough in the holy Gospel: In such a Kingdom, and no other, did the two Sons of Zebedee desire to sit on both hands of their Master; and the same was it, and no other, which all of them expected, as appeared by the words of Chaplain, Luke 25. 21. that Christ should have restored unto them. We thought, said he, that this would have proved the man, that I should have redeemed Israel. Redeemed Israel? From what? from sin and Satan, or the curse and bondage of the Law? not so. Non sed ut videremur liberari but from the yoke of Vassallage, which the Romans had so lately imposed on them, say the Fathers rightly. Touching the same it was that they moved him, saying Luke, wilt thou at this time restore again the Kingdom of Israel, Acts 1. 6. In answer whereunto, our Saviour makes them no denial, as unto the thing, nor tells them that they never must expect such a resurrection; but only puts them off as unto the time, and bids them rest themselves on the pleasure of God the Father, in whose hands the disposing of all Kingdoms was: it is not for you (saith he) to know the times and seasons, which the Father hath in his own power, ver. 7. By which answer (as it seems to me) there is a possibility of restoring them to their Kingdom also; though not in the present at that very instant when they were most desirous to have it done, or at any other time fit for them to know; that being a secret, which the Father hath referred to himself alone.

But leaving these Speculations of a Restitution of the Throne of Israel, and the great Power and Privileges it may then enjoy, let us look back on the Estate in which it flourished in the former times; when the Forces and Revenue of it were at the height. And first for the Revenues, they amounted in the time of Solomon (as is said 2 Chron. 9. 13.) to 600 Talents of Gold; besides the benefits of his Customs and Impositions; which cometh to 2997000 pounds of yearly income. A vast Sum for such a little Kingdom. Nor can we reckon them at less, if it is aswered, 1 Chron. 22. 14. That David; of whom it is aswered, 1 Chron. 22. 14. That he left to Solomon 100000 Talents of Gold, and he left to Solomon Silver towards the building of the Temple, besides 5000 Talents of Gold, and 7000 Talents of Silver, formerly deposited for that purpose, as is said 1 Chron. 29. 4. Which if it be computed at the ordinary rate of a Jew's Talent, reckoning a Talent of Gold at 4500 pound, and a Talent of Silver at 375 pound, will amount in our money to 840125000 pounds. So vast a Sum; that it had been sufficient to have built a Temple of pure Gold and Silver, far greater than the Temple of Solomon, without other Materials. I conceive therefore with our learned and industrious Brerewood, that by the Talent in those places we are to understand a far lesser Sum than the ordinary Hebrew Talents; which whether it doth there signifie a Sicle only, which is half a Crown of English money, as Epiphanius, cited by Eusebius, was of opinion; or that every Talent of Gold came to three Golden Crowns of Athens, which maketh forty five shillings of English money, as Julius Pollux hath it in his Onomasticon, I am not able to determine. But measuring it by the last estimate, which I more approve of, it will amount to two millions and two hundred ninety and five thousand pounds: a vast Sum for a King to leave in ready money, which was always exercised in war. And though I do not find expressly what the Revenues of Judah might amount unto after the division: yet by one circumstance I find them to be very great. For it is written 2 Kings 18. 14. that the yearly tribute imposed upon Hezekiah, by the King of Assyria, was three hundred Talents of Silver, and thirty Talents of Gold: amounting (according to the ordinary Hebrew Talent, which questionless is there intended) to two hundred forty seven thousand and five hundred pounds of English money: and therefore probably his ordinary Revenue must be thrice as much, above that tribute; Else the Assyrian had not left him a subsistence for a King to live on. Nor can I think that the Revenues of this Crown were less to Herod, than formerly to Solomon, or David; considering his vast expences, the many and magnificent Structures which he brought to perfection, the immeasurable donatives bestowed upon Augustus, Livius, and the Court of Rome, together with the large Legacies he gave at the time of his death: not parallel'd by any King before or since, though of a more large and more ample Territory than he itood possessed of.

What forces the Kings of the Hebrews were able to bring into the field, may be best climated by the Muster which David made, when he numbred the People; the enrolment of such as were able to bear arms, and fit for service, coming in all to five hundred thousand fighting men, in Judah only, and eight hundred thousand men in the Tribes of Israel. 'Tis true that David never brought into the field so vast a multitude; but when the Kingdoms were divided, and was denounced betwixt Jeroboam and Abijah, we find almost the whole number brought into the field: that is to say, 800 thousand on the side of Jeroboam the King of Israel, and four hundred thousand by Abijah, the King of Judah. After this, out of that small Kingdom, Asa the Son of Abijah, being invaded by Zardu the Arabian or Ethiopian, advanced an Army of five hundred and eighty thousand men, which was more than the enrolment made in the time of David. An infinite proportion for so small a Kingdom; and were it not avouched in the holy Scriptures, far above belief, had not that God who said to Abraham, that his Seed should be as the Stars of Heaven for multitude, been able to have made it good.

As for the story and affairs of this Country since the time of Adrian, the Jews being all expelled their native Soyl, and Christianity in fine prevailing over all those parts, it was inhabited as the rest of the Empire was, by men of that Religion only: in this Country so advanced and countenanced, that Helena the Mother of Constantine, is reported to have built in it no less than two hundred Temples and Monasteries, in places of most note for the Miracles of Christ our Saviour, or the dwelling of some of his Disciples. In the year 615, the Persians, under the Conduct of Chosroes their King, became Masters of it; and possessed themselves of Hierusalem also: expelled thence by the valour and good fortune of the Emperour Heraclius, who recovering the Crofs on which Christ suffered, out of the hands of the Pagans, carried it with as great a Triumph into Constantinople, as David once did the Ark into Hierusalem, occasioning thereby the annual Festival on the fourth of September, called Holy-Croft-day, or Exaltatio Sancte Crucis. But this glory and rejoicing did not long continue. For within twenty years after the recovery of this City from the power of the Persians, it was again conquered and subdued by Homer, or Aunur, Caliph of the Saracens, Anno 637. Under this yoke the captivated Christians had long suffered, when they changed the Tyrant, but not the tyranny, the Turk about the year 1079. overcoming the Saracens, and domineering in their stead. Twenty years did the Christian languish under this oppression, when one Peter an Hermit, travelling for devotion to the holy Land, and being an eye-witness of the miseries under which they groaned; at his return, made his addresles to Pope Urban the second, acquainting him with the sad conditions of the poor Christians in those Countries. A Council thereupon is called at Clermont in France, where the Pope (willing to employ the Christian Princes farther off, that he might the better play his game at home,) did so effectually advance and endear the business, that no fewer than three hundred thousand fighting men, under several Leaders, undertook the service. And it prospered so well with them in the first beginning, that having beaten the Turks out of Asia Minor, taken the great City of Antioch, and most of the strong Towns of Syria, they incamped before Hierusalem, and in short time took it. Anno 1099. after it had been four hundred years and upwards in the power of the Infidels. The City being thus gained, was offered with the title of King, to Robert Duke of Normandy, Son of William the Conquerour: but he upon hopes of the Kingdom of England, refused that honour; never prospering, as it was observed, after that refusal. Godfrey of Bouillon, Duke of Lorrain, had the next offer of it, which with a Religious joy he accepted of; though on the day of his inauguration he refused the Crown: affirming that it was not fit for a Christian Prince to wear in that City a Crown of Gold, where the Redeemer of the World wore a Crown of Thorns.

The Kings of Hierusalem.

- 1099 1 Godfrey of Bouillon Duke of Lorrain.
- 1100 2 Baldwin of Lorrain, brother of Godfrey, won Ptolemais, and many other Cities of Syria.
- 1118 3 Baldwin II. surnamed of Bruges, Cousin of Godfrey, and Baldwin, the Former Kings, and overcame the Sultan of Damascus; and enlarged his Kingdom by the addition of Tyre.
- 1131 4 Fulk, Earl of Anjou, having married Millicent the daughter of Baldwin the second, succeeded succeeded after his decease; unfortunately killed with a fall from his Horse.

- 1142 5 Baldwin III. Son of Fulk, and Millicent, fortified Gaza against the Caliph of Egypt; and recovered Panadé from the King of Damascus.
- 1164 6 Americus, the Brother of Baldwin the third, to disrelieve the great Caliph of Egypt; that he was forced to call in the Turks to aid him; by whom slain, and his Kingdom transferred on Saracem the Turkish General.
- 1174 7 Baldwin IV. Son of Americus, overthrew Saladin the victorious King of the Turks in a Fight near Ascalon, and valiantly defended his Dominions.
- 1185 8 Baldwin V. Son of Sybil the Sister of Baldwin the fourth by William Marquess of Montferrat; unnaturally poisoned by his own Mother, having reigned only five Months, to make way for her second Husband, called
- 1185 9 Guy of Lusignan, the last King of Hierusalem, that had the possession of the City: during whose time Saladin the Sultan of Egypt won that Kingdom, Anno 1187. which his Successors defended against all invasions, till the year 1517 in which Selim the first, Emperour of the Turks, added the Holy Land, together with Egypt, to his Empire. When Hierusalem was taken by the Christians, it is said that the German Emperours name was Frederick; the Pope's Urbanus; the Hierosolymitan Patriarch, Heraclius; and that so also were they called, when the Christians again lost it. This is the conceit of Roger Hooften, in the Life of Henry the Second; but how it canagree with Chronology, I do not see.

After the taking of Hierusalem by Sultan Saladin, the Christians retired their Forces into some of the other Towns of the Holy Land; which they made good against the Enemy, and defended them under the Government of these three Kings following, viz.

- 10 Conrad Marquess of Montferrat, Husband of Isabel the Daughter of Americus, King of Hierusalem.
- 11 Henry Earl of Champagne, second Husband of Isabel.
- 12 John di Brenne, Husband of Mary, or Yolanda as some call her, Daughter of Conrad and Isabel, the last Christian King that ever had possession in Syria or Palestine: inhabited ever since by Moors and Arabians; few Christians, and not many Turks but such as be in Garrisons only. Yolanda the Daughter of this John di Brenne, was Wife to Frederick King of Naples, who in her right intitled himself King of Hierusalem: and so now do the Kings of Spain, as Heirs unto and Possessors of the Kingdom of Naples. Concerning which Title, it would not be amiss to insert this Story. When the Wars in Queen Elizabeth's time were hot between England and Spain, there were Commissioners of both sides appointed to Treat of Peace. They met at a Town of the French Kings, and first it was debated in what Tongue the Negotiations should be handled. A Spaniard thinking to give the English Commissioners a shrewd gird, proposed the French Tongue as most fit; it being a Language which the Spaniards were all skilled in: and for these Gentlemen of England, I suppose (saith he) that they cannot be ignorant of the Language of their fellow-Subjects; their Queen is Queen of France, as well as of England. Nay in faith my Masters, replied Doctor Dale (a Civil Lawyer, and one of the Masters of Requests) the French Tongue is too vulgar for a business of this secrecy and Importance, especially in a French Town: We will therefore rather treat in Hebrew, the Language of Hierusalem, whereof your Matter is King; and I suppose you are therein as well skilled, as we in the French. And thus much for this Title.

The Arms of the Christian Kings in Hierusalem was Luna, a Crofs Crost crost, Sol; which was commonly called the Hierusalem Crofs. But for their Forces and Revenues, I cannot see how any estimate may be made hereof, in regard they subsisted not by their own proper strength, but by the Purfes and the Forces of the Western Christians more or less active in that Service, as zeal, or emulation, or desire of glory, were predominant in them.

Chief Orders of Knighthood in this Kingdom, after the Recovery thereof from the power of the Turks, were,

1. Of the Sepulchre, said to be instituted originally by Queen Helena. The Mother of Constantine the Great, by whom the Temple of the Sepulchre was indeed first built: but more truly, by Philip King of France, Anno 1099. at such time that Temple was regained from the fore blasphemous, representing the five Wounds of our Saviour C H R I S T. At the first conferred on none but Gentlemen of Blood and Fortune; now saleable to any that will buy it of the Pater-Guardian, who with a Convent of Franciscans doth reside near that Temple.

2. Of Saint John of Hierusalem, begun by one Gerard, Anno 1114. and confirmed by Pope Paschal the second. Their Badge or Cognizance is a white Crofs of eight points. Their duty, to defend the Holy Land, relieve Pilgrims, and succour Christian Princes against the Infidels. They were to be of noble Parentage and Extraction; and grew in time to such infinite Riches, especially after the suppression of the Templars (most of whose Lands were after given unto this Order) that they had at one time in the several parts of Christendom, no fewer than 20000 Manours; and of such Reputation in all Christian Kingdoms, that in England the Lord Prior of this Order, was accounted the Prince Baron in the Realm. But now their Revenue is not a little diminished, by the withdrawing of the Kings of England, and other Protestant Princes, from the Church of Rome: who on that change seized on all the Lands of this Order in their several Countries; and either kept them to themselves, or disposed them to others as they pleased. Of these we shall speak more when we are in Malta where they now reside: advertising only at the present, that their first Great Master, was that Gerard by whom they were founded; the last that had his residence in the Holy Land, one John de Villiers, in whose time being driven out of Palestine, they removed unto Cyprus, and in the time of Fulk de Villaret, Anno 1309, to the Isle of Rhodes; Out of which expelled by Soliman the Magnificent, Anno 1522, they removed from one place to another, till at last by the magnificence of Charles the fifth, Anno 1530, they were settled in Malta: and there we shall speak further of them.

3. Of the Templars, Instituted by Hugh of Payen, Anno 1113, and confirmed by Pope Eugenius. Their Ensign was a Red Crofs, in token that they should shed their blood to defend Christ's Temple. They were bared crofs-legged, and wore on their backs the figure of the Crofs; for which they were by the common people called Crofs-backs, or Crouch-backs, and by corruption Crook-backs. Edmund Earl of Lancaster, second Son to our Henry the third, being of this Order, was vulgarly called Edmund Crook-back; which gave Henry the fourth a foolish occasion to feign, that this Edmund (from whom he was defended) was indeed the eldest Son of King Henry the third; but for his crookedness and deformity, his younger Brother was preferred to the Crown before him. These Knights had in all Provinces of Europe their subordinate Governours, in which they possessed no less than 16000 Lordships: the greatness of which Revenue was not the least cause of dissolving the Order. For Philip the Fair, King of France, had a plot to invest one of his Sons with the title of King of Hierusalem, and hoped to procure the Pope the Revenue of this Order, to be laid unto that Kingdom, for support of the Title: which he thought he might the better do, because Clement the fifth then Pope, for the love he bore to France, had transferred his Seat from Rome to Avignon. But herein his hopes deceived him; for this Order being dissolved, the Lands thereto belonging were given to the Knights Hospitallers, or of St John. The Crimes objected against this Order were, First, Their Revolt from their professed Obedience unto the Patriarch of Jerusalem, who was their Visitor: Secondly, Their unpeachable Pride: and Thirdly, their sins against Nature. The House of our Law-Students in London, called the Temple, was the chief House of the Knights of this Order in England; and was by the Knights of St. John, whose principal Mansion was in Smithfield, sold unto the Student of the Law, for the yearly Rent of 10*l*. about the middle of the Reign of Edward the third.

These three Orders Mr. Selden (and deservedly) putteth not in his Titles of Honour, in that they were prohibited to kiss a Woman; honourary Knight-hood, and the Love of Ladies, going together like Virtue and Reward.

Thus much for Palestine.

ARABIA hath on the East Chaldaea, and the Bay or Gulph of Persia; on the West, Palestine, some part of Egypt, and the whole course of the Red-Sea; on the North the River Euphrates; with some parts of Syria and Palestine; and on the South, the main Southern Ocean. But at some times the name extended somewhat further. Pliny enlargeth it as far as Comagena, the North part of Syria; in regard that many Arabian Colonies had been there planted by Tygranes; and Xenophon comprehended in it the greatest part also of Mesopotamia; because situate on the West of the River Tigris, and consequently the Western part of the Assyrian Empire, as the word Ereth doth import, from whence some derive the Erymon, and name herof. Which notwithstanding, in the general effect of Authors, it is bounded only as before.

As for the Name, there be some that derive it from Arabus, a supposed Son of Apollo and Babilonia; others from three supposititious Sons of Jannes Pater, one of the pretended Grand-sons of Cham, who is fabled to have sent his Son Arabus into Arabia Deserta; Peretrius, into Arabia Petraea; and Sabus, into Arabia Felix, the dwelling place of the Sabaeans. And for this trim conceit, we are beholden to the Berosus of Friar Amnius. More probable is their conjecture, who derive the name from the Hebrew, Arab, signifying black; by reason of the swarth or tawny complexion of the Inhabitants who are inter nigrum & fulvum, as Petronianus an eye-witness hath informed us of them; on the same reason as one of the Provinces of Africa, is commonly entituled the Land of Negroes. But the most likely origination of it, as I conceive, is from Harabi, which signifieth in all Ages has been known to be. According unto that of the Prophet Jeremy: In the ways thou hast fate for them, as an Arabian in the Wilderness, as our English reads it: Tanquam Lairo insidians in solitudine, saith the Vulgar Latin, Jer. 32. St. Hierom, though he render it quasi Lairo, as the Vulgar doth, yet in his Commentary he informs us, that the word doth also signifie an Arabian quia gens latrocinis dedita usque hodie incusat Palestine, fines, &c. which being addicted to Theft and Robbery, do to this day (saith he) infect the Coasts of Palestine which border near them, and lay in wait for those which had any occasion to travel thither. Agreeable hereunto is the observation of Martin del Rio; Adso latrocinii infames sunt, ut Hebreis Arabi latronem denotat, sicut Chanaan Mercatorem, Chaldaeus Mathematicum; i. e. So infamous were they for their Theft and frequent Robberies, that it was familiar with the Jews to call a Thief by the name Arabian, as by Chanaanite to signifie a Merchant, or to use the word Chaldaean for a Mathematician. In the same sense they came in the succeeding times to be called Saraceni, from Sarak, or Saraks, an Arabian word, which signifieth to steal; whereof more anon: No otherwise than one of the American Islands had the name of Ladrone, or Insula Latronum, given by Magellan, from the thieveliness of the Inhabitants, who had stoln his Cock-boat.

I have staid the longer on the Name, because it doth exprefs so much of the Character of the People also; living for the most part upon Spoil and Robbery, as if that travel that way know by sad experience. Of men features, raw-boned, tawny or swarth complexioned, having feminine voices; of swift but noisefull gate, and upon you ere you are aware. Of no set-dwellings (except only in Arabia Felix) living in Tents, which they remove like walking Cities, for the benefit of Pasturage, and hope of Booty; for this last cause hanging about the skirts of more habitable Countries, and having robb'd, retire with a marvellous speed, Mounted on Dromedaries for that purpose, a Beast of most incredible swiftness, furnished with little Food, though without Water to it, and will easily carry a man an hundred miles a day, without any refreshing. Nor are such Horfes as they have, though but poor and lean, of less speed, or less patient of travel; whom they feed twice a day with the Milk of Camels, and think them not a worth keeping, if not able to out-go an Ostrich. As now, now, so formerly, all Horsemen, and but ill appointed; sifter to rob and spoil than to deal with Souldiers; as riding stark naked, and trusting rather to the swiftness of these Horfes, than any other resistance, where they were opposed.

Their Language is the Arabicke, so called from this Country; but not proper to this Country only: Spoken in all places where Mahometanism hath got any footing: The Achaean being written in it, the publick Offices of their Religion performed in it, and the Tongue taught in Schools as generally as with us the Latin; but made the natural Language in Mesopotamia, Syria, Palestine, the three Arabias, Egypt, and all Barbary, except the Kingdom of Morocco.

A great extent, but short of that which some give to it, who will have it spoken in two parts of the whole habitable World.

The Christian Faith was first here planted by S. Paul, of whose being in Arabia, after his Conversion he telleth us Gal. 1. 17. to which the coming in of the Saracens gave a great increase, in the time of Claudia the Queen, during the Empire of Valentinian the first, Moser, a man of exemplary piety, and famed for many Miracles, being created their first Bishop; after more generally propagated over all the Country, by the King Alamandarus, Anastasius then reigning in the East, but long it had not been received, when supplanted by Mahometanism, which had its first beginning here; and hath so universally overspread the whole face herof, that now there are no Christians left in all the Country, except only in Eltor, a Port Town in the Bay of Arabia Felix; in Arabia Petraea, the chief City of Arabia Petraea, and in two small Monasteries about Mount Sinai.

It is in circuit about 4000 miles, but of so unequal and heterogeneous composition, that no general Character, can be given of it: and therefore we must look upon it, as it stands divided into 1 Arabia Deserta, 2 Arabia Petraea, 3 Arabia Felix, and 4 The Arabick Islands.

1 ARABIA DESERTA.

ARABIA DESERTA (called Beriara by the Turks) is bounded on the East with Babylonia; on the West with parts of Palestine, and Arabia Petraea; on the North, with Palmyrene and Mesopotamia, which last it is parted by Euphrates; and on the South, by some parts of Petraea, and Arabia Felix.

It hath the name of Deserta, from the vast Deserts which are in it, and the inhabiteness thereof; called also by Aristotle, Aspera, from the roughness; by Servius, inferior, or the lower, in regard of the situation of it more towards the River; by Lucian, from the frequent bottoms and Vallies in it, Arabia Cava; and the finally by the Jews it was called Kedar, from the blackness or swarthinness of the People, the word in Hebrew signifying as much as Sun-burnt; whence the People are by some Writers called Kederani, and by Ptolemy, Cedreai.

But the common and most usual name of it, is Arabia Deserta, agreeable to the nature of it, being generally a sandy Country, full of vast Deserts, in which all such as travel, use to carry their provisions with them, and to guide themselves in their Journey by the course of the Stars, though in some parts which lie near the Euphrates, and the Mountains of Arabia Felix, it hath some few Towns, and those resorted to by Merchants. But this is only in those parts; the residue of the Country being so desolate and waste, that one who had travelled in it, doth describe it to be so wild a place, Ut ne homines nec bestia videantur, nec aves; imo, nec arbores, nec gemina aliquot, sed non nisi montes saxosi, altissimi.

simi, asperissimi: A Country, saith Guiliandinus Melchior, where are found neither Men, nor Beasts, nor so much as Birds or Trees, nor Grass; nor Pasture, but only flocks, and most craggy Mountains.

The People for the most part used to dwell in Tents, alluded to by David, Psal. 120. v. 5. which they removed from place to place, as the Pasture for their Cattel failed them, taking no other care for Houses, than the Boughs of Palm-trees, to keep them from the heat of the Sun, and other extremities of Weather. Hence by the Ancients called Scimitae, or men dwelling in Tents; in which respect the Jews call the Kartariani Kedariani, from the like course of life which these Ledariani or Arabians lived; but the name reaching into the other parts of Arabia also, where they use the same kind of living: Of whom more anon.

Yet notwithstanding most memorable is this Country in sacred Story, both for the dwelling-place of Job, and the habitation of those Wise-men, who came out of the East unto Hierusalem, to worship Christ, the new-born King of the Jews. That Job was an inhabitant here, appareth by the situation of his dwelling, being in the East, as is said in the Story of him, chap. 1. v. 3. that is to say, the Country lying East to the Land of Canaan, as this part of it doth; and therefore called simply by the name of the East, as Judg. 6. 3. where by the Children of the East, are meant expressly the Inhabitants of Arabia the Desart, who together with the Midianites and Amalekites oppressed those of Israel. Secondly, by the ill neighbourhood which he found from the Sabaeans, who inhabited in this part also; and of the Chaldeans, mentioned v. 17. the next Borderers to it: and thirdly, by the inconsequencies which needs must follow, if we place him, as some do, in the Land of Uz, near unto Damascus. For how improbable must it be for the Sabaeans, of the Red Sea, or the Persian Gulf, or the Chaldeans dwelling on the Banks of the River Euphrates, to fall upon Job's Cattel grazing near Damascus, the Countries being disjoined by such vast Deserts, and huge Mountains, that it is impossible for any Strangers to pass them, especially with any numbers of Cattel. In respect of those large Mountains, deep Sands, and the extreme want of Water in all that passage? And how impossible must we think it, that the Pen-man of the Story of Job, who certainly was guided in it by the Holy-Ghost, should be so mistaken as to place Job's dwelling in the East, if the Land of Uz, wherein he dwelt, bordered on Damascus, which lay not on the East, but the North of Canaan? A City called Uz, or Uz there was, situate near Damascus, so called from Uz, the Son of Aram, Gen. 10. 23. A Land of Uz also amongst the Edomites, spoken of in the Lamentations of the Prophet Jeremy, c. 4. v. 21. so called from Uz, one of the Posterity of Esau, mentioned Gen. 36. 28. And finally a Land of Uz, or Uz, so called from Hus the Son of Nachor, the Brother of Abraham, mentioned Gen. 22. 21. which is that situate in this Tract, the Habitation and Possession of that righteous man: the Country hereabouts being called Aushia, and the People Aushite; though by mistaking in the Transcripts, we find them named Aduas or Aushie; in the fifth of Ptolemy. The like I say also of the Wise-men, or Magi, who came to Hierusalem from the East, That they dwelt in this Country, where the said Ptolemy placeth the City of Saba; according unto that for-signified by the Royal Psalmist, That the Kings of Arabia and Saba should bring their Gifts, Psal. 72. 10. Confirmed herein by the situation of the Country, lying East of Canaan; the Authority of those Fathers who lived nearest to the time of our Saviour's Birth, Justin Martyr; Tertullian; Cyprinus; and by the testimony of Guiliandinus Melchior.

Iudinus Melchior above mentioned, affirming on the credible report of the people hereof, that they came neither out of Mesopotamia, or Arabia Felix, as many wily-men do believe, but out of Saba in Arabia the Deserts, which City (saith he) when my self was there, was, as I judged, called Semifalae.

Cities of note, in a Country so desert and uninhabited, we must look for few; yet some there are, inhabited by a more civil sort of people, whom they call by the name of Moors, giving that of Arabian to those only, who live roving and robbing up and down. Ptolemy gives the names of forty Cities and Villages in it (Civitates & vicus, saith the Latine) the memory of most of which is now utterly perished. Those of most observation, 1 Sabe or Saba, the habitation of the Sabeans who pillaged Job; so called from Sheba, the Grand-son of Abraham by Keurab, mentioned Gen. 25. 3. of whom, and of the rest of that Line, it is said, in the sixth verse of that chapter, that Abraham gave them gifts, and sent them away from Isaac Eastward, unto the East Country: now called Semifalae, as is thought by Melchior. 2 The-man, which possibly may be the Country of Eliphaz, the Themanite, one of the Visitants of Job. As 3 Shubab, on the North hereof, was probably of Bilad, another of them, hence firnamed the Shuite. 4 Tharican, by Pliny called Aphipolis. 5 Zagmuis, near the Persian Gulf, in the Country of the Raubeni, supposed to be descended from Mishma, the fourth Son of Ismael. 6 Phuntun, the 36th. 7 Oboth, the 37th Mansion of the Children of Israel. 8 Rheganna, another of those named by Ptolemy, in the Greek Copies called Beganna. Of any Town of note now being, more than Semifalae before-named, I find nothing certain.

The first Inhabitants of this Country, of whom there is any certain Constat, were the Posterity of Huz, the Son of Nabor, and the Sons of Abraham by Keurab; of whose being settled in these parts, we had before good testimony from the Book of God: and intermix'd with them lived some of the Descendants of Ismael also. For if the Adubeni, whom Ptolemy calleth the Agubeni, fetch their original from Adabel the third, and the Raubeni from Mishma the fifth Son of Ismael, as some say they do, I see no reason but the whole Country might be called Kedar, from Kedar the second Son, as well as from the tawny complexions of the people of it. From them descended the Tribes or Nations spoken of by Ptolemy, that is to say, the Orchemi, Chauabeni, Anista, Maloni, Materni, and Agrai, besides the Adubeni, and Raubeni, already specified. But being a dis-jointed People, nor under any settled form of Government, nor possessed of any thing worth looking after, they were either held not worth the conquering, in regard of their penury; or else unconquerable, in respect of their Country, impassable for great Armies, by reason of the rolling Sands, and want of all things. Yet I conceive, that lying so near to the Chaldeans, they followed the fortunes of that mighty monarchy: Subjects unto it whilst it stood, and after 'Tributaries unto those who successively possessed themselves of the Supreme Power. Not looked at by the Romans, or regarded by them, who aimed at wealth as well as Honour in their Expedition: nor otherwise subject to the Turks at this present time, than as they make use of him, and his protection in their frequent Robberies: but counted of as a part of the Turkish Empire, because the more civil Arabians are indeed his Subjects.

2 ARABIA PETRÆA.

ARABIA PETRÆA (now called Barrab and Barthabab) hath on the East Arabia Deserta, and part of Sinus Persicus, or the Bay of Persia; on the West, the Isthmus which joyneth Africa to Asia, and part of the Red-Sea, or Gulf of Arabia, on the North, Palestine; and on the South a long Ridge of Mountains, which divide it from Arabia Felix.

It had this name either from the rockiaefs of the Soil hereof, or more properly from Petra, the chief City of it, called also by Æthiopi, Sicaria, but I know not why: by the Hebrews, Chus, generally translated Æthiopia; by William of Tyre, Arabia secunda, Felix being reckoned for the first. By Srabo, Ptolomy, and Pliny, it is called Nababab, which name it had from Nabaiab, the eldest of the twelve Sons of Ismael; though properly that name belongeth only to those parts of it which lay next Judea: fruitful, though joyning to the Deserts: and thus remembered by the Poet, as an Eastern Country.

Eurus ad Auroram, Nabababque regna receffit.

Eurus unto the East did flie,

Where fruitful Nababab doth lie.

The Country much of the same nature with the other, but in some parts thereof more fertile, if well manured: and in the time of Marcellinus, affirmed to be a rich Land, flourishing with variety of Trade and Traffick. But for the most part full of untravellable Deserts, except to those which carry their provisions with them for fear of starving, and go in great Companies, or Caravans for fear of robbing: and yet much travelled by Merchants who traffick into Egypt and Babylonia; the Commodities whereof they lay on Camels, which are the Ships of Arabia, as their Seas, the Deserts. For upon one of the Camels, they will lay ordinarily 600 and sometimes 1000 pound weight: yet not afford him water above once in four days, not often in fourteen, if there be occasion. So that the Camel carrying so great a burden, and seldom fewer than 500 going in one Voyage, the Merchant, if he capeth robbings, makes a rich return. Of these Deserts, the most memorable are those of Sin and Pharan, in which the Israelites so long wandered: not beautified with Grass, nor adorned with Trees, the Palm only excepted; nor furnished with Water, but by Rain or Miracle.

The People of it for the most part, descended of the Sons of Chus and Ismael, intermixed with the Madianites, descending from Abraham by Keurab, and the Amalekites, descended probably from Amalek, the Grand-son of Elsau, mentioned Gen. 3. 6. but all united at the last in the name of Saracens. This name derived, as some think, from Sarra, signifying a Desart, and Saken which signifieth to inhabit, because they live for the most part in these desert places: as others say, from Sarak, signifying a Thief or Robber, agreeable to that of Arabia, before delivered. This last most suitable to their nature, and best liked by Scaliger. Saraceni a vicini dicuntur ab Elsarac. i. e. proximo viciis suis, quod rapini videntur. So he, in his second Book de Emend. Temp. A People not reckoned in the former times, till made remarkable by their Conquest of a great part of the World, but always counted warlike and Martial men. Of whom take this Character out of Marcellinus. "The Saraceni (saith he) whom we are neither to wish for, nor our Friends nor Enemies, are a Martial People, half naked, clad as far as the groin with painted Callocks, ranging up and down on Camels and swift Horses, as well in peace as troublesome times. Not used unto the Plough, to plant Trees, or get their living by Tillage; they wander from one place to another, without house or home, or any constant dwelling-place, or the use of Laws; nor can they long endure the same either Air or Soil, the manner of their living being always flucting, "flitting like ravenous Kites; which if they chance to spy a prey, snatch it up in their flight: or if they chance to fall on it as it lyeth on the ground, they make no long stay. Their food is chiefly upon Venison, and Horse of Milk, herbs which they gather from the ground, and birds which they get by fowling; but altogether ignorant of Corn and Wine. Their Wives they only hire for a time, though for a shew of Matrimony they present their Husbands with a Spear & a Tent, as in way of Dowry; but they part with them when they please. Both Sexes most extremely given to carnal luits, the women as rambling as the men, married in one place, and brought to bed in another; leaving their Children where they fall without more care of them. So far, and to this purpose he.

Rivers of note here are not many. The principal are, 1 That called Trajanus amnis, or the River of Trajan, which passing through this Country endeth his course in the Red Sea. 2 Rhinocorura, called in Scripture the torrent of Egypt, which rising this Country, and passing by the borders of Idumæa, hath its fall in the Lake of Sibon, and together with the waters thereof, joyneth it self at last in the Mediterranean.

With Mountains it is better stored, and those of eminent observation, as 1 Mount Sinai, famous in all Ages for the promulgation of the Law; and of late times, for a Monastery of Maronites on the top thereof. The Hill so high, that both shores of the Red Sea may be thence seen, but easie of ascent, by reason of steps cut out of the rock: which notwithstanding, he that beginneth to go up it at the break of day, will hardly overcome the top of it till the afternoon. The Monastery made an Episcopal See, and formerly very well endowed, as appeareth by the Letters of Eugenius Bishop thereof, to the Arch-Duke Charles, Anno 1569, complaining that the Turks had sold all their Land, and that himself and the Monks were fain to pawn their holy Vessels, and take up money on Usury. Here is also a Mesque, or Mosque of Turks, who resort in pilgrimage to this hill as well as the Christians. 2 Mount Horeb, where the Israelites worshipped the Molten Calf, about a mile and a half distant from Mount Sinai, but not so high: on the top of which is a Church also; and a Monastery of Coloires, or Greek Monks, at the bottom, exceeding hospitable to Strangers, whom they entertain of free cost and cheerfully shew them all the places worth observation, which the Scripture mentioneth in that tract. Both hills by Ptolomy called Adelani, or the Black Mountains; the last now called Oreb. 3 Mount Hori, bordering on Idumæa; and memorable for the death of Aaron.

Places of most observation, 1 Petra, the name given to this part, at first called Reccen, and at that time belonging to Adian: afterwards called Sala, when pertaining to the Idumæans. But falling under the power of the Arabians, it is now called Cyat. Best known in holy Scriptures by the name of Sela, before mentioned, which signifies the same with the Latine Petra. A City of great note and strength in all times foregoing, taken by Amaziah the King of Judah, 2 Kings 14. 7. and by him called Jock-beel; but in vain beleagued by Scaurus, a Roman General, who finding the place to be impregnable, was content by the persuasion of Antipater, to take a sum of money and raise the siege. Nor did the Emperor Trajan speed much better at it, his Souldiers being still beat off in all their Assaults, the very next man to him slain with a Dart, and himself forced to cast away his Imperial habit, and flie for his life; the heavens themselves, if Dion (who is never sparing of the like prodigies) may be believed, fighting against the Romans with thunder, lightning, whirlwinds, and tempests, as often as they made any approaches to it: But in the end subdued with the rest of the Country. In such esteem, by reason of the strength of it, by the Souldans of Egypt, that they kept here her choicest treasures; and in the course of the Holy Wars, much aimed at by the Turks and Christians, as the Key that opened the Gates of Palestine, on the South border thereof, not far from Mount Hori, before-mentioned, the Town is situate. The Metropolis of the Province when first under the Romans; and made the Seat of a Latine Bishop, when the Christians of the West were the Lords thereof. 2 Bofra, said to have been built by Augustus Caesar, because by him repaired, when decayed and ruined; afterwards by Alexander Severus made a Colony of this Romans. This last most certain, and for such testified by this ancient Inscription, in an ancient Coyn, COL. POSTRAINT. R. ALEXANDRIAN. Memorabile also for the birth of Philip the Emperor, one of that Alexander's next Successors, by whom it was caufed for a time to be called Philippi; for the Metropolitane dignity removed hither from Petra somewhat before the time of Tyberian, but by whom I find not; and for being the Episcopal Sec of Tium (hence firnamed) Bofrenis, a reverend Father of the Church in the time of Julian the Apostate. A City of as great antiquity as the most that be, mentioned Gen. 36. 33. though there accounted of as a City of Edom, to which at that time it did belong; and is still remaining, & well known by the name of Boghrat, 3 Elama, on a bay of the Red Sea, called hence Sinus Elamiticus. 4 Phara, reckoned by Ptolomy for a chief Town of this Tract, from whence the Wildernesse of Paran seems to take its name. 5 Berenice, so called from some of the Queens of Egypt, but better known by the name of Ezion-geber, one of the Stations or Incampings of the Children of Israel, and made by Salomon the ordinary Harbour for his Ships, which failed to Ophir in the East-Indies. 6 Sur, the chief City of the Amalekites, giving name to the Wildernesse or Desert of Sur, coming close up to it: remarkable for the first incamping of the 17 Tribes of Israel after their miraculous passage over the Red Sea; and the defeat which Saul gave to the Amalekites, whom he smote from Havilah to this place. 7 Havilah, so called from Havilah the son of Chus, being the furthest border of these Amalekites, & Ismaelites, on the Gulf of Persia, as Sir was on the Red Sea or Gulf of Arabia. 8 Madian, so called of Madian, the son of Abraham by Keurab, situate towards the Red Sea also; the City of Jethro, whose Daughter Zipporah was the wife of Moses: who flying from the Court of Pharaoh King of Egypt, was by God's secret providence directed hither: that keeping the Flocks of Jethro in the Deserts adjoining, he might acquaint himself with the ways and passages, through which he was after to lead the house of Israel. 9 Rephaim, the encamping place of Moses, where he discomfited the Amalekites; and to which the said Jethro came to him with his Wife and Children, advising him to ease himself of some part of that burden, which the Government of so great a People would esse bring upon him. 10 Kadish-barnea, the station of the Tribes, when the Spies which were sent to discover the Land of Canaan returned back unto them: memorable for the death of Miriam the Prophetess. And 11 Thara, no less memorable for the mutiny and punishment of Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, the place remembered Numb. 33. 27. But others will have 12 Akkabath, mentioned v. 25. of that Chapter, to be the Stage of that action, the Scriptures being silent in this particular. The rest of their encamping places, being most of them in this part of Arabia, I omit of purpose, as obvious in the Scripture unto every Reader: as I do also some of the Cities of Moab and Ammon, accounted of by Ptolemy aided Mithridates and Tigranes, in the War against them, submitted themselves unto Lucullus, being then no nearer to Armenia Major. The like they did to Pompey also, being then in Judaea. First vanquished by Albius Gallus in the time of Augustus; but the Victory not improved to an absolute Conquest, till the time of Trajan, when partly by his personal preference, and partly by the valour and good fortune of Palmas, his Lieutenant, they were fully vanquished, and brought in to the form of a Roman Province: but so, that they had Kings of their own (Vassals and Fiefdoms of the Empire) as in former times; continuing in that condition till the rise of Mahomet. Of which more hereafter.

3 ARABIA FELIX.

ARABIA FELIX, is bounded on the East, with the Persian, on the West, with the Arabian Gulf; on the North with a long ridge of Mountains, which part it from Dejefra and Perrea; and on the South with the boundless Ocean. Environed on three parts with the Sea, on the fourth with rough, impassable Mountains; in situation and figure much resembling Italy.

It had the name of Arabia Felix from the fertility and happy condition of it, being esteemed the most fruitful & pleasant Country in all Asia, abounding with Myrrhe, Balsamum, Frankincense, Gold, and Precious Stones: by Curtius called Odorum fertilitate nobilis Regio, from the abundance of Frankincense, wherewith enriched beyond all others. Concerning which there goeth a story, that when Alexander in his Adolescence or Boyage, was sacrificing to the Gods, and cast into the fire with both hands great store of Frankincense and Myrrhe, Leontidas his Governour, bid him be more sparing of those precious and dear Commodities, till he was Master of the Country in which they grew. Which Alexander remembering, when he had brought almost all the East under his obedience, he sent unto Leontidas a Ship laden with Frankincense, bidding him from thenceforth to serve the Gods more liberally. But as well for the reason of this adjunct, as a more perfect character and description of it, take along this of Ammianus Marcellinus, who describes it thus: "On the East and South hereof (saith he) are the Happy Arabians: so called, because so rich in Corn; as well as pteous in Cattel, Vines, and Odoriferous Spices of all kinds; shut up betwixt the Red Sea, and the Persian Gulf, and so acquainted with all blessings, which either Element can afford: well furnished with Roads, and quiet Harbours for Shipping, the Towns of Trade and Merchandise standing very thick; the retiring Houses of the Kings, passing neat and sumptuous. Besides most wholesome Fountains of medicinal waters, they enjoy divers Brooks and Rivers very clear and pure, and a temperature of Air exceedingly healthy; so that whosoever considereth all things aright, may well conclude, that there is nothing wanting to the accomplishment of his felicity in the highest degree. So Ammianus Marcellinus. To which we need add nothing more to set forth its happiness, than that Danet in his Comment on St. Augustin's Enchiridion ad Laurentium, is persuaded that it was the local place of Paradise. Dicitur (saith he) Paradisi terræ Regio pars quadam esse Arabiæ, quæ nunc dicitur Felix. But it hath other names besides this of Felix. By the Arabians themselves called Yaman, and Al-jaman (Ayaman corruptly by the Turks) which in that tongue signifieth the South, or Southern Region. By Virgil it is named Panchaia. quasi tota debilitans, because of the many chops and stinks which the ardour of the Sun makes in the Sands thereof, though by him much extolled also for its plenty of Frankincense.

Totaque thurisæ Panchala pitguis arena.
Famed are the whole Panchalian Lands,
For rich and Incense-bearing Sands.

The People anciently, though more civil than the rest of the Arabians, had yet many strange and barbarous customs. Adultery amongst them was punished with death as in other places; but only he was held an Adulterer, which enjoyed any that was not his own kinswoman, be she his Sister or his Mother; and so they kept themselves in their own Families; Community of wives or women was esteemed no crime. And of this there is a Tale in Strabo, that the King of this Country had fifteen Sons, and but one Daughter, who according to the Customs hereof, was the common wife of all her brethren; every of which had a Staff of like making, which when he went in unto his Sister he did leave at the door; and by foding did forbid entrance unto the rest, till it was removed. The young Lady, wearied with a continual excess of dalliance, secretly procured a Staff like unto the rest, which when she was desirous to prohibit their access to her, she left at her Chamber-door, and by that means did many times enjoy her desired privacy. At last it happened that all the Brothers being together, one of them departed towards his Sisters Lodgings, where finding a Staff before the door, and knowing that he had his Brethren in one place together, he accused her of Adultery: but the truth being made known, the Lady was acquitted, and their visits afterwards restrained. Of dead Bodies they took no care, not so much as of their Chiefs or Princes; but left them to the custody of the next dung-hill. They bragged much of their descent from Jupiter; and neglected all Sciences & Arts, as dilparagements to so great Nobility. Commendable only in the keeping of their faith and promises, and in that most punctual. Much of the same condition are the present Inhabitants, save that less faithful in their Contracts; and by their Law restrained from meddling with the wives of others, permitted many of their own. Some there are of them which apply themselves to the grazing of Cattel, and the rest to Merchandize, wherein very cautious and cunning; but hating to this day all Mechanical Arts. A Nation from the beginning unmixed with others, till the coming of the Turks amongst them, of which but few, and those disposed of in Garrisons: boasting of their Nobility, and glorying in nothing more than their greatest shame, namely that the false Prophet Mahomet was their Country-man; whose impieties are here generally embraced, and followed.

Amongst the rarities of this Country, some account the Phoenix, which growing old burneth her self in a nest of Spices, and from thence a young one ingendered; one of them only at a time, which after a life of five or six hundred years, thus reneweth her kind. But this tradition, questioned in former times by Pliny & some others, is now proved a Fiction; contrary both unto divinity & natural reason: though some of the Fathers made use of it as an argument to prove the Resurrection against the Gentiles, by whom the tradition was believed. More common, but of no less observation, is the Ostrich, a Bird which swalloweth all it findeth, be it Stones or Iron. They delight chiefly in the Desarts, in the sands whereof they lay their Eggs, and then forgetting where they left them, sit on those they meet next. In that respect accounted for a simple Fowl, though otherwise of wit enough to preserve themselves; keeping in Rocks, and oftentimes with their fearful shrieces affrighting Passengers, to whom they do appear afar off like a Troop of Horsemen. Their wings, too little for their bodies, serve them not for flight, but to run more speedily; and by that means not easily caught, though much laid in wait for, for their Skins, which the People sell unto the Merchant with their Feathers on their Nor of less note is the Frankincense, though of common use; almost peculiar to this Country, and here but to those parts thereof which were formerly possessed by the Sabai: the Wood miles long and so broad, gathered only in Spring and Autumn. More of this anon.

The Country is much commended by Ammianus for plenty of Rivers, the principal whereof are, said by Proton to be, 1 Betius, 2 Priton, 3 Harman, 4 Lar; but the modern names thereof I find not. Many fair Lakes, and store of large capacious Bays on each coast of the Sea, 1 Sinus Elaniticus, 2 Sachalites, 3 Leantes, 4 Sinus Magorum, 5 Sinus Ichthyophagorum, 6 Messanites, 7 Sacer Sinus, or the Holy Bay; and 8 The road or Naval Station called Negilla. Mountains of most note, 1 Those which are called Melanes, at the entrance of the Persian Gulf, 2 Cabubutbra, at the entrance of the Red Sea or Gulf of Arabia, 3 Hippus, 4 Priomont, not far from the River Prion, from whence so denominated, 5 Climax, 6 The Mountains called Diadymi, &c.

Towns of good note in ancient times it had very many, no Region affording unto Proton the names of more; and amongst those many commodious Ports for Traffick, the Sea begirting it for the space of 3000 miles and upwards. Of most importance and observation in those times were, 1 Zebrum, 2 Badeo, 3 Rhabana, 4 Carnan, 5 Manambis, 6 Sabe, 7 Are; the Royal Seats of so many several Kingdoms, and therefore honoured by Proton with the Title of Regie. Then there are, 1 Maecusinos, 2 Meara, 3 Negara, 4 Sabatana, 5 Alapha, and 6 Sabar, which he called Metropoles; as being the head-Cities of some several Nations. Amongst the Ports he reckoneth, 1 Soffimus, 2 Tralles, 3 Treos, 4 Cryptus, 5 Isamor, and 6 Mofcha. Amongst the most noted Empories or Towns of traffick, 1 Musfa, 2 Oceanus, 3 Arabia, 4 Cane. Besides which there are some which do preserve the memory of their first Plantations, as 1 Saphia, upon the Persian Gulf, so from Saba, the first Son of Chus. 2 Rhegama, or Regina (as the Greek Copies of Proton have it) so named from Regina or Raana the sixth Son; on the same Gulf also. 3 Sabe, on the Shores of the Red Sea. And 4 Sabe Regia, more within the Land, so named from Sheba the eldest Son of the same Chus, from which the rich and potent Nation of the Sabaens are to be derived. Out of all which, and many others by him that follow. 1 Musfa, a noted Port on the entrance of the Red Sea, frequented anciently by the Ethiopian and Egyptian Merchants: to whose laded their Ships with this Country, bringing in, in exchange thereof, Saffron, Corn, Wine, Ointments, Purple Dyes, &c. 2 Sabe, the Regal Seat of the Kings of the Sabaens, particularly of that Queen so memorized in holy Scripture; called in the Old Testament the Queen of Sheba, from her Country and place of dwelling; in the New Testament the Queen of the South, because of the Southern situation of it in respect of Judaea: said there to come from the furthest parts of the World, because there was no part of the World which lay South to the Country of the Sabaens, over which she reigned. Situate on a little Mountain, affirmed by Agatharides to be more nobilis et magis Agathar, the most beautiful by far in all Arabia, and the Metropolis of the rich and potent Nation of the Sabaens: rich in all the excellencies of Nature, especially in Frankincense, a Gum peculiar to them only, and growing here in a Wood of about 100 miles long, and so broad; not gathered but in the Spring and Autumn, nor then without great care, and many ceremonies. The Country hereabouts from hence called Thursira, and this sweet Gum appropriated solely to it. Sabai Arabum propter thura clarissimi, as we find in Pliny; Solis est thura virga Sabæis, as it is in Virgil; and finally, --- Thursira, Judeica Sabæis, as Sabos, in the Argonauicks of Valerius Flaccus. It was called also Mariaba, and by that name occurth in some ancient Writers. 3 Saphar, more towards the Persian Gulf, on the South-side of the Mountain Climax, the chief City of the Homerite; adorned in times of Christianity with a beautiful Temple. 4 Sabatana, or Sabota; as Pliny calleth it, seated about the midst of the Country, on the top of an high and lofty Hill, from whence it had a gallant prospect on the Fields adjoining: anciently large and populous, and strongly fortified, having no fewer than 60 Temples within the Walls; the principal consecrated unto Sabai, the God of their Nation, to whom they offered the Tythe of their Frankincense, ubi decimus Deco quem Sabini vocant, mensura non pondere capunt Sacerdotes, as we read in Pliny.

But the chief and almost all the rest being grown out of knowledge, there have risen in their rooms, 1 Egra, on the Shores of the Red Sea, near the Bay called Sinus Eulves; Agia, by Proton called Agia, by the Arabians themselves; Agia: the Port-Town to Medina, from which about three days Journey distant, 2 Jatrib, or Jatrib, in the way betwixt Agia & Medina, the birth-place of Mahomet; by whom fortified with a mud-wall, as his place of retreat in the first beginning of his Forraunes. 5 Medina, commonly called Medina Talmabi, corruptly for Medina thababi, that is to say, the City of the Prophet, so called from the Sepulchre of Mahomet, that vile Impostor, which is there to be seen; although not in such an Iron Collar, nor drawn up to the roof of the Temple by virtue of an Adamant there placed, as some deliver. The Town situate in a desolate and barren place, bordering on Arabia Petraea; but of great Trade, rich, and well inhabited: the Sepulchre of that false Prophet drawing thither a continual resort of Pilgrims. The Temple gorgeous, having 3000 Lamps in it, which burn continually. The Sepulchre or Tomb enclosed with an Iron Grate, but of no magnificence or beauty: covered with a Carpet of green Velvet, which is sent hither yearly by the Grand Signior; the old one being taken off, and cut into innumerable shreds or pieces, and sold for Relicks by the Priests (so such as come in Pilgrimage thither) to their great enriching. 4 Cufa, the ordinary Residence of the first Caliphs, till the removing of the Imperial Seat to Damasus in Syria; and after that the usual place of meeting for consultation in Affairs of State, relating to the peace of this Country, and the Common Interest of this People; as memorable for the Sepulchre of Moriss Hali, the Progenitor of the Persian Sophies, as Medina is for that of Mahomet. 5 Meccha, supposed to be the Mechara of Proton, situate in the like barren Soil, not far from Medina, but of far greater refore and traffick: the whole wealth in a manner of this Country, together with the Commodities of Persia and India, being first brought hither; and from hence on Camels backs transported unto Egypt, Syria, Palestine, and other parts of the Turkish Empire. Unwalled, and either for that cause, or for concealment of their popperies for the eyes of Christians, it is made death for any Christian to come within five miles of it. Utterly destitute of water, but what they keep in Cisterns, from one show of salt to another, or else brought thither with great charge; otherwise pleasantly seated, rich, and containing about 6000 Families: Every year visited with three Caravans, or Troops of Merchants and Pilgrims, from India, Damascus, and Grand Cairo; who having done their business and devotions there, go afterwards in Pilgrimage to Medina also, to the great enriching of both places. 6 Ziden, the Haven-Town to Mecca, from which distant about 40 miles, situate on the Red Sea, in a sandy soil, unwall'd, and much expost to wind and weather; but wealthy, well-built, and of great resort. 7 Zebir, now the Metropolis of the Country, situate about half a days Journey from the Red Sea, in a large plain, between two Mountains; a Riveret of the same name passing by it: well-traded for Sugars, Spice and Fruits: the ordinary Residence of the Turkish Beglerbeg, by whom taken not long after Eden, Elzor, a Port Town of this Country, and the only Town where the Christians are suffered to inhabit. 8 Aden, on the very entrance of the Red Sea, near the Straights called Babel Mandel; supposed by some to be the Madage of Protonomy, but more agreeing in situation with the famous Empory by him called Arabia. The fairest Town of the whole Peninsula, of great strength, both by Art and Nature: well-traded, and well-fortified, having a large capacious Haven, seldom without good store of Shipping, and containing to the number of six thousand persons. Once a distinct Kingdom of it self, but treacherously surprized by the Turks, Anno 1538. and therewith all the rest of the Country: was made afterwards the Seat of a Turkish Beglerbeg, under whom, and him of Zebir, are supposed to be no fewer than 3000 Timariots. 10 Oran, the Lock and Key of the Southern Ocean. 11 Thema, or Theman, the same, I take it, which our later Travellers call Zeman, situate more within the Land: affirmed by Benjamin the Jew, surnamed Tundelensis, to be a Town of 15 miles square, but to have within the Walls thereof great quantity of Ground for Tillage. 12 Zarval, a retiring place of the Caliphs, when they lived in this Country. 13 Hor, on the point or Promontory called Chorodemu, a Garrison not long since of the Kings of Ormu. 14 Alukibat, on the Persian Gulf near the point of Land called Cape Rozelgate: opposite to Surrat in the East-India, and possessed by the Portugals, who have fortified it with a well-built Castle, for defence of their Ships and Frigots which frequent those Seas. Of no great note till the taking of Ormu by the Persians, many of the Inhabitants whereof were since settled here. Of the Affairs of this Country we shall speak anon; having first took a brief view of the Islands which belong unto it.

4 THE ARABICK ISLANDS.

THE ISLANDS which lie round about the Shores of Arabia Felix, and have been anciently accounted as parts thereof, are dispersed either in the 1 Red Sea, 2 Southern Seas; or, 3 the Gulf of Persia.

I. THE RED SEA (called also by the Ancients Sinus Arabicus, and now Golfo di Mecca) is that part or branch of the Southern Ocean, which interposeth it self betwixt Aegypt on the West; Arabia Felix, and some parts of Peiræa, on the East; the North-East bound of it touching upon Idumea, or the Coast of Edom. Extended in length from the Town of Sues, anciently called Arifno, in the bottom of it, to the Straights of Babel Mandel, where it openeth into the Southern Ocean, for the space of one thousand and four hundred miles: in breadth, for the most part, but one hundred, but in some places almost two; the Streights themselves not being above a mile and an half, anciently chained by the Kings of Aegypt, as is said by Strabo; but now left open by the Turks, who is Lord hereof. A violent and iniquit Sea, full of Sands and Shelves; inasmuch as they who pass in and out, are fain to make use of Pilots which dwell thereabouts, and are experienced in the channel. Sufficiently famous in all times and Stories, for the miraculous passage of the Children of Israel, and the drowning Pharaoh King of Aegypt.

It took the name of the Red Sea, as some conceived, from the redness of the Sands; as others have delivered, from the redness of the Waters: but latter observations have discovered the weakness and absurdity of these Etymologies; the Sea and Sands being coloured here in other places. By the Græcians it was called Erythraum, which in that Tongue signifieth Red also, not from the colour either of the Sands or Waters, but from one Erythras, supposed to be the Son of Perfius and Andromeda, who commanded the Eastern forces hereof. And these come nearer to the mark than the others did. For the truth is, it was originally called the Sea of Edom, because it took beginning on the Coasts of that Country: which word in the Hebrew signifying Red, as appeareth Gen. 25. 30. first given as a nick-name to Esfau, and from him afterwards to Mount Seir, or the Land of Edom, Gen. 36. 31. was by the Greeks rendered Erythraum, and Mare Rubrum by the Latins. Whence the name of the Red Sea became known to all, but the reason of the name to few.

Of the great traffique which was anciently driven up this Sea, we shall speak hereafter, when we are in Aegypt, on the other side of it. Look we now on the Islands which belong to Arabia, as they all generally do, known in the times of Protonomy by the names of 1 Adami, 2 Abi, 3 Are, 4 Cardamine, 5 Combita, 6 Danumum, 7 Hieracum, or the Isle of Hanks, 8 Madian, 9 Polybi, 10 Socrati, 11 Timagis, and 12 Zygema. But by what names now called, and of what note then, is a thing I do doubtful, that I dare not offer a conjecture. Late Travellers report almost all of them to be small, desolate, or but meanly inhabited, described by them under other names. One there is of indifferent largeness, said to be an hundred twenty and five miles long, though but twelve broad, called Dalacqua; with a City in it of that name, where they gather Pearls. 2 Then there is Camaran, most extremely hot, of most note for the many spoils there made by the Portugals. 3 Xamoa, the Earth whereof is said to be Red (perhaps to countenance the vulgar Tradition, of calling this the Red Sea from the colour of the Sands or Shores) and the King a Moor. 4 The Samaritan Islands, spoken of by Scaliger, inhabited by a remainder of that people, who as soon as they saw any Stranger land upon their Coasts, would most religiously desire him not to touch them. Such other Islands as lie upon the opposite Shores, and seem to appertain unto Æthiopia shall find their place in our Description of the African Islands.

II. THE SOUTHERN OCEAN, comprehendeth that vast body of Waters, which from the Eastern Banks of both Æthiopia's, coast along on the South of Arabia Felix, and so directly Eastward, to the furthest India: in this regard called by some Writers Oceanus Indicus, by others Mare Austral, from the situation; and by some also Mare Rubrum, or the Red-Sea, from Erythras a great King (as they suppose) reigning hereabouts, and giving name not only to the Red-Sea (or Gulf of Arabia) strictly and specially so called, but to all the Sea coasts also, from the opening of the Bay of Arabia, to the Coasts of India, by them called Mare Erythraum. In

In this vast Ocean Protonomy placeth many Islands which belong to Arabia, but of little note, viz. two Islands by the name of Insula Agathoolis. 2 Three more by the name of Cocconati. 3 Dioforis, by Pliny called Disfurnis, with a City of the same name in it. 4 Seven others in the Bay called Sinus Sachalites, by the name of Zembi. 5 Organa, by Strabo called Tyrinna, memorable for the Sepulchre of Erythras before-mentioned, by a great Hill planted with Trees. 6 Serapia, by Ammianus Marcellinus called Turgana, famed for a Temple of Serapis, the Egyptian Idol. None of them now of any credit, nor formerly of any great note, the two last excepted.

III. On the East-side of Arabia Felix, betwixt it and Persia, lieth another large Arm of the Southern Ocean, anciently called Sinus Persicus, or the Bay of Persia, now Golfo di Elkatifis. A turbulent and unruly Sea, the Southern Ocean breaking in at the one end, and the River Euphrates at the other: the continual combating or clashing of which two great waters, make it so unquiet. Protonomy placeth in this Bay (but as parts or members of Arabia) 1 Tylus, which Arianus sets at the mouth of Euphrates, Solimus in the Indian Seas, affirming it to be well stored with Vines and Olives: another of this name being placed by Theophrastus in the Bay of Arabia (but probably the place mistaken) affording good Materials for Shipping. 2 Apfana. 3 Thav, 4 Ichara; of which nothing memorable. To these some late Travellers have adjoined two others, if not to say, 5 Bayen, and 6 Gonfar, where they take the best Pearls in the world, in beds of Oysters. Other Islands of this Bay (if any) belong to Persia; where, if occasion so require, we shall speak more of them.

To return therefore to the main Land of Arabia Felix, the first Inhabitants thereof were the Sons of Chus, and the Families which they brought with them. Their memories preserved in the names of some of the chief Towns and Nations, till the days of Pliny, Protonomy, and some other of the ancient Writers. Divided afterwards into the several Tribes or Septs of the Cassanites, Cinadopolites, Homerites, Adramites, Elasari, Sachalites, Anarites, Geraï, Agai, Sabei, Minaï, Leamites, Cattabani, Abuceni, and divers others: each governed separately and apart by their several Chiefs; whom they honoured as in other places, with the name of Kings. One of which spoken of by Justin, named Hieratimus, is said to be the Father of 500 Children. Easie to have been overcome, because so divided, if any potent Neighbour had attempted the Conquest of them: as it is wondrous strange they did not, considering the richness of the Country, and the many temptations which they had to invite them to it. More worthily deserving the name of Felix, in that never conquered, than in all the other Rarities and Delights thereof. By Alexander once designed for the Seat of his Empire, who probably had endeavoured the Conquest of it, having finished his War against the Persians, had he not died in Babylon at his coming back. Nor did the Romans ever extend their Empire beyond Petræa, though once Augustus did attempt it; employing in that Action Largus, his Lieutenant in Aegypt: one Samus being then King of those parts which lay nearest to him. The Romans at their first entry found no resistance: but when by the extraordinary heat of the air, and drinking salt waters, they began to grow sickly and diseased, the Arabians fell lustily upon them, and made them return back both with loss and shame. After this nothing done by the Romans, to disturb their quiet; nor much done by the Christians to advance their glories: the whole divided into almost as many Religions, as Principalities and Eldkates. Most of them Gentiles, but circumcised, as the Ismaelites, and other Arabians had been of old; many Jews intermingled with them, and some store of Christians, but those divided also into Sects and Factions. And in this state it stood, when Mahomet first began to obtrude his blasphemous doctrine. By birth of Jahrip, an obscure Village then not far from Medina: his Father called Abdalla, an idolatrous Pagan; his Mother named Hemima, as perverse a Jewess. Deprived of both his Parents when but two years old, he was left unto the care of an Uncle: who not able to give him education, nor willing to beat the charge to keep him longer, sold him at sixteen years of age to the Ismaelites; by whom exposed to sale in the open Markets, he was brought by one Abdalmulissif, a wealthy Merchant. By him employed at first in Drudgery, and servile Offices, till noting his great wit, and fitness for better Services, he at last used him as his Factor: sending him with his Camels and Loads of Merchandise into Syria, Persia, Aegypt, and other places, wherein he did behave himself with such deservity, that he much encreased his Master's wealth, and his own estimation. Of person he is said to be low, and withal scald-headed; but otherwise comely to the eye, and of good aspect. Much troubled with the Falling Sickness, which infirmity he made good use of afterwards, affirming that those Fits were nothing but heavenly Raptures, in which he did converse with the Angel Gabriel. He is said to have been also well skilled in Magic; by which he taught a white Pidgeon to feed at his ear, which gave out to be the H. Choft, by whom he was instructed in the Law which he was to publish: but this not till afterwards. By Sorceries, conjuncts of Magick, and the great knowledge which he had in his Master's business, he gained so far on the affections of his Mistress, that on the death of Abdalmulissif, she made him her Husband. Possessed of all his Master's Wealth, he affected ease: and being till then of no Religion or at best a Pagan; he began to hearken unto Sergius, a Nestorian Monk: who flung out of Syria for fear of punishment (the Heretics of Nestorius being newly both revived and censured) came into Arabia; where he found entertainment in the House of Abdalmulissif, him a fit Instrument for the Devil to work on, he began to entertain the thoughts of hammering out a new Religion which might unite all Parties in some common Principles, and bring the Christians, Jews, and Gentiles (into which the World was then divided) under one Profession. Resolved on this, he retired himself unto a Cave not far from Mecca, as if he there attended nothing but Meditations: Sergius in the mean time sounding in the ears of the People, both his Parts and Piety. The People being thus prepared to behold the Pagan, out comes the principal Actor with some parts of his Alcoran (pleasing enough to sensual minds) which he professed to have received from the Angel Gabriel. And finding that this edified to his expectations, he next proclaimed Liberty to all Slaves and Servants, as a thing commanded him by God, by whom the Natural Liberty of Mankind was most dearly tendered: which drew unto him such a rabble of unruly people, that without fear or opposition, he dispersed his Doctrines, reducing them at last to a Book or Method.

The Book of this Religion he calleth the Alcoran, that is to say, the Collection of Precepts: the Original whereof they feign to be written on a Table which is kept in Heaven, and the Copy oft brought to Mahomet by the Angel Gabriel. A Book so highly revered by the Mahometans, that they writ: upon the Cover

- 947 30 Egypt, Palestine, with great part of Syria and Mesopotamia. 12.
- 657 40 Osman, the third of Mahomet's Great Captains, Husband of Zeineb, his second Daughter; succeeded under that pretence, and added all Barbery to his Empire. Distressed by the Faction of Hali, and besieged in his own house, he flew himself in the eighty seventh year of his Age, and the tenth of his Reign.
- 660 43 Hadi, the Kinsman and next Heir of Mahomet; and the husband of Fatime his eldest Daughter, succeeded on the death of Osman: murdered by the procurement of Muhavias, near Cufa, in Arabia Felix.
- 681 64 Muhavias, having murdered Hadi; his Son Hajem, or Osman, and eleven of the Sons of that Hajem, the twelfth only escaping with life (from whom descended the Family of the Alavies, and the Persian Sophies) assumed the Government as rightful Successor to Osman, whose Widow, the Daughter of Mahomet, he had took to Wife. He conquered Rhodes, Cyprus, and a great part of Asia Minor, and was the Founder of the Family of Aben Humeia.
- 685 68 Gizid, the Son of Mahuvias, more skill in Poetry than in Arms.
- 707 90 Habadda and Marwan, Competitors for the Supreme Dignity; but carried at last by Marwan.
- 716 99 Abimelech, the Son of Marwan, established the begun Conquests of Armenia, and Mesopotamia. 22.
- 719 102 Ulidor Ulit, under whom the Saracens or Moors first conquered Spain. 9.
- 721 104 Zuleimin, Brother to Ulit, whose Captain Mulfamus besieged Constantinople, till his Ships were burnt, and his Men consumed with the Plague. 3.
- 725 107 Homar, or Haumar II. Son of Ulidor Ulit. 2.
- 743 125 Isid, or Gizid II. the brother of Haumar, with whom during his life he was joint Caliph, and after his decease enjoyed it wholly to himself.
- 744 126 Eusid, by some called Ischam, in whose time Charles Martel made such havock of the Moors in France, Anno 734. their General then named Aberamen. 18.
- 745 127 Gizid III. the son of Gizid the second.
- 752 134 Hyez, by some called Ibrahim, the brother of Gizid the third, slain by Marwan.
- 756 138 Marwan II. the last of the House of Ben-humeyr, slain by Abdalla, of the house of Fatime and Hali.
- 777 156 21 Abdalla, of the house of Alavies or Alabeci, descended from Hali and Fatime, the eldest daughter of Mahomet; called also the Family of Abar, because of their descent from Abar the Uncle of Mahomet, and perhaps Father unto Hali.
- 777 156 21 Abdalla II. surnamed Bugiafer, or Abugefer, who built the City of Bagdet, made from that time the constant seat of his Successors till their fatal period.
- 777 156 21 Mahadi. 9.
- 786 168 22 Musa, or Mosjes. 1.
- 787 169 23 Aron, or Arachid, who compelled Irene Empress of Constantinople, to pay him tribute. 23.
- 810 193 24 Mahamad, or Mahomet III.
- 825 198 25 Abdalla III. who took and spoiled Cyrene, and overthrew the Greeks; he also spoiled Sicilia, Sardinia, and Corfica. 17.
- 832 215 26 Mahomet IV. wasted Italy, burnt the Suburbs of Rome, and harried the forenamed Islands. 40.
- Others reckon these Caliphs to have succeeded Mahomet the second.
- 815 198 25 Mamon. 12.
- 827 210 26 Mutezam. 8.
- 835 218 27 Wack. 4.
- 839 222 28 Mahucal. 12.
- 851 234 29 Momacer. 1.
- 852 352 30 Abul Hanet. 6.
- 858 241 31 Almazet. 4.
- 863 245 39 Motadi Bila. 7.
- After whose death, the Egyptians withdrew themselves from their obedience due to the Babylonian Caliph, and chose one of their own, to whom all the Arabians, and those of the Mahumetan Religion, in Africa and Europe, submitted themselves. Of the Egyptian Caliphs, when we come into that Country. Take now with you the names only of the Syrian and Babylonian Caliphs; for story of them I find little or none, the power being totally in the hands of the Sultans of the several Provinces, and nothing left unto the Caliphs but an airy title, the shadow of that mighty Tree, which formerly had spread itself over most part of the World.
- The Babylonian Caliphs after the division.

- 1169 551 17 Mustaki. 10.
- 1179 561 18 Narzi. 39.
- 1218 597 19 Taber.
- 20 Mustammar.
- 1255 638 21 Mustammar, the last Caliph, or High Priest of the Saracens of Bagdet, or Babylon, living in the account of a Prince or Emperor; or looked on as the Supreme Lord of the Saracen Empire: starved in his Castle of Bagdet, and his whole posterity rooted out by Alan, or Haslon the Tartar, in the first year of his reign. Yet there is still remaining a carcass of the old body, one whom they call Caliph, at whose hands the neighbour Princes use to receive their Diadems and Regalities; for so we find that Solyman the magnificent after his conquest of Chalda, Mesopotamia, and Affrica, to have been by one of these poor titular Caliphs, Crowned King of Babylon, Anno 1513.
- This unwieldy body of the Saracen Empire, having thus two heads, began apparently to decline: losing to the Kings of Orus and Nagawer, a great part of Spain; to the Genoise, Sardinia, and Corfica; to the Norman, Naples, and Sicily; and finally most of their Empire, with their very names, to the Turks and Tartars. For Alan, or Haslon, a Tartarian Captain, starved Mustammar the Babylonian Caliph, in his Tower of Bagdet, and rooted out all his Posterity, (as before was said:) and Sarracon the first Turkish Caliph of Egypt, brained the last Egyptian Caliph with his Hoifemans Mace; leaving not one of Issue or Kindred surviving. The office of the Caliphs (as to matters which concern their irreligion, and the supreme determination of the doubts and controversies which occur therein) being now executed in the Turks Dominion, by the Musfy, or Chief Priest of the Turkish Mahometans.
- As Mars shewed himself a friend unto those Saracens, in their wars and triumphs; so also did Phabus pour down no less Cœlestiall Influence, on such as addicted themselves to Scholarship. Bagdet in Chalda, Cairoan, Fefs, Morocco, in Barbary, and Corduba in Spain, were their Universities: out of which came the Philosophers, Avicene, and Averroes; the Physicians, Rhasis, and Mosius; the Geographers, Leo and Abisfada; and almost all the Lexicaries and profound Writers, (as Hali, Algazel, Alhamecar, &c.) in Astronomy, from whom a great part of our Astronomical and Astrological terms are borrowed.
- There is now no Kingdom, Island, or Province which acknowledgeth the Empire of the Saracens, but the Kingdom of Fefs and Morocco only: Arabia it self, the very first seat of their power, acknowledging a subjection to the Turkish Empire. For first Persia, and Deserta, being subdued by the Turks, when they conquered Persia, or otherwise following the fortunes of the present Victor, were afterwards accounted of as subject unto the Mamlucks of Egypt, who out of that Country and all Syria, had by degrees dislized the Selencian Family. And as the Vassals of that Crown, though but Subjects at will, they more molested Selimus in his march towards Egypt, by falling on his Rear, and terrifying him with their night-Alarms, than all the Forces of the Mamlucks, in the field against him. But Egypt being subdued, and the Mamlucks utterly destroyed, some of their Chiefs being gained by money, and the rest by promise of preferment; the whole Nation of these wild Arabs swore allegiance to him: continuing in account as subject unto his Successors, but in effect doing what they list; governed as formerly by the Chiefs of their several Clannes, and in their Robberies taking no more notice of the Turk than they do of the Christians. And as for Felix, it continued also in a free condition, in respect of any foreign power; till of late times the Turks and Portugals entrenched upon them. For in the year 1538. Solyman Bassa, Admiral of the Turkish Fleet against the Portugals, who had diverted the trade of the Red Sea, and otherwise given offence to Solyman the magnificent, by aiding the Persians, went with a strong Army to take possession. But being unable to effect it, at his coming back he called in at Aden, one of the best traded Ports of Arabia Felix, invited the King thereof aboard, most treacherously hanged him, and surprized the City. The like he also did to the King of Ziber, the Port Town to Mecca: and by that means got possession of all the Coasts of this Country, bordering on the Red Sea, or Masters, of which the Turks still continue Persian Gulf, of no power at all; not suffered to travel up and down without a Passe, from some of the Arabian Chiefs; or if they do, in danger to be set upon by which lie next unto the life of Ormus, made one Kingdom with it; but the Kings originally of this Country, by whom the City of Ormus was first builded: and so continued till the taking of Ormus by the Portugals, Anno 1622. who since the taking of that Isle by the King of Persia, hold Musghat, and some other pieces upon this Continent. The residue of the Country, cantoned amongst a company of petit Princes, as in former times; before ambition taught them to devour one another.
- And so much for ARABIA.

And so much for ARABIA.

6 CHALDEA. 7 ASSYRIA. 8 MESOPOTAMIA.

THese Provinces, which properly and originally constituted the Assyrian Empire, I have joyned together in the Title, because united in the Story and Affairs thereof; though severally to be considered in the Description and Chorography of them.

6 CHALDEA.

CHALDEA is bounded on the East, with Susiana, a Province of Persia; on the West, with Arabia Deserta; on the North, with Mesopotamia; and on the South, with the Persian Bay, and the rest of Deserta. Originally called Chesedim from Chesed the fourth Son of Nachor, the brother of Abraham. Chesed quoque quartus est, à quo Chesedim, id est, Chaldei postea vocati sunt, as St. Hierome hath it. But why the Chaldeans should derive their name from Chesed, being a People long before Chesed's birth, I am not able to determine: unless he taught them the first Principles of the Art of Astronomy; or was the Author of some signal benefit unto them, which we know not of. It was called afterwards Babylonia, from Babylon the chief City of it; and at this day by Bellonius, Assyria; by the Arabians, Keldan; by the Turks, Cudifan.

But the name of Chaldea sometimes went beyond those bounds, taking in some part also of Mesopotamia, as appeareth by that passage of St. Stephen, saying, Acts 7. 2, 3, 4. That the God of glory appeared to our Father Abraham, when he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran; and said unto him, Get thee out of this Country, and from thy Kindred, and come into the land which I shall shew thee. Then he came out of the Land of the Chaldees, and dwelt in Charran, &c. Where clearly that part of Mesopotamia, which lay next unto Assyria, where then Abraham was, is included under the name of Chaldea, or the Land of the Chaldees. Which I desire the Reader to take notice of, because I must make use of this observation in another place.

The Country by Herodotus said to be so fruitful, that it yielded ordinarily two hundred, and in some places three hundred fold; the blades of Wheat and Barley being (as he affirmeth) four fingers broad. By Pliny it is said of the Babylonians, that they mowed their Corn twice, and seeded it a third time, or else it would be nothing but blades: and yet so, that the work of the Land yielded fifty, and their best an hundred-fold increase. Nor is the nature of the soil so altered in long tract of time, but that (as late Travellers have observed) it would in all likelihood attain to its first fertility; if it were ordered with like care and diligence, as in former times. But what need more be said as to the natural fruitfulness and delights of this Country, than that it pleased God almighty to make choice of some part hereof for the Terrestrial Paradise or Garden of Eden, in which he placed our Father Adam, at his first Creation. For there that Paradise, by men both skilled in Divinity and Geography, is affirmed to have stood. Yet amongst all sorts of Writers we find different opinions. Some make Paradise to be a place of pleasure; and the four Rivers to be the four Cardinal Vertues; but these Allegories on the Scripture are unwarrantable. Others place it in the air, under the Circle of the Moon; and tell us that the four Rivers in the Scriptures mentioned, fall down from thence, and running all under the Ocean, rise up again in those places where they are now found: but this is so vain a foppery, that I will not honour it with a confutation. Such as make Paradise local, are divided also into three ranks (for I omit the rest) whereof some place it under the Æquator; but this agreeth not with the bounds prescribed by the Holy Ghost. Some conceive the four Rivers to be Tigris, Euphrates, Nilus and Ganges; and that Paradise was the whole world; but this cannot be: for then when Adam was driven out of Paradise, it must follow that he was driven out of the world, which were most absurd. Those of the soundest judgments place it here, in an Island which is made by the Rivers Tigris and Euphrates, and some branches running from them both: the uppermost of which is called Pison, (falsely rendered Ganges) which watereth the Land of Havilah, or that part of the Land of Havilah, which is now called Chistan, or Susiana, a Province of Persia; and the lowermost is named Gibon, (improperly by some translated Nilus) which compasseth the East parts of Arabia Parva, by the Septuagint for the reasons above mentioned, rendered Ethiopia. And this agreeth both with the position of this Country, and the course of those Rivers. For that Tigris and Euphrates (which the Hebrew Text called Hiddekel and Perath) do here joyn their streams, is confessed on all sides. Then as for Pison, it is no other than that River by Ptolemy, called Basilia, or Regius; by Curtius more nearly Piso-Tigris, or Pasi-Tigris. Perveni ad fuvium, Pasi-Tigris incolæ vocant, as his own words are. A little stream which watereth the Land of Havilah, or the Country of the Chenelei, or Chauslei, or Chaudates, (for by these several names they are called amongst the Ancients, who place them betwixt the Babylonians, and the Nabatheans and Arabian people) pourth it self into the Tigris, and falls together with it into the Gulf of Persia. And finally for Gibon, by Ptolemy, called Mauræes, and by others Maryvus, it is no other than a branch of Euphrates, which watereth the Land of Chus, or Ethiopia Aethiaca, take which name you will, loseth it self at last in the Lakes of Chaldea.

But though in general the Country was extremely fruitful, yet in some places was it covered with a slimy matter, whose overflowing of the waters, and the nature of the soil together, did bring forth abundantly. Used by them in their buildings, instead of Mortar, than which more durable and binding; and therefore chosen for the Cement of the Tower of Babel, Gen. 11. 3. Some also tell of a Cliff, which opening fendeth out such a stink, that it killeth Birds as they fly over it; and others, of a like open place near a Town called Atir, which continually throweth out boyling Pitch (named therefore Hell-mouth by the Moors) filling therewith the adjoining Fi.lds; and that herewith the people use to pitch their Boats. But this in some places only, the Country generally being both healthy and delightful, as

The People anciently were much addicted unto Sooth-saying and Divinations, and no less noted for being Authors of the first Idolatry that ever was practised in the World. Induced unto the last perhaps by the Power of their Kings, who would needs confer Divine Honours upon some of their Ancestors. But to the first inclined by their own disposition, and the situation of their Country, yielding a fair sensible Horizon (for the Rational is alike in all places, both in Hills and Vallies) and consequently profitable to the observation of the rising and setting of the Stars, whether Helinacal, Acrinacal, Mantine, or Vesperine, as the Artists phrase it. Whereunto may be added the length of Life in those elder climes, furnishing them with the greater measure of experience, concerning the distinct Motions of each several Orb, and the full period of the courses of each several Planet. Certain it is that they grew so noted in this Art that at the last every Astrologer, or Figure-miner translateth, qui sese illius sapientia specie venditabant, as Beza hath observed in his Annotations. For giving too much credit to them, the People thus flouted by the Savvyrit.

Dixerit Astrologus, credent à fonte relatum Ammonius, &c.*

That is to say,

Joves Oracles no greater credit have,

Than Sooth-sayings of a Chaldee cozening Knave. The Language which was spoken here, had the name of the Chaldee, or Chaldean Tongue; of great antiquity, and sanctified by the Holy Ghost, some Chapters of the Prophecy of Daniel being written in it. So different from the Hebrew in its primitive purity, that the Jews Officers of Hezekiah, 2 Kings 18. 26. desiring Rabshakeb to speak to them in the Chaldee Tongue, that the common people of the Jews might not hear his Blasphemies. A further proof may be, That a man may have some knowledge in the Hebrew, and yet be ignorant of the Chaldee; as many are, no doubt, at this present day. But whatsoever it was in its primitive purity, it altered afterwards when the Jews came to live amongst them, during the Captivity: out of whose long commerce with them, both Nations lost their proper Languages, and fell upon a third, made out of both, which was called the Syrinac. Of this we spake before, when we were in Syria and Palestine. And this is now the natural Language of this Country, and its neighbour Assyria; but with a little mixture of the Greek and Arabick: Not vulgarly spoken elsewhere, for ought I can find; but used by many others in their Sacred offices, by whom not commonly understood. For in this Language, all the Sects of the Eastern Christians do associate their Publick Liturgies; that is to say, the Nestorians, Jacobites, Maronites, (for I reckon not the Melchites, who use the Greek Liturgy, amongst the Sectaries.) The like do also the Indians or Christians of Saint Thomas, the Coptics or Christians of Egypt, and the poor remainder of the Chri- tians in the Isle of Zocataria, an Island on the Coast of Africk. Used to those Liturgies, when the Language was more understood amongst them; though now worn out of vulgar knowledge, by the overspreading of the Prelates of these Churches having fallen into the great error of the Church of Rome: and without taking notice of those alterations, hapning in the vulgar Tongues of those several Nations, which are united under them into one opinion, keep up a Language in their Liturgies which they understand not; as if the capacities of an People could be sooner raised to the understanding of an unknown Language, than the publick Liturgies be fitted unto their capacities. The ancient Piety of the Church and the modern Languages of God's People, are not inconsistent; though out of private ends some have taught us otherwise. But I fear this error (as some others) will not be so easily remedied, as apprehended. From the Tongue in which they celebrate the Divine Offices of their Religion, pass we to the Religion it self, whose Sacred offices are so celebrated.

The Christian Faith was first preached in this Country by Saint Peter, of whose being in Babylon (the chief City hereof) himself assureth us in the last words almost of his first Epistle: and other business he had none here, but to preach the Gospel. Much persecuted by the Persians (who were then possessed of these parts) it prevailed at last; Christianity growing up the faster for the cutting down. The patriarchal See, originally planted in Seleucia, succesor unto Babylon in repute and greatness, if not also in name; the Bishop thereof, by order of the Nicene Council, had the Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction of those parts, with the name of Catholicus; and the next place in Session, at all publick Assemblies of the Church, next after the Patriarch of Jerusalem. And besides this, the Indians or Christians of Saint Thomas acknowledge him for their Primate or Metropolitan; as they did afterwards in his right, the Patriarch Mmal. At this present here are some remainders of Christianity; part of them Jacobites, but the most Nestorians; of whom more anon.

Of the chief Rivers hereof we have spoken already; and Mountains there are none to hinder us in our passage forwards: So that without more delay, we may take a view of their principal places. And in the first place, famous for Confusion of Languages which here happened. For immediately after the Universal Deluge; Nimrod the Son of Chus, the Son of Cham, perwaded the People to secure themselves from the like after-claps, by building some stupendous Edifice, which might resist the fury of a second Deluge. This Counsel was generally embraced, Hebr only and his Family, as tradition goeth, contradicting such an unlawful attempt. The major part prevailing, the Tower began to rear a head of Majesty, 5,146 paces from the ground; having its basis and circumference equal to the height. The passage to go up, went winding about the outside; and was of an exceeding great breadth; there being not only room for Horses, Carts, and the like means of Carriage, to meet and turn: but Lodging for Man and Beast; and, as Vespergan reporteth, Grains and Corn-fields for their nourishment. But God beholding from an high this fond attempt, sent amongst them (who before were of one Language) a confusion of Tongues; which hindered the proceeding of this Building, one being not able to understand what his fellow called for.

2 Babylon, on the Bank of Euphrates, the antientest City in the World on this side of the Flood; first built by Nimrod, in the place designated to the raising of the Towers Tower of Babel, and by him made the Seat of his Kingdom: afterwards beautified and enlarged by Semiramis, the Wife of Ninus, one of his Successors; and finally, much encreased both in bulk and beauty by Nebuchadnezzar, who therefore arrogated to himself the whole glory of it, saying in his pride, Is not this the great Babel that I have builded? Dan. 4. 30. A City of great fame and fate, accounted one of the Worlds nine wonders, and deserv'dly too.

The compass of the Walls 365 furlongs (or 46 miles) according to the number of the days in the year; in height fifty Cubits, and of so great breadth, that Carts and Carriages might meet on the top of them; finished in one year, by the hands of 200000 Workmen, employed daily in it. Situate on both sides of Euphrates, over which there was a sumptuous Bridge, and at each end of that Bridge a magnificent Palace: beautified also with the Temple of the Idol Bel, and famous for the Pensile Gardens, made with great charge, and born up with most stately Arches. In a word, to great and vast it was, that Aristotle saith, That it ought rather to be called a Country than a City: adding withal, That when the Town was taken, it was three days before the furthest part of the Town could take notice of it. Which taking of the Town must be understood of the surprize hereof by the Medes and Persians; and not of the taking of it by the Macedonians, as Pet. Ramus (as great a Clerk as he was) in his marginal Notes upon the Politics of that Author, hath most vainly told us. Which, whether it were that there were Gates at the end of every Street, which made it to be so long in taking; or that the Babylonians were not wakened from their drunken Feast, in the time whereof it was surprized, I determine not. Revolving in the time of Semiramis, the news came to hegas he was ordering her Hair: whereupon leaving her head half-dressed, she went and besieged it; never ordering the rest of her Hair, till she had recovered it. How it fell into the hands of Cyrus, we learn out of Xenophon's Cyri-pædia, which was in this manner. The River Euphrates ran quite thorow the Town, round about whose Banks the Politick Prince cut many deep Channels; into which when the Babylonians were securely merry at a general Feast, he suddenly drained and emptied the River, conveyed his own Forces into the Town all along the dry and yielding Channel, and in a little time made himself Master of it. From the Persians it revolted in the Reign of Darius Hystaspes, and that Suffiance might not be wanting to the Men of War, they frangled the most part of the Women, being thought in Actions of this quality, not so much as necessary evils. When they had for twenty months fo obstinately defended the Town, that the Persians had less hope than ever of prevailing; Zophyrus, one of Darius Captains, mangling his body, and disfiguring his face by cutting off his nose and ears, fled to the Babylonians, complaining of the tyranny of his King. They crediting his words, and knowing his prowess, committed the charge of the whole Army unto him, as a man to whom such barbarous usage had made the King irremediable. But he taking the best opportunity, delivered both the Town and Souldiers into the hands of his Sovereign, which made Darius often say, That he had rather have one Zophyrus, than twenty Babylons. Here did Alexander the Great, after whose death the Grecian Captains, regardless rather of their own ambitions, than the common Loyalty, divided the Empire among themselves; leaving the body of the King eight days unburied. A wonderful change of fortune, that he who living thought the World too small for his Valour, being dead should find no place big enough for his Body. After this taking of it by the Macedonians, the Glories and Magnificence hereof began to decline; leftened unto a fourth part in the time of Qu. Curtius the Historian; in glutindum redacta, reduced to desolation in the days of Pliny; and being turned into a Park, in which the Kings of Persia did use to hunt, in the time of Saint Hieron. That wondrous change occasioned partly by the injury of the time, partly by the neglect of the Macedonians, who removed the Seat-Royal of their Empire more towards Greece: but principally by Selenus Nicator, who offended with the Babylonians, built the City of Selencia, the second City of note in all this Country, situate in a place more commodious and healthy, near the meeting of Tigris and Euphrates, and about forty miles more North than Babylon; out of which he drew 500000 persons for the peopling of it. Nor did this new City rob the old only of its power and greatness, but also of its very Name; being called Babylon in some of the ancient Authors, Βαβυλων in others, Μετρώπολις Ζαλαβία καλαμάρια (as for one) by Stephanus. In the Primitive times of Christianity, the Bishop of this See was accounted for the Primate of the Chaldaean; with a superintendency over the Christians of India also, as before was said. But this Supplanter was in time brought to ruin also. And

4 Bagdad, a new City raised from the ruins of it: built near the Foundations of Selencia by Bugisfer the 20th Caliph of the Mahometans, at the expence (as some write) of eighteen Millions of Crowns; which, because of the many Gardens contained in it, had the name of Bagdad, the word so signifying in the Arabic Tongue. First built upon the Western Bank of the River Tigris, near to its confluence with Euphrates; but in the year 1095. removed to the other side of the River, by Muhtashers, the 4th Caliph of the Saracens, because less subject to the Inundations of that furious River. But it was reckoned still for the same City, as if built by Bugisfer: by whom being made the Seat of his Royal Residence (whose successors were hence called the Caliphs of Babylon) it flourished in great pride and splendor: till taken and sacked by Alan, or Hadon, a Tartarian Captain, who here starved Muscarazem, the last Caliph of it, and rooted out his whole Posterity; as if the Caliphate and the City were to end together. But the Town revived again, though the Caliph could not; continuing to this day a City of great Wealth and Traffick, but nothing comparable unto what it was both for beauty and bigness, being not above seven miles in compass, and having nothing in the Buildings to be justly bragged of. Taken by Solyman the Magnificent with the rest of the Country, it became subject to the Turks; from them recovered by Abas the King of Persia, Anno 1625. and again recovered by the Turks about the year 1640. In which changes it can be no marvel, that the hath lost much of her former splendour. Maintained especially at the present by the Trade of Alleppe, to which, besides such Goods as go up the Water, there pass yearly many Caravans or Troops of Merchants, each of them having in it some hundreds (if not thousands) of Camels laden with commodities. For whose sake Lodgings, as they pass (the ways being generally ill provided for Travelers in those Eastern Countries) there are some Houses of Receipt built at the publick charge, or by some special Benefactor, to preserve his memory: most of them strong, and many very fair and lovely, which in the Dominions of the Persians, they call Caravans Ramers; in the Turks, Cams. And for communicating the success of their business unto the place from whence they came, they make use of Pigeons, which is done in this manner. When the Hen-Pigeon sitteth, or hath any young, they take take the Cock, and set him in an open Cage; whom when they travelled a days Journey, they let go at liberty, and he straight flieth home to his Mate. When they have trained them thus from one place to another, and that there be occasion to fend any Advertisement, they tie a Letter about one of their necks, which at their return home is taken off by some of the Houfe, advertised thereby of the Estate of the Caravan. The like is also used betwixt Ormus and Balsora. But of this enough.

5 Ctesiphon, on the River Tigris, not far from Selencia, by whose fall it rose; occasioning the decay thereof, as that did of Babylon. So Pliny, speaking of the fall of Babylon, by the building of Selencia so near unto it; then adding, invicem ad hanc exhauriendam, Ctesiphon built faith Marcellinus, by Vardanes, a Parthian King; and by him made the Seat-Royal of the Persian Kingdom. Many times besieged and assaulted by the Roman Emperors; but most commonly without success: and amongst others, by Julian the Apostle, that bitter enemy of the Gospel, who here breathed out his Soul to Satan in these dying words, Viciisti tandem Gallias. But Vardanes (whoever he was) cannot of right be called the first Founder: this City being the fame with that which Ezek, 27. 23. and Ezekiel, Canneh, Gen. 11. and built in Chalantide, or the Region of Chalne.

6 Sippurum, remarkable for the great Trench made near it, to receive the overflowsings of Euphrates, which otherwhile might have annoyed the City of Babylon; in compass 1280 Furlongs, or 160 miles; in depth 20 fathoms. A vast and expenceful work; but that nothing was to be admired, when Babylon it self was up and in full prosperity.

7 Apamea, a City of Selencus's foundation also, situate at the fall of Pylon into the River Tigris.

8 Vologesias, placed by Ptolemy amongst the Cities of Chaldaea, but by Marcellinus in Assyria: built or repaired by one of the Vologeses, Kings of Persia, and from him denominated.

9 Borsippa, by Ptolemy called Borsica, memorable for the great Victory which Cyrus, the first Persian Monarch, obtained hereagainst Nabonidus the King of Babylon, by whom having vanquished, he pardoned him (as he saith) his life, and gave him the Government of Carmania.

10 Balsora, a Port-Town to Babylon, situate at the fall of Euphrates into Sinus Persicus, and consequently of great wealth and trading: the Riches of Arabia, Persia, and some parts of India, being landed here, and carried to B A B T O N, and thence up the Water to Alleppe. Supposed to be the City of Thiodorus, mentioned by Ptolemy; built or repaired by Nebuchadnezzar, and not long since taken from the Turk by Abas, the Persian.
